The Preface to the Christian Reader.

Hereas in a Sermon preached at Pauls Crosse about two yeares past, I had touched (on occasion) some part of this Learned Discourse, then lately set forth; and for the peoples satisfaction, I had answered some principall argumentes of the same, in defence of her Maiesties supreme gouernment in Eccl. causes, and for our Bishops iurisdiction; as appeareth by the Sermon it selfe, which for the further manifesting the occasion hereof, I haue set forth also, and recommend (deare Christian Reader) to thy fauourable interpretation: which Sermon (according to the diuerse affections of the audiorie) tooke diuerse effectes; some beginning to relent and be resolued, which before had beene greatly carried away, in the contrary perswasion of these matters, and promising reconciliation vnto their Bishops, whose state before they had misliked; some (on the other side) tooke such offence at that part of the Sermon which touched these thinges, that they ceased not to deface it, and to challenge mee for it: I then promised, not only the auowing of that I had spoken; but also (God assisting me) the publishing both of the whole Sermon, and the answering adarge of all the Learned Discourse.

For discharge of which promise, and because this booke pretendeth such a plausible title, and withall is reckoned of so great account; as I afterwarde could get oportunitie and leasure thereunto, proceeding by little and little in the same; and (by the way) taking withall some parts of the like argument, that other our Brethren haue since composed; and partly passing vp from them, to the very fountaines, (as I take it) from whence all our Brethren fetch their chiefest motiues, or the groundes of them, especially in these three reuerende and learned Fathers, Caluine, Beza, & Danxus: I haue now (thanks be to God) at length, after many delaies and stoppes thereof, thus farre forth accomplished & set out the same.

It is no small grieve to me (I protest) that on this occasion, I was thus drawn into these questions, with those, whom otherwise in Christe, I humbly acknowledge to be our deare Brethren. And much gladlier (the Lord knowes) would I be, to haue wholly objected my selfe (as before to my mediocritie I haue endeouored) against the publike aduersaries of Gods truth. And would God, all we which are of the household of faith, professing the light and libertie of the Gospell, would againe bende our forces that wayes, against the errors and tyrannie of Antichrist. In which course a while, we did runne well (but as the Apostle sayth to the Galathians) who hath let vs? For so long as we ioyntly followed the quest of that vncouth beast, and of the purple Harlot on his backe; God mightely prospered vs in all our affayres. Yea it is wonderfull to consider, if we haue grace to acknowledge it, how God hath still hethereto, (aboue any Nation in the worlde, in this last age thereof) and yet doth not cease to blesse vs, his name of vs againe incessantly, be blessed and magnified for it. Gal. 5. 7.

Howbeit, the shadowe is not more concomitant to the bodie, than enuie is zealous of vertue and glory. As there is no state so happy on all partes in this life, but it shall ever be crossed with some or other daunger, or disturbance: so doth the enuious man (in these our Alcions dayes) labour nothing more, than to impugn and to ouerthrowe this our blessed state, yea, to haue bereft vs of the Lordes annoynted, his holy handmayden, our most gracious gracious Soueraigne, by whom (vnder our Lord Iesus Christ) God hath vouchsafed vs all these blessings. In which practise, although the aduersaries attempts haue beene so perillous and vnnaturall, that the very remembrance of them breedeth horrow: yet the Lords continuall deliuerance from them, hath bin so admirable, and almost miraculous; that we can not but all reioyce together, & breake forth into the prayes of our so gracious father, our most mightie, righteous & mercifull God, and cast all our repose vpon his providence.

1. Pet. 5. 8. 9.

But as the holy Apostle S. Peter prudently forwarneth vs, be sober and watch, for your aduersarie the diuell as a roaring Lyon walketh about seeking whom he may deuour: so, see the malice and craft of this old serpent. That thing which he could neuer atchieue by himselfe, withall the subtleties of his smooth temptations; nor by his grand deputie, the man of sin & sonne of perdition, withall his stratagems & violent forces: Sathā estoones hath now not only crept in among the childre of God; but hath so broken a sunder the bondes of Gods peace; hath sowed the cockle of such contentions, & diuisions among vs that are brethren; wherby such discord hath also risen, euen among those that sowed before the good seed wheat; that no small hindrance hath growen therby to the course of the Gospell, & as great hazard to the state of all our Church & Realme; as could haue bin inflicted by the open hostilitie of the publike enemy. Yea, what could lay vs more open to his iniuries, thā to fall out thus amōg our selues into these garboyles? Or how freely can we nowe oppose our faces to confront our aduersaries; when euermore we must haue a skew eye, to the awke blowes of our own fellowes & Brethr, hard at our elbowes? Which double fight is so daungerous & so distrustfull; that it maketh many amongst vs to reuolt or at least to hooouer: and is such an incouragemēt & aduantage to the enemies, to be more cōfirmed in their errors, & strengthened in their confederacies: that they insult vpon vs both; yea they blaspheme the very gospel it selfe which we professe; and all by occasion of these intempestiue, but too tempestious disagreements.

When Abraham saw the falling out between his and Lot's heardmen; fearing the euill euent of such discorde, he sayth vnto Lot let there be (I pray thee) no strife betweene thee & me, neither yet betwixt thy heardmen and mine: and he addeth this reason, For we are brethren. Which reason did so moue the prudent Ioseph, that after he had reuealed himselfe vnto his Brethren, returning thē to fetch his father, fearing least any expostulations might breede iarres among thē, he gaue them this especial charge, See that ye fall not out by the way. Thus did these auncient & holy Patriarkes esteeme of cōcord among brethren, & shunned (as a thing most vnnatural) all Brethrens discord. Which the godly & propheticall kinges, David & Salomon well considering; the father stirring vs vp to embrace this vertue; Beholde (sayth he) how good and comely a thing it is, for Brethren to dwell in one together? Liking it to the precious balme that was powred on the head of Aaron, and to the sweet dewe of heauen that falleth on the mountaines, to make them frutefull. The sonne (in detestation of the vice contrary) when he had set down the 6. things that the L. hateth; Hauisie eyes, a lying tongue, handes that shed innocent blood; an heart imagining wicked enterpriser; feete that are swift in running to mischief; and a false witness that speaketh lies: he concludeth (as with a greater vice than all these) in the seuenth and complete number, with this sinne, which he sayth, the soule of God abhorreth; And him that rayseth up contentions among his Brethren.

Prou. 6. 16.

And therefore when our sauour Christ had fore-told his Disciples, all the persecutions that they should sustaine by their outward enemies: against all these, that they might haue brotherly loue among them selues; Peace (sayth hee) I leave with you, my peace I giue vnto you. And againe; These things haue I spoken vnto you, that my ioy (which is the frute of peace) might remayne with you, and that my ioy might be full. This is my commaundement, that ye loue one another. And so, he knits vp his exhortation with this repetition; These things haue I spoken to you, that ye might haue peace in me. Which bond of peace and loue in Iesus Christ one towards another, both the Apostle S. Paule, the Doctōr of the Gentiles, and especially S. Iohn whom the Lord loued, and S. Peter that so loued the Lord, and S. James the iust, in their Epistles, so often and so earnestly call vpon, and so vehemently dissuade vs from contentions.

Empedocles among the heathē Philosophers, beholding the sympathie and antipathie that is in naturall creatures, and being moued with the admiration therof, concluded, that all all things were done and vndone, by concord and discord. But, to haue this order of nature so inuerted, that those persons which are not only chained in this naturall Harmonie, but also in a more heauenly concent, should dissent & be dissolued; is farre more wonderfull thā the composition of thinges contrary; and (that which is worse) is much more iopardous. For (as the Apostle warned the Galathians, and by them vs; If ye bite and deuour one another, Gal. 4. 15. take heede leaſt ye be conſumed one of another. And ſince our Sauour him ſelfe hath ſo ſeuereſly denounced that dreadfull ſentence, and it is a Maximie grounded on good reaſon, Every Math. 12. 28. kingdome diuided againſt it ſelfe ſhall be brought to naught, and euery Citie or houſe denided againſt it ſelfe ſhall not ſtande; no meruaile (if theſe contentions ſhould hold on & increaſe) though our Brethren and we be moued hereat, beholding this our moſt flouriſhing kingdome, with theſe diuiſions to be thus rent in ſunder, that almoſt no Citie or Towne in the ſame (I can not ſay, no houſe) but is either diuided, or at leaſt diſquieted by theſe factions.

Neuertheleſſe, this among other is our chiefeſt comfort againſt all theſe and other like tentations; that hauing both of vs (for the ground of our religion) Gods euerlaſting & infallible truth; for the which our common aduerſaries do maligne and oppugne vs, but can neuer expugne and ouercome vs; for alwayes (as Zorobabell ſayde) The truth is greater and ſtronger than all; Howſoeuer therefore we be exerciſed with ſuch plunges, I meane not of the open enemies (for the troubles that we receaue from theſe, doe more corroborate vs in Gods truth) but ariſing by the waywardneſſe of our owne deare Brethren in the goſpell: that yet we ſhould not be too much diſmayed, but ſtayd & recomforded. Sith that, albeit theſe laſt dayes (according to Chriſtes and his Apoſtles prophecie) are more contentious: yet in ſerching the former ages, we ſhall finde that this ſelfe ſame tryall of our faith, is not now firſt laide vpon vs alone; but that heretofore the Church of God, and the moſt excellent Princes, Prelates, and people among them, haue often times bought this experience very derely, and with great moleſtations euen from their brethren.

No ſooner had God deliuered his peculiar people, from the Egyptians bondage and idolatrie, by the conduct of Moſes and Aaron; and giuen them lawes and orders to be gouerned by; but thoſe their guides were more moleſted, and the people more waſted them ſelues by their owne mutinies, than by the hande of any forraine enemies. And ſince the comming of our ſauour Chriſt, ſo ſoone as euer Conſtantine (worthily ſurnamed) the Great, had extinguiſhed all the tyrantes perſecutions, and procured publike peace vnto the goſpell; what a number of contentions ſtraightwayes brake forth (beſides the conſlicts with the peſtiferous Heretikes) among the true profeſſors of the right faith, euen for matters of diſcipline and orders, diſquieting the vnitie and concord of the Church, and breeding no ſmall grieve, and ſtoppall to that good Princes proceedings, as we feele and lament the like in theſe our dayes.

There is great difference (I graunt) both in matter and manner of theſe contentions, and in the qualities of the perſons that breed theſe vexations; euen as much as is, between him that would plucke my coate from off my backe, and ſo ſpoyle me; and him that would pull my ſkinne ouer mine eares, and ſo deſtroy me. The controuerſies between the common aduerſaries and vs, are pro Aris & focis; for matters, & that capitall matters, of the ſubſtance & life of our Chriſtian religion; not trifles, as ſome newtrals would beare the people in hande. And therefore our aduerſaries in matters of religion, are incenſed againſt vs with mortall, or rather, with immortal hatred. Whereas the controuerſies betwixt vs and our Brethren, are matters, or rather (as they call them) but manners, and formes of the Churches regiment: Howbeit, whether by ſufferance, or by neglect of them, growen yet vnto ſo many heads, and ſo ſharply proſecuted: not now contending ſo much for cappe & ſurpleſſe; nor for quarels at the vnlearneder ſort of the poore miniſters; nor inuectiues againſt the Biſhops & their titles, or their ſuperiour iuriſdictions only; but withall, calling in queſtion all their whole authoritie, & their very miniſtery of the worde and Sacramentes; and all our forme of publike prayers; yea, the preſcription of any forme at all; the alteration of all the Clergie; the tranſlation, and new limitation, of euerie Dioceſe, and particular pariſh in the Realme; the erection of a new Tetrarchie, in euery ſeueral congrega- tion, of Doctōrs, Paſtors, Gouvernours, and Deacons; by which ſower eſtates & offices, all matters matters should be directed, and all crimes eccl. or ciuill censured by their discipline. Yea, they mount vp to the highest toppe, euen of the Princes supreme gouernment. Since that therefore, these contentions haue aspired thus farre, to the imminent daunger of all our whole estate; though in an other sort than do our aduersaries in religion: it is more than high time, against these (though otherwise in Christe our well meaning, but misweening Brethren) to enter into the necessarie defence, of these, be they matters, or manners of such moment.

I am not ignorant that vnto many, this labour will be thought superfluous, either of those that would haue these matters go forward without misliking; or of some also that allowe them not. Howbeit, because they haue eyther before beene sufficiently trauersed in, by other alreadie, both pro & contra: or that now these controuersies (if they be not dead and buried long ago) yet the seruour of them is meetly well flaked; therefore according to Pythagoras wise counsell, ignem opertum noli fodere, it were much better to let it alone, than to rake abroad the fire, that is couered in the cinders: these men thinke this to be the best aunswere, not at all to aunswere them, but to passe the ouer in silence and contemne them. Whereby, eyther the parties contending (hauing wearied themselves in vaine) will the sooner giue ouer; or at least, other will thinke the matters not worthy, to be vouchsafed any aunswere. And that to aunswere, yea to confute them, is but to prouoke further controuersies, of which wee are pestred with too many, and those not a little raysed, or enkindled, by often and intemperate disputing, aunswearing, and replying one to an other.

And in very deede, with them that thinke thus, in some matters and manners of proceeding, I my selfe am of their opinion. For this licentiousnesse of writing such reciprocal inuictiues, hath bred and breedeth much vnecessary trouble. Notwithstanding, as the Preacher (among all other thinges, that keepe the reuolution of their seasons) reckoneth vp this; there is a time to keepe silence, and a time to speake; when a matter groweth to importance, and is vrged too importunately, admitting it be a wrong and daungerous error, and yet on all sides it winneth fauour; to let it so passe without all controlement; what were silence then, but grosse negligence, the very yeelding to the error and danger, yea the wilfull betraying of the truth, and consenting to the ouerture of our state?

And euen so fareth it in this matter. The Papiists, from whose grosse errors in doctrine we both dissent, and against whome, in the vnitie and substance of Gods truth we both agree (and for a while conioyntly we impugned their errors, idolatries, and superstitions) at the first in defence of them, they began to write freshly and stoutly against vs, but when they saw, they were not able that way, to mainteine the badnesse of their cause, they left off writing, and followed (for the most part) this policie, to seeme to despise all further triall, by disputing and writing of the matter, and would seeke to vphold it onely or chiefly, by countenance and authoritie: but finding againe the experience of this, that Voluntas non potest cogi, the will of man must be perswaded, can not be compelled: and that nulum violentum est perpetuum, the thing that is only with violence coacted, can not possibly continue: and that in these controuersies, all men are most desirous to be satisfied with some aunswere or other: they fall againe to writing, though hardly driuen thereto, vsing all the shifts they can, to bodge vp the insufficiencie of their cause. But in a good matter there neede no such practises.

True it is (as I sayd before) that the poynts to be discussed betwixt our Brethren and vs, be nothing of such waight as those are, wherein our Brethren and we do varie from the aduersaries, in the mayne and principall standers of our faith, but are questions most what of discipline, and of the Churches gouernment. Neuerthelesse, since that heerein also, our Brethren haue not only made a breach from vs, but they haue bred such further contention for them, as in which, a pacification is so requisite, that without it, we see what broiles and daungers dayly growe, to the disturbing of our owne estate, to the aduantage of the publike aduersarie, to the hinderance and obloquie of the Gospell. It is necessarie therefore, that (as God be praysed) we haue the truth in doctrine, and defend it well, not only by the authoritie of the Magistrate, but by the words owne authoritie, openly in writing by the Ministers thereof, set forth to all the world, against all the resisters of the same: so,

hauing (as we trust) a good established forme, of the regiment & discipline of our Church of England; if any eyther of our professed aduersaries, or of our malecontented Brethren, shall withstand or write against it: we are all obliged (after the measure of each ones calling and habilitie) to maynteyne and defend it, and that not onely against the breakers of it, by the Magistrates execution of authoritie, but the Ministers no lesse in their vocation, when it is openly written against, are bound by their writing againe (if the goodnesse of the matter be able so to iustifie it selfe) to lay open all the whole state thereof, by detecting and confuting all the paralogismes and fallations of the gaynelayers, and by defending it, euen with the firmenesse of the grounds, and the owne good nature of the cause: which manner of defence, being not destitute of lawfull authoritie, to see it obserued, not only represseth the resisters bodie, but satisfyeth, or conuinceth his minde, which is chiefly in these contentions to be respected.

And although this also be true, that both our aduersaries in the controuerfies of our religion, and our Brethren, in the questions of our regiment (for such matters as then were moued) haue beene by other of excellent learning, sufficiently answered already: yet must we be still as ready to answer, in defence of both these causes, as either of them are ready to oppugne them, seeing that (God be thanked) we mainteine nothing in our doctrine, or in our regiment, whereof we can not render a sound reason, and sufficient prooffe, from the verie foundation of Gods word, to mainteine it with a good conscience. Howbeit, sith that our Brethren cease not, but as they first began these controuerfies, so they hold not yet themselues contented, but Plus vltra, they proceede further, and to further matters, and as they rise higher, so more eagerly they presse vpon them; not onely declaiming in the Pulpits, as they get any oportunitie thereof, and exclaime if they be put to silence, but also put vp billes and supplications at euery Parliament; compile and scatter abroad their printed treatises; insomuch, that in all degrees of men and women, noble, worshipfull, and of the vulgar sort, many begin to doubt of our established gouernment, and to suppose some great and inuincible validitie to be in their assertions, if too manie be not already carried away too farre in this opinion, that the regiment and discipline which our Brethren desire, is suppressed onely by meere authoritie, against the manifest prescription of Gods word, against the cleere examples of the Primitiue Church, against the manifold testimonies of the vn suspected hystories and auncient Fathers; against the sound interpretations, and approved practise of all or the best reformed Churches, and against reason it selfe, as they pretend: how much behoueth it vs againe, in all brotherlie modestie, constantlie to stand vpon our gard in so iust a defence? For although many godly, learned, and wise, haue in searching found out the shallownesse heerein of all their grounds, yet is it requisite to lay them open to all other, that desire to be more thoroughly satisfied, yea, euen to exenterate and rip vp the verie bowels of the whole cause, to examine their chiefe and principall arguments, to go to the authors themselues from whence they fetch them, to set them downe at large, (least any might complaine they were mangled or inuerted) and to do all this by the more diligent search and conference of the holie Scripture, by the better examining the state of the Primitiue Church, by the particular perusing the autentike hystories and testimonies of the auncient Fathers, by reuising the states, and writing of the reformed Churches, and by weighing the peyse and inference of their reasons; if happily by all, or by any of all these meanes, we shall see all, or any of the things that they crie so much vpon, to be truly and substantially prooued. Which thing, while heere I haue laboured to performe, though the volume haue growne bigge, and the search may seeme tedious vnto some, yet the desirous readers satisfaction may be part of his recompence, which I haue chiefly intended in this answer.

I know that some, too much dazeled by preoccupate affection, and wholly mancipated to their forestalled opinion, will be still picking byous quarrels, to replie vpon one thing or another. But to him that is desirous indeede to bould out the truth, to found the matters to their deapth, to leuell his ayme, not to euery incident, but to the head and state in question: such replies (as bubbles) will die as they rise, being of no regard, but serving onely to feede and soade contentions, and foresseasoned humors: and such (I graunt) it is in vayne to aunswere, except they be too vrgent, or preuaile too much, or by silence and permission get too great credite.

But when as heere the persons with whome I deale, professe in the front and first title of their booke, that this is, A briefe and plaine declaration, concerning the desires (not of such, or such an one, or of some fewe or many of them, but) of all those faithfull Ministers that haue and doe seeke for the discipline and reformation, of the Church of Englande: and say againe, in their conclusion and last leafe of this Discourse, that if this forme of reformation (which they haue here set foorth) may now be receaued; yet the present age may see and iudge, what is the uttermost of our desire concerning reformation, which hitherto for lacke of such a publike testimoniall, hath bene subject to infinite scalanders, deuised by the aduersaries of Gods truth, and hindrance of godly proceedings vnto reformation: And for remedie hereof, they haue nowe at length ioyned all their heads together; consulting and consenting vpon this plotforme of the Churches gouernement; which for greater estimation they recommende vnto vs, with this plausible title on the toppe of euerie leafe; A Learned Discourse of Ecclesiasticall gouernment: And that this is nowe set foorth to this ende, that the posteritie may knowe, that the truth in this time was not generally unknowne, nor vnteslified, concerning the regiment of the Church of God: thus courageously prouoking vs, to aunswere vnto this Learned Discourse, if we be able so to doe, or else to holde our peace for euer hereafter: who may not hereby see, that it is high time, either now, or neuer to speak for our selues, and for our Churches defence; or else (as conuicts) by silence to yeelde vnto them?

But now againe, while we thus contend by inueighing against, and aunswereing one another; some good men (I knowe) there are, that wish vs both well, which are most of all affraide of this, that wee shall lay our shame and nakednesse open to all the worlde, and namely to the publike and deadly aduersaries of vs both; who by occasion of these inferior matters of circumstance; wherein we agree not; diffame the higher matters of substance wherein we agree. And I confesse with griefe, so we doe. But when this ariseth not by vs, nor by vs is growen so farre; and yet betweene our Brethren and vs, it is so farre growen, that the aduersarie alreadie, and all the world doth, or may see our dissent herein, although neither our Brethren, nor we had set it foorth in writing: yet when our Brethren by writing also diuulge it to the wide worlde, and still followe it with one treatise on the necke of another: what booteth it any longer for that respect, to refraine from the publike defending of our cause? Yea, how doth it not nowe stande vs more vpon, to publish our so necessarie defence, that all men may better knowe and iudge it, hearing both partes? So that wee defende ours, and aunswere theirs, in such reuerende sorte, as the Apostle putteth vs in minde; Let your modestie (or your patient mind) be made knowne to all men. And when the worlde shall see vs deale together thus: they shall see, that although we must needs (as the sonne of Syrach bids vs) Strive for the truth vnto the death, and defende iustice for thy life: yet still we are desirous (as the Apostle also willet) If it be possible so much as lieth in vs, to haue peace with all men. And when the aduersarie shall see, how loath we are, and euen haled to enter into this conflict against our Brethren; and with what reuerence (for our partes) wee striue with them, or rather, stande onely at the bay of our defence, in the shielding of our Churches state and gouernance: And againe, when they shall see, howe that notwithstanding all these contentions for our regiment; we doe yet (as I hope hetherto we doe, and shall, the Lorde be prayd for it) continue in the vnion of all the ground-worke and building of our faith, doctrine, and religion; which the aduersaries among them selues (for all their crakes) doe not: they shall or may the easilier perceaue, (euen in the matter and manner of our contentions) both the synceritie of our cause, and the temperature of our dealing. Which may (by the grace of God) turne to their bettering; or at least, (to their shame) they shall or may full well discerne, how farre our verball contentions with our ouer zealous Brethren, differre from their verberall persecutions of them our ouer furious aduersaries; and are indeede no sufficient cause, to confirme or stay them in their errours. Albeit (I graunt) they do so, of the which I am the sorier, if it otherwise pleased God. And would to God, our Brethren with vs, would better thinke hereon, that wee might both of vs being Brethren, once againe brotherly ioyne and combine our selues together, in the vnite of our our doctrine, so in the vniformitie of our discipline, against the professed aduersaries of the Gospel and of vs both, either to their conuersion or confusion. And I doubt it not, but that if our brethren shall yet now at length, enter with vs into a more aduised view, and circumspect examination of these matters: either they will remitte their further contention; or debate them with more deliberate moderation, to the better stopping of the aduersaries mowthes, and to our owne fuller resolution.

Which sequelle (if it please God) to effect, I haue thus farre hazarded, (in this iust and necessarie defence) to expose my selfe to the hartburning & hard speaking (God knowes) of howe many a one, whome in the Lord (these opinions herein set aside) I loue and honour in all duetie, and glad would I haue beene, that some other had employed their trauailes in this businesse, wherof many on our side (the Lord be praised for them) had beene able to haue discharged the same a great deale better. And I lingered the longer, expecting if any would prevent me: but when none did it, or did vouchsafe it, and I was drawn in to the action, on the foresaid prouocation; and was afterward of diuers requested, not to withdrawe my selfe from this occasion; considering withall, that I had before opposed my selfe against the publike aduersarie, in the like argument of the Christian Prince supreme government in Ecclesiasticall causes, which our brethren here also (though in another manner, but no lesse perillous) call againe in question: that nowe I should likewise beare my selfe on euene hand, yea, were it against mine owne deare brethren in Christ, and her maiesties loyal and louing subiectes, though greatly ouer reached in the heate & preposterous earnestnes of their pursuite herein.

How leuelly I haue borne my selfe, without gaule, or spleene, in affection, or stile (my duitie to God, to his trueth, to his church, and to her maiestie reserved) hauing my quarrell onely to the matters, not to the persons: I referre me to the equitie of the reader. My purpose (God he knoweth) is not wittingly, to giue iust offence to any of our brethren. Which if notwithstanding any shall take, for that I spare not to discouer the defectes of their arguments; for that I admonish them (albeit I trust, in spiritu lenitatis,) of their vntempered speeches, aswell against our and their most gracious Soueraigne, and all Christian Princes soueraignetie, as against the authoritie and persons of our prelates; and of vs their fellowe ministers in the Gospell, and against our ministerie, and prescribed forme of prayer and sacraments; or for that I obserue more narrowly now and then, their absurdities and contradictions to them selues, and their dangerous positions to our state; or for that I sende home againe vnto them selues, those foule-mouthed slaunders, wherewith vntruely they burden our church and vs; or for that I dissent from the iudgement or interpretation of those famous late writers, whome our brethren stand so much vpon; or for that I go to the pitche of the controuersies, and so largely prosecute the chiefe of them: If our brethren shall thinke these things too hardly followed, their owne importunitie being the cause, and their full, at least their further satisfaction being my drift; I hope they will the easilier afford me their excuse.

And I humbly beseech all our good meaning Brethren, that are otherwise persuaded herein than we are, to suspend their sentence but for the while, that they shall with indifferencie, and without partialitie, read and ponder these debatinges to and fro, betwixt our brethren and vs, and then a gods name, giue their verdict, as God shal moue them, hauing the feare of God before their eyes, and a right zeale of his trueth and glorie in their hearts, with an vnfeined loue and reuerence to his church. Which done, if I for my part haue herein offended any, I hartily crie them mercie, and shall be readie (by the grace of God) on all due warning and conuincing to the vttermost of my skill, and power, to retract or amend: and so I trust and craue of all our brethren, that they will not disdain to doe the like. Not regarding the person of the defender, but the proues of the defence, whereby (God willing) we shall the sooner finde, and the better conclude, the cleere, true, and full determinations of all these questions.

And to the intent (gentle reader) thou shouldest the readilier finde out anie of the pointes here in controuersie, I haue distributed all this answer to our brethrens learned discourse, into several books, prefixing their arguments to euery of them, besides the titles of

of the pages, and the marginall quotations, which in steede of an Index may serue lead thee. And though directly it pertaine not to me, yet I craue the Printers and my owne pardon, for a great number of peire, and some grosse escapes in the impression, haue fallen out the more, for the difficultie of my coppie vnto him, and by so often altering, changing of the character, either in citing our brethrens wordes, or some other testimonie, or the text it selfe of scripture, as Page 146. lin. 34-35. Page 127. lin. 6, 7. where the letter of the text is not distinguished. Besides the Hebrue wordes for the most part, & some Greeke, with wrong letters. And many wordes and sentences, which the composer nor corrector did well conceiue, and haue so passed, I being not alwayes present at reuising the prooues. But the learned and discreete reader may discerne them, of which escapes the chiefe and most are noted. The residue, I pray the reader vouchsafe to amend with his penne, [such I cannot do it with mine in all the copies]. And so committing it to the good successe that God shall send it, and to the gentle construction of all our learned and other good brethren in the Lord, and of euery indifferent Christian reader, that is rightly desirous in the feare of God and loue of his trueth, for the benefite of his Church, and stay of him selfe, to sadome the bottom of these controuersies, and wiltheth the final pacification

A DEFENCE OF THE GOVERNEMENT ESTABLISHED IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND FOR ECCLESIASTICAL MATTERS.

The Preface of the learned discourse vnto the Christian Reader.

THE holie Prophets hauing oftentimes, but searched, when and at what time, the foreseeing spirit of God declared vnto them, the manifold afflictions and troubles of the Church to come, haue therevpon entred into great lamentations for the same: and haue not onely wept and fasted themselves, but haue compiled for the Church, whole bookes of Lamentations: therein instructing them what waye to take, for appeasing the wrath of God breaking out against them.

The Defence, &c.

In this applying the great lamentations, weepings and fastings of the holy Prophets, for the manifold afflictions and troubles of the Church to come, either in their daies, or the times succeeding, wherof they propheticall, in the semblable manner of weeping, fasting & compiling like bookes of Lamentations, by the fore-seeing Spirit of God, revealing vnto these our brethren the like manifold afflictions, now to intise vpon the church for the like offences: our brethren here in d. both too much abuse the fore-seeing spirit of God, and take too farre vpon them to be such Prophets, and offer too great an iniury to Gods Church, at this time (God be praised) here in England, both in threatening vs with the like calamities, and in burdening vs with the like causes: especially they ran thew in them selues, the like warrant of the fore-seeing spirit, and thew also that we prouoke the fierre wrath of God, in like offences. But what speake I of their abusing thus the application of these holie Prophetes, when

Our Brethren abusing of the spirit of God, and of the Prophets lamentations.

When they dare also abuse the Apostle S. Peters words, and his application of those Prophetes, and of the fore-seeing Spirite of God in them? Doth Peter applie it to any such manifolde afflictions and troubles of the Church to come, to prouoke any to enter into great lamentations for the same, to weepe and faste, and to compile for the church, whole bookes of lamentations? and not rather in that place heere quoted, cite onely the Prophetes fore-telling of our saluation, and of the coming of Christ: and although withall of his sufferings, yet of his glozve, &c. to confirme our faith in him? whose wordes are these, 1. Pet. 1. 9. &c. Re- ceiuving the ende (or rewarde) of your faith, euen the saluation of your soules: of which saluation the Prophetes haue inquired and searched, which prophesied of the grace that should come vnto you: searching when or what time the spirite which testified before of Christ which was in them, should declare the sufferings that should come vnto Christ, and the glory that should follow: vnto whome it was reuealed, that not vnto themselves, but vnto vs they should minister the thinges that are now shewed vnto you by them, which haue preached vnto you the Gospell by the holye Ghoste, sente downe from heauen, the which thinges the Angels desire to beholde. What is here in this application of S. Peter, that is not cleane contrary to that, wherto our brethren do applie it? This therefore is too foule a wresting of the Scripture, and that in the verbe first entrie into the matter, to stumble vpon such an vntruth, or rather so to enforce it, to discourage the people, and to slander al the state of the Church thereby.

The True Causes of our ioye &
mourning.

I note not this, that we on the other side should iustifie our selues, as though we were not sinners, or as though our sinnes were not manifold and grievous sinnes: or as though we would flatter any in their sinnes, or lay pillowes vnder their armes, & lull them in the sleepe of security, with singing vnto them Peace, Peace: For, howsoever they burthen vs vntruly with that poynt, we do (by the grace of God) as much acknow- ledge our manifold wickednesse, and heauie prouocation of Gods wrathe as doe our brethren; though in other respectes then they doe. For, that which they impute to the lawes & orders established in our Church, we see not any iust cause, so to diuerte the faulte from vs, but rather to acknowledge in repentance, the disorders to bee in our selues, in not submitting our selues (as we ought to doe) in the dutie of our obedience to the lawes and orders. For when we consider the sincerity of our faith, which God hath given vs grace by his Gospel to professe, and beholde the marvelous light of his kingdome, into the which out of the power of darkness, and shadow of death, wherein we sat, he hath translated vs: the vnspokeable ioy and consolation of the spirit of God, that we receiue hereby, both recomfort and confirme vs, against the feare of our sinnes, and terroure of the wrathe of God. But when againe, we consider, consider, how we walke not in this light that shinieth to vs, but professe to be the children of light, and commit the works of darkness: how our labors be good, and our lives be euill: this is a great touche vnto our conscience, which rebating our ioy, bringeth feare, least the kingdome should be taken from vs, and given to a nation that shall bring forth better fruits thereof. When we see how these three capitall vices of the world, whereof S. Iohn complaineth. The lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, & the pride of life, both so mightily carry away the greatest parte: this we cry out vpon, and bewaile. the euill whereof indeede wee feare, and giue warning of it, as much (we hope) to our powers, as any of our brethren do: at least, we confesse this is our duty, & offer to ioyne with our brethren, in the earnest reprehension of these and al other vices, and in denouncing Gods righteous iudgements, on all those that continue vnrepentant in their sinnes: and we reioyce with them that reioyce, and mourn with them that thus do mourn: wishing to god herein, that they also would ioyne with vs. But their mourning is not for such grieuances, nor their threatenings for such vices. For we see many that are great fauorites of their plotformes, both dwell & dwell in these vices, and nothing by our brethren said vnto them, yea, they are of the (to all appaurance) not a little esteemed, as of whom they are most maintained and vpholden.

But our brethrens chiefest mourning, is a grudging & repining at their brethren preachers (as themselves are) & professors of the Gospel with the, and the chiefest spirituall fathers in our Church, be they neuer so learned & godly: yet are they grieued at their superiour dignitie, better maintenance, and greater authority. Yea, they maligne, and burden the lawes, orders, and government it selfe, not the abuses onely. Yea, they spare not the authority that is given to the Prince, their most gracious Soueraigne but are offended therewith, that they cannot thereby, haue the entry which they seeke for, into those lawes, orders, authority, offices and discipline which they would bring in, and whereof they haue here prescribed a forme vnto vs. All their chiefest mourning and lamentation is for this, if indeed they weepe and mourne at all, and that euery teare be not (as they say) as big as a millstone. For (God be praised) they are merry inough and in good liking, saue that they put on a sower visour of mourning and terrour. But since their griepe, and al their threats of plagues and destructions, are not for our sins, or contempt of Gods word, but for that we followe not their misconceaued forme of reformation: we are the lesse to be moued with this tragicall beginning, that they tell vs here of their mourning and lamenting, as those that make their faces looke sadde and pale, or for that they would take vpon them as Micheas, Ieremie, Ioel, & the auncient Prophets to prognosticate great calamities and destructions, to come vpon vs, for y we admit not their formes of reformation. O, would God that we needed to mourn for no worse matter, & y we needed to feare nothing else but that.

of our brethrens
mourning.

But let vs lament and abhorre in unfeigned repentance our manifold sins and amend our liues: and then recomforting our selues in the truth of God, which we profess, and better esteeming and liuing after our lawes, and orders of government established: let vs put our whole affiaunce in God, that for Christs sake he will extend such mercies vnto vs, that he will not laie greater tentation on vs, then he will make a waye for vs to passe through the same: eue to that consolation of the comforter, in the militant state of his Church in this present life: eue that top, that none shall be able to take from vs, til we attaine to those ioyes that we hope for (though we cannot yet conceaue them) that in his Church triumphant he hath for evermore prepared for vs.

Preface.

Which ductie in semblable manner should now long ago haue bin done of vs, did not the hope we conceaued in the middest of many tempests, confirme vs in such expectation of her Maiestie, and her most honorable Counsel, as that according to their clemency towards the poore ministers and their families, but most especially according to their holy and zealous care, which ought to abound, for the cleane driving out of the Cananites, and planting, hedging, pruning, and continuall preserving of the Lords vineyard from foxes, yea little foxes: this ciuill warre (as a man may say) of the Church, wherein so much of that bloud (whereof S. Paule speaketh) is powred on the ground, should by their holy and iust authority, fully be ended.

Bridges.

See how quickly our brethren haue wiped away their feares. they say this duty in semblable manner should haue bene done of them now long ago, did not the hope that they had otherwise conceaued, so tourne their mourning from this semblable manner: and whereunto: to a dissemblable thewe of that, which indeed they did not, but made vs afrayed of: for, if they meant good sadnesse: what was the reason that they did it not, but made onelie a copping of their countenance to do it? For sooth the hope that they had conceaued, and such expectation of her Maiestie, and her most honourable Council &c. See againe, after they haue not spared to wrest Gods holy Scriptures, how vnductifullly our brethren here also forgette themselves, even almost in the beginning of their Preface, or euer they come to their learned discourse on these matters: to burde her Maiesty, & her most honourable counsell, for frustrating their hope, and deceiuing their expectation, and that they do not that which they ought to haue done & should by this time, haue fully ended. This is a sharp onset that is here laid vnto their charges, for þ breach of their duty. No marvel though they spare not the lawes nor þ Bishops, nor þ residue of their brethren: whē they aduēture at the first dash, so hardly to challenge both the Queenes Ma. & her most honorable Counsel, for not answering their hope & expectation (as they say) that by this time, yea long agoe, they should and ought to haue done. Yea, and whereas they say that they conceaued this hope & expecta-expectation of them, in the midst of many tempests: how do they not also burden them (though with a little more blame) as though they had bene the causes, or at least the sufferers of them, to be tossed in the midst, and that of many tempests? But what tempests, and those many, have they bene tossed with? God be praised, her Maiesties raigne hath bene the daies of the Alcions sitting in the nest, most free from tempests, of all other parts of Gods church: insonmuch, that it hath euer bene a refuge and haven, to harbour at ancho: many other churches, that have indeede bene tossed in the midst of many tempests: all which are strangers borne to vs (sane in the new birth and commonwealth of the Israel of God) and hath denied succour to none: and are now our owne native people, yea, the poore Ministers, and faithfull ministers too, and their families also, denied this clemency, that they onely should be tossed in the midst of many tempests? It is said, there is a lake in Ireland, in the which if a man caste but a stone it causeth tempestes: and are these ministers of that nature? verely it is contrary to the nature of her Maiesty, whose clemencie is knowne to all Churches, yea to all the world, and to her enemies: especially to al her loving and obedient subiects, chiesly to godly Ministers, be they rich or poore. And also her most honorable Counsell are most ready to helpe and comfort any such godly Ministers: and if any should offer any wrong, vnto any the poorell of the, would (vpon iust complaint) quickly help the matter. They should not neede to complain, that they also deceaued them of their hope and expectation, whiche were a great blot vnto their honours, if they should so do, or should willingly suffer any such wronges to be done. And if this be not done of them, nor by them suffered to bee done, what a greate fault and vnfaithfulness is this then, in these faithfull ministers, so contruely to burden her Maiesty, and her moste honorable counsell, with so greate a crime? If therfore any of our brethren, or any poore Minister haue bene tossed, in many or any tempests, in these calme daies of her Maiesties peaceable, mercifull, prosperous, and most godly reign: it is most likely, that there is some matter in themselves, that either they are not so faithfull and godly, as they pretende, nor of so quiet disposition, nor so obedient to her Maiesties lawes, and to their superiours as they ought to be; or else, there is in them some such other matter, as whereby they haue done, or do procure their owne trouble. And (till we enter furder into the examining of the cause) we may a while, rather suspect such matter in them-selues, then to beleue this their accusation of her Maiesty. & her most honorable Counsell, to haue bene the causes, or permitters of their tempestes, which they complaine they haue suffered: or that her Maiestic, and her most honorable Counsell haue not extended their clemency vnto them, as they ought to haue done, in not satisfying the hope and expectation of these Ministers.

But besides, that thus (no lesse vnaduisably then vntruly) our brethren do burden her Maieſty and her moſt honorable Councel: not ſo content, they charge them further, and in a higher matter, ſaying: But moſt eſpecially according to their holy and zealous care, which ought to aboude for the cleane driving out of the Cananits, &c. No doubt her Maieſties & her moſt honorable counſels care, is both zealous and holy: & becauſe it is ſo, it hath (we truſt) to their habilities abounded, in performing that they ought to haue done herein: and euen therfore, our brethren offer the another iniury. Yea, if the driving out of the Cananits, had bene indeede their hope and expectation, it had bene ſatiſfied long a-go. What Cananits are there remainyng, that ſhould haue bene driven out; that in ſuch ſorte as they ought to do, and might haue done, they haue not done it: and who are theſe Cananits? Do they meane the Papiſts? but they are more aptly compared to the Idolatrous Israelits and Iewes, not to the Cananits, that were mere heathen. And although in ſome ſenſe, they may be ſo compared, yet were not the Cananites ſo utterly to be driven out; but that if anye would become in religion true Israelits, as Rahab and the Gibeonits, &c. they were permitted to abide, notwithstanding the expreſſe commandement giuen them to the contrary. Whereas Chriſtians, haue no ſuch eſpeciall or generall charge, to drive cleane out all that haue bene Papiſtes, or ſuperſtitious, or Idolatrous, or Heretikes, or Infidels, if they were truly conuerted to the faith and religion of Ieſus Chriſte, or elſe, how had Chriſt tranſlated his Church from the Iewes to the Gentiles? And ſo (God be praized for it) hath he conuerted in theſe laſt daies infinite Papiſts to the Goſpell. But if they meane thoſe that remaine Papiſts: I doe not thinke that they can ſhew, any ſuch to be maintained in the Miniſtery. Although their wordes runne at large, of the cleane driving out of all Cananits or Papiſtes out of the realme, of what ſtate or condition ſoeuer they be: How much better is it (in my opinion) and more agreeable to the mercey of the Goſpell, and to the clemency of her Maieſties moſt holy & zealous care, ſo to abound, that her Maieſty hath aſſayed to haue wonn thoſe Cananites to the Goſpell, by letting them abide, & ſo drive out from them their Cananitiſme, rather than to drive out all the Cananits, except they obſtinately profeſſe themſelues to be Cananites, & to drive out ſuch, at leaſt out of all authorizy and publike Miniſtery, Eccleſiaſticall or ciuill, or to reſtraine or puniſh them other wiſe; as they deſerue. although diſſembling Cananites can neuer ſufficiently be cleane driven out, that ſhew ſuch outward conformity to the Goſpell, that they deceaue her Maieſty, her moſt honorable Councell, & al other, ſaue God only. Quis hominū ſcit quā ſunt hominū niſi ſpiritus hominis qui in eo eſt. As for planting, hedging, pruning, & continuall preſeruing of the Lords vine-yard from foxes, yea little foxes: we truſt alſo (as becommeth vs, and as we haue found by the benefite thereof, good cauſe ſo to thinke) that her Maieſties, and her moſt honorable counſels holy and zealous care, hath not a little abounded herein. (before we shall enter into this learned discourse,) is a good hearing, that they acknowledge her Maiestie ought to haue, with her most honorable counsell a holie and zealous care, to abounde in the planting, hedging, pruning, and continuall preseruing of the Lords vine-yarde, from foxes yea little foxes. For when we shall come to this learned discourse we shall there see, that our brethren so abide & restraime this their authority here in, that they their selues haue bene a great occasion (if there haue bene any defect) that the Lords vine-yard hath not bene planted, hedged, pruned, & continually preserued, with so full effect, as her Maiesties, and her most honorable Counsels holy care & zeale hath endeuored to bring to passe. For vnder pretence of these Cananits and foxes great or little, our brethren meane not indeede, so much to challenge the Papists, as our Bishops and Prelates, to be the great foxes, and other the poore ministers of gods word, the little foxes: and in generall, al those to be Cananits (be they neuer so zealous protestantes) if they acknowledge the lawes and orders of our Church of England by her Maiesty established. And to shew this, they mention not the open warre with the common aduersary, which is the Papist: but (say they) this ciuill warre (as a man may say) of the church, wherein so much of that bloud (whereof S. Paule speaketh) is powred to the ground, should by their holy and iust authority fully be ended: And so (say they) it might haue bene ended long ago, had it not bene moze by the importunity of our brethren themselves, who, (as the old saying accordeth, the Foxe the first synder,) haue both made & continually renewed this ciuill warre, moze then either the Bishops, or any of vs, who haue bene and are conformable to the lawes now established, or any negligence in the behalfe of her Maiestie, or of her most honorable Counsel, that they should be thus wrongfully burdened, to haue bene the nourishers as it were of this ciuill warre, but haue still employed all their holy and iust authority to the full ending of it. And sith they giue it rightly this tearme of ciuill warre: (which is a great deale moze dangerous warre, than the forren warre with the open and common aduersarie) who hath rayled this so dangerous ciuill warre? Woe, that in all due obedience acknowledge & lawes and orders established of the Church of England? Or they that haue and doo impugne them: and who hath contended against her Maiesties, and her most honorable Counsels holy and iust authority? We or they? yea indeede, they haue not onely not yeelded to her Maiesties supreme authority herein: but they plainly deny the full ending and determining of this ciuill warre, consisting in these controuersies to appertaine vnto them, but onely to themselves, as (God willing) we shall see, when wee come (in this learned discourse) to the examining of the authority, that they giue to the ciuill Christian Magistrates in these matters.

Now, (say they) when as wee at this time, are subiect almost vnto all The Pre- the afflictions, which can come vnto a church blessed of God with such face.

Here our brethren declare who they are, whome before they called Cananits and Foxes: not the common aduersary, but the brethren at variaunce, so that either they meane vs, or it must light on themselves: & if now they vouchsafe vs the name of brethren: howe vnbrotherlike haue they dealt with vs, to reuile vs by these vile tearmes, Cananits & foxes.
As though we were heathly or heathen men, and not men and brethren as they are. But if we be their brethren, though at variance, and yet foxes and Cananites: what: and are they also of the same kind or brotherhood?
But such is the eagernesse of their zeale, that in their heart, they regarde not what soule tearmes they ascribe vs, howsoeuer they rebound: and so, expose themselves and vs their brethren, to bee hissed and derided at, of the common aduersary to vs both, and not to be feared of him.

But they haue here deuised a way, which they call a certaine, peaceable, and reasonable way following, so to reconcile vs being brethren at variance, that after a most sure and holy vnion of both our forces, we might giue a couragious onset vpon the common aduersary. This waye were woorth the hearing, and if it be such a way indeed, God forbid, but that we also (as becommeth brethren) forgiving their so late reproches, shoulde so much as lieth in vs, accept this offer.

But see, how peaceably and reasonably they beginne the very mention of this way. First, they complaine againe, that at this time, they are subiect almoste vnto all the afflictions, which can come vnto a Church; blessed of God with such a Christian and happy regiment.

I confesse, it may be, that in a church of God, and in a Church also blessed of God, and that with a happy and Christian regiment, some few particular persons, vpon some accidents by occasion, may bee subiecte to some afflictions. But if those afflictions shoulde be general to al that were the godlie, learned and faithfull ministers of the Church, and that also euen directly for the same Churches christian and happy regiment: howe could

could that church be truly said to be, a church blessed of God with a Christian and happy regiment. But since they graunte (and I hope they thinke as they speake, and dissemble not) that our Church of England is blessed of God with such a Christian and happy regiment, not meaning a meane degree of the Christianity and happinesse thereof: it therefore followeth and that of good consequence, if our brethren be at this time subject to afflictions, and that, all (as they pretend) for the Churches regiment: that they are not so godly, learned, and faithfull ministers, as woulde to God they were. Yea, they plainly betray, in that they impugne the same regiment of the Church of God, which both God blesteth (as they can not here deny, and confesse to bee such a christian and happie regiment) that vnchristianly, and also unhappily they resist the same, and are themselves the causers of their own afflictions. And since they can graunt thus much: God graunt they woulde better aduise themselves, and yeelde vnto this so happie and Christian regiment of the Church so blessed of God, least they strue too farre against Gods blessings, and against their owne consciences and confession. Whereas, if they woulde yeeld, which haue begunne this unhappie ciuill warre amongst vs: they might not only be partakers of this blessing of God, & christian happy regiment: but it should yet be more happy and Christian-like, and both they and wee also, more blessed of God. For then indeed, we that are brethren at variance, should be so reconciled, that after a most sure and holie vnion of both our forces, we should couragiously set vpon the common aduersary, which now (we being at this variance) vniteth all his forces to set vpon vs.

But, what be the afflictions that our brethren complaine they are subject vnto, yea, almost vnto al the afflictions that can come vnto a church blessed of God with such a Christian and happie regiment: As to the prophane scoffing of the Hammonits, as at a wall which a foxe should destroy: to the conspiracies of the Arabies, & those of Asshod: to the false charges of sedition, contempt of all good lawes and proceedings, lyke to that of Sanballat: yea to the Prophets themselves, vndermining, may reuiling, displacing, and grievously afflicting the godly & learned ministry, and so consequently, plaguing the church, &c. Is this our brethrens certain, peaceable, and reasonable way to reconcile brethren at variance, and can they thinke of no waie else, then thus at the first darke, to call their brethren scoffing Hammonits, conspiring Arabies, and those of Asshod: geuers of false charges like that of Sanballat: and to liken them to the false Prophets, and to the plagues of the church of God? This (we thinke) is but a sooty way, to reconcile brethren at variance. If, not rather, such a heap of so spightful reproches, as here they cast on vs, were the readiest way (if we were neuer so much vnited) to separate vs, and to inflambe the ciuill warre betwene vs: especially being so vntrue, and so heinous slanders as these are. For, what worse can they say on the very Papists, which (they say) are both their and our common aduersaries? and what other were these Hammonits & Arabies for all their dissembling, &c. And if we be such, how are we brethren? were these brethren to the Jewes? or would they reconcile themselves unto the, as our brethren here say, they are now desiring a peaceable & reasonable waie, that we might vnite our forces? with what conscience can they do or go about this, if we were such? if we be not such, with what consciences can they burthen vs, with so false and grievous slanders? or make they it no matter of conscience, so they may win credit and pittie, with the common people, they care not by what shameful infamies so ever, so y they make vs odious? This dealing is not brother-like, nor the way to reconcile brethren at variance. God be mercifull to vs both, & lay not this vnto our bretherens charges.

Our Bretherens vnbrotherly slanders

Our bretherens and our building.

Our bretherens nearer imitation of those Hammonits, &c.

Who are likely to vnderminers,

Who are likely to vnderminers,

Can they not proceed on the matter, if they haue ought against vs, with out such villainous reproches? if we should replye in such soule-mouthered language, what a hearing were this? indeed wee tell them plainly that they build not wel: but both hinder and ouerthrow their bretherens building: yea, they contrary and hinder their owne building. And most strange would we haue them leaue this strange manner of building: but not utterly to leaue all manner of building: but to ioyne with vs whome they confesse to be their brethren, & y we build on the rocke also, and for al materiall parts and substance of the building, they say, they agree with vs. And we builded, and builded well, before they began, or were able to lay a stone, or temper morter to this building. Thus did not any of these Hammonits, Arabies, or those of Asshod, or Sanballat: who being no brethren minded not y the building should go soze ward at al, but cleane to ouerthrow it, for al that they pretended building with them. And if we might liken any aliens from the common weale of Israel, to these our brethren in this dooing: Doe not they themselves play the like partes? For whereas wee (before they came in and troubled vs) were building of the Church, as well as we coude, they mocke at our building, as at a wall, that a foxe could destroy. Yea, and I would with our brethren take good heed, that they may not be iustly charged with some spice of sedition (for they may rightly be challenged for contempt of good lawes and proceedings) though we burden them not like to that (accusation) of Sanballat. For he burdened the Jewes wrongfully, and as the Jewes were free (in building the temple) from those accusations, wherewith he falsly charged them, of sedition, and contempt of good lawes, because they had sufficient authority of the Prince so to do: in like manner haue we the Princes establishment, for this our manner of building, which our brethren impugn. And therfore they ought to think better hereof: least they be iustly charged with that, wherewith the Jewes were falsly burdened. Whether wee or our brethren imitate those false Prophetes, that discouraged the Prince Nehemias from proceeding in his former and lawfull building of the temple: we are soze that our brethren should rip it by, they draw so neere that euill practise.

Vndermining we vse not, neither (God be praised) needs we vse it: we go simply and plainly to worke. Vndermining is moze proper to them, that when the walles are builded, would cast them downe againe: as our brethren by all policies endeauour, to ouertourne all the regiment that we haue builded. As for theirs which they haue not builded, and are but yet laying the plotfoune of it, we may well stop it, but properly, we can not be saide to vndermine it.

Reuiling is not our practise, would God our brethren bled it no moze then we do: reconcilment might be made much the sooner. But (Leonem ex vnguibus) this very Preface doth shewetell, what we shall expecte in the Learned discourse,

Some of them indeede haue bene displaced, but by their owne demerits and importunity, and with griefe to those that haue bene drinen to displace them: neither can it be otherwise, except we shoulde yelde unto them in the matter, and authorize them against our selues.

Their grieuous afflicting we haue already answered. They are displaced with as much forbearance, lenity, and as much labouring to winne them, as may be. Other affliction (except vpon great occasions gotten further by them selues) they suffer none. Neither do we deny some among them (although not many) to be learned: yea (in some respects) some among them to be godly also. Yet neither their learning (at least wise, that they haue here shewed) is answerable to their vaunt of A learned discourse. But their godlines (by their leane) in this dealing may be much amended. If our brethren be so godly & learned a ministry: where learned they this point of godlinesse, not onely to wrest al these examples (contrarie to their consciences, and the apparant places) against vs their brethren: & to reuile vs as these enemies of the church of God: but to hale against vs these testimonies also of the Prophets, that we afflict and plague the Church with that plague whereby the Priestres may mourne? What? and would they so faine bring vs in the compasse of such plagues, that they will not acknowledge themselves to bee included in the name of Priestres? Whiche name (although needlesly) they thinke so much, as though it signified a sacrifice. But indeede, if any make the Priestres and ministers of the church to mourne, these doings of our brethren are no small cause thereof: and if they impute the cause of the mourning, to the lacke of the peoples offering: who go moze about to decrease that little, which is employed to the Priestres and Ministers maintenance, then our brethren do. Although (God be praised for it) we haue not yet bene subiect to that dreadfull spiritual famine, which the Prophet threatned, Amos 8. 11. 12. & 13. Behold the daye come (saith the Lord God) that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of heauing the word of the Lord. And they shall wander wander from sea to sea, and from the North euen to the East, shall they runne to & fro, to seeke the word of the Lord, and shall not find it. In that day shall the faire virgines, and the young men perish for thirst. This was a feareful threate in deede, from the which G O D most gracionly hath preserved vs, and hath giuen vs such abundant measure of this spirituall foode of his holie word, that I am afrayde, wee are rather glutted, and become so wanton and disbaigned, that if we cannot haue it deliuered vnto vs, in such manner as our owne lustes desire it, and at these and those persons handes onely; (which is a signe of no great Famine) that we may rather feare, least for this vnthankfulnesse, and all our other abuses of this foode, it shall be taken cleane from vs. And if we haue had any scarcitie in some places, by any persons default: Let our brethren also take heede here-into, that they haue not much more augmented the cause, by these vnnecessarie contentions, both drawing away others, and making manie to suspect the foode it selfe: and by with-drawing themselves (through their contempt of the Lawes established) from deliuering this foode vnto the people. But wee are rather contented, to repell these apparant slanderers from our selues, than to exasperate our Brethren, by laying the same before their owne faces, to see howe here they blemish themselves, in seeking thus to deface and discredit vs. But since they say they doe this, for the reconciling of vs being Brethren at variance, let vs construe it to the best. Better are the wounds of a friend, then the kisses of a flatterer. God graunt that those meanes which they haue here deuised, or any other, may proue indeede such a certaine peaceable and reasonable way following, that wee may leaue this striving with our selues, and vnite our forces, for a couragious setting vpon the common aduersarie.

Preface.

The way that our brethren
seeke of re-concilement

Which is, that whereas both by bookes already written, and by treatises lately and nowe published, it may appeare we seeke that which at the least in the iudgement of all true Christians, hath no small probability (as wee iudge, necessitie) of trueth out of the Scriptures: it may please her most excellent Maiestie and their honors to appoint on both sides, the best learned, most godly and moderate men to debate all differences of waight betweene them and vs. So that first vpon sufficient consideration, the Questions to be debated be without all ambiguitie set downe, the reasons of both sides without all outgoings, shortly and plainly deliuered in writing ech to other, that after vpon sufficient examination, the reasons of both be continually confirmed and resolved, till either by the euidence of trueth one partie yeelde vnto the other: or the follie and madnesse of those which gaine-say it, doe in equal iudgement become manifest, in regarde of the contradictions and absurdities where-to they shall be driuen, by the force of Gods worde.

It may appeare (we graunt) that our brethren haue both already written bookes, & now lately published treatises: but with what authoritie they

they could so doe, that is another question. if it be lawfull authoritie to do it, both against lawe and authoritie, we may shortly haue other, vpon like ensample, set out worse matters, yea, neuer so ill doctrine, or matters neuer so much against the state. For although they pretende their bookes and treatises to be neuer so good: yet ought they not to be published, but by good meanes also: least, if the good meanes be neglected, ill things in like manner may be published.

But by what ill meanes soener they set out their bookes and treatises: yet for the matter of them, it may (say they) appeare, we seeke that, which at the least in the iudgement of all true Christians, hath no small probability (as we iudge necessitie) of trueth out of the Scriptures.

Fancie might make a man bowlt bzarne, and thinke it is flower. And even so doe our brethren imagine in this necessitie. But when we shall come to the examining of these bookes and treatises, yea even of this their learned discourse, compiled in the name of all the faithfull ministers, and of all their desires, and of all that (they say) they seeke for: we shall finde necessitie of trueth out of the Scriptures, in no one thing of all their positions in controuersie, except they vnderstande it so out of the Scriptures, that is to say, cleane without al scriptures, or any necessarie consequence of scriptures.

And although probability ought not to carrie away the matter, yet vpon better suruey thereof, we shall finde not so much as any good probability, that is grounded on the Scriptures, but onely on the mere interpretations and sayings of some the chiefest persons in estimation on their side: if at the least they agree with them, and are not caried away by their owne fancies, as in the perusing of this learned discourse shall (God willing) appeare. In the meane season, see here how peremptorie our brethren are in their owne iudgement. That which they seeke for, is of no probability, but (as we iudge necessity) say they, & yet they confesse, that in the iudgement of all true Christians, it is but of probability, (though saye they,) it hath no small probability. So that they graunt at the least hereby, that many, if not al, true Christians iudge, that that which they seeke for hath no necessity of truth out of the Scriptures, but hold themselves contented onely with probability. For be it small or not small, it is but probability of truth out of the Scriptures, that they ground themselves vpon: & yet think this hindereth not, but that they still be al true Christians. So that they count them no true Christians, in whose iudgement the things that our brethren seeke for, haue not (at the least) great probability of truth out of the Scriptures. But if they can allow them to be al true Christians, in whose iudgement these things stand but on the uncertainty of probability: I trust we shal not lose our Christendome ener a whit the more for this, but be true Christians, (yea, their selues haue graunted vs euen in this Preface, that we are their brethren, and that we agree in the substance of religion with them: and therfore of necessity if they be true Christians we be true Christians also; and yet we openly and constantly answ, that the most and greatest of the things that they seeke for, haue not at the least any probability of truth out of the Scriptures in our iudgements: yea, in my iudgement, not one of them al any godd probability, but, we al confesse they haue no necessity. This therfore was too vnaduisedly and too peremptorily spoken, and vpon too great a confidence in their cause, as to hazard the truth of our Christianity, for not iudging these things to bee at least probable. But let the necessity or probability be tried, in the debating and weighing of them: let vs now see how they woulde haue them debated and weighed.

Preface.

It may please (say they) her most excellent Maiestie and their honors, to appoint on both sides the best learned, most godlie and moderate men to debate all differences of weight betweene them and vs.

Bridges

How farre forth they yeeld autority to her Maiesty.

This is a good beginning, that they will yeelde to her most excellent Maiestie and their honours, yet at the least thus much, if they woulde stande to this: but when it shall come to the debating, wayghing, or determining: they giue her Maiestie and their honours no authoritie at al. Yea, they haue their selues already debated, weighed, iudged, determined, and prescribed these thinges, and that, for necessitie, in their iudgements, before they come to this conference, as shal also appeare by these their learned discourses: and is it likely they will yeelde, and renoue their principles, set forth in print, and diuulged to all the worlde, by our reasoning afterwarde with them, howsoever by reasoning we should euict them? Had it not bene better, not to haue vaunted thus before hande on such necessitie and prescription?

But they say, The best learned, most godlie and moderate men on both sides should be appointed, to debate al differences of weight betweene them and vs.

The learning, godlinesse & moderation of
the debaters

For their partes they so glorie both of their learning and godlines, that they giue this booke two titles: in the one, for godlinesse and moderatenesse: A declaration of the desires of the faithfull ministers: (not prescribing, but moderatly desiring): in the other, for their learning: A learned discourse of Ecclesiasticall gouernment. Thus haue they set forth themselves for these vertues. But (thanks be to God) that they graunt yet some of our side, to be also both learned, godly and moderate men. What the learning is of many (God be prayed) on our side, let the learned iudge. Moderation is more easily discerned: as the Apostle saith, Phil. 4. 5. Let your moderate (or patient) minde be knowne to all men: But since our brethren graunt they can be godlie to, and yet dissent from all these thinges that our brethren seeke for: it argueth, that they are not of such necessitie, but that men may be learned, moderate and godly to, though not onely they haue not these thinges that our Brethren seeke for, but that also

also they be of a contrarie opinion. And if this may be so among the learned: I see not why it may not be so likewise among the vnlearned, and so among vs all in generall. Our learning, our modestie, our godlinesse, is no whit preiudiced, by the want or refusall of these things that our brethren seeke for. And if it be no preiudice to these three vertues: no more is it preiudice to any other, and so, these things that our brethren seeke for may be altogether as well spared as receiued, nor haue anie necessitie at all in them.

But now, since they on their side (which likewise we denie not in the, but so farre forth congratulate the same vnto them) shall haue both learned, godly and moderate men also: yet would wee gladly vnderstande this, whether this shalbe counted a peece of their moderation, to vse such broad language as hath passed already, euen in the giuing this aduice: nay would God it might cease here, but all this learned discourse is peppered with such, and with more immoderate speeches, against the poore ministers, against all the Bishops, and against all vs their brethren: yea, against the Prince, and all the whole state of the Church. We thinketh if we should haue moderate men on their side also, that wee might make good exception against all these, that call themselves here, all the faithfull ministers, as not moderate men. But vpon hope of their better moderation, on this moderate admonition, our request vnto them is: that at least, wise for the time of this debating they would lay aside al this so peremptorie vsing of necessitie, with all these and such other vndecent termes, and violent demeanour in this conference.

Well now, when her Maiestie and their honours, shall haue agreed vpon the men, how shall they procede in handling the matter?

So that, first (say they) vpon sufficient consideration, the questions to be debated, be without all ambiguitie set downe.

This first point (so farre as it stretcheth) is right good reason, and we holde well with it, that the questions, to be debated, should be set downe vpon sufficient consideration had of them: and then, heeing sufficiently considered to be matters requisite to be debated vpon, to be set downe without all ambiguitie. But here vpon ariseth another question, and (we thinketh) no lesse to be also sufficiently considered, who shall haue this sufficient consideration of the questions that are to be set downe, whether they be fit questions, or no? And who shall cut off all ambiguities, that the questions may be cleare and plaine? What, shall anie of the parties themselves: or both the parties that must debate and dispute vpon them? Or shall her Maiestie and their honours that appointed the parties, appoint the Questions? Or some other learned, godlie and moderate men (but also appointed by them) to be the moderators of the disputation betwene them?

If now such moderators shall be agreed vpon also, to allow of the question

If the debaters shoulde be moderate men, then should our brethren vie more moderation in their tearmes & not be so peremptory in their dealing.

The debating of the questions & the allowing of them stions that shall be set downe : how shall they begin to proceed in reasoning ?

The manner of the debating.

The reasons (say they) of both sides without all out-goings shortlie and plainelie deliuered in writing each to other.

What ? And shall they do it then all by writing ? Indeed that is a sure way : for by that meanes, there shall be lesse escapes of the partie reasoning, and lesse euasions from his aduersarie, and lesse moouing the affections of the hearers, with the action of the person, when the reasons are deliuered in writing. And the other partie so receauing the arguments, shall againe with moze aduise ment, and lesse perturbing, peruse and weygh the force of the reasons, and moze shortlie and plainelie without all out-goings, graunt, denie, or distinguish the same. And they againe receiuing this answer in writing, which the partie auoweth to stand vnto, may better perceiue what they haue to confirme or to impugne, and still on both sides (with the lesse explication of their senses by mouth) goe moze roundlie and resolutelie to the argument it selfe, setting aside all circumstances: till at length the one side be driuen to a demurre or issue, that all that argument must relie vpon, and loke for the finall sentence and determination of the matter. But what shall we haue do ? Who shall now determine that issue betwene them ? Shall the foresaid moderators, or anie other iudges ? For their speeches seeme to allow none. But that the dispute is among themselves, shall determine all the matter, or without anie determinations, take it for a cleare case, as though it were determined. For, saie they, That after, vpon sufficient examination, the reasons of both be continuallie confirmed and resolved, till either by the euidence of truth, one part yeeld vnto the other : or the follie and madnesse of those which gainesai it, doo in equall iudgement become manifest, in regarde of the contradictions and absurdities, whereto they shall be driuen by the force of Gods worde.

ner.

And might we conceiue anie assured hope, that if our brethren were by this meanes conuicted, that then they would yeelde ? Or if they or we, had anie such madnesse or follie not to yeelde, but still to gaine-saie the euidence of truth, and incurre contradictions and absurdities, whereto they or we should be driuen by force of Gods word : should none betwene them and vs, haue this equall iudgement, to make this become manifest ? This therefore, were to leaue the matter still vndetermined, except there were also some appointed, to be in equall iudgement, betwene the parties, the determiners of the matter. As for our parts, we neuer refused, or (by Gods grace) shall refuse anye waie, that her Maiestie and their honors shall thinke meete, whereby our brethren might be satisfied. But we shall see in this learned discourse, how their selues (except they also be the onelie determiners of the questions betwene vs, reaching euen to the highest pointe of the Princes authoritie) utterlie reied both both this, and all other waies, for the finall determination of them. But now, supposing all will fall out well on their side, they proceed saying.

Which waie, though it should come naked vnto vs, cannot well be refused, but being richlie attired with all robes and ornaments, which the scripture giueth vnto the synodicall assemblies, for such conferences: as namelie, that there be much searching of the truth by sufficient reasoning without all by matters, quarrels, euasions, and coulours whatsoeuer: that there be much order, when the spirit of euerie prophet shall be subiect vnto the spirits of other prophets, and the iudgement of all shall be sufficientlie heard, without stopping of free and sufficient answer, without lordlie carrying awaie of the matter, with no substance of reason; where no authoritie, pregnancie of wit, plausible persuation of mans wisdom, shall turne the truth aside, but all shall stand in the euident demonstration of Gods spirit.

1. Cor. 2. 4.

The waye which they haue besore set downe, although it be not able nor likelie, without some moderators and determiners, appointed by hir Maiestie and their honours, to effect a perfect reconciliation and sure vnion: yet the matters in controuersie, being so in writing on bothe sides debated, cannot well be saide to come naked, in respect of the robes and ornaments of the scripture: like the grounds of all their p^{ro}ues, should be taken either out of the expresse testimonies of the scripture; or out of necessarie consequence of the scripture. Except perhaps they meane, by being richlie attyred with all robes and ornaments, which the scripture giueth vnto the synodicall assemblies for such conferences, their owne interpretations, and rhetorickall exornations of the scripture. But, let the scriptures (as they say) be searched out for the true vnderstanding of them, with as much reasoning as shall be thought necessarie and sufficient, without all by matters, quarrels, euasions, and coulours whatsoeuer, and so, a Gods name, naked or adorned: let the matter be further tried when it shall.

The naked trial of the matter.

But what meane they here, that they adde yet further: That there be much order, when the spirit of euerie prophet shall be subiect vnto the spirits of the other prophets? Would they reduce this synodicall conference to the order of prophesying, which they began of late, in the institution of that order, which S. Paule mentioneth, 1. Cor. 14? For that was not a strict and logicall reasoning, nor a deliuerie of their assertions and answers by writing: but a discoursing at large by mouth: nor so properlie anie disputing, one against another, as an interpreting, one after another, or exhorting, instructing, and comforting one another, as the spirit (which at that time wrought miraculoussie in them) gaue them utterance: is this then that conference which our brethren desire? Because they say, they would not be stopped of free and sufficient answer. This is nothing agreeable to the waye, whereof they saide besore, they could thinke of no waie but that, which should be, When the reasons on both sides, without all out-goings, are shortlie and plainelie deliuered in writing each to other. And here contrariwise, they would haue the Iudgement of all sufficientlie heard, and the spirit of euerie Prophet, to be subiect to the spirits of the other prophets, and that all shall stand in the euident demonstration of Gods spirit. So that vnder pretence of the demonstration or reuelation of Gods spirit (as though yet those miraculous reuelations and demonstrations of the spirit of God were still, and in these matters, to be expected, and not the manifest euident of Gods word) if once they said that we on our side had not the spirit of God, but onelie they: either we must yeeld to them, or else nothing shall be determined betwene vs. But if the matter shall come to the iudgement of the other prophets (supposing all to be prophets in the synod or companie, appointed for the conference:) our brethren might perhaps be deceaued of their hoped successe, without anye lordlie carrying awaie of the matter. Neither is it mete (we graunt) that the matter should be stopped, without such free and sufficient answer, as is requisite for such a disputation: or with lordlie carrying awaie of the matter with no substance of reason: or by authoritie, or pregnancie of wit, or plausible persuation of mans wisdom to turne the truth aside. These speeches are but hypocrisies, glauncing at the Bishops, and at the synodall assemblies in the conuocation house, as though they out-countenanced the matter with such shifts: which is neither charitable nor truelie spoken by our brethren. But, who come nearest to these practises, we shall see after ward (God willing) when wee come to the treatise of Synods in this learned discourse.

Lordlie carrying awaie the matter.

Act. 14. 16.

Charging of men dead and alieue.

Lastly (say they) that there be peace without all bitternesse, reuilinges, suspitions, charging of men dead and alieue: whereby affections are moued, iudgement blinded, and men driuen as with a mightie streame from the lone of the truth. When it cometh thus adorned, we thinke, that which we labour to procure, to be so honorable not onely before God, but also before men, that none can iudge otherwise of it than we doe.

Turpe est docteri cum culpa redarguit ipsum. Would God our brethren their selues would leaue off these practises, which here they would haue to be left off. What is more bitter, or bitternesse it selfe, then are the speeches, which euen in their entrie into this meane of reconciliation, they haue here vsed: And all this learned discourse is still besprinkled with this bitternesse, with reuilinges, with suspitions, and with charginges of men both dead and alieue. For not onely our Bishops, and we that (God be praised) are alieue, be charged by our brethren: but the charge burdeneth no lesse all those Bishops and ministers, that first concluded vpon the the Eccles. Lawes now in force. Yea, it includeth the Princes of so godly memorie, that with their cleargie, and the whole state of the Church and Realme, established the same.

But perhaps our brethren here do meane, that we vse to defend these Lawes with this argument, that such and such most excellent men allowed of them: and of all things they loue not to heare of this argument: whereby (they say) affections are moued, iudgement blinded, and men driven as with a mightie streame from the loue of the truth. Mouing affections.

Indeede in a false matter it may so doe, and hath doone much among the papistes: and by our brethrens leaue, they also are carried too much away with charginges of men dead and alieue, and with too much forestalled opinions of such and such men, as to say, Caluine being dead, Beza or Daneus being alieue, were of this or that opinion in these things. And therefore, I haue also labored somewhat the more, to lay before the reader (amonge all other) especially their opinions: that the reader may better weigh their proues, and see howe far they agree or disagree about things. And the like we all doe with Swinglius, Peter Martyr, Bullinger, Musculus, &c. With Cranmer, Ridley, Latimer, Hooper, Iuell, &c. being dead: besides Gualter, Zanchius, & others being alieue. Not to vse the opinions or sentences of these most famous men, to carie away the affections and blinde the iudgements of men, to be driven as with a mightie streame from the loue of the truth: God forbid. Amicus Plato, amicus Socrates: magis amica veritas. But to confirme men better in the truth, as we also alleage the holie auncient fathers, Ireneus, Tertullian, Cyprian, Clemens, Alexandrinus, Origene, Eusebius, Epiphanius, Basill, Theodoret, Chrysostome, Ierome, Ambrose, Augustine, &c. As witnesse only to the truth in doubtfull matters, and to heare their iudgements and consentes in these questions, what was the vse or opinion of them in their dayes. And this doe our Brethren themselves, and giue vs occasion to search these fathers better. And this was vsed to be done, not onely in the seuerall treatises of the Fathers, according to the counsell of Vincentius Lyrinensis, and as Theodoret vseth in his dialogues, &c. but also in all the best and most famous Synodicall assemblies, and disputations, holden in the auncient councils, to cite the testimonies of the godly fathers deceased, and of the most famous fathers consentes that were then liuing, for their interpretations and iudgements of their controuersies. Neither ought our Brethren to shunne this manner of charging them with men dead or alieue. For it is a good (not adorning only of the truth) but finding out of the truth, lightning of the iudgement, and mouing mens affections, driving them as with a mightie streame to the loue of the truth: and when the truth commeth indeede thus adorned, wee thinke that which wee also labour to confirme and defende, as they labour to procure the The alleaging of the late and auncient writers contrarie, that none (we doe not say) can iudge, otherwise then we doe: but that, they which doe iudge otherwise then we doe in these matters, may haue sufficient cause to iudge as we do, and to thinke them to be honorable; not onely before men, but before God also. Nowe, when our Brethren haue set downe at their deuise, how they would haue these controuerfies to be debated: then they enter into the aunswere of the objections, which they suppose will be objected against them, and say:

Preface.

For if any shall object that the graue authoritie of Archbishops and Bishops shall receaue a checke, whilest they are brought to deal with those whom they iudge fewe, young, vnlearned, and not comparable to themselves: or that it is a challenge not much vnlike the papistes: or lastly, that it shall bee preiudiciall to the estate of gouernement established:

Bridges

Our brethrens presupposall of our objections.

The 1. objection of comparison betweene the Archb. B. & our brethren.

Comparison of age and youth.

Comparison of learning.

Comparison of authority

In good time our Brethren remember among other these three objections. Neither are they of small moment, being rightly set downe (as indeede they may be more pithily objected) and require enerie one of them a sounde and sufficient aunswere. It is no small matter, if any shall object but this first and lightest objection of these three: that the graue Authoritie of Archb. and Bishops, shall receaue a checke, whilest they are brought to deal with those, whom they iudge fewe, young, vnlearned, and not comparable to themselves. Albeit I thinke, that neyther our Archbishops nor Bishops doe iudge of these our brethren, that they be so fewe (as it were better they were) but rather too many; at the least, farre more in number than our Archbishops, or all our Bishops are: neyther do they iudge them to be so young (although manie of them indeede be very young, both in yeares, in iudgement, and in experience of these matters,) but that the auncienter sort of them, might for their age and time haue had leysure ynough, to haue sought out the state and groundes of these questions long agoe; saue that they are too much fore grounded in their owne opinions. But in these matters, their youth or age is not called into question. Neither doe our Archbishops or Bishops esteeme our brethren, at least, many of them, for vnlearned: but rather wish that they would not thinke and vaunt too much of their learning, and if they would followe the Apostles counsell, sapere ad sobrietatem: it would better become them. That (when all is done) is the best learning, which findeth out, and submitteeth it vnto the truth. Neither doe the Archbishops and Bishops (as I suppose) iudge, that our brethren are not comparable to themselves. Although our brethren may remember, there be three degrees of comparison, and it might well ynough beseme our brethren, so to compare with the Archb. and Bishops, that they would not forget their owne callings, nor the dignities of the Archb. and Bishops, which they call here their graue authoritie: Howbeit, they giue that terme, but in a light a light mockage to the, whē as indeed they acknowledge the Archb. or B. not to haue anie authoritie at all, but labour by all meanes, besides their scoffe, to be in all respects, (specially of authoritie) so comparable to the: that they would not onely giue them a checke, as their equals: but as their superiours, enen checke mate, vtterly to foyle and ouerthrow them. Which if they can do, by all their learning, and in such manner as is requisite for the matter: let the not spare it, a Gods blessing. And if our Archb. and Bishops, or any other of our partie, that otherwise are as ready as any of our brethren, to giue account of their hope and faith to anie orderly asking the same, that be by her most excellent Maiestie, and by her most honorable Counsell, brought to deale with anie of all these our brethren: I dare aduenture, that they will not disdain by any lawefull and goodly meanes, that can be deuised, to deale with them: if our brethren for their part would oblige themselves to stand there-to.

As for the second obiection, it is of greater moment: that this our brethrens challenge, is not much vnlike to the challenge of the Papistes. And can our brethren also forsee this, that anie may object this vnto them, that they make like challenge to our Bishops, as doo the Papists? And are they neither afraid, nor ashamed of it, to braue so neare the challenge of the common aduersarie, against their brethren and fathers in Gods church?

And yet the third obiection is the greatest: that it shall be preiudiciall to the estate of gouernement established: which if it be: see what a hazard they put, not so much the Archbishops and Bishops, and manie other persons vnto, besides the lawes and orders ecclesiasticall: as the whole estate of the Church and realme of England, and of all the gouernors, as well as of the gouernement, and so withall, of all the ciuill and politike lawes established, yea, of her Maiesties alone estate, gouernment, and sacred person, to be indangered. Which obiection how they can sufficientlie answer vnto: is an answer indeed worth the hearing. For, if now they can not sufficientlie answer these obiections, which here their selues before-hand presuppose, will be, or may be objected against them: it had bene better for them to haue suppressed these obiections. Which will be a soze blanke to all their learned discourse following, in the iudgement of the prudent and goodly reader. Let vs now therefore see their answer, to the obiections. And first in generall to them all that they say:

It may please their wisdomes, who are to be iudges, to consider what we haue to answer vnto these things: which, if they haue the truth of Gods word, containe the safest and best way in such cases, & tend to the full quieting of all, and the remoouing of the plagues which are vpon vs, and are likelie dailie further to come, euen from the common aduersarie: we may boldlie, yet most humbly vpon our knees, require them

The 2. obiection of our brethrens challenge, to be not vnlike the papists challenge.

The 3. obiection of preiudice to the estate of gouernement established.

Our brethren answer to these three objections.

them before God and all his elect Angels, nor to cast it away. What a strange and senseless answer have we here, to so direct and important objections? I referre it to the iudgement, of whosoever shall be Iudges of this their answer: And I believe it will pose their wisdoms, to iudge, and misse not, what the meaning is of this our brethrens answer. For first, to whom doe they meane here in these wordes: It maye please their wisdoms, who are to be Iudges, to consider what we haue to answer vnto these things? Doe they meane the Readers of these their writings? Or doe they meane, some to be appointed to be iudges of the controuersies, in the foresaid conference and debating? But, when they set downe all the order of that conference, they so little mentioned any Iudges: that they would haue the matter so examined onlie on both sides, till by the euidence of truthe, the one partyeeld vnto the other on the follie and madnesse of those which gaine-saie it, do in equall iudgement become manifest. Here is mention indeed of equall iudgement, but it appeareth, that they would haue the parties onlie, not any Iudge or Iuriere betwene the parties, to determine the matter: which is the thing that we thinke verie necessarie. But they thinke the matter would be so cleare, that it should need no such Iudges, nor in y^e conference they are answerers or defendants, but chalengers, as here they confesse: yet here they speake of those, that are to be Iudges of their answer vnto these things, which I vnderstand, for their answer vnto these three objections. And so I like wise make the same request with them, That it may please their wisdoms, who are to be Iudges (that is to saye, as I vnderstand them, the readers of their answer) to consider indeed and to weigh well, what they haue to answer vnto these things, at least wise, what they doe answer vnto them. For if they haue to answer any thing else: whie doe they not here set it downe? Except they reserue somewhat for a further answer, which the readers wisdoms, cannot, nor is not to consider, untill they shew it. In the meane season, the readers or Iudges wisdoms whosoener, and their owne wisdoms too, that made this answer, shall finde them-selues worke enough, to consider of this their answer, here made vnto these things: which if they haue the truth of Gods word, containe the safest and best waie in such cases, &c.

So, how they make these things to hang together: they desire the Iudges wisdoms to consider, what they haue to answer vnto these things. What are these things, that the readers or Iudges should consider? Are they not here desired to consider of their answer to these their objections, which, them-selues say, may be objected against them? How when they say, on these things, that is, these three objections, which if they haue the truth of Gods word, &c. Then say I, let their wisdoms consider who are to be Iudges, what our brethren can answer, that shall these unnecessary contentions. If they would needs haue begone them, they should at least haue forborne, till we had ouerpast all the dangers comming from the common aduersarie.

Our brethren bold

their knees.

But saye they, We may boldlie, yet most humble on our knees require them before GOD, and all his elect Angels, not to cast it awaie. How do they make this conclusion depend on the premises? And who are they, whom thus boldlie, yet most humble on their knees, they may require them? Is it the Archbishops and Bishops? But neither they require such humilitie of our brethren: nor our brethren will make any request, in such humble manner to them. Or is it those, of whom befoze they said, who are to be iudges: not telling, who those iudges were: whether some appointed by hir Maiestie, and her most honorable counsell: or the readers: nor whereof they should be iudges: whether of the conference: or of these things, to wit of these obiections, or of their answer there vnto, or of the controuerxies in this learned discourse following?

And what is it, that they heere require of them, not to cast it awaie? Whereof meane they this? Of the state of the gouernement established: that it should not be cast awaie? And good reason too: Or do they meane it, of the conference: or of the obiection the three obiections, or of their answer? But when they shall tell vs plainer their owne meaning: then may we better tell them what is our answer. This in the meane season, is all, that they answer heere in generall to these obiections: which done, they proceed to the particulars of them.

Wherefore, for the first, let vs graunt the great difference which they make of yeares and learning: yet the speech of Elihu giueth them sufficient answer: that this vnderstanding is not tied to such outward respects, but to the reuelation of Gods spirite: and to accept in such cases the persons of men, or to giue titles, is but to prouoke God to destroy vs. Yea let the memorable examples of Ezechias and the Priestes: of the Apostles in their counsels, of Paule in his Epistles, and euen of Peter in yeelding to the challenge of some, not so well instructed, moue them: who not only not refused the Levites and elders, but accepted the people in some manner, to be heard to speake, and to authorise their determinations and writings. At least, let their own opinion (that in interpreting the scriptures, and deliuey of doctrine, wee are equall with them,) perswade them, not to refuse those, who if they could straine their consciences, to subscribe to the Archbishops articles: they would gladly receaue them to be the Embassadors of Iesus Christ.

Bridges.

The first obiection consisted of three pointes: that our brethren were but fewe, young, & vnlearned, to be accounted comparable to the Archbishops and Bishops,

To this they say: wherefore for the first, let vs graunt the great difference they make of yeeres and learning.

This is wel done of our brethren (if they meane as they say) that they would yeelde to the Archbishops and Bishops, in these two things, and for the mosse parte of these our brethren, they yeild but in the thinges, that otherwise are most apparant.

Yet (say they) the speech of Elihu giueth them sufficient aunswere that this vnderstanding is not tied to such outward respects, but to the reuelation of Gods spirite.

I graunt, the speech of Elihu giueth sufficient aunswere for the respect of yeeres, to all them that relie thereon. But our Arch-bishop, our Bish. neither wee, do measure the truth of the matter, by the age of the men. Neither we ascribe it to the title of age, or dignity: but acknowledge that which Elihu saith in the same chapter verse 9. Great men are not alwaies wise, neither doth the aged alwaies vnderstand iudgement: and yet they, & all the world doth knowe that wisdom in youth is but the seldomer example: as Elihu said befoze ver. 6. I am young in yeeres, and yet are auncient, and therefore I doubted and was affraide to shewe you my opinion: For I said, the dayes shall speak, and the multitude of yeeres shall teach wisdom. And in many places, the young are willed to reuerence their auncents, and to learne wisdom of them, so that they be wise and reuerend persons. Notwithstanding if anie younger can make demonstration of the reuelation of Gods spirite, not reuealed vnto the elder: therin we confesse, both Archbishops and bishops, and all, are to hearken and yeelde vnto those yonger. Young Samuel is to be preferred befoze old Helie and al the Priestes: and young Daniel befoze all the elders of Israel: and here of Christe also gaue example euen in his childhood. And S. Paule gaue this precept, that we should despise Timothy for his youth: and yet was Timothy an elder in his office, yea an Archbishop (as God willing shalbe sufficiently shewed in the debating of this learned discourse. But as our Archbishops & Bishops must not, and (I hope) do not reiecte any of our brethren, for their younger yeres: so must these our yonger brethren take no lesse, (if not much more heede), that to supply their defect in yeres, they presume not (on pretext of Elihu) to father any of their owne, or other neuer so excellent meninges, on the reuelation of Gods spirite, except they can make apparant prowe thereof. For, so, both they in pretending it, and we in beleeuing it, might runne into a great daunger, as did many auncient Heretikes, and as do the common aduerfaries to vs both, besides the Anabaptistes: which when they can not proue their assertions, by cleare and inuincible testimonies of the Scripture, they alwayes runne to this, that they haue it by reuelation of Gods spirite. But though our Arch-bishops, and Bish. haue not of any speciall reuelation of Gods spirite: yet I trust that in this mat- ter, as S. Paule said of his owne judgement, 1. Cor. 7. 40. And I thinke also that I haue the spirit of God: so they with good testimony of conscience may say also, that although all haue not like measure: yet they are not destitute of Gods holy spirit. Which howe farre hee hath warranted vnto them in his word, for the grounde of their function: I referre to the examining of this learned discourse.

Our brethrens examples.

Ezechias.

The memorable examples that our brethren here alleage, relesne the nothing. Yea, let the memorable examples (say they) of Ezechias and the Priests: of the Apostles in their counsels, of Paul in his Epistles, and euen of Peter in yeelding to the chalenge of some, not so well instructed moue them, who not onely refused the Leuites and Elders, but accepted the people in some manner to speake, and to authorize their determinations and writings. For proue hereof in the example of Ezechias, they quote, 2. Chro. 30. 1. 5. 23. vers. In the 1. verse sayth the text: And Ezechias sent to all Israel and Iudah, and also wrote letters to Ephraim and Manasse, that they should come to the house of the Lord at Ierusalem, to keepe the passeouer vnto the L. God of Israel. What, is here any thing for proue of any Priests, Leuites, or pastorall Elders in office, but younger in yeares, or in learning inferior, to haue any controuersies reuealed by the spirit of God vnto them, that were not reuealed vnto the Bishops, Priests and Leuites, which in learning and age were their auncientes? For, if they bring not their examples to this point, they alledge them amisse, for instances to answer the two former parts of the first obiection, for the difference of yeares and learning, betwene our brethren on the one partie, and the Archb. and Bishops on the other.

Likewise in the 5. verse, And they decreed to make a proclamation through out all Israel from Beer-sheba euen to Dan, that they should come, and keepe the passeouer vnto the L. God of Israel at Ierusalem, for they had not done it a great time, as it is written.

Likewise the 23. And the whole assembly tooke Counsell to keepe it other seven dayes: so they kept it seven dayes with ioye. Let the reader or any whoeuer iudge, (and iudge byright) whether this be a fit example for this matter. It is a memorable example indeede of an other matter, which maketh cleane against these our Brethren, that denie the Princes authoritie in Ecol. matters, as is also to be seene in this learned discourse. And if this be a good example, for the ordering & establishing of these controuersies: then hath her Maiestie already well followed this example of Ezechias, and if it be a memorable example, would God our Brethren would remember better, to followe those Priests and Leuites that obeyed Ezechias orders and commaundementes, in those Ecol. matters that he commaunded them.

for the which they quote Act. 15. ver. 22. wherein the salutation of their letters is set downe; And they wrote letters unto them after this maner. The Apostles and the Elders, the brethren, unto the brethren, which are of the Gentiles in Antiochia, and in Syria, and in Silicia, sende greeting. What is here againe for the present purpose? Indee, here is a conference & debating holden of the Apostles and the elders assembled, and in these letters (as some interpret it) the peoples name is also used: though other referre the word brethren, only to the Apostles and elders before mentioned. But, be it understood for the people; yet had not the people any thing at all to doe in the debating, conferring, disputing, or determining of those controversies, as shall (God willing) appeare in this learned discourse: for this example is often alledged: I referre the Reader to the answer. But to the point we now stand on, what was done in that conference, where in the younger elders, and lesse learned, prevailed against the elder and better learned? Yea, did not Iames the Bishop of that Church of Ierusalem determine all that controuersie? If our brethren therefore would submit themselves to this memorable example, they would leaue off their contentions against their Bishops, & neuer pleade for their youth and difference of learning, by this memorable example. As for that they add of Paule in his Epistles, namely the place here onely quoted, Gal. 1. ver. 1. is likewise altogether impertinent to the purpose. Paule an Apostle not of men, neither by man, but by Iesus Christ, and God the father, which hath raised him from the dead. It should rather seme, that either they meane the 16. or 17. verses of that first Chapter: or the first, and so downe to the fifth, of the 2. chapter. But of those we shal see (God willing) also sufficiently treated, in the answer to this learned discourse. And if our brethren can proue themselves to haue the like warrant for their assertions, that S. Paul had: they should come somewhat nearer to the purpose, in respect of S. Pauls iunioritie. For hee was yonger or later at least, in the time of his calling, then any of the Apostles: but in learning, or in dignitie, or in office, no whit inferior: nor receaued any of those things from them: neither came he to Ierusalem, to conferre with them, and he saith, They did communicate nothing with him, 2. Gal. 6. But our Brethren hving this for an example of conferring, and they haue receaued their ministerie of our Bishops, whom now they contend withall.

And euen of Peter (say they) in yeelding to the challenge of some not so well instructed: where-unto they quote, Act. 11. ver. 1. 2. 3. & 4. &c. in which verses are these wordes: Nowe the Apostles and the brethren that were in Iudea, heard that the Gentiles had also receaued the worde of God: and when Peter was come vp to Ierusalem, they of the circumcision contended against him, saying: Thou wentest in to men vncircumcised, and hast eaten with them: then Peter began, and expounded the thing in order to them saying: Of 1.

The Apostles and Elders. Act. 15.

Is heere any thing that maketh for our brethren: or rather, is not this flat against them? They say well heerein, that they which chalenged Peter, were not so well instructed. What? and doe they liken themselves to these men not so well instructed, that yet did thus presume to contend against Peter? and indeede, so our brethren doe against our Bishops. But it should seeme, that our brethren also are not so well instructed, in that they would instruct vs, or haue our Bishops, or any other to be moued by this example. What? and did Peter yeelde to these contentious men? No we can our brethren say this, euen for verie shame? Doth not the text shewe the cleane contrarie? If they had looked further, from the 4. verse volone to the 18. they might haue reade Peters memorable oration, made befoze the so effectuously, that Luke concludeth all that matter thus: verse 18. And when they heard these things, they held their peace, & glorified God saying: then hath God also to the Gentiles graunted repentance vnto life. Whether nowe doth Peter yeelde to them, or they to Peter?

But whereto doe our brethren now on these examples, come in with these wordes? who not only, not refused the Levites and Elders, but accepted the people in some manner to be heard to speake, and authorize their determinations and writings.

To whom do they apply these wordes thus confusedly spoken? Do they meane Ezechias, of whom they spake befoze, that he did not refuse the Levites, 2. Chron. 30. and that the Apostles refused not the Elders Act. 15. and that Peter accepted the people in some maner, to be heard to speake, and to authorize their determinations and writings? It is a worlde to see, how our brethren loue to clutter by these thinges together, one to hold vp an other. Were they afraide, least, if the conclusions of these examples should be sorted by themselves, we should see, that not one of them fitteth their turne? Indeede, Ezechias did not refuse the Levites: for in the Chapter befoze, verse 4. et. it is saide: And he brought in the Priests and the Levites, and gathered them into the east streete, and sayd vnto them: heare me ye Levites, sanctifie now your selues, and sanctifie the house of the Lorde God of your fathers, and carie forth the filthinesse out of the sanctuarie: for our fathers haue trespassed and done euill in the eyes of the Lorde our God, and haue forsaken him, and turned away their faces from the tabernacle of the Lorde, and turned their backs, they haue also shut the doores of the porch, and quenched the lampes, and haue neither burnt incense, nor offered burnt offerings in the sanctuarie vnto the God of Israel. Wherefore the wrath of the Lorde hath bene on Iudah and Ierusalem, and he hath made them a scattering, a desolation, and an hissing, as ye see with your eyes: for our fathers are fallen by the sworde, and our sonnes, and our daughters, and our wiues are in captiuitie for the same cause. I now purpose to make a covenant with the Lorde God of Israel, that he may turne away his wrath from vs. Non (my sonnes) be not deceaued, for the Lord hath chosen you to stand before him to serue him, and to be his ministers, and to burne incense. Then the Leuites arose, Abasab, &c. and they gathered their brethren, and sanctified themselves, and came, according to the commandement of the King, and by the wordes of the Lord, for to cleanse the house of the Lord, and the priests went into the inner partes of the house of the Lorde, to cleanse it, &c. Here indeede the King refuseth not the Leuites but calleth them vnto him, and maketh vnto them this memorable oration, and those, that other wise in their offices were his fathers, hee calleth his sons, in respect of his supream authoritie ouer them, himselfe being but a young man: and they againe speake, verse 18. And they went in, to Ezechiah the king and sayd, we haue cleansed all the house of the Lord, &c. but here is nothing wherein they appoint or charge the King, but all will of the Kinges commaundementes vnto them.

Verse. 20. And Hezechias the king rose earlie, and gathered the Princes of the citie, and went vp to the house of the Lord: and they brought seauen bullocks, &c. And he commanded the Preefts the sonnes of Aaron to offer them on the altar of the Lord, &c. Then they brought the hee Goates for the sinne offering before the King, &c. For the king had commanded for all Israel the burnt offering and the sinne offering. And he appointed also the Leuites in the house of the Lord with Cymbals, with Violes, & with Harpes, according to the commandement of Dauid, and Gad the kings seer, &c. And Hezechiah commanded to offer the burnt offering vpon the altar, &c. verse. 30. And Hezechias the king and the princes commanded the Leuites, to praise the Lord with the words of Dauid and Asaph the seer: so they prayed with ioye, and they bowed themselves and worshipped. And Hezechias spake and said: Now yee haue consecrated your selues to the Lord, come neere, and bring the sacrifices and offerings of praise into the house of the Lord, and the congregation brought sacrifices, &c. Here the King still commandeth both the Priests and Leuites, and the people, and they all obeyed. But the Leuites are commended, vers. 34. To be more vpriight in hart, to sanctifie themselves, then were the Priests. As for the 30 chapter which our brethren cite, after the foresaid first verse, wherein the King writeth to all Israel and Iudah: It followeth in the second, &c. And the king and his princes, and all the congregation had taken counsell in Jerusalem, to keepe the passeouer in the second moneth. For they could not keepe it at this time, because there were not priests enough sanctified, neither was the people gathered to Jerusalem. And the thing pleased the King, and all the congregation: and they decreed to make proclamation through-out all Israel, &c. So the Posts went out with letters, by commission from the King and his Princes, throughout all Israel, & with the commandement of the King: saying, Yee children of Israel, turne againe vnto the Lord God of Abraham, Isaac, &c. And at this sacrifice the King praised for the people, saying: verse, 18, &c. The good Lord be mercifull towards him, that prepareth his whole heart to seeke the Lord God, the God of his fathers, though he be not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary, and the Lord heard Hezekiah, and healed the people. And verse, 22. Hezekiah spake comfortable to the Levites that had good knowledge to sing unto the Lord, &c. And in the chapter following, verse, 2. Hezekiah appointed the courses of the Priests and Levites, for the burnt offerings and peace offerings, to minister and give thanks, and so praise in the gates of the tentes of the Lord. And verse, 4. He commanded the people that dwell in Ierusalem, to give part to the Priests and Levites, that they might be encouraged in the lawe of the Lord. And when the commandement was spread: the children of Israel brought abundance of fruites, &c. And when Hezekiah and the Princes came and sawe the heapes, they blessed the Lord and his people Israel. And Hezekiah questioned with the Priests concerning the heapes. And Azariah the cheefe priest of the house of Sadoch, answered him and said: Since the people began to bring offerings, we have eaten and have beene satisfied, and there is left abundance. For the Lord hath blest his people, and the abundance that is left. And Hezekiah commanded to prepare chambers in the house of the Lord, &c. And Ichiel, &c. were overseers, by the appointment of Cononiah and Shimer his brother, and by the commandement of Hezekiah the king, and of Azariah the cheefe of the house of God, &c. And thus did Hezekiah through-out all Iuda, and did well and uprightlie and cruelie before the Lord his God.

The exāple of Hezeki-as and the Leuites, cō-futeh our brethren,

The example also of the apostles
and elders,
Act. 15. is cleane against the.

Thus haue we seene both in the chapter quoted by our brethren, and the chapter going before, and the chapter following, how the King directed all those Ecclesiasticall matters, commanded, ordered, and gouerned both the Levites and the Priests. But what, is anye thing here to our brethrens purpose? Did the Levites debate anye controuersies with the King and Princes, or with the high Priest before the King: And the king, the princes, or the high preest, yeeld therein vnto the Levites? Or not rather, they yeeld vnto the king, and to the princes, and to the high preest, in those matters? If now this be so memorable an example, why doe not our brethren, if they will be like the Levites, yeeld to hir Maiestie, her counsell, and hir Bishops? Except they will be rather herein like the king, his princes, and the high priest: then like these Levites? As for the elders in the assemblie and conference, Act. 15. They also yeelded vnto the Apostles: not the Apostles vnto them. Although the Apostles refused not the elders: no more doe our Bishops refuse our brethren, or anye other ecclesiasticall persons, that are lawfullie appointed and called to the conuocations, or to anye other ecclesiasticall assemblie or conference. Neither do they denie the accepting euen of the people in some manner to be heard to speake. But whereto doe our brethren mention here the people, in this debating? This is againe cleane contrarie to their owne rules, as we shall see in this learned discourse. Would they haue the people also to be debaters, or to be Iudges of these controuersies? And to ouer-rule the Bishops and cleargie in the determination of them?

But

But they haue yet one example more : At least (saye they) let their owne opinion, that in interpreting the scriptures, and deliuerie of doctrine, we are equall with them, perswade them . And hereto they quote this marginall note, and Whitegifts booke, pag. 389. If the Archbishop that now is, dooeth graunt this: it is the greater signe of his reuerent modestie. Neither do anie of our Bishops, or any of vs denie, the habilitie of many of our brethren to be able to interpret the scriptures, & in the deliuerie of the doctrine thereof, to be equall either with the Bishops, or with any other. For it is not the accessse of the Bishops dignitie, that maketh the person a better interpreter, then he was before he was called to the dignitie : it sufficeth, if being in the dignitie, he imploye himselfe in his former faithfulnessse. And would God our brethren also would restraîne their emulation to this comparison, to be equall or better, in interpreting and in the deliuerie of the scripture, then the Bishops, as Ierome contented with Augustine.

Our brethrens gifts in interpreting the scriptures not denied.

And though Augustine were a Bishop, Ierome but a Priest, which Ierome confesseth, and yet euer sharplie threatned the conflict with Augustine, if he were prouoked thereunto: Neuertheless Augustine reuerently answereth, Quamquam, &c For although, according to the tearmes of honour which the use of the Church hath now obtained, the office of a Bishop be greater then the office of a Priest (or elder:) notwithstanding Augustin is in many things lesse then Ierome, yea, correction is not to be fled from or disdained, though it come from any that is the lesse. And in this behalfe of interpreting the scripture, Cyprian honozed Tertullian, and diuerse Bishops specially Alexander & Theodotus reuerenced Origen. And yet these men, for all their gifts in interpreting the Scriptures, and deliury of doctrine (being farre superiour to the most part of the Bishops) did not therefore encroch further into any superiorty or equality of authority and dignity with the Bishops. Let our brethren interpret the Scriptures, and deliuer the doctrine sincerelie, and therein excel the Bishops : as they may easily do, both by cause of the Bishops great age, and great imploying in the gouernment and iurisdiction of the Church. As Augustine modestly confesseth of himselfe unto Ierome, saying, Nam neque in me, &c. For I neither see in my selfe so much knowledge of the diuine scriptures: yea, or that now there can be, as I see there is in you. And if I haue any facultie in this matter, I imploy it (as I may) to the people of God. But to apply my selfe more diligentlie to my studies, then for the furniture of the thinges that the people heare, I cannot by any meanes, for the Ecclesiasticall businesse. So that herein the inferior (as these our brethren) may haue more opportunity in interpreting and deliury of the Scripture. And I warrant them, the Bishops will not refuse them euer a whit, for their so doing, but helpe encourage, and defend them, which although any Bishop fore-slowed, or emulid.

Though diuerse doctors in learning excelled, yet in gouernment they were inferiour.

enquired to doe: yet ought not any of our brethren, hauing such equal giftes with the Bishops, in the interpreting of the scriptures, and deliuerye of doctrine, and withal, being lawfully called by the Bishops into the ministry, to exauthorate, and withdraue themselves from the ministry, for these controuerfies of equall government with the Bishops.

Our brethren
reprehending
of the Arch-
wordes.

But see how captiously our brethren deale, in citing the testimony of the Arch.: for where he saith: It is not to be denied but that there is an equality of al ministers of Gods word, quoad ministeriū, touching the ministry: for they haue all like power to preach the word, to minister the sacraments: that is to say, the word preached, or the sacraments ministered, is as effectuell in one (in respect of the ministry) as it is in another. But, quoad ordinem & politiam, touching order and government, there hath alwayes bene, and must be, degrees and superiority amongst them. These words do our brethren draue to this obiection that they are not comparable in learning to the Arch-bishops and Bishops: at leaste (say they) let their owne opinion, that in interpreting the Scriptures, & deliuery of doctrine, we are equall with them, perswade them. But who seeth not that these words of the Arch-bishop, do not inferre an equality of the giftes in the ministers, as hauing these giftes equally: but an equality of their ministry, in the hability to haue them: and do distinguish onely, betweene the power, of order, and of iurisdiction? And therefore this is, but baled, to aunswere the obiection of this comparison, between the learning of the Arch-bishops and Bishops: and the learning of our brethren in the interpreting the scriptures, and deliuery of doctrine to be equall.

Our brethren
intricate

But our brethren saie, Who, if they could straine their consciences, to subscribe to the Archbishops articles: they would gladly receaue them, to be the Embassadors of Iesus Christ.

These words againe are somewhat intricate, so that wee might misse our brethrens meaning, while they neither plainly expresse, who they are that would gladly receaue, nor whome, nor what: neither yet to whom these wordes, to be the Embassadors of Iesus Christ, are referred: whether to them selues, or to the Arch-bishops and Bishops. But I coniecture their meaning to be this: that if these our brethren could straine their consciences to subscribe to the Arch-bishops articles, they would gladly receaue those articles, that they might thereby haue liberty to preach, and so to be the Embassadors of Iesus Christ.

reprehending
refusall
to subscribe
articles.

If our brethren here meane by the Arch-bishops articles, the articles where-upon it was by the Arch-bishops and bishops of both prouinces, & the whole Cleargie, in the conuocation holden at London &c. 1562. Put forth by the Queenes authority: some of which articles our brethren afterwarde in this learned discourse, pag. 135. do roughly challenge for diners

dinerse groffe, and palpable errors: how truly or falſlie, and with what god conſcience they burthen them therewith, I reſerue to the examination of the proper place.

But becauſe they ſeeme not ſo much to meane thoſe articles; (for then, they ſhould ſtraine their conſciences apparantly to farre, in calling thoſe articles the Arch-biſhops articles, which were the articles, not onely of Arch-biſhops, but alſo of the biſhops and of the whole Cleargie, and ſett forth by her Maieſties authority): therfore I rather take it, that our brethren meane by the Arch-biſhops articles, The Articles where-unto all ſuch as are admitted to preach, reade, cathechyſe, miniſter the ſacraments or execute anie other Eccl. function, do agree and conſent, & teſtifie the ſame by the ſubſcription of their hands. viz.

The articles

1. That her Maieſtie vnder God hath, and ought to haue the ſoueraignty and rule over all manner of perſons, within her realmes, dominions, and countries, of what ſtate either (Eccleſiaſticall or temporall) ſoever they be: and that none other forraine power, prelate, ſtate, or potentate, hath, or ought to haue, any iuriſdiction, power, ſuperiority, pre-eminence, or authority Eccleſiaſticall or ſpirituall: within her Maieſties ſaid realmes: dominions, or countries.

1. Article of the ſupremacy.

2 That the booke of common prayer and of ordering Biſh. Priests & Deacons, containeth in it nothing contrary to the word of God, & that the ſame may lawfully be uſed: And that I my ſelf who do ſubſcribe, will uſe the forme of the ſaid booke preſcribed in publike prayer, and adminiſtration of the Sacraments; and none other.

the 2. article of the communion booke.

3 That I allowe the booke of Articles of religion agreed vpon by the Arch. and Bi. of both prouinces, and the whole Cleargy: in the conuocation holden at London in the yeere of our L. God 1562. & ſet forth by her Maieſties authority: and do beleue al the articles therein contained to be agreeable to the word of God. In witneſſe where-of I haue ſubſcribed my name.

The 3. Article of the book of articles, Anno. 1562

If now theſe articles, be the articles whereof our brethren ſay: If they would ſtraine their conſciences to ſubſcribe to the Arch. articles, they would gladly receaue them to be the Embaſſadours of Ieſus Chriſte: Theſe theſe articles, indeed, the Arch-biſhop hath ſet downe, whereof the third comprehendeth the articles ſet out 1562. But what mattet is there of any of all theſe 3. articles, that our brethren without ſtraining of their conſciences, may not ſubſcribe vnto.

Fiſt, will they not ſubſcribe vnto the ſo2. moſt of theſe 3. articles which is the ſumme and content of An acte reſtoring to the crown the auncient iuriſdiction over the ſtate Eccl. & ſpirituall: and abolishing all forrayne power repugnant to the ſame. Anno 1. Eli7. cap. 1. But I thinke our brethren will not deny to ſubſcribe to this article.

The incon-
ueniences
of refusing to subscribe to the 31
articles.

As concerning the second article, for the booke of common prayer, & of ordering Bishops, Priestes and Deacons, these two pointes are likewise enacted and authorized by like authority. The one, in an Acte for the vniformitie of common prayer and seruice in the church, and the administration of the Sacraments. Anno Elizab. 1. cap. 2. The other, An acte declaring the manner of making and consecrating the Arch-bishops & Bishops of this realme, to be good lawfull and perfect: comprising therein also, the ordering and consecrating of Priestes, ministers of Gods holy word, and Sacraments; and of Deacons. Anno Elizab. 8. cap. 1. To all which enactings and authorizings by these our high courts of Parliament, (we being the true church of God, and our brethren subiects in our state) although they ought to haue, no small respect, least they straine their consciences, in refusing to subscribe there-to, and with all, in renouncing their charge and office of the Embassie of Iesus Christ, being so vrgent & important a function: Yet, if they could shewe any greater, or but equivalent reasons, (whereas here they shew none at all), for their refusall of subscribing to these Articles: then might their refusal carry at least some shewe of probability. But till they shall so doe: I see not, but that, while they pretend the straining of their consciences, if they should receaue this article: they straine their consciences a great deale more, (if they do it indeed on conscience) in that they refuse their subscription.

Both the whole corporation of the realme (trow ye) and al the church of England, and all the states thereof, no conscience, or no knowledge what they did? Or did they (contrary to their knowledge) straine their consciences, in the enacting and establishing these things, which containe al, that is comprised in this article? Yea, and all thinges contained in the third article also, concerning the booke of Articles, agreed vpon by the Arch-bishops and Bishops, of both prouinces, and the whole Clergie: in the conuocation holden at London 1562. and set forth by her Majesties authoritie, and also expressely ratified and commanded to bee subscribed vnto, and openly reade and assented vnto. Anno Elizab. 15. cap. 1.

What a preiudice then is this refusall of these our brethren? What a slander? What a touche to the consciences of al these estates and persons? When our brethren refuse, (& that of pretence on conscience), to subscribe to all these thinges, which vpon so mature deliberation both her Ma. & all the estates of the realme, Eccle. & Temp. haue lawfully decreed, established and authorized: If our brethren haue any parts among these, either represented or included: I see not how they also haue not so far forth authorized that, which here they refuse to subscribe vnto: For, if they seclude themselves, from being any parts authorizing the acts, authorized in Parliament & conuocation: they do not onely seclude themselves from vs their brethren (which I hope are as faithfull ministers as they), & haue as good

consciencs also (but frō the whole body of the Realme & church of Eng. & haue most clerly (in al these acts aforesaid) enacted and authoised, all the points cōteyned in these 38 art. & therefore, they may indeed be better called in my opinion, the art. of the whole church & realm of Eng. than the Arch. articles. And when such points as are cōteyned in any of these art. were thus by Act of Parliā enacted likewise, in the reigne of R. Ed. 6. of ble sed memory: did the godly & reuerend preachers & ministers refuse to subscribe to that, which the whole church & realm had so decreed & authoised? No, the forme of their free & plaine subscription, is apparant in these words Liber qui nuper, &c. The booke which is of late set forth, by the authority of the King, and of the Parli. of the Church of Engl. appointing a manner and forme of praying & administering the Sacraments in the church of Englad. Likewise also, that booke set forth by the same authority, of the ordination of the ministers of the church, are godly, & repugne in nothing to the wholsom doctrine of the Gospell, but they well agree, and they do cheefly furder the same, in very many things. Therefore they are of al the faithfull members of the Church of Eng. and most of al, of the ministers of the word, with all readinesse of mindes, and thankesgiuing, to be receaved, so bee approued, and so be commended vnto the people of God.

Thus did the godly, learned preachers, & faithful ministers the, subscribe more expresse & furder then is now required of these our brethren, because we would beare with our brethren the more, sith they pretend such scruple and straying of their consciences. But I aduise them in the feare of God, to beware of such pretēces on cōsciēce. With what cōsciēce can they now not look back, but turn back from the plough of God, wherunto they haue bene lawfully called, & haue already laid to their hand, & now cast it quyte by into the hedge, and cleane forsake it: yea, disclaime the most honoz. Embassy of Iesus C. & utterly suppress the declaring the matter of their message, because they cannot be suffered to declare it after their manner. And yet crie out of such poore ministers, as would faine preach if they could, & these can wel enough if they would: but except they may as they list, they wil not. Are these the parts of god & faithful Embas. and especially Embassadors of Iesus Christ? Do they not feare to strain their consciences, in these dealings, and pretend feare of straining their conscience in subscribing to these articles? but what strains of cōsciēce make they to spare no reproches, be they neuer so untrue, against their brethren, no, not sparing the Prince, and all in authority Eccl. or Politike vnder her Ma. & against all the state of the church, as is most apparant in diuerse of their books, & in this lear. dis. as (God willing) we shal see at large. And without authority or licence, to publish abroad in print, and scatter abroad throughout the realm, cōtrary to al lawes & orders, their treatises so pestred wth flanders reproches, & insipitions: & to pretend (so) the reformation which they deuise) prescriptiō of gods word, praetise of aūciēt churches, & testimonies of holy & yet cannot proue either any cleare scripture, or practise of any auncient church, or cleare testimony of any holy Father: as, (by the grace of God) shall manifestly appeare, by the diligent search thereof, in the examining of this learned discourse: howe greatly then haue our brethren strayned their consciences in these things: Or rather do they not (as Christ said) swallow vp a Camell and straine a gnat? such doings besmeare not the embassadors of Iesus Christ. The third point in their first obiection is of their fewnesse.

Preface. As for the fewnesse (say they) it may be, if the ignorant ministers, the varietie of other which subscribe: some dooing it with this limitation, and some with that: some holding their former iudgement, as not gain-saide by their subscription, some lamenting their slippe in that behalfe, were deducted: the number of the one would not so greatly surmount the other.

Bridges. Wee do not obiecte their fewnesse to them, as any preiudice vnto the matter, if the pointes which they contended for, were materiall and necessarie. Neither do we obiect fewnesse in respect of Archbishops and bishops, but in respect of the consent of all the other of their brethren ministers, that haue agreed vpon these articles, from whence it might better become our brethren not to dissent: especially by making such a scisme in this our Church of Christ, as they do.

Our brethren excepting from our number. Of ignorant ministers. But they say, the number of the one, would not so greatly surmount the other, if the ignorant ministers were deducted. Of the ignorant ministers, we shal after ward haue their large discourse. But let them deduct them from this number, as indeed they are not reckoned. There is none chosen into the conuocation house, that is not thought and known to be sufficiently learned: how-soeuer our brethren in conceit of their owne learning do despise them. As for the other learned Pastors in the realme, besides that they gaue their compromise to those, to whom they chose (vpon confidence of their learning and sincere iudgement) to agree vpon the articles, and to giue their suffrages in their names, haue either al of them, or the most part of them, giuen also their especial assent & subscription therunto. But besides these, they say there is, the varietie of other which subscribe (to bee deducted:) some doing it with this limitation, and some with that. If there be a variety of such subscribers: it is a great signe of no rigour, nor straining of their consciences, but of all courtesie shewed vnto them, and of relenting (so much as may be) extended to our brethren, in permitting them with such varietie of limitation. Howbeit, for al this number, the variety of their limitation containing no contradiction to the matter that they subscribe vnto, they may also bee well accounted in our number.

But they say, there are yet more to be deducted, some holding their former former iudgement as not gaine-saide by their subscription. If their former iudgement accorded there-with, they may well so hold it, not to be gainesaid by their subscription. But if they subscribe to one thing, & their former iudgement hold the contrary: except they alter and correct their former iudgement: let the look to it, so to they dissemble: & can then some of these our brethren and faithfull ministers straine their consciences on that fashion?

Of Dissemblers.

Lastly, say they, there are to be deducted, some lamenting their slippe in that behalfe. Indeede, this is a soule slippe of any our brethren, to subscribe contrary to their former iudgement, except that in their latter iudgement, upon better aduiselement, finding the defect of their former iudgement, they amend it: but if they subscribe against their conscience, & lament it secretly to themselves, or to other their brethren, and not renounce it to the open state: they haue to answer for their great and triple sinne. First, for the weakenesse, ignorance and error of their iudgement, that ought to be strong, skilful, & sound in iudgement: namely, such as withal vpbayde ignorance vnto others: and also, for that contrary to their iudgement, they subscribe to that which their selues condemne: and lastly, that they thinke all is so salued with their close lamenting of their fate, & yet not renouncing of their subscription: so that, while we plainly and simply make reckoning of them, to haue subscribed bona fide, and to haue said and writtten as they think, & to think as they haue writtten & said: Our brethren come now in with a new knock, (new to vs, & vnlooked for at any of our brethrens hands, though it were practised of old by Arius, & Priscillianistes: except that the dissembling Papists and Anabaptists, do reuiue it,) and tell vs we must deduct out of our number, some such of our brethren, as hold their iudgement not gain-said by their subscription, and some such as lament their slippe in that behalfe. When as, who these shoulde be, we can take no notice, except they openly reclaimed their subscription. I am sorry to heare it, that there should be any somes of such dissembling brethren, as can thus hold with the Vnle, and run with the Vnle, besides these our open recusant brethren.

Of secret lamenters of their open subscribing.

The practise of Arius & the Priscillianistes.

But I trust there are not many such dissemblers, or rather none, if it were well examined: and that this is but our brethrens threaping more kindenesse then needeth vpon them, to winne some from vs, or to make a shew vnto vs, that our number is not so great, as we account of, so they conclude: that if these were deducted, the number of the one would not so greatly surmount the other. Neither thelesse, for all these deductions, either open or vnderhande: this shall not much encrease their number, nor decrease ours. Neither haue they any cause to boast of such dissemblers. As for vs, though we are sorry for them, yet can we well spare both them, and other ignorant out of our number: and yet (God be praised for it) still surmount our brethren. Albeit we haunt not of number (as do the common aduersaries to vs both) though the greater our number be, the more is our ioye, and our brethren should be the more ashamed of their separation. But the number was not the cheefest thing that was obiected. But let vs now see, what our brethren say to the other obiections.

Preface.

As for the challenge of the Papists, knit vp with the consideration of the estate, the difference may be considered in the matter & manner. Concerning the matter, they make it in the substance of religion, which hath in diuerse assemblies abroad & at home bene disputed, resolved, & now publikly maintained for our true & holy faith. We in matters concerning the gouernment of Christ of great moment indeed, yet neuer thus handled, nor vrging the alteration, but perfection of the state of the church, and further good of the common-wealth, whilest by this means amongst many other things of great importaunce, the ignorant ministry, and by it Popery, and by Popery, rebellion should be anoided, which by the other are most manifestly bred and nourished. Concerning the manner, they call it to a suddaine and tumultuous reasoning, where the readiest wit, the best memory, the most filed speech shall carry away the truth: at least, meruelously moue the vngrounded hearers. We require that where both sides may vppon mature and sufficient deliberation be heard without any of these shewes, and the matter deliuered vnto her Maiestie and their Honours, and whomefocuer they shall choose to receaue and examine the Allegations of both sides: so that it need not be communicated vnto the people, vntill the manifest light of truth, appeare first vnto them.

Bridges.

Our brethren
reos aunswere to the
2. later ob.
vnder shewe
of perspicu-ity, is very intricate.

This aunswere of our brethren, howsoeuer it may seme to carry a shewe of perspicuity and plaine dealing, because they distinguish it by matter and manner, and by (they and we), thus do they, and thus do we: Yet, seeing that the points to be answered, consist of these 2. diuerse obiections: the one, that this our brethrens challenge of vs, is a challenge not much vnlike the Papists challenge: and the other, that this forme of reformation (which they would haue) shall be preiudiciall, to the estate of gouernment established: which estate of gouernement established is differing from the estate of gouernement established among the Papistes, and the onerthwoe thereof: these obiections therefore, being so different, should not (me thinketh, I speake it vnder correction) haue bene thus knitte vp together, albeit with such an answere of distinction of matter and manner: except our brethren had cleared them-selues for the mater and manner. First in the one, against the Papistes: and then, they had also cleared them-selues, for the matter & manner of the obiection against vs their brethren Protestantes: and shewed still with all plainely and distinctly, whome they alwayes meane by this woord they, saying,

They make it, &c. and they call it &c. Whether they vnderstand the Papists, differing both from our brethren and from vs: or they vnderstand vs their brethren protestants, differing from themselves: Or else, in these darke speeches, vnder pretence of breuitie, they may offer vs their brethren Protestants too great an injury: and the Papists, (our common aduersaries) too great aduantage.

Besides that, in this answer, they huddle and knit vp a great manie things together, which so waighthy objections, as of their agreeing with the Papists, and their disagreeing from vs in challenging an estate of government established, would haue required a larger, or (at least) a plainer answer: than thus to haue these so different objections of different professors, to be knit vp together in such a knot, like the knot of Gordias, that except it should bee loosed by Alexander, it would hardly be vntied by vs, but that one quicke or another may remaine. But to assaie it: and first for the matter.

Concerning the matter, they (say our brethren) meaning as I take it by this worde, they, the Papists (so: so was the obiection, that it is a challenge not much vnlike the Papists) they make it (that is to say) they make the matter of their challenge in the substance of Religion which (challenge of matter in the substance of Religion) hath in diuerse assemblies abroad and at home, bene disputed, resolued, and now publicly mayntayned, for our true and holy faith. And by whom hath this bene disputed, resolued, and now we publicly maintayned for our true and holie faith? Hath it not bene chiefly done, by vs their brethren Protestants? But go to then: herein (they say) we disagree not, for challenge of matter in substance of Religion, wherein we both agree, and both of vs differ alike from the Papistes. But it followeth, Wee in matters concerning the Government of Christ, &c. And who againe are here this we? Forsooth not we, al the Protestants against the Papists our common aduersaries: but we, that is to say, the faithfull Ministers, and learned discourers, are against our brethren Protestants, in matters concerning the gouernment of Christ: though not in matters concerning the substance of Religion. And heereupon our brethren conclude, that their challenge of vs, is much vnlike the Papistes challenge. This I take to be the meaning of their wordes, and I am glad yet, that they confesse our agreement for the substance of Religion. And since they agree with vs therein, it is lesse reason that they should dissent from vs in the government: at least wise, so peremptorily, that their challenge of vs in that behalfe, should bee not much vnlike the Papistes, being other wise in the substance of Religion, so much vnlike them. But they say, the difference is in matters concerning the government of Christ, of great moment indeed, yet neuer thus handled?

Our brethrens distinction of matter and manner.

Our difference concerning government.

What they meane by handling thus these matters of government: whether they meane that they were neuer so notable handled before, as they now handle them in this learned discourse, or as they set downe a waye to handle the debating of them: that, let them-selues discusse. But that they be the government of Christ (the matter or manner of government which they desire) as though Christ did vse that governmēt, or did appoint that government, or that indeede it is of such moment as they prescribe: that is but onely heere avouched by them, and denied by vs: the proofe (God willing) wil appeare in the considering of this learned discourse.

Not vrging (say they) the alteration but perfection of the estate, and further good of the common wealth.

Our brethren
vrging
the alteration
of the State.

This seemeth to be referred to the 3. obiection, that it shal-be preiudiciall to the estate of government established. But our brethren thinke, that it shall so little be preiudiciall to the estate of government established, that it shall tend to the great benefite of it: and how? not vrginge (say they) the alteration, but perfection of the estate of the Church, and further good of the commō-wealth. But who may not plainly perceave that this vrging is the vrging of an alteration, and the alteration of the estate, & that both of the Church & of the cōmō-wealth? if (as they saie) they vrge not the alteration: why let they it not alone as it is: or if they so like the perfection of the estate of the Church, and further good of the common-wealth, that they will not alter the estate there-of: then let that stand as it doth, as the estate of the Bishops, and other officers in the Church, especially the estate and authority of the Prince, both in the church, and in the common-wealth. And not to take all these awaie, as here they do in this learned discourse. For, this is both the alteration, & the endangering (if not the overthrow) at leastwise, the making both the Church and common-wealth worse than they are. But worse or better, how do not their wordes implie an alteration? For when they pretende the vrging only of the perfection of the Church, and further good of the common-wealth: what meane they else, but that the Church is in an vnperfect estate, & that the common-wealth also is not in so good an estate as they vrge to bring it vnto: And how, is not this a plaine vrging of the alteration both of the Church, and also of the common-wealth? These wordes therefore, are either cōtradictory to the-selues: or else they would & they would not. Or they would, & they dare not, for feare or shame, plainly offer what they vrge, because they touch matters of moment indeede, (as they say) even the alteration of the estate, matters too highe both for them, and for vs, to meddle withall, namelie to alter, which pertaineth to persons of estate.

But now, how would this alteration that indeede is vrged, become the perfectiō of the churches estate, & further good of the common-wealth?

For I say they, whilest by this meanes amongst many other things of great importance, the ignorant ministry, & by it Popery, & by Popery, rebellion should be auoyded, which by the other are moſte manifestlye bredde and nourished.

These purposes (I confesse) are very good, that Ignorance in the Ministry, Popery & rebellion may be auoided: so that, the auoiding of these things, be done, by good and lawfull meanes also. But what is this that is here said: which by the other, are most manifestly bred & nourished? Do they meane, that the ignorant ministerie, Popery, and Rebellion, are most manifestly bred and nourished by the estate of the Church of Eng, and the gouernment thereof established. What a most manifest untrue, and uncharitable challenge of our Churches & common-wealths estate is this? Pea, (saue that for my part, I hope better of our brethren) some (and those good Protestants) would not stick to say, that this challenge were now not onely, not much vn-like the Papists: but that it smelt somewhat strongly, of breeding & norishing the third of these evils. And other would (at least) say, it were a false accusation of their poore brethren, & a foule slander of the estate of the Church, and gouernment established. But I hope they wil construe their words to some gentler meaning: sith it is most manifest to the contrarie, that the estate of the church of England, & gouernement established, do neither most manifestly, or manifestly, or any whit at all wittingly or directly, breede or nourish any of these three evils: eyther Ignorance in the ministry, or Popery, or Reblelion in any persons: but punish the in whomsoever they manifestlie appeare. Albest for the ignorant ministerie, not perhaps in such manner of punishment, as our brethren would haue the punished. Pea, our brethrens former confessio it selfe, doth nota little discharge the estate of the Church & gouernment established from these crimes, in saying, that Our true and holy faith hath in diuerse assemblies abroad & at home bene disputed, resolved, & now publicly maintayned. Which cannot be taken for their doing onely, but muche moze for ours, by farre odds then theirs. For so much as we are the publike maintainers thereof, & not they, whose gouernment hath yet no publike maintenance amongst vs. Pea, they refuse the publik ministry of the word & sacraments. And yet if they had that alteration of the estate of the Church, and common-wealth (whose perfection and furdur good they pretend) whether it would come to such perfection, or such further good, as to auoide these three evils, of an ignorant ministry, of Popery, & of Rebellion or no; and not rather breede and nourish them: at least wise, if not directly, yet by occasion, moze then they now are bred & nourished: or, whether it would be the best & most manifest meanes to auoide the, moze then they be, or may be now auoyded: therby (I may say vnto you) lyeth a question. For as our brethren told vs before, of some among them, that did this and that: So some among vs. that wish wel to our brethren, think that this alteration of theirs, would breed and nourish as great (if not greater) ignorance, then is already even in the Preachers themselves: & y^t it would cut of a great part, of y^e study & profession of al good letters, both in diuinity & humanity, especially seing the example & boldenes of diuerse: some pretending onlie the studie of the canonick scriptures: some pretending the reuelatiō of Gods spirit, without studie so to suggest vnto the at the same instant, that they need not to premeditat what they should speak, before they come vnto the pulpit. Some, vnder pretence of tounring the most part of teaching and exhorting, into conceptions of long prayers. Some, in distinguishing too precisely the office of a Teacher, from the office of a Pastor: cutting off ther-by the on half of a Doctors office, excluding al exhortatiō, reprehensiō, consolatiō, & al applicatiō frō his doctrine: and the most of them such as their-selues could not deny, in the first obiection, but said: Let vs graunt the great difference which they make of yeares & learning, betweene the Archbishops, the Bish. and them: and yet would these not only ouerthrow their estate of government, but make euery one of them-selues to be equal to them: besides the setting vp in euery congregation a Seniory of Ecclesiastical gouernours, chosen out of all sortes & estates of men, Noble men, Gentlemen, merchaunts, yeomen, artificers, husbandmen, &c. which ought to haue the hearing, examination, and determining of all matters pertayning to discipline and gouernement of that congregation, as they tell vs in this Learned discourse. pag. 84. And besides the Deacons, excluded from all preparing themselves to the studie of the Pastorall ministry. These things, and a number suche like, (many that loue our brethren do feare,) would shortly breed and nourish, a greater ignorance in the ministry, then now there is: especially, seing the boldnesse of many both Ministers and others, either manifestly known to be ignorant of the pitch of these controuersies, or but superficially flourish'd ouer, are the hoatest sticklers in these boyles, or the greatest fauorites of this desired and vrged alteration: yet some of them (if they were well apposed) while there is nothing in their mouthes, more than discipline, discipline: they cannot tell their selues, what discipline is, & would be full tweery of it, if they had it: or if they were but a little sharply disciplined, but euen with that discipline that is already in force, by the gouernement of the church established.

more breeding
Pop. by this alteration.

Now as Ignorance breedeth and nourisheth Popery, or other errors & superstitions: so againe they feare, that this alteration by so many manifest occasions, breeding and nourishing ignorance: either it might as manifestly breede and nourish Popery, euen by that reason wherby they suppose to auoyd Popery most of all, and that is by the erection of their Consistories. Vnto which if the people, or the Seniors, or the cheefeste in the congregation were inclined: they might do much more hurte, then now they are able to doe. As if it bred not Popery: it might breede and nourish as great errors, pride, and oppressions, as Popery hath done, if not a great deale worse.
the

And as vppon ignorance and poperye, the thirde followed, that is to say, an inclination to rebellion: so it may bee feared, that his alteration being thus as muche subiecte to the two former evils, it would not be free from daunger of the thirde: especially the peoples intermedling in the gouernement, being so much enlarged: except some greater vigilancie be had, then as yet by our brethren is fore-seene, or then, in the estate of gouernment already established is to be feared. For of this gouernement established, wee haue seene already the experience, and therefore being orderly looked vnto, if any such occasion (as GOD forbid) shoulde happen, it might the sooner be repressed, as, GOD be praised, it hath bene.

But if this vrged alteration should bee put in practise, not onelie the Papists might sooner take occasion of newe tumultes, as it many times falleth out in alterations, especially of the forme of gouernement established: but also it is not a litle to bee feared, that our brethren disagreeing from vs, and not agreeing among them-selues, might in these licentious and factious dayes, breake forth into more contentions and pertakinges, then that the particuler Seniories of euery congregation, or the Pro-uinciall Synods, were able to compose. Whilist our brethren withal, in this Learned discourse, reiecte and deride, vniiformity in Ceremoniall constitutions, pag. 120. refuse and exclude the Princes authoritie, in the decission of such matters, pag. 117. 141. &c. The Papistes in the meane season being the lesse looked vnto, and the more strengthened, & encouraged to blow the coales, & to make a blast on euery sparkle, when they get any aduantage by such occasions of our disagreements: which whole matter, it might breed and nourish, to the preparation of Rebellio: manie that are no euil-willers vnto these our brethren, do greatly feare the sequell, if this vrged alteration should take place. Neither may it bee sayde of them as David sayde of the wicked: Trepidauerunt, ubi non erat timor: For they feare GOD, and wishe as well both to the estate of the church and common wealth of this our Realme, as any of our brethren do, and are as farre from Popery as they are, GOD bee prayed for it.

But whatsoeuer they feare or coniecture to and fro, of the effect of these 3 evils, Ignorance in the minist. Popery, & Rebellio: I for my part would faine know what our brethren mean by these words, & lie houerling in the midst of this sentence, Amongst many other things of great importance: what those other things be, being many & of great importance: as though they they were more to be auoyded then all these 3. and yet are namelesse nor dare shewe their faces. I feare mee, least in this darke clond, there is hidde some great tempest, and daungerous thunder-claps, if it were their tyme to breake forth Sed aliquid later, quod non pater: and therefore let them go as they came for mee, I will rather follow Pythagoras counsell, Noli federe ignem opertum: it is the wakening the sleeping Dog. For the biewe but euen of these 3. euils, is already (me thinketh) more then enough. We can see little perfection of the estate of the Church, or good of the common-wealth to arise by the vrging this alteration. And thus much to their answer of the matter, now to the manner.

The two foresaid obiections were these: The one, that this our brethrens challenge, is not much vnlike the Papists: the other, that it shal be preiudiciall to the estate of government, established. To this againe they answer.

Our brethrens answer for the manner.

Concerning the manner, they call it to a suddaine and tumultuous reasoning: where the readiest wit, the beste memorye, the moste filed speech, shall carry awaye the truthe, at least, meruelously moue the vngrounded hearers.

Who call the matter to the manner of a tumultuous reasoning,
we, or they?

Who, are these they, that do on this wise? If the Papistes bee meant: they vse indeed, such & wo:se practises in their tumultuous reasoning spee in their most solemne counsels, that they cal general. But if by this (they) our brethren meane vs their brethren Protestants: as it appeareth heer by, that we shunne not the reasoning with them of these matters: so if they complaine of any iniury offered vnto anie of them in the manner of reasoning, they should haue done plainly to haue shewed, who hath called them to reason in any such suddaine, tumultuous, or disordered manner. I haue rather heard the contrarie, that they their selues haue oftentimes, and not long agoe, called the matter to such reasonings. But belike, they sayled in their hoped successe of such suddain reasonings. (which notwithstanding themselves haue prouoked) when they shoulde bee driuen to the strict and logicall order of disputing: and therefore they call this a suddaine and tumultouse reasoning. As for vs, we vse no tumultes, or tumultuous reasoning, neither (God be praised) need to vse any, for defence of the estate of government established: they commonly startle & raise tumultes, that finde them-selues greued, and would make alteration of the state of a gouernment that is established. But, I meruel they complain of these things: where the readiest wit, the best memory, the moste filed speech, shall carry awaye the truthe, at leaste meruelously moue the vngrounded hearers: For euen by these things especially (wherein also they glory not a little) and not by any grounded matter, or anie substantiall proues, our brethren carry away from the truthe of these points, so many as they do.

But

But helike, they haue founde in reasoning them-selues ouer-matched in these ornaments of witte, memory, and speech also. Which three things (we confesse) are aduantages of no smal force, a readie wit, a good memory and a flied speech, to set forth and perswade the matter, when they are ioyned with the wisdoms and feare of God, with a sincere zeale and serueny of Gods truth, & with an humble & moderate spirit, cutting the word of God aright, as best maie serue to his glorie, to the hearers edifying, & their dutifull obedience to their superiours. For our diam of discretion & of these vertues, is more worth in reasoning of these controuersies, then al the pregnancie or readines of wit, then al the promptnes or fidelitie of memory, then al the rotuling of the tongue, or flied speeche with the smoothest and most eloquent rhetoricks in the world, shoulde bee compared there-into. Well, may vngrounded hearers that desire still to heare of nouelties with the Athenians, and the vnsittable hearts of new-fangled heades, and itching eares, of those men or women which are euer learning (as saith the Apostle 2. Tim. 3. 7.) and are neuer able to come to the knowledge of the truth, be easily caried away from the truth, by such perswasions.

The ornaments of wit, memory and vtrance-

But (thanks be giuen to God) we vse no such practises, but plainly speak the words of truth and sobernesse, and are readie (when we shal at any time be called there-into) to render an aunswere, to euery one that asketh a reason of the hope that is in vs, or of any thing pertayning to our vocations, without tumults: as becommeth both faithfull Christians, and obedient subiects to our prince and superiours, in defence of the gouernment established.

But we (say our brethren meaning for them selues and excluding vs) we require that where both sides may vppon mature and sufficient deliberation, be heard without any of these shewes, and the matter delineated vnto her Maiestie, their honours, and whosoever they shall choose, to receaue and examine the allegations of both sides, so that it neede not to be communicated vnto the people, vntill the manifeste lighte of the truth first appeare vnto them.

This then is the manner that our brethren set downe, whereby they would vrge the alteration, and (as the obiection saith) be preiudiciall to the estate of gouernment established. But let the preiudice thereof fall out as it should: if our brethren woulde inuade content them-selues with this manner of triall. Neither do we, nor (I hope) shall we at any tyme (being lawfully called there-into) refuse this manner. Yea, euen according to the prescription of this manner, for the principall points there-of, haue we already proceeded long ago. Where the estate of the gouernment before established in popery: and the estate of the gouernment now established vnder the Gospell, hath on both sides vppon mature and sufficient deliberation, bene heard, without any of these shewes, if any were used, either of the one side, or the other. And the matter also hath bene deliuedeliuered to her Maieſty, and to their honours, or to whomſoouer, that were choſen or appointed by her Maieſty and them, to receaue and examine the allegations of both ſides: and ſo was this eſtate of gouernment by her Ma. and their honours, yea, by al the eſtates of the realme, determined, decreed, approued, ratified, confirmed, practiſed, mayntayned, continued, and by all theſe ſore ſaid meanes and manner eſtabliſhed. And this was done alſo, partlye in the time of the moſt renowned Prince King Henrie the eight: and again better, in the reigne of the moſt godly Prince, King Edward the ſixt. But chieſtie in the beginning, and ſome parts ther-of, in ſome other Synods and Parliaments, beſides other moze particuler conferences, & deliberations, ſince the happy reigne of our moſt gracions ſoueraigne Lady Queene Elizabeth. And yet all this will not now ſatiſſie our brethren, but they will haue the matter fetched again about, as though it were freſh to beginne, or had neuer yet by ſo good a manner and meanes as theſe, bene better to diſputed, examined, or deliberated vpon. But would once moze, ſerue their turne? No, nor I think one hundred or thouſand times moe, except it were concluded in al points, euen as they themſelues would haue it. But how they would agree among them-ſelues, and when, and how long that agreement would hold: God be knoweth. For my part, I ſee little hope of reconciliation in the matter, by this manner which they here ſet down: God forgive me, if I think amiſſe. Neither do I ſpeake it of euill will vnto them, to whom I wiſh in Chriſte as to my ſelf: nor, for that I would ſhunne þ conference in ſuch manner, (if I poze ſoule were woorthy to be called among other ther-vnto) but on ly to thewe, that in very dede, this is but a meere pretence, to countenance the matter, howſoouer their entent (I graunt) be good & zealous, in the alteration of the eſtate of gouernment eſtabliſhed. But if they intend in dede ſuch a manner of deliberation as they haue here declared: who ſhall determine al the matter? Her Maieſty is named and their Honours, and whoſoouer they ſhall chooſe. But whereto are they named? Or whereto ſhall they chooſe anie? For ſooth, to receaue and examine the allegations on both ſides. What meane they hereby? would they haue her Maieſty or them, to be ſcrutators and noters of the voyces, who giueth on this ſide, who on that, and ſo to examine which ſide hath mo voyces: or meane they by receauiug and examining the allegations, to take, to marke, and examine their reaſons, & yet neither to determine any thing at al of them, nor to ratifie that, which the appointed iudges ſhall determine? But how then ſhall the manifeſte light of the truth firſt appeare vnto them, except they ſhall ſo farre forth determine of the matter, that either on this or on that ſide the truth conſiſteth?

But when the matter is thus determined: what ſhall now be done? it ſhall then be communicated to the people. And what now ſhall the people doe? ſhall they determine againe on the matter, after her Maieſties their honours, or others whosoever by her Maieſty, and vnder her Ma. by their honours assigned or chosen, shall haue once determined of the matters, and communicated the same vnto the people: shall they vnder all that hath bene done, if they mislike it, or cannot agree vpon it: tober to then serued all this manner of their doing? No: her Maieſtie onely, in this manner, or their Honours, assigned by her Maieſty: or they, whosoever are chosen by her Maieſty and them: must be, not onely the receauers and examiners of both sides: but also the iudges and determiners, as to whome the light of the truth shall first appeare: and then it must be committed to the people, to knowe only what they must obey and stick vnto, without any further gain-saying, and there an ende. This is the manner (as I take it) that here our brethren desire, of their disputation.

If now it be thus: hath not her Ma. vppon mature deliberation of the allegations on both sides, and that not by her selfe, but with their Honours, and by them whome she with their honours hath chosen, determined (on the approbation) of the matter: and divulged her and their determination, or approbation to the people already? and where are our brethren then? Will they desire to haue it, yet once againe examined better, because perhaps al these learned discourſers haue not bene called to ante such disputation, conference, or deliberation. But what now if her Ma. their honours, and those that are by her Ma. and their honours chosen, shall thus determine or approve and ratifie againe, that which is already determined? Will our brethren then, for euer hereafter, stand any more to her Ma. and their determination, then now they do: If they will: while stande they not now to that her Maieſty hath already established, and to her constant auowing still of the same? Nay rather, why haue they cleare already forſaken (in this their learned discourſe following) all this deſire both for manner & matter, where of they make all this so glorious pretence, and shewe, in this their Preface these vnto? For, if they would indeede, that the matter should not be communicated vnto the people, until the manifest light of truth first appeare vnto the: whom then means they here, that it should first appeare vnto? If it not first appeare to them, & are chosen by her Ma. & their honours, to receaue & examine the allegations on both sides? & what good manner then is this, for themselves before hand, to break this manner, by clapping out this learned discourſe, & other so many treatises abroad in print, and so peremptorily before hand, to determine vpon al the points in controuersie betwene vs, & to communicate them vnto the people, before the manifest light of the truth appeare, either vnto her Ma. their Ho. or to any whosoever they shal chose, to receaue & examine the allegations of both sides, & consequently to determine of? Same are our brethren free to their own preferred manner, to set out such bolos vnto the people, both contrary to the lawes, & contrary to that light light of the truth, that hath already appeared to her Maieſty, and to her deputies determination. Pea, contrary alſo to the authority that here in this manner is giuen to her Maieſtie. Denying in this learned diſcourſe, pag. 141. that her Maieſtie hath any other authority in theſe matters, then to make ciuill lawes, to binde the people to the confeſſion of true faith, and to the right adminiſtring and receiuing of the ſacraments, and to all Eccleſiaſticall orders, that they being inſtructed by the wordes of God, through the miniſtery of the preaching of the ſame (which preaching commeth, after all the matter is eſtabliſhed, and which preaching, is made alſo beſore the people) ſhal vnderſtand to be profitable for the edifying of the Church of Chriſt, &c. So that for all their godly pretence here in the Preface, of deliuering the matter to her Maieſtie, their Honors, and whoſoeuer they ſhall chooſe, to receaue and examine the allegations on both ſides: ſo that it need not bee communicated vnto the people, til the manifeſt light of truth appeare firſt vnto them: yet, when it commeth to the matter indeed: this was ſpoken but for manners ſake. For, the learned diſcourſe, maketh no deliuey of it vnto the Prince, till it come by the Paſtor preached in the pulpit, and ſo the people heare it as ſone as the Prince: and then the Prince vnderſtanding it out of the pulpit, muſt obey it: and make ciuill lawes only to maintaine and to puniſh with bodily puniſhment the offenders.

All that was graunted to her Ma. and their H. was but onelie for manners ſake, and reſolues to no thing.

The moment of the government pretended.

Neither doth our brethrens quirke here help the matter, in that they ſay not, ſo that it ſhould not bee communicated to the people, vntil, &c. but they ſay, ſo that it need not: they ſay wel therein y, it need not, & why need it not? For ſoth, indeede becauſe it ſhould not. Neither could it be communicated vnto the people, beſore it were firſt communicated to her Ma. or to her deputies, by the manner & order here preſcribed. For elſe, what meant theſe wordes, & the matter deliuered vnto her Ma. &c. ſo that our brethren themſelues haue ſo broken this manner, that in a manner it is no more manner at al, then was the matter. And in this reſpect, our brethren haue prettily knit vp together their aunſwere to theſe 2. obiections, by the matter, and the manner: For, both matter and manner commeth all to one effect. And wher-to ſerueth all this manner, but to try the matter? and in matter, concerning the ſubſtance of religion, we differed not. Wherefore muſt then this manner be obſerued? For ſoth, not for any matter of the ſubſtance of Religion; but, ſay they, concerning the government of Chriſt: of great moment indeede. May indeede (brethren) it is not, of any great moment indeede, to vrge, & neceſſarily oblige all times and places, no, nor any time or place, as to the perfection of the eſtate of the church. For then, it were not onely a manner, but a matter: that were material concerning the ſubſtance of religion: wherein our brethren confeſſe that they agree with vs, and diſſent only in the government.

But where will our brethren shewe this gouernement, which they pretende to be the gouernment of Christ (that is to say, the gouernment prescribed by Christ) to be the perpetuall, or to be the best, or to be any ordinarie gouernement at all of his Church? It is not yet shewed, (that I can perceiue) by any other of our brethren, nor by this their learned discourse. And if this could be shewed, it were matter indeede euen concerning the substance of religion, and a verie religious point to stande vpon. But since it is confessed, that all this a-doe about gouernement is not of the matter concerning the substance of Religion: dare our brethren aduenture so farre, to vrge, that (had it bene a gouernement of Christ, and that of great moment indeed in his time on the earth, and yet not of the substance of Religion) as to alter the gouernement established for such a matter, or rather not for a matter, but a manner of gouernement not established? Yea, for this (be it matter or manner of gouernement) so to shake our whole estate of gouernement established, that in their gouernment which they would establish, her Maiestie (which now hath a supream gouernement, by the cleare worde of God, and after all mature deliberation, by all our otome consentes, lawes, and actes, in all our assemblies, synodes, counceles, and Parliamentes, disputed, resolved, determined, enacted, maintayned, continued, and by all these good meanes established) shal now haue her Maiesties authority called againe in question, and anew examined, yea, so abused and set down, nay rather cleane set by, and put out? For, what title soener of her most excellent Maiestie, or bare terme of supreame authoritie, is not denied, (although I hope, our brethren doe it of no ill meaning, but onely are ouershot there-in, and when they perceiue it, will reclaime it) yet the very thing that is here so much desired & vrged, is euen as Salomon fore-saw, more then his good and simple mother Bethsabee did, who thought no hurt vnto her sonne, but meant and wished all well, when she required so instantly of him, 3. Reg. 11. I desire of thee a small request, saye mee not naye: and the King sayde vnto her, Aske on my mother, for I will not say thee naye: then sayde shee, let Absag the Sunamite be giuen to Adoniah thy brother to wife: But King Salomon answered and sayde vnto his mother: and why doest thou aske Absag the Sunamite for Adoniah? aske for him the kingdome also. Herelle, verelle, which is Christes otome asseueration, and therfore not rashlie to be vsed, nor vncharitably, I beleue, and (mee thinkes) I fore-se, that although these desires of our brethren stretch not, to preiudice her Maiesties life and person, which the dogged deadiie enemies doe seeke (the Lorde still defende her Maiestie from them:) and yet I thinke, that manie of them seeke it not so much, for anie malice to her person, as in a blinde malicious zeale against her authoritie, which if her Maiestie would giue ouer, manie of them would perhaps giue ouer their malice malice also, and acknowledge her their Soveraigne Ladie, as they do Queene Marie her Maiesties sister: yet this thing which these our brethren, though with as good meaning (I dare say for them) and with as loving hearts, as Bechabec bare to her sonne Salomon, both thinke and wish unto her Maiestie, as to their owne felices: but whatsoever they thinke, with, or meane neuer so well, like loving subiectes: not onely her Maiestie, In whom (God be prayes) the wisdome (as it were) of Salomon shineth, but almost euerie man (not affectioned that way) may see, that her Maiestie, to these her children, (as Salomon to his mother) may reply and say: Whie do you aske this thing? Aske, (if not the kingdome and all,) yet, even the best and chiefest part, duetie, and authoritie of the kingdome. And that these desires of our brethren, doe so nēerely touch her Maiestie, and euerie Christian Princes government established, and supream authorities: I referre my selfe to this learned discourse, where it shall (God willing) most plainly appeare, what is taken away, and what is left to all Christian Princes, & so to her Maiestie in this government. So we upon this satisfaction (as our brethren conceaue) to this last obiection, they conclude this preface, saying:

Preface.

And if this so safe and reasonable an offer can not be liked, in respect of the last objected consideration, we thinke it impossible, but the persons which desire a way so sound, peaceable & dutifull, shall recover this fauour, that with safety of their consciences, they shal exercise their ministerie with that libertie, which is meete for those, who shal be tyed in all things to haue especiall regarde to the peace of the Church, and public orders. Wherefore most Christian reader, when thou shalt by these fewe, take knowledge of these things: Pray vnto God for vs, and as thy place is, sollicite and furdere so iust a cause, to this ende only, that Christs kingdome may be perfectly established, the consciences of all the godly quieted, and the happy regiment of her Maiestie honoured, with much ioy, peace, and quietnesse at home.

What safe & reasonable offer haue our brethren here made, or what answer haue they giuen, or what meanes haue they deuised (besides the other obiections) to satisfie euē but the last objected consideration? Doubt not the obiection standeth still, that it shalbe preiudicial to the estate of gouernment established? Whē their desires principally are, that, not only the authority of the Bishops, & the most part of al the Lawes & orders eccl. established, but also, al the acts of Parliament ther-on: yea, her Maiesties own authoritie, & principall part thereof, concerning eccl. matters, must be reuersed, cancelled, abrogated, & dissolved, and a new authoritie in al these things set vp? Who may not see (except he will blindfold himselfe with tamēd affection) that this is, and cannot other wise be, but to the preiudice of the estate of gouernement that already is established? As for the Bishoppes acceptation of any offer by our brethren, that to her Ma. & their Honors shall be thought safe and reasonable, I dare undertake it: they shall at all times be most ready to accept the same: so that our brethren would for ever hereafter, stande to the shall determination of the triall. As for the offer, that here they make, is neither safe nor reasonable, nor satisfieth the consideration of the last obiection. And therefore, except better pould be had for the safeguard of the Princes supream authoritie: it can not (as I take it) well be liked.

But if this offer can not be liked: then say our brethren, we thinke it impossible, but the persons, which desire a way so sound, peaceable, and dutifull, shall recouer this fauour, that with safetie of their consciences, they shall exercise their ministerie with that libertie, &c.

As I said before, so I say againe, this way which our brethren haue here set downe, is neither sound, peaceable, nor dutiful. It is so vsound, that (as we haue seene) so many partes thereof, their verie words haue so vncertain a sound, that we can not sound out the sense therof. And how can the same be peaceable: except there were such moderators and determinors, as might with full authoritie decide and determine all the controversies? For if all should take upon them to fall a prophesying, when they should fall rather to disputing: & all the hearers, & actors in the controuersies, should (as in prophesying) take upon the to be the iudges: how would not this, in these controuersies, breed greater contentions & confusions, theauer S. Paul reprehended among the Corinthians? Neither is it dutifull, when they cal into these questions, euen the Princes chief authority. Besides the intemperate speeches against their brethren, which we haue heard euen at their very first motion of this conference. And now since that this way (as is here set down) is so vsound, so vnpeaceable, so vndutiful: so our brethren thinke it is impossible, but that the persons that desire this way, & make al these troubles, shall recouer this fauour (which they haue lost) with safetie of their consciences, they shall exercise their ministry, their consciences being thus assured as they are: would God, they would so enter into a due examining of their consciences, wherfore they should haue lost this fauour which they now thinke they shall recouer? Yea, wherfore should they not more looke herein to satisfie the to fauour, for the exercise of their ministry? If they be indeed (as they say) faithful ministers, who made the ministers: did not our Bishops? and if our B. be not Bishops: how could they make any ministers? and if their ordaining of the were not a true ordaining: the are they no true ministers. And if they be true & lawful ministers: how go they about to make their ministerie, so be no true & lawful ministerie, of whome their selues haue al the ministerie? they haue al so God this would linke into their consciences: they would then neuer be the causes of their owne disfauour: & restraint from the exercise of their ministerie, for the oppugning of their ministerie that made them ministers. Which if they exercise not: the default is not in the Bishoppes that made them ministers: for they made them of fauour, and to the end that they should exercise their ministerie. So that the fault of their disfauour, and not exercise, is principally in their owne selues. And yet if they will performe indede, that which in woordes heere they offer: they may both with recouerie of fauour, exercise their ministerie still, and might still so haue doone, without losse of fauour, if they would exercise their ministerie with that libertie, which is meete for those which shal-be tyed in all thinges, to haue especiall regarde to the peace of the Church and publike orders. In what bonde will they bee tyed to this: That her Maiestie, their honors, and the Bishops, may be assured hereof? Or will they promise this on the worde of a faithfull minister, that they will exercise their ministerie no other wise? But, why then do they it not? For, there is no other thing required of them, and it is their dutie so to doe it. But what especiall regard of the peace of the Church & publike orders (if they had libertie to exercise their ministry according to their consciences) is it likelie that our brethren would haue: whē as they were restrained only for the abuse hereof: & being restrained, do thus disturbe the peace of the Church, & the publike orders of the same? Yea, all their especiall regarde and distrust, is against the publike orders. And if now they should thus be with fauour allowed, to exercise their ministry according to their consciences: what would our brethren then spare to do against these publike orders? I marvel therefore how they can thus confidently say, it is impossible, but that they shall exercise their ministerie, &c. Whereas, it is both against all sense and reason, yea, plaine impossible to be graunted to them, without we would with all, graunt vnto them all their desires, and deuises in these controuerxies.

Our brethren offer to be tyed to haue speciall regarde to the peace of the church and publike orders.

The epilogue of the preface exhorting to prayer for these things.

For the residue of this conclusion, we say in part with our brethren also: Wherefore most Christian reader, when thou shalt by these fewe, take knowledge of these things, which are contayned in this preface, and in this Learned discourse, praye vnto God for vs: and as thy place is, (and so farre forth as accordeth with thy dutie therein) sollicite and further so iust a cause (as that the peace of the Church, the publike orders & government established be not preiudiced) to this end only, that Christs kingdome may be perfectly established, the consciences of all the godly quieted, & the happy regimēt of her Ma. honored with much peace, ioy, and quietnes, (both) at home, among vs: and that it may ouerslowe, to the reliefe, comfort and good example, of other parts of Christes Church, that are distressed in foraine countries. being not fozetalled in these matters, and yet, being desirous to see the truth, and to search out the bottom of these doubties: thou mayest be able to discern the spirites aright, to resolve and stay thy selfe, on the very ground of truth in all these questions. And so a Gods name enter-now, into the perusall and considering of this learned discourse.

The first booke of this defence against the learned discourse of Ecclesiasticall gouernment.

The argument of the first Booke.

THE first booke is of the principles of this learned discourses platforme of the Churches gouernment; of their partition thereof, into a Tetrarchie of 4 estates: Doctors, Pastors, Gouernours, and Deacons: and of their necessitie and perpetuitie: of the perswasion to leaue our own Estate, and embrace the Estate of our neighbors: and of their putting back the treatise of the Christian Princes supream Gouernment, in Eccl. causes: and their reasons, why they will not first treat there-on, vntill they haue before assigned vnto all and euerie of these 4 Estates, all their places, with their seuerall and ioynt offices and authorities: wherein is shewed, not only what daunger, and iniurie is offred vnto Christian Princes: but also, with what vnworthie contumelies and sclaunders, they are reiectted to the end of this Learned discourse.

This is the Title commendatorie of this booke, besides the other title which they set before it: A brief, or plaine declaration concerning the desires of all those faithfull ministers, &c. But because this latter title liked them better: our brethren take the former part of this title, & preface ouer euerie lease of all their treatise this commendation, A learned discourse of eccl. gouernment. I referre the iudgement of the learning to the learned. We thinketh our brethren should haue done better, to let the discourse commend it selfe; whether it be learned or vnlearned: vinu vendibili non opus hadera. But what soeuer the reader can iudge of learning: let him stil haue his ayne to this point, that is here auouched, but not likewise set by ouer every lease, proued by the word of God. For, be it learned or vnlearned, proue that: & we yelde. And if our brethren proue it not by the word of God: then we craue of them, that they will cease these contentious discourses, and not stande so much vpon their learning. But both their learned discoursing of Eccl. gouernment, and their prouing the same by the word of God shall appeare (God willing) to the Reader, by the discoursing.

2. that all

The Church of God is the house of God, & therefore ought to be directed in all things, according to the order prescribed by the housholder himselfe: which order is not to be learned else-where, but in his holie word. The first of these principles or propositions, is the very worde of the holy Ghost vttered by Paul: The second followeth necessarily of the first. The third is a manifest trueth, beleueed of all them, that acknowledge the scripture of God, to be a perfect rule of all our life, and able to make the man of God perfect, prepared to all good workes.

On these three principles, our brethren lay their ground of al their learned discourse. Which being rightly vnderstode, and building well vpon them, are verie good principles, or rather propositions, as they terme the. Of this first, is saide ynough already: concerning Dauids comparing him selfe to the stone in the corner of this mysticall houses building. And most gladly we admit this our brethrens testimonie for the same, as the verie worde of the holy Ghost vttered by Paule: and that this house of God, which is the Church of the liuing God, (is) the pillar and ground of truth: Because it alwayes vpholdeth and maintaineth the trueth, both in this matter of eccl. gouernment, and in all other, so farre as is necessarie to saluation. Albeit, Christe in principall, properly and absolutely, is the onely ground and foundation of this house. And heere by the way, sith by this testimonie of S. Paul, the Church, which is the house of God, is thus the pillar and ground of the trueth: If this gouernment that our brethren vrge be so necessarie, and of so great moment to the house or church of God: then is it likely, y the Church of God, though it hath not alwaies and in all places, yet for the most part of time & places, or at leastwise, in some ages and places, had this gouernment maintained, & kept it, or strived for it, or else belike it was not thought so necessarie.

The second principle (they say) followeth necessarily of the first. And so it doth, which seconde was this: and therefore (this Church or house of God) ought to be directed in all thinges, according to the order prescribed by the housholder himselfe. Which principle is true within the boundes thereof, that is to say, in all thinges that he hath prescribed.

in the Church of England for Eccles. matters.

But if he haue not prescribed all things appertayning to the externall Howe farre gouernment of his Church or house: then are those things which are this rule hol not prescribed by the housholder himselfe, not to be so vrged, as that deth. they ought necessarily, this way or that way to be alwayes directed. The first Tabernacle to the second, which he calleth a greater and more perfect Tabernacle, not made with handes, that is, not of this building, (meaning the naturall bodie of Christe) referreth not this to the mysti-call bodie, which is the Church or house of God, and much lesse to the externall forme of regiment in all matters ecclesiasticall, or belonging to the Churches gouernment. No, not when before, chap. 3. verse 1. Hebr. 3. 1.

et. he speaketh both of Christ himselfe, and of his house or Church also.
Therefore (sayeth he) holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly vocation, consider the Apostle and high Priest of our profession Christ Iesus: who was faithfull to him that hath appointe him, euen as Moses was in all his house. For this man was counted woorthie of more glorie than Moses, in as much as he that hath builded the house, hath more honour than the house. For euery house is builded of some man, and hee that hath built all things, is God. Nowe Moses verelie was faithfull in all his house, as a seruant, for a wisse of the things which should be spoken after: but Christe is as the sonne ouer his owne house, whose house wee are, if we holde fast the confidence, and the reioysing of the hope, vnto the ende.

Here againe, we see that this faithfulness in all his house, (as Moses was faithfull,) is not to be reckoned, as though he went about to thewe vs, that all pointes of the externall regiment of the house or Church of Christe, haue a prescribed order, by which they ought to bee directed in all things: but that in the inwarde and spirituall regiment thereof, we should acknowledge Iesus Christ the sonne of God to be the Lord and owner of this house, and to consider him, as the Apostle and high Priest of our profession, that is, of our Christian faith and religion, and to confirme our faith in him, that wee are his house or Church, if wee holde fast (not this or that externall forme of Ecclesiasticall gouernment) but the confidence and reioysing of hope vnto the ende.

And thus farre forth, and not further, we admit this second principle or proposition.

And this is necessarie to be obserued, because this principle is here set downe in such captious order, as insinuating, that Christ had prescribed an order in all things, in his house or Church: according to the prescription whereof, all things ought to be directed.

A defence of the government established

The 3. principle.

That the Scripture teacheth all the Churches government.

The caption of this third principle.

In which sense it is no principle, but a question betwene vs, which we Denie, and our brethren assure: but as yet they haue not proued it.

The thirde (saye they) is a manifest trueth, beleueed of all them, that acknowledge the Scripture of God, to bee a perpetuall rule of all our life, and able to make the man of God perfect, prepared to all good workes.

Here againe, another caption is to be taken heere of, in this their thirde principle: which order is not to bee learned else-where, but in his holie woorde.

For if they meane it of the order that in his holie worde he hath prescribed: true it is, that order is not to be learned any where else, as anie necessarie prescription: other wise then as an exposition of the same order, for our more cleare and fuller learning thereof. And so (alwayes keeping the foundation) the godlie fathers and expositors may builde there-on: and the godlie gouernours of the Church, may beautifie and adorne the same: so that all be doone to Gods glorie, and to the true edifying of the Church. And so, this third proposition is a manifest trueth beleueed of all them, that acknowledge the Scripture of God, to be a perfect rule of all our life, and able to make the man of God perfect, prepared to all good workes.

But it followeth not heere-upon, that all generall or particuler orders in the externall gouernement of the Church, are not else-where to bee learned, but in Gods holie woorde: except they meane by Gods holie woorde, such as are inclusiuely comprehended, and not expressely specified in his holie woorde. For, they their selues haue not all their orders expressely mentioned, and in all thinges prescribed in Gods holy woorde.

The forme of common prayer by our brethren prescribed.

For example, their owne communion booke, entituled: The forme of Common prayers, administration of the Sacramentes, &c. They dare not auow, that all thinges therein conteyned, haue not beene learned else-where, but in his holie woorde, and are there to be founde eyther in plaine woordes, or necessarie implication: but because they thinke, that they are not contrarie: they dare auouch thus farre, to call them, Agreeable to Gods worde. And yet, as though the agreeablenesse also might be called in question: they adde heere-to, And the vse of the reformed Churches. And as their owne booke of Common prayers vseth all these helpes, to saue all vpright, for feare they might be chalenged in this point: even so, this booke which our brethren commend vnto vs, to be, A learned discourse of Ecclesiasticall gouernment, proued by the worde of God: wee shall finde in the discourse thereof, that the learned discoursers learned not all the orders prescribed there-in, out of Gods holie woorde: but somewhat else-where. Except they will likewise say, it is agreeable, or not contrarie to Gods holie woorde.

Agreeable to Gods worde though not prescribed.

Wherein also, we shall (God willing) see how they saile. But if that answer may thus serue them: I see not why, it may not as well serue vs, if we haue no other gouernement established, but such as is agreeable and not contrarie to the holic word of God, although it be not in his holic word expresselie prescribed.

Neither doth this text of S. Paule. 2. Tim. 3. 17. anie more infringe euerie order in the churches gouernement, that it maye not be learned else-where, but in Gods holic worde: then it doth infringe euerie other order in the ciuill policie, or administration of euerie mans mozell behaviour: that their orders also are not to be learned else-where, but in Gods holic word. Bicause, this is a manifest truth, beleueed of all them that acknowledge the scripture of God, to be a perfect rule of all our life, and able to make the man of God perfect, prepared to all good workes. But it sufficeth for such orders as are not prescribed, nor specified as things necessarie to saluation, both in life and manners, to leuell all such orders (be they ecclesiasticall, ciuill, or mozell) according to the analogie of those, that are specified & prescribed: and to receiue them, either as folded up or unfolded, in those generall specifications & prescriptions: and so to esteeme them in their degrees, as necessarie or expedient to edification, for order, comelinesse, or obedience sake, although they be none of those things, that directlie appertaine vnto the necessitie of our saluation, or to anie absolute necessitie of our obedience.

And thus farre (as I, vnder creation, take it) are these three principles, albeit indeed no principles, bicause we see they are thus intricate, ambiguous, captious, and so questionable (but propositions, are the latter name for the two later) to be admitted, and no farther.

This foundation being surelie laide, against which the gates of hell cannot preuaile: we ought diligentlie and reuerentlie to search the holic scriptures, that we may finde, what order our sauour Christ, our onelie householder, hath set foorth in them: by which he would haue his church or household to be directed in all thinges, appertaining to the eternall saluation of vs men, his vnprofitable seruants.

Here our brethren brawe their three former propositions to an head or issue: what order is prescribed in the holic scriptures. But whereas they make these three foresaid propositions, to be the foundation of all their building of this house of God: (the reuerence reserved to so learned discourfers) me thinketh they should haue laide a more sure foundation, whether it be of this house of Gods church, or of their platforme of building this their ecclesiasticall gouernement. For (as we may easilie perceiue, by view of these three propositions) they are not all of them so sure and plaine principles, as our brethren would beare vs in hand, they are. But this is apparant, that they are not that foundatiō, against which Christ saith) that the gates of hell shall not preuaile. That foundation was surelie laide indeed: for it was Christ himselfe, vpon whom (by faith in him) all the house of the church is builded: as the Apostle saith: No man can laye anie other foundation, then that that is laide, which is Iesus Christ. Seeing that therefore, our brethren make all their foundation, wherevpon their plotforme of gouernement shall arise, to consist on these three foresaid propositions: I doubt, least, the surelier they thinke, that they lay their building on it, this foundation will not beare it, being so sandie, lose, and hollowe: except their building be of verie slight timber, & light stufte. Neuerthelesse, the drift wherevnto they driue all these three propositions, is well to be liked, to search the scriptures, as Christe willeth, Iohn. 5. 39. For they testifie of him. But although a man builde on that foundation, which is onelye Iesus Christ: yet (saith S. Paule. 1. Cor. 13. 11, &c. Let euerie man take heed how he buildeth vpon it. For if any man build vpon this foundation gold, siluer, precious stones, timber, hay, stubble: euerie mans worke shall be made manifest. For the daye shall declare it, bicause it shall be reuealed by the fire, and the fire shall trie euerie mans worke, of what sorte it is. If anye mans worke that he hath built vpon, abide, he shall receiue wages. If anye mans worke burne, he shall lose, but he shall be safe himselfe: neuerthelesse, yet as it were by the fire. And who are these that build thus, albeit, on Christe? Hane we not well (among all other interpretations) compare them vnto these builders, which being neither Heathen, nor Heretiks, nor erroneous Papists (for, all those build besides the foundation Christ,) But these building and grounding themselves (so farre as reacheth to the ground and foundation) all on Christe, not withstanding, they contend (as the Corinthians did) about matters, that were not so necessarie, but lesse edifynge: of the which, although some of them were good giftes of GOD, meete for the state and time then present, (being well vsed) but not to bee vrged so peremptorie, that euen a building and plotforme, shoulde bee made and prescribed vnto all churches, and to all times and states, of those things: these men (although otherwise, they laye all their foundation onelye on Iesus Christ) yet when the fire of Gods spirit and holie word, shall come in-deed to trie them, this fire will consume and burne vp (as strawe, or stubble, yea be it timber also) all these curious and contentious plotformes, that these our zealous brethren haue framed, and endeououred to set vp, on Iesus Christe, the rocke and foundation of all the building. But not so, but that they themselves (by the grace of God) shall neuer the lesse be saued, though these deuises of theirs, for all they build them on Christ, yet bicause they are not so necessarie to edifyng (as they conceaue of them) shall perish in the triall.

any others, if we should make any building on Christe, of the outward order of ecclesiasticall gouernement, otherwise then as S. Paule the wise maister builder doth: not to vrge them as matters of saluation, no as though the perfection of religion laye in them: no yet to giue leaue to enery private congregation, to dispose of them, as they list: but so to vrge and retaine them, as orders necessarie, not of the building it selfe, but of the ornaments of the building, of which orders he giueth his generall rule, 1. Cor. 14. 40. Let all things be doone honestly and by order, as we shall (God willing) see further in this discourse thereon. And such orders he seemeth also to include, 1. Cor. 11. 34. Other things will I set in order when I come. But these orders are neither of the substance of the building: nor be all of them expressed in the holie scriptures, though some of them be: no; all that are expressed, are prescribed to all ages & churches, no are things of necessitie to saluation. Albeit, they be not thereupon, to be vnorderlie plucked by or contemned, being orderlie set downe & established.

But, that we ought diligentlie and reuerentlie to search the holie scriptures, that we may finde what order our Sauour Christ, our onelic housholder, hath set forth in them, by which he would haue his house or church, to be directed in all things, appertaining to the eternall saluation of vs men, his vnprofitable seruants: This is most true, we ought so to do, and to do the same with great diligence, and no lesse reuerence: least perhaps, of neuer so good and zealous a meaning, we should ouerburden our selues contentiously, for things not necessarielie pertaining to the eternall saluation of vs men his vnprofitable seruants, when we find any thing mentioned in the holie scriptures: and not diligentlie and reuerentlie searching, and considering the same, streightwaies vrge it, to be a generall order, or an absolute rule, that our Sauour Christ, our onelic (cheefe) housholder, hath set forth in them: by the which he would haue his house or church to be directed, as in things pertaining to the eternall saluation of vs men his vnprofitable seruants. This were indeed an improfitable seruice, and an vndiligent and vnreuerent searching of the holie scripture. For so, Per ignoratorem Elenchi, not knowing the ground of the matter, which we searched for, we might (in a zeale not according to knowledge) run (and leade other with vs) into manie and dangerous inconueniences, and so, become not onelic vnprofitable, but hurtfull seruants too.

And if these our brethren, the learned discourfers, did alwaies search the holie scriptures, with this diligence and reuerence (as both they and we, and all ought to do) they should finde, that in their vrging of this their ecclesiasticall gouernement, as appertaining to saluation, they offer to great an iniurie, both to all vs their brethren, & to the most ages, and peoples (if not to all Gods church) besides themselves. For, albeit they

they could find some parts thereof set forth by our saviour Christ in the holie scriptures (which how they searche and prooue, this discourse will shew) yet, for all their forme here prescribed, to be set forth by our saviour Christe, or by his apostles in the holie scriptures, by which he would haue his church directed in all things, and that, as appertaining to the saluation of vs men, his vnprofitable seruants: They shall neuer finde this, search while they will. Yea, in saying this, they pronounce to hard a censure, vpon all the house and church of Christ, where this ecclesiasticall gouernement hath not bene obserued. Which (if it had pertained to the saluation of man) should not onelie haue bene vnprofitable, but cast a waie and condemned seruants to, and so, no linelie stones of his house, or parts of his true church at all. For it booteth not that other of our brethren thinke to helpe the matter, in likening our church to a man lining, but yet maimed: or to a house standing, but yet ruinated. For, if it necessarilie be appertaining to the saluation of vs men: then cannot we men without it be partakers of saluatio. But none are of the true church of God, but are partakers of saluation. For the true church is onelie of the elected: and therefore either all that haue not had (since Christs time) this prescribed forme of gouernment, were not the church of Christ at all, or els, this prescribed forme of gouernment, is not necessarilie appertaining to the saluatio of vs men. And if not necessarie, then vnnesessarie to our saluatio. And then, we shall mainteine our gouernment (I trust) in peace, honestie, and godlinesse, (by the grace of God) well enough, yea, without anie deforming: and much more, without anie maiming of the church of Christ (as Cartwrighte saith) and much more, without being no true church at all (as Harrison saith) although we want it.

But now let vs see, with what diligence and reuerence our brethren haue searched the holie scriptures, and what they haue found in them for this their building.

Now we finde in the scriptures, that our saviour Christ ascending into heauen, was not vnmindfull of his church on earth: but ordeined an holie ministerie of men, to the building vp of the bodie of Christ, in vnitie of faith and knowledge.

This for a beginning is well searched out, and a good beginning maketh a good ending. This is searched, found, and quoted by our brethren, Ephes. 4. 11, and 1. Cor. 12. 28. But they finde here, that was not lost, nor is doubted of, or called in question betwene vs. For, we confesse, as frelie as they, (that our saviour Christ ascending into heauen, was not vnmindfull of his church on earth: but ordeined an holie ministerie of men. But what that holie ministerie of men was, the apostle himselfe sheweth in the same place, Ephes. 4. ver. 11. He therefore gave some to be Apostles, and some Prophets, and some Euangelists, and some Pastors and teachers.

This place declareth, that our sauour Christ was neither vnmayndfull, nor vnbountifull to his church on earth. notwithstanding, the most part of the gifts here reckoned by, are ceased manie hundred yeares agoe: and either there remaineth of this, but one, vnderstanding pastor and teacher for one office, as the apostle denieth the other, setteth downe this together iointlie, since the office of Pastor chiefelie consisteth in teaching, (and so do the most interpreters expound it) or there remaineth but two ordinarie functions at the most, here mentioned: if we should deuide them as these our brethren do: but of that afterward. Now anelie to the present purpose, for the which our brethren here alledge this place, the Apostle here citeth it not for anie orders of ecclesiasticall gouernement, concerning externall discipline or iurisdiction, in what prescribed manner it should be obserued, directed, set forth, and perpetuallie continued in Christs church: yea, the chiefest part of those gouernours, which the Apostle setteth downe, is altered, by taking a waie the three principall named persons, Apostles, Prophets, and Euangelists. But S. Paule speaking there, of their diuerse gifts and functions: to what purpose do our brethren say, Christ gaue them: To the building vp (saye they) of the body of Christ in the vnitie of faith and knowledge.

What is this to the matter that we now search to finde in the scriptures, that is to saie, for some orders prescribed and set forth, concerning the externall forme of ecclesiasticall gouernement for the church, to be directed by, in all things? Can we finde this, in this testimonie of the Scripture? If we can: let vs search the place better, and not curtall it thus, as they do. He therefore (saith the Apostle) gaue some to be apostles, and some prophets, and some euangelists, and some pastors and teachers: for the gathering together of the saints, for the worke of the ministerie, and for the edification of the bodie of Christ, till we all meet together in the vnitie of faith, and knowledge of the sonne of God, vnto a perfect man, and vnto the measure of the age of the fulnesse of Christ, that we hence forth be no more children, wauering, and caried about with euerie winde of doctrine, by the deceite of men, and with craftinesse, whereby they lie in waite to deceaue. But let vs follow the truth in loue, and in all things grow vp into him, which is the head (that is Christ) by whome all the bodie being coupled and knit together by euerie ioint, for the furniture thereof, according to the effectuall power, which is in the measure of euerie part, receaueth encrease of the bodie, vnto the edifying of it selfe in loue.

The Apostles neither words nor scope set downe a perpetuall forme of externall gouernement in the church.

This is all that S. Paule in this place speaketh, of these gifts, and of this building, and of the order and ends thereof, so that, here he referreth all to vnitie in doctrine of faith, and to holie conuersation of life, and not to the externall orders of the churches ecclesiasticall gouernement. Albeit beit we must not thinke hereupon, that because this gouernement is not here mentioned among the gifts, which our Sauour Christ gaue to his church on earth, when he ascended into heaven: He was vnmindfull of his church: or that S. Paule was vnmindfull of his giftes: or that the church having not had this now desired gouernment, for so many hundred yeares, should haue bene so long time vnmindfull or destitute of the same, if it had bene any matter wherein the perfection of the church consisted: or the want thereof had bene any impediment to those ends, that the Apostle here citeth. But we may rather thinke the contrarie, that it was no such important matter, and therefore not necessarie to be minded.

Well, yet if it be not in the one place here quoted, it maye be in the other. Let vs therefore likewise see the other, 1. Cor. 12. 28. And there indeed are gouernours mentioned in expresse termes. For where S. Paule had said, Verse, 27. Now are ye the bodie of Christ, and members for your parts: it followeth. And God hath ordained some in the church: as first, Apostles, secondlie Prophets, thirdlie Teachers, then, them that doo miracles: after that, the giftes of healing, helpers, gouernours, diuersities of toongs. Here are giftes reckoned vp, Apostles and Prophets mentioned before: and here among other, are gouernours named: but what kind of gouernours? Or whether with an ordinance for the order of gouernement, for the church alwaies to be directed by, any more then by any other of the residue here mentioned: (except Teachers, which are alwaies necessarie for the instruction of doctrine, and documents of life:) this place helpeth to our brethrens purpose, no more then did the other. Neither was the purpose of S. Paule here in, directed to any such bent, but to exhort the Corinthians vnto edifying in vnitie and loue, and not to distract themselves in faction, about these giftes, as he proceedeth saying: Are all Apostles? Are all Prophets? Are all Teachers? Are all workers of miracles? Haue all the giftes of healing? Doo all speake with toongs? Doo all interpret? But desire you the best giftes, and I will yet shew you a more excellent waie. And so he entred into a lerned discourse indeed, chap. 13. Not of this our brethrens platforme of ecclesiasticall gouernement, as tending to the perfection of the church: But of the excellencie of loue or charitie, about all the giftes and offices that he had named: and maketh this the waie to tend vnto the perfection of the church, concluding thus: And now abideth faith, hope, and loue, these three: but the cheefest of these is loue. This was the full drift of S. Paule in this place, concerning the mysticall bodie of Christe, which is his church or house, and that the building vp thereof: euen, where he speaketh of Gouernours, and of the waie tending to perfection, & where he citeth many giftes and offices: and yet can we not here finde this platforme of ecclesiasticall gouernement, which our brethren then desire & seek for: (note in the beginning of this learned discourse, and after wards againe and againe) in these places: And yet, had there bene then in the church of Christ, anye such platforme, S. Paule had in this place, notable occasion to haue treated thereof. But here is no mention of it, or of any perpetuall forme at all prescribed of ecclesiast. gouernment, saue onelie of Teaching: except they will include that in gouerning. So that finding nothing hitherto to satisfie their desires, in searching these two testimonies of the scripture: let vs now proceed, to search further with them for this matter.

We finde also, that as the offices, are diuerse of this ministerie: so they are not generall vnto all the church, but as order and necessitie require, for executing of their office, distributed and limited vnto certaine places or particular churches, according to the diuision of regions, cities and townes. For we read that Paule and Barnabas, ordeined at Derby, Lystra, Iconium, and Antiochia, &c: elders by election in euerie church, with praier and fasting, and so commended them to the Lord, in whome they beleued. Also Paule left Titus in the Isle of Creta, that he should ordeine Elders in euerie citie, as he had appointed.

What our brethren did finde in the two foresaide testimonies of the scripture, we haue alreadye seene, that is to saye, they haue found out in them, for the confirmation of the question betwene vs, what more, what lesse, more nothing. Where they tell vs they finde also, that the diuerse offices of this ministerie are not generall vnto all the church. But they finde also this so doubtfull, that we can scarce tell howe to finde also what it is, that they saye here, they haue found. For, what means they by these wordes: that as the offices are diuerse, so are they not generall vnto all the church? Whether meane they, not generall vnto all the church, in respect of all the persons, of whom the church consisteth, that is to say, not generall or common to all men? Or, meane they it, in respect of the time: that is to say, they are not generall or perpetuall to all the continuance of the church to the world's end? And if they do so: why do they then alledge these places for them? Withe they can neither finde by them, all the offices of eccles. gouernment that they desire: nor those places do distinguish, which diuerse offices of this ministerie are generall or perpetuall, and which are not. Or, meane they generall, in respect of all places, wheresoeuer the church is thorough-out all the world dispersed: And although this last sense, seemeth to vnto nearest to the coherence of their wordes following: but as order and necessitie require, for executing of their office, distributed and limited vnto certaine places or particular churches, according to the diuisions of regions, cities and townes: yet are these wordes (me thinke) as darke, or darker then the other. And still (better correction) I wishe, they had (for their owne sakes) set do tunc their words more plainlie. For my part, I gather this of them, that for the executing of anye of those diuerse offices (not speaking of those that are already ceased, but of those that are ordinarie offices, which our brethren also make diuerse offices) these cannot execute their offices, but that for order sake, and of verie necessitie, these offices or officers must be distributed and limited, either vnto certeine places, or particuler churches, where they may gouerne, feede, or teach the people: and these certeine places or particuler churches, are to be assigned or appointed vnto these diuerse offices or officers, according to the diuisions of regions, cities and townes: that is to say, some of these diuerse offices or officers, to wit, Gouernors, Pastors, & Teachers, to be distributed and limited; some ouer regions, other ouer cities, and other ouer townes. Is not this their meaning, that these diuerse offices should be thus distinguished and limited, and that for order sake: yea, that verie necessitie both require it, for the better executing of their offices?

If this be not their meaning: I cannot see, what better construction to make of their words. And the verie examples which here they finde also, do directlie confirme this sense. For although in the one, Act. 14. 23: they tell vs, that Paule and Barnabas ordeined elders by election. Which example we shall after wards (God willing) see more fullie & oftener then once discoursed: yet neither followeth it, that those presbyters, presbys elders, must be vnderstood of a seniorie, that are gouernors and not teachers, to be elected or ordeined in euerie church: and our brethren themselves before, spoke onelic of an holie ministerie, which words are vsuallie restrained, vnto the diuine ministers of the word & sacraments. Neither followeth it, that although the churches had elected them (which cannot necessariely be gathered on that text) whom they hinc to affect to be ordeined: that therefore they had anye thing at all to do in the ordaining or making of them. For, the text is plaine, that Paule and Barnabas did ordeine them, and not, the churches with Paule and Barnabas did ordeine them. As for their other example, Tit. 1. 5, both most apparantlie confirme the same, and cleane ouerthroweth the ecclesiasticall gouernment, that their selues desire. For first, what ecclesiasticall office Titus had, the verie subscription of S. Pauls epistle vnto him, both declare: To Titus the first elected bishop of the church of the Cretenses. Which subscription, what it inferreth, we shall (God willing) haue further occasion to note againe hereafter. In the means season, it accordeth to our brethren saying, that he had by S. Pauls assignement, for the executing of his episcopall office, the whole Ile and people of the Cretians, as his prouince or region, distributed and limited vnto him. And our brethren further confesse: Also Paule left Titus in the Ile of Creta, that he should ordeine Elders in euerie citie, as he had appointed. And not onelic so:

but as appeareth by Saint Pauls same words: For this cause, left I thee in Creta, that thou shouldest redresse the things that remaine, and shouldest ordeine presbyters (preests or Elders) in euerie citie, as I appointed thee. What these Presbyters, Preests, or Elders were, least we should vnderstand them to be Consistories, of gouerning onelie and not teaching presbyters, preests, or elders: We proceedeth, saying: If anie be vnreproouable, the husband of one wife, hauing faithfull children, which are not slandered of riot, neither are disobedient. For a Bishop must be vnreproouable, as Gods steward: and so forth, as by the description of the properties there required, doth appeare: especiallie the last, that he may be able to exhort with wholesome doctrine, and im- prooue them that gaine-saye it. Whereby we may plainelie see, that he meaneth onelie the Bishops and Presbyters, Preests or Elders of the worde.

what office the elders had that Titus ordeined.

Here, of these Bishops and Presbyters, Preests or Elders, S. Paule giueth to Titus the authoritie or iurisdiction to be their ordinarie, or the ordeiner of them, in their Episcopall and presbyterall office, without any mention at all, of any others election of them, besides himselfe, to appoint and ordeine such, as he should see, to be sufficientlie qualified for those offices. And that he should thus do in euerie citie in Creta, which Island at that time, had many and famous Cities. To conclude, he giueth him charge, and so withall, authoritie, that he should there continue to redresse those things that were remaining to be done. Which, what things they were (some orders, perhaps, of ecclesiasticall gouernement, meete for their state): yet, because they are not specified: no prescribed order of this or that ecclesiasticall gouernement, can be inferred on those generall words. Nevertheless, they proue, that he had authoritie, and that a continuing authoritie, to redresse such ecclesiasticall matters, as were amisse, or not yet established among them. So that, here is a manifest iurisdiction Episcopall, yea, Archi-episcopall, not onelie ouer Pastors and Teachers, being elders in euerie particular church: but also ouer Bishops hauing authoritie ouer whole cities: Titus being aboue them all, through-out the whole Ile, as a Regionall or Prouinciall Bishop, which we vsuallie call by the auncient termes, Metropolitane or Archbishop. And all this doth here by the way (before we come to the proper treatise thereof) their owne example, which they haue here found out, most manifestlie proue, directlie against the ecclesiasticall gouernement that they seeke for. From these places, our brethren returns vnto the testimonies, that they cited before, pressing one more, Rom. 12. vnto them.

The prooffe in Titus of Episcopall and Archiepiscopall iurisdiction.

Concerning the diuerse offices of the ministerie, we are taught by Saint Paule, Rom. 12. 6. also, 1. Cor. 12. 28. and Ephes. 4. 11. Where we Bridges. Concerning the diuers offices of the ministerie, our brethren searched before, but they could finde nothing for their desired Ecclesiastical gouernement. And yet here the places which before were onely cited in the margine, are now ascited and promoted into the Learned discourse it selfe: (belike) on hope of some better matter. Wherebeit, they say nothing. They doe here but muster on a plump, come smatch for a shote, and so passe by in a confused order, and not in their places, as the Apostle setteth them downe. And, a number are left out, that are also mentioned in these chapters here cited, even almoste as many as bee here named. For besides these, the Apostle, Rom. 12. verse. 6. reckoneth by diuerse other giftes.

The diuerso
giftes mentioned in these places.

Seeing then (saith hee) that wee haue giftes, which are diuerse, according to the grace that is giuen vnto vs: whether we haue prophesie, let vs prophesie, according to the proportion of faith: or an office, let vs waile on the office: or he that teacheth, on teaching: or he that exhorteth, on exhortation: he that distributeth, let him doe it with simplicitie: he that ruleth, with diligence: he that sheweth mercie, with cheeresfulness. There are seauen giftes by the Apostle mentioned.

And 1. Cor. 12. beginning at the eight verse, he saith: now there are diuersities of giftes, but the same spirite: and there are diuersities of administrations, but the same Lord: and there are diuersities of operations, but God is the same, which worketh all in all. But the manifestation of the spirite, is giuen to euery man to profite with all: for to one is giuen, by the spirite, the words of wisdom: and to another the words of knowledge, by the same spirite, and to another, is giuen faith, by the same spirite: and to another, the giftes of healing, by the same spirite: and to another, the operation of great workes: and to another, prophesie: and to another, the discerning of spirites, and to another diuersities of toonges, and vnto another the interpretation of toongs.

There againe are nine giftes reckoned by, of the which eight were not before Rom. 12. as diuerse giftes named. And in the place already cited and cited, 1. Corin. 12. ver. 28. are also eight or nine reckoned: of the which, two or three were not before specified. And Ephes. 4. verse. 11. Likewise cited before and perused, are foure named: or if they distinguish Pastor from Teacher, and so make them five: yet remaine there more, then as many more againe, as our brethren haue here reckoned, besides those that are not in these, but in other places mentioned. ¶ ut wherto an our brethren, as should we note to be, so curious, in the enumeration of these diuerse giftes or offices? Doth it any way further our brethrens forme of Ecclesiasticall gouernement? No rather, doth it not in many pointes confute it, as by Gods grace we shall afterwarde see? Do they thinke, that as there were so many diuerse giftes or offices, that they were all of them: as all those persons that were of some one office, of like measure in these giftes: as of like authoritie in that office? as that, although they were diuerse giftes or officers, one man might not haue diuerse of them, all at one time without confusion? But these pointes are debated afterwarde. In the meane season, all this hath bene piously nothing, for the building of their platforme. But it sheweth much more unconsiderately they heape vp these things, with out all order, put in and put out, making perpetuall as temporarie, to some for ever, as to some for a time, what shewer serueth their turne and humor: and all to laye a mobill of such building, as whereon all this new devised Tyrarchie might be erected. Which thing haue they do: let vs see now their proceeding further.

Of these offices, some were temporall, seruing onely for the firste planting and foundation of the church among the Heathen: some are perpetuall, pertaining to the nourishinge and buildinge vp of the church for ever. Of the former sort were Apostles, Prophets, Euangelists, men indued with the graces of powers, of healinge and of diuerse toonges. Of the later kinde are Doctors, Pastors, Gouernors, and Deacons. The Apostles were ordeined by God, and sent forth immediatly by Christe, hauing a generall commission to spread the Gospell ouer all the worlde: which when they had accomplished, that office ceased. Such were the twelue Apostles, Paule and Barnabas, &c.

And for this cause the Apostles appointed Matthias, in the place of Judas, according to the scriptures: permitting neuertheless, the election vnto God, by casting of Lottes, that the number might be full, for the firste planting of the Church. But when Herode had slaine James the brother of Iohn with the sworde, they chose no man to succeede in his place, because they had no warrante of Gods word but the Holie-ghoste, as hee saue it was expedient for the church, afterwarde separated Paule and Barnabas which liued at Antioche, as Prophets and Teachers to the worke, wherefo he called them.

The Prophets were such as were indued, with a singular gite of Reuelation in the interpretation of the scriptures, and applying them to the the present vse of the church: of whome some also did foreshewe of things to come, as Agabus.

Also, there were in euerie citle that prophesied to S. Paule, as he passed by them, that bonds and afflictions were prepared for him at Ierusalem. This office being in the number of them that were ordeined for beautifying the Gospell, in the first publishing thereof, it ceased with that singuler and extraordinarie gift, to be an ordinarie function of the church.

Act. 13. 1. 4.

The Euangelists were such as were stirred vp of G O D, to assist the Apostles in their ministerie of generall charge, in planting the same by their preaching, but inferior in dignitie to the Apostles. Such was Philip that first preached the Gospell in Samaria: whither Peter and Iohn were sent by the Apostles, to conferre vnto them, by praier and imposition of hands, the visible graces of the Holie-ghost, which Philip did not.

Act. 21. 3.

The same Philip in Acts. 21. verse. 8. is called an Euangelist. So was Timothie, 2. Timoth. 4. 5. such was Titus, Silas, and manie other. This office also, with the order of the Apostles, is expired, and hath no place. Likewise as we doo plainelie see, that the gifts of healing, of powers or miracles, and of diuerse toongs, haue long since ceased to be in the church: so the offices of them which were grounded vpon these gifts, must also cease and be determined. Therefore the Papists doo vaine-ly retaine the name and office of exorcists, when they cannot cast out diuels: and extreame vnction, when they cannot cure diseases: & to speake with strangetoongs, which they haue not by inspiration, and that withoutanie interpretation, which S. Paule expresse-ly forbiddeth.

What gifts and offices were tem-porall, what perpetuall.

It is requisite and necessary nearer to the purpose, to know, what was temporall in these giftes, and what perpetuall: what is ceased, expired, determined, and hath no place, and what remaineth: so; soare, we should offend either waie: vrging that to be temporall which is perpetuall, or that to be perpetuall which was but temporall. For the error of this, breedeth most of all these troubles betweene vs. Where in our brethren be bothe wayes grea-ly mistake these giftes. For first, where they say: Some were temporall, seruing onelie for the first planting and foundation of the church among the Heathen: (and of this former sorte, they reckon bp the Apostles, Prophets, Euangelists, men indued with graces of powers, of healings:) and so they enter into their particuler praues, of the ceasing of these functions: I thinke they maye better be-thinke them-selues, that all these giftes and offices, which their selues haue here named, did not cease, but that they haue since the firste planting and foundation of the church among the Heathen, continued longer time among the Christians.

Now, some of them, have for a great part of the time, continued even till our owne times, & yet continue. As the operation of great workes. Or if they meane thereby myracles, which were not ordinarie, no not in that extraordinarie time: and as the hypocrites had them also, so might and had diuers of the Papists, and yet their cause neuer the better. And the like may we say of the gift of speaking with tongues, which haue not bene by studie before learned, as Anthonie, &c: and diuers also both of the ancient fathers, and some among the Papists, and some among vs, haue not bene destitute of the gift of prophesie, and much more may I say this, for the gift of healing: for none of these gifts or graces giuen then, or since, or yet, to men, inferre the gift & grace of Gods election, adoption, or be of necessitie to saluation. But, were there no other gifts and offices then, in the primitiue church, but these six, by our brethren here reckoned, besides the foure, which they make standers and remainers? Look on the places before cited, and there we shall finde a great many more, of which the most part haue euer bene, and yet are, euen as much, or farre more ordinarie gifts or offices, then these foure, which they saye are perpetuall.

More ordinarie gifts then our brethren mention.

S. Paule (as is also said) distinguishing these gifts, saith, Rom. 12. 6. Seeing then that we haue gifts which are diuers, according to the grace that is giuen vnto vs, whether we haue prophesie, let vs prophesie, according to the proportion of faith: or an office, let vs waite in the office: or he that teacheth on teaching: let he that exhorteth on exhortation: he that distributeth, let him doe it with simplicitie: he that ruleth, with diligence: he that sheweth mercie with chearfulness. There also are other gifts and offices reckoned vp, besides these foure of Doctors, Pastors, Gouernors and Deacons. If he meane by office, some particular function, which is ceased: that would be shewed: or els it may remaine and be still perpetuall. If he meane by teaching, Doctor, by exhorting, Pastor: by distributing Deacon: by ruling, one of those not teaching presbyters, preests, or elders, which our brethren call Gouernors: yet that which before the Apostle called an office, and that which followeth of, shewing mercie, are particulerly specified and distinguished from these foure, Doctor, Pastor, Gouernour, and Deacon. In what place then shall we reckon those two: either as temporall, or as perpetuall? If temporall: then is there more ceased, then those six. If perpetuall: then more than these foure do remaine.

Likewise, Saint Paule (as is also said) 1. Cor. 12. saith. There are diuersities of gifts: &c. For to one is giuen by the spirit, the word of wisdom: and to another the word of knowledge by the same spirit: and to another is giuen faith by the same spirit: and to another the operation of great workes: and to another prophesie: and to another the discerning of spirites: and to another the diuersities of tongues: and to another the interpretation of tongues. All these the Apostle here setteth downe, as giftes or offices, distinguished one from another.

What now shall we saye to the gifte or office, of them that haue the worde of wisdom given vnto them: Was that a temporall gifte or office, seruing onelie for the firste planting and foundation of the church among the Heathen? If they saye the abundant measure of it was temporall: that maye be granted: and yet the gifte and office still remaine. And so likewise, of the next gifte or office, in them that haue the gifte of knowledge or learning. For these are distinguished here the one from the other, (as we commonlie say: The greatest clerkes are not alwayes the wisest men,) and these our brethren, as they profess all ouer this their booke, A learned discourse, do so belene, that they haue the spirite of knowledge: other wise they would not commend this treatise vnto vs by such a Title: so that, I perceane this gifte also is not yet ceased, but that it maye be ioyned to those (their foure) remainders.

And what shall we saye, to that the Apostle calleth here the gifte of Faith: making it also a distinct office from the residue: If we saye, he meaneth the faich of miracles: then are those two giftes following, of healing and of the operation of great workes, not to be vnderstood of the gift of miracles. So that, either the one or the other, seems to be perpetuall. And what shall we saye, to the gifte or office of discerning spirites? For Saint Iohn, 1. Iohn. 4. verse. 1. saith vnto vs: Dearelie beloved, beleene not euerie spirite, but trie the spirits whether they are of God: for manie false Prophets are gone out into the worlde. Which Epistle, being called Catholike or Vniuersall, serueth to all ages and people of the Church: and the gifte of trying or discerning spirites, is yet requisite, if not more needefull now, then euer it was.

To conclude, for this place: what shall we saye for the gifte or office, if not of diuersities of tongues, yet, of the interpretations of tongues? Which gifte or office is not onelie at this daye, to be with all thankfulness acknowledged: but GOD which is the author of all good giftes, is highlye to be praised for it, and many of our good brethren are indowed therewith.

Moreover, in the place here by our brethren quoted, Saint Paul distinguisheth the gifte or office of helping, from that of healing. And are all these giftes and offices ceased, as temporall, and seruing onelie to the first planting and foundation of the church among the Heathen? I saye rather, doe not the most of them remaine still in the church churche among the faithfull, for the continuall building, confirmation, and establishing of them :

I graunt, they remaine in another sorte, then as they were firste giuen in the primitive churche: and for the moste times since, they haue bene giuen perhaps in an other manner, and in less aboundance or measure of them. But that is not the question: but whether all these giftes and offices, besides the foure, of Doctors, Pastors, Gouvernours, and Deacons, (as they denie them,) haue bene expired, & ceased to be in the churche, since the firste planting and foundation thereof among the Heathen. For this is our brethrens conclusion: Likewise, as we doo plainelie see, that the giftes of healing, of powers or miracles, and of diuerse tooongs, haue long since ceased to bee in the churche: so the offices of them, which were grounded vpon these giftes, must also cease and be determined. And shall not we then conclude on the contrarie, that the giftes yet in parte remaining, the offices must in parte remaine also?

I speake not this, to confirme the Papists, of whome our brethren (I graunt) doo well conclude, in saying: Therefore the Papists doo vaineelie retaine the name of exorcistes, when they cannot cast out diuels: and extreame vnction, when they cannot cure diseases: and to speake with strange tooongs, which they haue not by inspiration, and that without anye interpretation, which Saint Paule expresselie forbiddeth.

This dealing of the Papists was more ridiculous and impious, proceeding from a blinde zeale, and preposterous imitation of that which they had not. And yet whether they had it, or not, would needs make ordinarie offices and imitations of them. Howbeit, how faultie soener they were therein: yet belye not (as they say) the diuell. Their faulte was not, that they spake with strange tooongs, which they had not by inspiration: for if they had not had them by inspiration, and yet had they understood them, and the people which heard them, had understood them also: then had this bene no faulte in them, except in speaking faultie matter.

But is this true, that the gifte ceasing, the office ceaseth? What then is the gifte of ruling, that Saint Paule speaketh of Rom. 12. verse. 8. And the giftes of those Gouvernours, whome he mentioneth, 1. Corinth. 12. verse, 28. (vnderstanding the same as our brethren doo) haue ceased or doo cease, or should cease: will they graunt that the office of their desired Seniorie, whome they call Rulers or Gouvernours, should cease also, and bee expired or determined? And must wee vpon this presupposall, that there was anye suche then (which pointe is afterwarde for to bee examined) suppose

say, if it be demanded further, whether either giste or office thereof (vnderstanding the same as they do) haue not since that time, euen from the first planting and foundation of the church among the Heathen, and from thence euen till our time, discontinued? And besides all this: what warrant out of Gods word can be sheweb, moze for those rulers or Gouernors (if they will needs vnderstand thereby their seniorie, of which neither haue we any warrant) that they be moze perpetuall then the other? Or the other moze temporall then these? And that these are of the later kinde, as are Doctors, Pastors, and Deacons, pertaining to the nourishing and building vp of the church for euer.

Our brethren haue alledged some what for the ceasing of the other: is there anye thing alledged here, for the perpetuities of these Seniors: if they runne backe to their former search of the holie scriptures, to find out what order our Sauour Christe, our onelic housholder, hath set foorth in them, by which he would haue his household directed in all thinges, pertaining to the eternall saluation of vs men: we finde that all those gistes or offices, or the most of them, yea those which they say are ceased, are drawing nearer to matters pertaining to saluation, then is this, of ruling or gouerning. Neither hath this any further warrant of remaining in the church, then had the other. How holdeth therefore this argument of our brethren? We finde (say they) that there was such a seniorie, set foorth by Christe in the holie scriptures: therefore, that office must needs be one of those that are perpetuall, pertaining to the nourishing and building vp of the church for euer. What reason do they here alledge for it? say, no reason, but this: Either it is of the one sorte, or of the other, temporall, or perpetuall: but, it is not of the one, to wit, temporall: Ergo, it is of the other sorte, that is, perpetuall. This reason is good, if the parts of it were as good. But howe do our brethren proue, it is not of the former sorte, that is to saye, temporall? Of the former sorte, that is to say, temporall, and which are ceased, there are but sixe reckoned by our brethren. Apostles, Prophets, Euangelists, men indued with the graces of powers, of healings, and of diuerse toongs: but the gift of ruling or gouerning is none of these: and therefore it must needs be of the other kinde, and so, perpetuall. And howe do our brethren proue there are but sixe of the former or temporall sorte? What if we can proue by their owne place here cited, that there were moe? And what if they all ceased not? And why may not this gift or office of those kinde of rulers or gouernors, goe among the number of that former sorte with the sixe, which they call temporall, and make vp the seauenth, or rather the tenenth, if they will account them all in that former sort?

Surelie,

Surely, except we make this our fourth Principle to our former three; or rather this our first and last, our vnquestionable maximie, against which there is no disputing, because (as ipse dixit) these our brethren the learned discourses have coursed it ouer, and ouerruled it, and so it is become a ruled case: here is else, nothing in the worlde to proue it. And by this they conclude, saying:

There remaineth therefore of these before rehearsed, onely in the Church, these Eccl. offices instituted of God: namely, Pastors, Doctors, Governours, & Deacons: by which the Church of God, may (according to his worde) bee directed in all matters, which are commonly called Ecclesiasticall. And therefore, as it is vnlawefull, so it is vnneedfull for men, following the denises of their owne brayne, without the warrant of Gods worde, to institute and ordaine any other offices or kindes of ministerie besides these, appointed and approued by God himselfe, exercised in the primitiue and pure Church, vntill the mysterie of iniquitie working a way for Antichristes pride & presumption, changed Gods ordinance, and brought in all kinde of false doctrine & confusion: and now againe, restored in all rightly reformed Churches, with such dayly encrease, and glorye of the kingdome of Christe, and suppression of the tyrannie of Sathan, that the onely experience hereof, might bee a sufficient perswasion to vs to leaue this disordered state of ours, wherin we haue so long labored with so litle profite: and to embrace that most beautifull order of eccl. regiment, which God so manifestly doth blesse and prosper in our neighbours handes.

We haue hearde what inuincible prooues (as our brethren imagine) they haue found, and brought forth out of the holy scriptures, to inferre the grounds of their desired Ecclesiastical government. Now vpon these groundes and prooues (such as they are) they resolutely procede to the final conclusion and determinate sentence of this matter, by whome all Ecclesiasticall matters shal be directed, saying: There remayneth therefore of these before rehearsed, onely in the Church, these eccl. offices, instituted of God; namely, Pastors, Doctors, Governours and Deacons: by which the Church of God may according to his worde bee directed in all matters which are commonly called ecclesiasticall.

In this peremptorie conclusion, the direction of all eccl. matters, is here to be onely governed by foure kinde of persons. Nowbeit, the frutefull Sermon, vpon 1. Cor. 12. printed also 1584. by Rob. Walde-graue the printer of this learned discourse, maketh fve ordinarie and perpetuall offices: Doctors, Pastors, Deacons, Rulers, and Attenders on the poore. But here by these our brethren (the Learned discourses,) is erected a Tetrarchie, or Quadriuiratus, that is to say, a Catergovernment. And it (as diuerse expounde it) Pastors, & Teachers, be coincident in one office and and person, as the text it selfe, Ephes. 4. 11. Joyntly setteth them together and not disjunctively, which it doth in the other offices there mentioned: and as the Scottish booke (taken from the English Church in Geneva) seemeth to make no necessity of having Doctors, distinct from Pastors, saying: Although we are not ignorant, that the scripture maketh mention of a fourth kinde of ministers, left vnto the Church of Christe, which also are verie profitable, where time and place doe permit: and so accounting no further on Doctors, set downe but thre: so that by them, it is but a Tetrarchie, or Triumviratus, as that kind of gouernement was called, when Lepidus, Anthonie, and Augustus parted the Romaine gouernement among them three, into a Triple regiment. If it fall not out alike, that as two then, made the thirde a ciser, and the one of those two did eate vpp the other, and all resolued into a Monarchie: so in the ende, Monarchie and all being turned out, a fourth step in, and set by a Triple crowne for all. But what this Tetrarchie here created will resolue into, in euerie particular Congregation, and that in all and euerie Ecclesiasticall matter that is to be directed, and what they will comprehend vnder the name of Ecclesiasticall matter: is discoursed afterwarde.

tie that they make of this Tetrar-
chie.

But if this Tetrarchie be not instituted of God himselfe, nor according to the warrant of Gods word, ordayned, appointed, nor approued so to be: as we haue hether to seene no such institution, appoynting, ordayning nor approouing: then am I afrayde (I burden none, but I feare it sheweth) if I haue not myste the marke) that there is a mysterie, which our well meaning bretheren see not, and therefore feare not: even mysterium iniquitatis, that lyeth hydden in this partition of governing and directing all matters: I wishe the best, and therefore if I feare the worst: I hope I am the easier to bee pardoned.

Nowe, although this conclusion of Quartering, Finesolding, or trypling of this gouernment, seemeth at the first not to inferre anye precise necessitie: yet by the Correllatiue, whiche of consequence they make to fall out on this conclusion, that other offices in the direction and gouernment of all Ecclesiasticall matters, are not onely vnneedfull but vnlawefull: What is their resolution other then this: not as they mollified it before, that by these foure or thre kindes of offices, (as other contract them, and our bretheren here enlarge them, other stretch them furder into fine) the Church of God may be directed in all matters which are commonly called Ecclesiasticall: But, the Church of God must be directed by none other.

How-be-it this consequence, doeth not absolutely so set it downe, saying: And therefore, it is not onely vnneedfull, but also vnlawefull, full, for men, &c. to institute and ordaine any other offices or kindes of ministerie besides these: But saying as it were with a side winde, seeming rather to runne vpon the needelesse, then the lawelesse point, they rather seeme to insinuate it, then to inforce it, that it is vnlawefull. And in verie deepe, as they sette out the matter, their conclusion seemeth good and true, saying: And therefore as it is vnlawefull, so it is vnnedefull for men, following the deuises of their owne braine, without the warrant of Gods woorde, to institute and ordaine any other offices or kindes of ministerie, besides these appointed and approved by God himselfe, exercised in the primitive and pure Church, &c.

For mens following the deuises of their owne brayne, without the warrant of Gods woorde, in anie matter of importance, is a great offence. Yea, be it in neuer so meane a matter, haue it no warrant at all, neyther expresse nor conteyned, eyther in specialtie or generalitie in Gods woorde: It is not so vnnedefull as vnlawefull, and a presumptuous rashnesse, when men are so head-strong and selfe-willing, that they will followe no good Counsell, but the deuises of their owne brayne. And therefore, for our brethren to apply this, to all those that followe the gouernement established, were no lesse vnlawfull then vnnedefull.

Yea, howe may not this (my Pastors) light on your selues: For what warrant haue you eyther expresse or included, for all the thinges containned in this your platfome: yea, for the institution and the ordaining of all these offices and kindes of ministerie, and the perpetuie of them in this foure quartered gouernement? Will you alledge that such offices are mentioned in Gods woorde? Take heere ye mistake not, but that they were indeede such offices. But were this a sufficient prooffe, that they were instituted and ordained to be offices or kindes of ministerie, appointed and approved by God himselfe: Can you shewe this warrant also: And yet if you could doe all this: howe would this suffice, except with all ye shewe vs a warrant for the perpetuie, of all and onely these foure offices or kindes of ministerie? You are not ignorant what a warrant is: and I warrant you, and dare giue you there-on your (quies est) that, as you haue not yet founde it, so ye shall neuer be able (with all the learned discourfing in the worlde) to finde this warrant. For, thinke ye (if ye were able to finde thus much) that the warrant here of doth goe no further then here ye say, appointed and approved by God him selfe: so were all the offices and kindes of ministerie of the Mosai-call and Templarie Priesthoode: and yet they were but temporall, and are ceased. Yea, so were the offices and kindes of ministerie of the Apostles, Prophetes, Euangelistes, men indued with the graces, of powers, of healings, and of diuerse tongues: and yet your selues thinke that all these are ceased, expired, determined, and haue no place. And therefore, if ye can shewe this warrant of Gods worde, so; the Tetrarchie perpetually remayning of these ecclesiastical offices instituted of God; namely, Pastors, Doctors, Gouvernours, and Deacons: by which the Church of God, may (according to his word) be directed in all matters; which are commonly called ecclesiastical: shewe howe God appointed and approved it, be it, by himselfe, or by his Apostles, to be perpetually exercised in his Church: and then forth with we yelde.

Mens following the deuises of their owne braine.

No warrant of this Te-trarchie in Gods word.

And if ye can not doe this: then see (good brethren) how this your owne conclusion here, reboundeth on your owne selues: Therefore as it is vnlawfull, so it is vnnedefull for men, following the deuises of their owne braine, without the warrant of Gods worde, to institute and ordaine any other offices or kindes of ministerie, besides (not onely as you say) these appointed and approved by God himselfe: but those that are appointed and approved either by God himselfe, or by his Apostles, to be perpetually exercised in his Church.

The exercise of the primi-
tue church.

But our brethren (belike) perceiving, that they had not sayd ynough for the prooffe of these offices or kindes of ministerie: they Indorse their conclusion (for the more strength) with this addition: exercised in the primitive and pure Church. Here is nowe set downe (as they conceaue) a sufficient and full warrant, for all these offices or kinds of ministerie, appointed and approved of God himselfe: But where, or how, no place is here alleaged, eyther in text or margine. For I would faine see that place set downe, that we might haue the full viewe thereof, whether it were so or no indeede, and in what manner it were of God himselfe appointed and approved. But if that faile: loe the practise, exercised in the primitive and pure Church. I thinke so indeede, if euer it were appointed and approved by God himselfe at all. But so were the Apostles, Prophetes, Euangelistes, men indued with the graces, of powers, of healings, and of diuerse tongues. Yea, but exercised in the primitive and pure church, vntill the mysterie of iniquitie working a way for Antichristes pride and presumption, chaunged Gods ordinance; and brought in all kinde of false doctrine and confusion.

The bringing in of all kinde of fals doctrine.

Now, who there (Pastors mine,) not so. For then it had bene exercised without interruption euen vntill this day. For all kinde of false doctrine was not brought in, by manie hundred yeares, (after your owne reckoning) that this office or kinde of Gouvernours (if euer there were any such office as you would now erect) was ceased. And Sathan hath all wayes bene sowing netes of false doctrine, and I doubt whether all his kindes of false doctrine be yet brought in, or no.

But if ye said: it was exercised in the primitive and pure Church, vntill till the myserie of iniquitie beganne to worke a way to Antichrists pride and presumption: although neither this be true, for all these foure offices and kindes of ministerie in such manner as you luge them: yet in saying so, you should better limite your selues within the boundes, that you chiefly stande on. But when (trowe you) that myserie of iniquitie beganne to worke. Was it not begunne, when S. Paule, sayde, 2. Thess. 2. 7. The myserie of iniquitie doth already worke? Was it not begunne, when S. Iohn saide, 1. Iohn 2. 18. Nabes, it is the last time: and as ye haue heard that Antichriste shall come, euen now are there manie Antichristes, whereby we knowe that it is the last time? But what inferreth this, (had there bene then such a Seniorie of Governours) that this office should remaine in the Church perpetually? For, in the primitive and pure Church, were the Apostles: must we therefore perpetually haue Apostles? Nay (say they) it was not onely exercised in the primitive Church, which may be called The beginning of the myserie of iniquitie. the time while the Apostles lived: but also in the pure Church, The pure Church. not yet pure I wisse in some pointes, within short while after the Apostles times.

But what time assigne ye to the exercise thereof? Date some time. Vntill the myserie of iniquitie working a way, for Antichrists pride and presumption, changed Gods ordinance. When Gods ordinance was changed. This is an uncertaine limitation. But what is this? Was Gods ordinance changed then, in so necessarie and perpetuall an office? And howe was this office changed? Was it taken cleane away from the Church, so that the Church was altogether without it? It hath had Pastors, Teachers, and Deacons: (such as they were, good or bad) alwayes hetherto, and neuer wanted as yet, vntill this houre. And was this seniorie of Governours appointed to remaine as long as they, and haue al they held out perpetually: and hath onely this Seniorie sayled? But still would I faine knowe, some more certaine ghesse of the time, when this change hapned. For here are neither Archbishops nor Bishops named, but onely these 4. Eccl. offices, Pastors, Doctors, Governours, and Deacons, by which (they say) the Church of God may, (according to his word) be directed in all matters, &c. And was there no exercise of Archbishops nor Bishops in the primitive and pure Church? Or doe they include Archb. and Bishops in anie of these termes, because they are Governours of the Church, and are Pastors, and Teachers, and such as haue bene Deacons too? As S. Ambrose comprehendeth in the name of Bishops (as we shall after ward, God willing, see) all the inferiour Eccl. offices. And our brethren, where they should graunt that all Bishops are Pastors, graunt that all Pastors are Bishops, though their chiefe drift be against our Bishops: but they impugne not onely the office, but the verie name and all of the Archbishops, and make them to be other offices, or kindes of ministerie besides these (that they they say) are appointed and approued of God him selfe, exercised in the primitiue and pure Church: and therefore the instituting and ordaining of them, to be but mens following the deuises of their owne brayne: and to bee, as vnlawfull, so vnneedfull, and the changing of Gods ordinance.

But, if Bishops and Archbishops made this change: then was that ordinance changed, euen in the primitiue and pure Church. For euen then was Titus made an Archbishoppe, and had manie other Bishoppes vnder his gouernement, as we haue saide partly already, for the order in Creete appointed by Saint Paule, whose act was (no doubt) approued by God him selfe, and the Archiepiscopall iurisdiction, exercised by Titus: And was this deuised of Saint Paule or Titus, following the deuises of their owne braines, as a needlesse and vnlawfull thing? as a thing done without, and besides the warrant of Gods worde? And haue we not good warrant from God to institute and ordaine other offices or kindes of ministerie, then these former: So that this conclusion of our brethren: (There remaineth therefore of these before rehearsed, onely in the Church, these Ecclesiasticall offices instituted of God: namely, Pastors, Doctors, Gouernours, and Deacons: by which the Church of God, may (according to his worde) bee directed in all matters, &c.) is nothing so no: so. For heere (ye see) is another office appointed vnder all these offices neither is it vnlawfull nor vnneedfull, no: the institution or ordinance of men, following the deuises of their owne brayne, or without the warrant of Gods worde, or not appointed and approued by God him selfe, or not exercised in the primitiue and pure Church, or anie change of Gods ordinance, or anie working a way to Antichristes pride and presumption, that the Bishoppes and Archbishops were brought in, and that this Tetrarchie was dissolued, if indeede there had bene anie such Quadripartite or foure quartered gouernement. As for the office or kinde of ministerie of Bishoppes or Archbishops, though it be not (in the substance thereof) anie other office or kinde of ministerie, different from the office of Pastor or Teacher: (for notwithstanding it followe not, that euerie Pastor or Teacher bee a Bishoppe, (as our brethren saye,) or an Archbishoppe: yet euerie Bishoppe or Archbishoppe is in his office and kinde of ministerie a Pastor and Teacher) neuerthelesse as hee is their ordainer or ordinarie, as we terme it, and the ouerser euen as well of them, as of the people, according to the diuisions of Regions, Cities, and Townes, distributed and limited to his gouernement: he is in dignitie of an other office and kind of ministerie, different from them.

And shall wee now dare to saye, that this office of Bishoppe or Archbishoppe doeth worke a way to Antichristes pride and presumption?

tion? Say rather, it was the readiest way, to restrain and repress it, if it had bene alwayes kept accordingly: that Bishoppes, in their Cities and Dioceses; Archbishops in their Provinces and Regions distributed and limited vnto them, as Creta was by Saint Paule to Titus (referring to Christian Princes, as their Soueraignes their Supreme gouernement) should (according to Gods worde) direct in their Consistories, Synodes and Councelles, all matters which are commonly called Ecclesiasticall.

This was, and is, (in my iudgement) even the best way, that could be deuised (and I like my iudgement the better, because of this appointment and approbation of Saint Paule) to haue stopped the way to Antichristes pride and presumption. Which way of Saint Paule, when one Archbishoppe afterwarde, vnder a name and pretence of S. Peter, to haue an higher office then all these Bishoppes or Archbishops had, yea, to haue an vniuersall Bishopricke ouer all, and to represent Iesus Christe the head-shep-herde and chiefe Bishoppe of our soules, aboue all other Bishoppes and Archbishops, which were distributed and limited in Regions, Cities and Townes, tooke vpon him, as though hee onely had a supreme and generall office or kinde of ministerie without any limitation of Towne, Citie, or Region, but reaching ouer all the vniuersall Church, yea, ouer all the whole worlde: this breach of these Bishoppes and Archbishops office and ministerie, was the working of the way to Antichristes pride and presumption: and not the institution and ordeyning, nor the distributing & limiting of this Episcopall or Archiepiscopall office or kinde of ministerie. For else, whie might they not as well say, that Christes vniuersall Bishopricke or Archbishopricke, did worke a way to Antichristes pride and presumption, because Antichrist pretendeth, usurpeth & abuseth, that office and kinde of ministerie, which is due and proper onely to Christe?

Christe (1. Pet. 2. vers. 7. & 8.) is called a stone, and the head of the corner, and a stone of offence. If Christe then had not bene the stone: they had not stumbled at him. Say, then; If there were no Christe: there could be no Antichriste. If there had bene no Archbishoppe: the Pope had not bene the Archbishoppe of Rome, nor had wrought the way to his pride and presumption. And so, if there were no vse, there were no abuse of any thing.

Shall we lay therefore the fault on the right or institution, because by indirect means an abuse, or pretence, or usurpation falleth out, or is brought in: what then may not worke the way of what ye will: but if ye marke it well: this argument maketh cleane against you. For, the chiefeest way to Antichristes pride and presumption was, to change, to abbatte, to pull downe, and to encroach vpon the office and ministerie of Bishops, and

The office of Archb. & B. the readiest way to re-presse Anti-christes pride and tyranny

The breach of the Arch. and B. offices & authorities was the readiest way to Antichristes pride and tyranny.

and Archbishops: and therefore the institution and maintenance of them, was one of the greatest impediments, that Antichriste had. And till he brought all their lawfull offices and ministeries vnder his pride and presumption, he could neuer worke that myserie of iniquitie that he hath done.

So long as the Archbishope of Carthage kept him thort in Afrike, and detested his forgeries to eneroch vpon them: and likewise of the other Archbishopricks: he could not worke his myserie of iniquitie among them. Yea, the litle Archbishop of Rauenna vnder his nose, helde him long tackling.

And if this pretended Seniorie of Gouernours, be as directly contrary to the right institution of Bishops and Archbishops, as Antichristes myserie of iniquitie and his intollerable pride and presumption is: then, either is this institution of Bishops and Archbishops in medio, and either of them ab extremo in extremum, as the mediocritie of Justice betwene maximum and minimum: or else, this Seniorie of Gouernours is nearer this myserie of iniquitie, to worke the way to Antichristes pride and presumption. For, let the Bishops and Archbishops holde intierly their institution: and they may better keepe out Antichristes pride and presumption, then can these Seniors: who may more easily giue occasion to the setting vp a 1000. petite-Antichristes full of pride and presumption too: then be able to pull downe or to restraine, the pride and presumption of that one great Antichriste.

The Archb. office a better stop against anti-christ, then these Te-trarks.

The euil of officers & not the office of Archb. & B. brought in false doctrine.

Neither hath the office of Bishop or Archbishop, brought in all kind of false doctrine, or anie one kinde, except indirectly by the officers, not by the office. And so not onely Nestorius, and some few others that were Arch-bishops, but a number mo, as Arius, Pelagius, Eutiches, &c. that were Presbyters, Priestes, or Elders and Doctors, brought in false doctrine. Yea, Nicholas also (as it is saide) one of the first 7. Deacons. And should anie rightly thereupon charge these offices, to bring in false doctrine, because some such officers did bring it in? There was false doctrine brought in, in the primitive Church: and shall we burden the primitive Church therewith? Thus indeede doe the Papistes burden both vs and our brethren: and so here our brethren burden vs. And shall we thus burden them againe? For, (set aside all partialitie) who may not easily see, that this Eccl. kinde of government which they so much desire (which the Gouernours are not learned men) would of the twaine giue readier occasion, then our government established, not onely to more helpe deuises of their owne braines, concerning government: but also, if any new kinde of false doctrine arise, to maintaine the same, and to make more factions about it, notwithstanding all the assistance of their lesser and greater Synodes.

Yea, would to God all kind of doctrine brought in by our brethren, by occasion of these their controuersies for the alteration of gouernement, were so true and sound, as I wish it were: which as occasion (God willing) shall serue I will further declare: hoping yet that with some gentle constructions (whereof I would be right glad) all may be construed to the best: and that perceiving their errors, they will say with Augustine rare possum, Hæreticus esse nolo. I maie hap to erre: I purpose not to bee an Heretike, that is, obstinately to maintaine an errour. But whereas they saie, all kinde of false doctrine and confusion, howsoeuer they may escape either all or some kind of false doctrine: this desired gouernment is a great deale more prone to confusion, than is the gouernement established.

Now after these defacings of the offices and ministry in the gouernment established amongst vs: they recommend their desired gouernment of this Tetrarchie vnto vs, saying: And now againe, restored in a rightly reformed Churches, with such daily encrease and glorie of the kingdom of Christ, and suppression of the kingdom of Anti-Christe, that the onely experience heereof, might be a sufficient perswasion to vs to leaue this disordered state of ours, wherein wee haue so long laboured, with so little profit: and to embrace that moste bewtifull order of Ecclesiastical regiment, which God so manifestlie doth blesse & prosper in our neighbours handes.

The Tetraschy commended.

Whether that Ecclesiasticall Gouernment which was exercised in the Primitive and pure Church, be now againe restored: or some other (in some points perhaps) like to that, may make a quæri potest, and require a further view. But whether it be restored in all rightly reformed Churches, so that, all reformed Churches are not rightly reformed, but wholly reformed, and so not reformed, but deformed: as hauing diuined out one Diuine by another, and remoued one deformity, and established another: that, might growe to more than to a question: Yea, to an open slander not onely of vs, but of many true Christian and godly reformed Churches, besides ours.

The restoring Ecclesiastical gouernment in the reformed Churches.

What daily encrease it maketh among our neighbours (where they say this is restored) of the kingdom of Christ, and how it setteth forth his glory, more then other reformed churches do: and howe it more suppresseth the tyrannie of Sathan: these things are caried away so smoothly and so solemnely abowed, (as though all were Gospel) that not only wee must not denie it, but beleene it: nor onely peelee vnto it (as moste true) but be moued with such emulation of it, that the onely experience might be a sufficient perswasion to vs to leaue this disordered state of ours, wherein wee haue so long laboured with so little profit, and to embrace that moste bewtifull order of Ecclesiastical regiment, which God so manifestlie good bone that he had alreadie in his mouth, and to leape into the water, after the shadowe of another. I praise GOD our bzethzen allure vs not with the like bayte of some faire shadow, to leaue the good state wee haue of gouernment established.

They entice vs heere with marvelous goodlie thinges, as right reformation, daily encrease and glory of the kingdome of Christ: they will vs to embrace that moste bewtifull order of Ecclesiasticall regiment, which God so manifestlie doth blesse and prosper in our neighboures handes. This beawtie were inough to enamoure a man: this prosperitie and blessing to set his teeth an edge, and to enflambe the harte of any zealous, and godly meaning man, in the spiritual loue of God, for the en-crease and glory of his kingdome, and the desire to haue him blesse and prosper our estate.

But, is all this true in our neighbours, and is our owne state so dis-ordred, and so laboursome with so little profit? For, otherwise, as our bzethzen in their Preface, likened our Prelates and ministers, to foxes and litle foxes: so I remember, that once I reade a tale of a Foxe that had lost his taile, and because other had tayles, and hee had none: he went about to perswade all his bzethzen, to leaue their tayles, for they were but an vnnecessary clogge and hinderance vnto them, trayling in the myze: which if it were away, how light and nimble should they bee. And for example to perswade them the better, he shewed them the experience (not in his neighbour) but in him-selfe. But one that knewe before on what necessity he had lost it: cried out vnto him, Brother Foxe, brother Foxe, leaue your faire perswasion. You haue lost your owne, and therefore you would haue vs to leaue ours to beare you company. But, what do ye tel vs heere (will our bzethzen say) a foolish flim flam tale of a foxe taile, to dallie out so waighty and so holie a matter: while we are earnest in perswading to leaue this disordered state of ours, wherein we haue so long laboured with so little profit, and to embrace that moste bewtiful order of Ecclesiasticall regiment, which God so manifestly doeth blesse and prosper in our neighbours handes. Indeed bzethzen if this were as true, as you heere go about to perswade it: I would yeld gladly, and be soone perswaded. But if this be the mere following the deuises of your own braine, and nothing so, neither in vs, nor in our neighbours, as you would perswade vs: why may not a fained fable applyed to truth, aunswere a signed perswasion, grounded on falsehood: If yee bee so perswaded your selues, and thinke as ye say: it may bee, ye thinke so. Fortis imaginatio in a mans owne brayne may worke wonders: but to perswade another by anothers example, & by such an example, as is neither necessary, nor fitte, nor sufficient, nor true: I may well shake off this sonde perswasion, neither comparing our brethren to Dogs or Foxes (as they in bitterness compare vs though I may chauce get a flappe with a Foxe tayle, (if not worse) for my labour.

But I pray you brethren, doe yee meane indeede good earnestte as yee say, when ye tell vs, that the order of Ecclesiasticall Government in the Primitiue Church is restored? for if it bee: then haue wee newe Apostles, Prophetes, Euangelistes, &c. come againe. Yea, but (say you) those offices were temporall and are expyred: and therefore, are not to bee restored. Yea, but (say I) they were the chiefest offices, then, when the order of the Ecclesiasticall government in the Primitiue Church was most bewtifull: and therefore, if they bee not restored, in whome the bewtie most consisten: then that state of Ecclesiasticall regiment, yea, the most bewtifull state thereof, is not, nor is to be restored. Yea, but (say you) we restraine moste bewtifull, to the Offices that were perpetuall & to remaine for euer. Yea, but (say I) how proue yee then your Seniors Governours, to be such, and to haue more privilege of perpetuity, the those better, higher, and more bewtifull offices had? and if they were to remaine for euer, why did they not so for euer remaine, but rather, for euer till now of late, so ceased to be in the Church, expired, and had no place: that they are now at length, even at the laste case of the worlde to be restored? If ye say the truth of the Gospell was hidden also, and the true professors of it: I graunt, it was so, and yet it was alwayes, and remaind still for euer, and wee can fetch and bring forth, (against the Gospels and our common aduersaries) witnesses more or fewer, yet some in all ages. And the like also, we can doe for Pastors, teachers, and Deacons, good and bad, in all ages, since the first institution of them. And can you (brethren) do the like for this your pretended governing and not teaching Seniors? if ye can, plead perpetuities: if ye cannot (admitting that it once had bene) why craike ye of in others, or seeke among vs, the restoring of that, which so many hundreth yeares, hath utterly ceased to be in the Church, is expired and hath had no place? Ceased (say you) de facto, but not de iure. Proue you iure, and wee will quicklie let fall our plea de facto.

But till you can fynde either the righte, or the practise of them: or if they were once, where they haue bene hidden or banished at this whyle: Or if they dyed and were buried, till with the gifte of

of working wonders, ye shall revine and so restore them: what say you to those offices, that were then also, even when Apostles, Prophetes, and Euangelists, &c. were alive, and were ordeyned of the Apostles, and were offices distinguished in dignity from Pastors and Teachers, from Deacons or any other governing Seniors, having authority over them, in the cities or regions limited unto them: and these offices have continued ever since. If now therefore, the regiment of the Primitiue church be rightly reformed to the originall beawtie, then muste Bishops, and Arch-bishops stande, (for they stood then,) what difference soeuer our brethren finde of standing now. And yet finde what difference they can, they shal finde, that if those Seniors (imagining there were such as they pretende) be restored: both all they, and the Doctors, and Pastors, and Deacons, and all other Ecclesiasticall officers, are al to be vnder the Ecclesiasticall government of Bishops and Arch-bishops. And if they stand not thus: to displace the superiour and y^e old standard, to restore an inferiour, and to set vp a new revined, fresh and young Senior: would so greatly blemish the bewtifull order of this supposed Ecclesiasticall regiment, that as it is said, at the second building of the Temple. Ezra. cap. 3. ver. 12. that many of the Priestres and Leuites and the chiefe of the Fathers, ancient men, which had seene the firste house, when the foundation of this house was laid, went with a loude voice: So those that marke the bewtifull order of the Ecclesiasticall regiment in the Primitiue and pure Church indede: and the most bewtifull order of the Ecclesiasticall regiment, that our brethren say, the church is now restored vnto, (or rather vnder a name of restoring, is not restored at all,) in those things for whiche they so contend, that they rather hinder the course of the Gospell, and decrease, not encrease the kingdome of Christe, deface his glorye, make his Church euilt spoken of, rende the vnitie thereof, bzeake the brooked reede, and quenche the smoaking flaxe, and yet set all the house on fire, and call this right reforming, and restoring. It would be so little moue any that seriouslye considereth it, to embrace the state and order thereof, as most bewtifull: that if he did not detest it (with the common aduersaries) as most deformed: yet, loved he neuer so well the church, yea, the more he loved it, it would make his eyes, (not for loy, but for græse of the sight) to water their plants, and his hearte throbbe, yea, blæde, to behold now the moste bewtifull byrde of Iesus Christe, howe her beawtie is bled, howe her ornaments are spoyle, howe her bodye is haled, and almoste euen pulled in peeces: what by her aduersaries, what by our brethren her owne children, and all vnder pretence of reforming and restoring her: all is peace and encrease, and glorie, and embracing, and bewtifull, and blessed, and prospered, for the order, and state of the Church with them: and wee that are the Church

Well, yet thanks be to God, if our state haue such ill lucke: that our neighbours haue better, and that this moste bewtifull regiment of the Church is restored, at least among our neighbours. Our neighbours? This is a good hearing, Aliquid bonum propter vicinum bonum: And if they be so neare vs, let vs knowe them, that we may receaue some neighborlie comfort and refreshing by them.

The state of our neighbors.

Who are these our neighbors, where this state thus happily is restored? Do ye aske: who they are? Euen all the Churches that are rightlie restored: say, for Gods sake (my Maisters) say not so: for then, name me almost anie one reformed Church, that in one point or other, of order offices, discipline, rites and ceremonies, differeth not one from another. And which then among all these, are these our neighbours, which haue restored that regiment, and are rightlie reformed? The Scottish reformed Churches are our nearest neighbours: but in their gouernment and orders, and making officers, and administration of Sacramentes, and booke of common Prayers, all one with these our Learned discourfers? and with the booke of common Prayers by our brethren now lastlie set forth? Or rather, is there not, euen in the booke of common Prayer, by them selues compiled, betwene the written booke, and that, that is printed at Middleborough, and that at London, and that at Scotland, aboue a hundred, yea, 200. yea, 300. differences one from an other: and all in a booke little bigger then an Almanack, but a matter, wherein shoulde be greatest agreement of vniiformity? say, doe our brethren here at home agree among them selues in these matters of reformation? Or if all bee now agreed, may we set downe our rest vpon it, and resolue our selues, that these Learned discourfers haue here restored, the onely, very, true, whole perfect, and right reformation of that moste bewtifull order of Ecclesiasticall regiment, that was appointed and approoued by God himselfe, exercised in the Primitiue and pure Church, instituted and ordained to continue for euer? Or my Maisters, take heede what yee saye, least hereafter ye say, had I wist. We knowe whose saying that is.

No reformed Churches but in some points of gouernment differ one from another.

Differences eue in their booke of common prayer.

Well, well: (will perhaps our brethren saye) some of our neighbors haue it: wee name none, leasse yee shoulde say, wee pzeiudice any good neighbour of ours, as hauing not rightlie reformed their Churches. For, though in all points, that most bewtifull order of Ecclesiasticall regiment be not restored: yet is their state farre better than the disordered state of ours, wherein we haue so long laboured with so little profite, and contrariwise which GOD so many wayes doth blesse and prosper in our neighbours handes, (that if not the most) yet the bewtifull order of Ecclesiasticall Regiment whiche they haue: yea, the onelie experience of the daily encrease and glorie of the kingdome of Christe, and suppression of the tyrannie of Sathan, might be a sufficient perswasion for vs.

Our neighbours experience no necessary pa-terne to vs.

Experientia est Magistra stultorum, as our brethren themselves doe after wards pag. xlvij. tell vs. When the Asse that caried Salte, falling downe in the water, and his salte melting awaile, gat vp agayne discharged of his burden: His fellowe Asse being laden with sponges, sawe that, and hee fell downe likewise in the water, to trie the like experience. But his sponges kept him downe, his experience drowned him. Non omnia conueniunt omnibus. Experience is not alwayes good vpon examples. Legibus non exemplis inducitur. Had our neighbours restored it in verie deepe: yet are not wee bounde to followe their example. No, not the example of the Primitive Church it selfe, and much lesse those that followe their example. For, wee seeke not now what we may doe, or what might bee a sufficient perswasion vnto vs, if we would: but whether by any lawe or commaundement of Christe, or anye of his Apostles, wee be tied and bounde thereto, yea or no. This is the very point that wee demur vpon.

The demur
of this question.

If God haue so prosperously blessed them, that would or haue happilie imitated, that supposed old order of Ecclesiasticall Regiment: God be blessed for it. We reioyce of it, and congratulate with them, which soeuer of our neighbours they be. But neither they, nor their imitation, prescribe vnto vs, nor their experience would fitte vs. Diuerse sorte haue diuerse lastes. The shewe that will serue one, may wounding another. Neither yet is our state inferiour to theirs, or lesse blessed and prospered of the Lord, nor hath had lesse encrease & glory of the Lords kingdome, nor is lesse bewtiful: if we looke not with an euill eye, and a male-contented minde on our owne state (as he saith)

Wee have great cause highly to magnifie God, for the wonderfull and gracious works, he hath wrought for vs, aboue all our neighbours round about vs: yea, aboue all the particuler Churches nere or farre dispersed in the world at this day, euen in this estate of Ecclesiasticall Governement established.

And all our neighbours, where GOD hath any Church neuer so muche reformed, doe (I hope) reioyce together with vs therefore: yea, not the beste of them, but (bee it spoken to the glorie of God, and without upbraiding to others) haue found no small comfortable benefite at our handes, and doe all most thankfully reacknowledge the same, without condemning, reprobating, or grudging at our state of Ecclesiasticall governement established, what other kinde of reformation soeuer in their Ecclesiasticall Governement they bee directed by: Onelie we our selues murmur and grudge, condemne and slander, both among our selues, and to all our neighbours, our owne state, which is so euill, that woulde God (were it according to his acceptable good pleasure) the kingdome and glory of Christe, and the suppression of Sathan and Antichriste (though I had rather wish it did no lesse) did but halfe as faste encrease and prosper, then (God bee glorified for it) in our state it doeth. And yet God graunt both in ours and in our neighbours states, and all other parts of Gods true Church, (according as we al say in the Lordes Prayer, Thy kingdome come) these blessings of God, may daily more and more encrease and prosper. And so by Gods grace it shoulde still doe better and better (Maugre Sathan and Antichriste) if our owne brethren would not hinder vs: and all reformed Churches shoulde doe well enough, notwithstanding we differ from them, and they from vs: Yea, though both of vs differ from the state of the Primitive and pure Church, not in truthe of Faith, and vnitie of Doctrine: But in matter, or manner of Orders, Offices, Rites and Ceremonies, concerning Ecclesiasticall regiment, so farre as they are not prescribed by any perpetuall rule, other then for the time and state, or for order and comeliness.

For, the difference of these thinges is not directly materiall to saluation, neither ought to breake the bonde of peace and Chyrstian con corde: But they may thinke and wishe well to vs, and wee in the name of the Lord, thinke well, and wishe good lucke to them. Yea, to wishe, that they had no better state then we haue, on condition they had no worse, and might alwayes haue as good: I thinke all our neighbours reformed Churches woulde bee soone entreated to say, A M E N. For in what hard case (God help them) good neighbours they be, their selues feele or feare it daily: and we heare of it, and cease not daily to pray for them, and, as we may, put to our helping hands vnto them.

Pea, our brethren their selues (vpon better aduise ment since) in their last supplication made to her gracions Maiellie: & to the high Court of Parliament, assembled 1587. pag. 8. do confesse it, saying: The Churches of God rounde about vs, goe to wracke, in Fraunce, Belgia, and a great part of highe Dutche. I woulde Scotland had continued in her first loie, and that the hands of the builders were strengthened among you.

Our brethren
are disordered speeches of our disordered
state.

But in conclusion, neither their state or ours (howsoeuer they stande) are bound to any perpetuall forme of all the orders and offices, of Ecclesiasticall regiment. Theirs may perhaps be better for them, their assisted state standing as it doth: ours (all things in our established state of Government considered) is best for vs. Away therefore (good brethren) with these disordered tearmes, This disordered state of ours: for they are not speeches, becomming thankfull and faithfull ministers to God, nor louing and obedient subiects to our Prince and Superiours, so disorderlie cast forth on the state of Eccle. regiment. Which toucheth not onely Eccle. persons against whome perhaps our brethren will make no scruple of conscience, though their mouthes runne ouer, be they neuer so much their brethren, their Pastors, their betters, their superiours, their Bish, or Arch. to whome their selues peraduenture haue swoyne Canonicam obedientiam. But these disordered speeches of theirs, touch the Magistrate: yea their Soueraigne very nere, and therefore they are not onely disordered, but dangerous speeches.

braiding of our labors.

Neither ought our brethren to vbraide our labours, vnto vs, that we haue so long laboured with so little profit, to discourage the painefull laborer in the Lords vine-yard, and to make our handes weake, because our worke prospereth not so fast in our hands, as we would wishe it did: And yet it prospereth (God be pray sed) with more profit, then either we see, or our brethren like. But profit, or not profit, let vs still labour, and (thanks be to God) then we labour. All are not so idle loyters, as afterwarde, our brethren complaine wee labour not: and here they finde fault with our labours. But labour we, or loyter we, they must still labour in finding fault, or else they should loyter, for lack of matter in discoursing. But howsoeuer they esteeme of our labours: the Laborer (saith the Lord Luc. 10.) is worthe his reward. And as their selues afterwarde do note out of S. Paule, 1. Timoth. The elders that rule well, are worthe double honor, especially they which labour in the worde and doctrine. But they tell vs, that sentence maketh for their governing and not teaching elders: whether it doth so or no: we shall (God willing) at large examine, on their allegation of the same. but admitting it had included any such Elders at that time: were their labours to be honoured that ruled well among them, (and yet perhaps with as little profit)? And is the laborer in the

the word and doctrine to be despised, and his labour to be left, because we haue so long laboured with so little profit? But for all this discouragement of our brethren, let vs not be weary of well-dooing, and commit the euent & profit to the Lorde, and hearken rather to the Apostles exhortation, 1. Cor. 16. Therefore my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, abounding alwayes in the worke of the Lorde: forasmuch as ye know, that your labour is not in vaine in the lorde. And this is our comfort, against this perswasion of our brethren, to leaue that state of ours, wherein we haue so long laboured with so little profit. And yet we hope, we haue not all bene vnprofitable labourers: saue in respect of merite towards God, wee confesse inderde (as Christ willeth vs to acknowledge our selues) That when wee haue done all we are able to do, we are but vnprofitable seruantes: but not in all respectes vnprofitable. But if our so long labour haue had the lesse profit, to our more greefe: why do not our brethren, looke rather to the cause and hinderance of it? for perhaps, it is not so much of the laborer, as of the aduersaries that haue resisted vs. And haue we not aduersaries now, of Sathan, of Antichriste, of his ministers, of the vnthankfull world, &c. but that our owne brethren wilbe euen almost as bitter against vs, as the world? If therefore we haue so long laboured with so little profit: lay the fault where it is. Remoue the impediment, and then (God before) let vs say with Peter, Luc. 5. 5. Though I haue laboured all night long, and haue taken nothing: neuerthelesse (Lord) at thy worde I will cast forth the net. And then (no doubt) God will blesse our labours with more profit. And if our brethren when we becken to them, will come and helpe vs, we shall enclose such a multitude of fishes, that our nettes shall bee full. And if our nettes breake, let vs mende them againe vnioumely together. And then our state shall bee (if it bee not,) as beawtifull, and farre more beawtifull, (I do not doubt it,) then anie of all our neighbours is.

Our efforts of our labours.

The cause of our labours hinderance.

to gaine a good name

But God blesse our neighbours, and make vs more thankfull, and lesse contentious and new-fangled then we be: and not onely more obedient to our Ciuill Christian Magistrates, but more reuerent to the Ecclesiasticall gouernours, as the Apostle, Heb. 13. 7. &c. giveth vs good counsell. Remember them which haue the ouersight of you, whiche haue declared vnto you the worde of God, whose faith followe, considering what hath bene the ende of their conuersation. Iesus Christ yesterdays and to daye, the same also is for euer. Be not caried about, with diuerse and straunge doctrines. And in the 17. verse, Obeie them that haue the ouersight of you, for they watche for your soules, as they that must geue accounts, that they may do it with ioy, and not with griefe: for that is vnprofitable for you. And if there bee any disorder in doing this their duty, the fault being personall, the state is not to be defaced as disordered, but the faults redressed, and the state stand.

But where the inferiours will presume to disobey, yea, to alter the state of their Superiours, and to set vp them-selues: will not onely set out the Bishops and Archbishops, but the supream authority of their Soueraigne too: If this should be suffered, the state would then indeed become a most disordered state. And would worke a worse waie to Antichrists pride and presumption, bringing in manie straunge kinds of false doctrine and confusion, and breede a greater mysterie of iniquitie: while every particuler congregation or seniorie among them, may thus following the deuises of their owne braine, and pretending vpon a bare fact, or order, or office, that they finde mentioned in the scriptures (though perhaps cleane other wise then they take it) inioyce a warrant of Gods worde for them to followe: Yea, to thinke the onely experience of any of their neighbours successe, in imitation of the like, a sufficient perswasion for them, to leaue the state vnder which they liue, and consummately lie to reuile it. for a disordered state, and to preiudice and alter the gouernement established, and to bring in a new Quaternion of Gouernours, by whome onely all matters maye bee directed, which are commonly called Ecclesiasticall, without any other superiour oversight or gouernment of Bish. or Arch. or any supream authority of the Prince, to be admitted among them.

O brethren, marke the mysterie of these deuises more aduisedlie, and (I thinke) you will saye (at least wise yee may saye,) that if our state were disordered: these things would not bring it into better order, but set it quite out of all order, and hazarde the cleane overthrow of the whole state. If the are were gone, is this the remedy, to hurle the helue after it? howbeit our brethren here, if the helue be not missing, but not orderlie set on, would cast both helue, and axe, and all away.

Now, least we might perhaps mistake our brethrens wordes, and be might be suspected to slander them, in saying they woulde cleane exclude with the Bishops and Arch-bishops superiour authoritye, the supream authority of the Christian Prince, (and so of her Maiestie) from the direction of all Ecclesiasticall matters: albeit their wordes aforesaid are plain enough, yet this their resolute conclusion, in these wordes make it manifest.

Our brethrens conclusion cleane excludeth the Prince, and geueth the direction of al Ecclesiasticall matters, to their 4. Tetrarches.

There remaineth therefore, of these before rehearsed, onelie in the Church, these Ecclesiasticall offices instituted by God: namelie, Pastors, Doctors, Gouernours, and Deacons: by which the church of God may, according to his worde, be directed in al matters, which are commonly called Ecclesiasticall.

Here is the conclusion of this Tetrarchie: the Prince is not at all mentioned, but cleane excluded from the direction of all Ecclesiasticall matters, and the direction committed to these 4. onely, which particuler onely, beareth estates both the Prince, and all other besides these 4. Yet because among these 4. estates, this word Governours might carpe such a generall sense, as that they might seeme not to exclude, but to include the Prince: to shew therefore their meaning the plainer, that they intend not to include the Prince at all, in the Quadrant of these 4. kinds & estates of personages, under the ambiguous name of Governours, our brethren procede, saying,

But while wee speake of Ecclesiasticall gouernement, it may be thought of some, that we shoulde intreate first of the supream authority of Christian Princes: where upon it seemeth, that all the regiment of the church dependeth, which is such a myste to dazle the eyes of ignorant persons, that they think all things in the Ecclesiast. state, ought to be disposed by that onely high authority and absolute power of the ciuill Magistrate.

In these wordes our brethren fore-saying, that some iuste offence might arise hereon, that professing a Learned discourse: and hauing belste thus farre in the Gouernement of Ecclesiasticall matters, and quartered the same into these 4. Tetrarks, Pastors, Doctors, Governours, and Deacons: and that all Ecclesiasticall matters are to be directed only by these 4. the Christian Prince (as, God bee praised, is amongst and ouer all his her most excellent Maiestie) is not onely all this while not mentioned, but excluded: and so excluded, that whether her Maiesties estate be preiudiced hereby, is not so much as called first in question: and the Princes authority being first debated and resolued vpon, then to haue proceeded to the limiting and deciding of these Tetrarks, seuerall or conioyned Gouernement: Therefore our brethren thinke it nowe belike highe time to mitigate this offence, and to prevent this obiection. And indeede (brethren) it is a good obiection, and a point very necessary to haue bene firste, if not decided, yet treated on and better considered, or if not firste of all (albeit in good right) even first of all in this matter of Ecclesiasticall gouernement) yet at least, or euer yee had proceeded thus farre in the treating, determining, and giuing full and onelic authority, to all and euery of these 4. Tetrarks.

The obiection why the treatise of the Christian princes supremacy is not first considered.

For, yee can not pleade ignorance, that yee thought not thereon before nowe: That yee were called to a suddaine and tumultuous reasoning, where the fynest witte, the beste memorye, the moste filed speeche, shall carrie awaye the truth: at leaste, maruelouslye moue the vngrounded hearers: (as in your Preface yee complained.) For, euen there, yee fore-saw that it woulde be objected, and among other thinges yee mentioned that obiection, saying: If anye shall object &c. that it shall be preiudiciall to the estate of Gouernement established: And doe yee nowe vpon mature deliberation, hauing proceeded to set forth, A Learned discourse of Ecclesiasticall gouernement, and hauing entred into it, laide your principles, and distributed all the parts and persons that must be Gouvernours of it: (as though ye be thought your selues), come dropping in with this obiection, saying: But while we speake of Ecclesiasticall gouernement? As who would say: Good Lorde, howe haue wee forgotten our selues. Welles speaks of Government, and haue treated nothing of the Prince, which is the supreme Governour. Wel, while it is in memory, and while we are speaking of it, let vs say something to that obiection, that our selues partlie haue already moued, and it is most likelie wilbe by other obiection. let vs therefore answer before hand to that obiection, while we speake of Ecclesiasticall gouernement.

And it may bee, when yee wrote this, that yee thought on some such like matter. Notwithstanding, this is but my coniecture, peraduenture yea, peraduenture nay: but I take it, this is not the worst construction. Howbeit to say, while yee are speaking of it, and haue already given your resolute sentence on the matter, who haue the only gouernment: it may be thought your obiection and your answer thereunto, cometh verie tardie, to helpe the Princes title. Except ye will renoue, or suspende your definitive sentence, or except yee haue some further warrant, from the experience of their example, that (they say) haue a custome, first to giue iudgement, and put it in execution, and then to enquire whether the party were guilty, yea or no. But Hysseron, Proteron, former or later, let it come in question, now a Gods name: that wee may see, what is left to the Prince, and whether the Princes supreme gouernement be any whit preiudiced, by this conclusion already passed, for the direction of all Ecclesiasticall matters, to bee made onely by these foresaid Tetrarcks.

The Captio
of these wordes, Ec-clesiast. governement.

But while we speake (say they) of Ecclesiasticall Gouernement. Forsofte (my good and learned discoursing brethren) since yee haue staied to speake heereof, al this while: let mee craue pardon for a few wordes to stay your speech heereon a little while more. I pray you, what mean yee by this tearme heere, Ecclesiasticall gouernement? And a threelime before, yee called it also, Ecclesiasticall regiment. For, there maie be a great captio in these speeches, which our common aduersaries use against vs, in all their writings and immedieties, concerning the Princes Supremacie. And therefore, you bearing her Maiesties true subiectes, and dissenting from the Papistes errours: I am lothe to haue you either entangle your selues or vs, with their captious and slanderous tearmes, which not onely darken the matter, but touche her Maiesties honour, and slander her Royall person, and right of her cheefest office very neare: be it, you do it (I dare say it for you) of an ouerhott zeale, and not of blinde malice, as they do.

They slander her Maiestie to take vpon her an Ecclesiasticall regl-ment or government, as though she tooke vpon her, to be an Ecclesiasticall person, or to exercise a function or office Ecclesiasticall: and to do the actions that appertaine to the Regiment Ecclesiasticall. This is a manifest sleaunders of her Maiestie, who neither exerciseth nor clay-meth anie such Ecclesiasticall Gouvernement, nor the statute nameth or intendeth any such Ecclesiasticall Government of her Maiestie, but onelic that her Maiestie hath the Supream Gouvernement ouer all persons Ecclesiasticall: and is the Supream Gouvernour of them in all Ecclesiasticall causes, to ouersie and gouerne the right direction of al the persons and causes Ecclesiasticall. So that, where the direction of the consultation, and synding out the causes, the execution and gouerne-ment of the actions, belongeth to the persons: the Supream government and direction of the causes is hee authorized, and the actions by the persons to be put in due execution, principally pertaine to her Maiestie.

And if ye thinke otherwise of her Maiesties, (not Ecclesiasticall Go-uernment, but) supream Government, in or ouer Ecclesiasticall persons & causes: ye do greatly mistake it. And this may serue also for your third Tetrarke, who ye cal Gouvernours, to whome ye attribute an Ecclesiasticall Gouvernement. Except ye intend by the word Eccl. anie manner of wayes pertainyng to the Church. And thus, the widdowes of whome the Apostle speaketh 1. Tim. 5. 9. Had Eccl. offices also, by which reckoning weomen with you, might be Ecclesiasticall persons, and haue an Eccl. government in the church.

And so your Ecclesiasticall Gouvernours, are notwithstanding popular and plebeian persons, which commonly are called the laye people they say: The Friday after, iudgement is taken, what persons are elected for elders and Deacons to serue for that yeere: It shoulde seme they account them not properly Ecclesiasticall persons, but rather lyke our Syde-men or Church-wardens. But howsoeuer yee confound these tearmes in these your Gouvernours, it is not good confounding them in the Prince. And yee see that great captions, sleaunders, and cauils, may arise vpon such great personages, by such intricate and doubtfull tearmes. Non bene definit, qui non bene diuidit. Speake distinctlye and called Ecclesiasticall: ye incurre the common aduersaries flaunder of her Maiestie, although (I trust) vnwittingly, and therefore will not (I hope) vnwillingly reclaime your error. If ye meane by Ecclesiasticall Government, her Maiesties Gouvernement, in or ouer Ecclesiasticall matters or causes: we admit your sense: and now procede on concerning the obiection and your answer.

Good reason that al Protestants should think that the Princes supremacie should bee first treated
on.

It may be thought of some, that wee shoulde intreate first, of the Supream authority of Christian Princes.

And good reason to, (as I take it) if you will needes take vpon you (by what warrant or licence thereto, I doe not knowe) to intermeddle in matters of state and Gouvernement. Whether there were any thought the contrarie (as I hope there are not many amongst vs Protestants) come you in, saying: It maye bee thought of some? as though you misliked, that anie shoulde so thinke; or thought not your selues, that manye amongst vs thought not so. But go to, some were perhaps of such a straunge opinion: and what (I praye you) is the opinion?

That we should first intreate of the supream authoritye of Christian Princes.

Christian princes haue
a supream authority in
matters.

Here againe I craue yet another interruption for my learning of so Learned discourfers. Doe yee here afforde Christian Princes the title of Supream authority, by way of supposition; As, whether they haue anye Supream authority in Ecclesiasticall matters, or no, let that fall out in the Treatie, as it shall? or by way of assertion; acknowledging a Supream authoritye in them? For, your wordes seeme rather to carrie, that they haue a Supream authoritie: Howbeit, not to be first treated vpon: and so likewise do your wordes in the next page, saying:

But of the Supream authority of Christian Princes in Ecclesiasticall causes, how farre it extendeth by the worde of God, we shall haue better occasion to intreate heereafter, when we shall haue described the Ecclesiasticall state.

So then, Christian Princes haue supream authority in Ecclesiasticall causes, by your owne assertion. But, how now both this agree with your former conclusion? There remaineth therefore of these before rehearsed onlie in the Church these Ecclesiasticall offices, instituted of GOD namely, Pastors, Doctors, Gouvernours, and Deacons: By which the Church of God may, according to his worde bee directed, in all matters which are commonly called Ecclesiasticall. If Christian Princes haue supream government in Ecclesiasticall causes: howe are all Ecclesiasticall matters, or causes directed onelye by these Tetrarcks.

Shall the Prince be one of these foure, and bee included in the company of the Gouvernours? No, these gouernours are such Elders as are chosent out of the people. How shall we reconcile these sayings then? well enough, (say they). For, these 4. are the onely Ecclesiasticall officers: now we name not the Christian Prince an Ecclesiasticall officer, but the supreme governour.

This is very well reconciled indeede, for that point: saue that it falleth out hardlie in an other, that still the Lay people are made persons Ecclesiasticall. But what answereth this the pointe in hande? For, if the Christian Princes haue the supreme government in Ecclesiasticall matters or causes: then, none of all these fowre officers or offices, (call them Ecclesiasticall or what yee will,) neither diuifim, nor coniunctim, haue the onelic direction of all Ecclesiasticall matters or causes. For, the Christian Princes haue here some direction; Nay, the chiefe and supreme direction in them. Except yee finde out yet, some other quicke betwene matters and causes: or, betwene directing and governing. But, as beere, Ecclesiasticall matters, and Ecclesiasticall causes, are taken indifferentlie: so, for directing and governing, I goe plainely and simply to worke. He that directeth, he governeth, and he that governeth he directeth.

The Christian Prince therefore, being (as our brethren graunt) the supreme governour in Ecclesiasticall causes, is also the supreme director in Ecclesiasticall matters.

But if now they stoppe on this point, and will distinguish between direction and government: and they (that is to saie) these 4. officers, will direct all the matters, and the Prince must governe them, according onlie, to their direction: who are indeede the Governours then? The Prince or they; when he must governe, (nay, say rather; when hee must obey) according to their direction? For, they vnderstande by directing, not their counseling, or shewing their iudgements and aduise: and such direction, (we freely graunt) belongeth vnto them. But by directing, they meane, setting downe order, prescribing, commanding, decreeing, and determining: and what is this else, but governing? Who hath now the more supreme government in Ecclesiasticall matters, the Prince? or these fowre estates? But the Prince (by their owne confessions) is the supreme governour in Ecclesiasticall matters, and not they: except our brethren giue the prince this title, onely for a shew, and keepe the matters to them-selues. For, so the Pope calleth the Emperour, Emperour of Roome, and yet yet can hee haue no more roome in Rome, then it pleaseth the Pope to permit vnto him, who indeede hath all the Empire and government of Rome. Now if these our learned discoursing brethren graunt christian princes this title, to be the supreme governour in Ecclesi. matters, in such a fashion: that

If the prince

then must
our brethren

blished.

But if they trulie acknowledge the Christian Prince to beare the chiefest stroke among them, in directing, prescribing, decreeing, confirming, forbidding, and commaunding Ecclesiasticall matters: then is the Prince indeede, the supreme governour in them, and not they. But then, stoop gallant, All these iiii. estates, which (as they said befoze) must beare such sway, that all Ecclesiasticall matters, maie be directed by them, and by them onlie, are topsie turvie ouertourned. What may the Christian Prince by them, (though not by them onely) bee directed by waye of counsell and information: but when all is done, hee is still the Supreme Governour, and all they must bee chiefly directed and governed by the Christian Prince: in all such Ecclesiasticall matters, and causes, as are amongst them to be established.

With therefore our Learned discourfers haue graunted this, whypee they not without further discoursing on the matter, to her Maiesties supreme gouvernement, that hath confirmed by her Supreme authoritye, the decision of these Ecclesiasticall causes, and controuersies long agoe, and maintayneth the Ecclesiasticall gouernement now established?

And if now Christian Princes haue supreme authority in Ecclesiasticall causes: while these our Learned brethren discourfers take on them, not to speake onelie, but to set downe directions of Ecclesiasticall gouernement: maye not some thinke, (nay maye not mooste men thinke) that they shoulde treat firste of the Supreme authoritye of Christian Princes? If they haue the firste degree in dignity, whype may they not haue the firste place in this Treatise? Whatbeit, because this tooke Supreme, may bee taken as well for the last in order, though it first in dignitie, as the Princes giue their voyces and Royall assent last of all and when euery bodie hath saide, their voice strykes deade or quickens the matter. If our brethren here meane, to reserue the Treatie of the Christian Princes Supreme authority, to this purpose, & so to acknowledge them to bee the supreme gouernours: then a Gods name, proceede on. Let them say, as doe the Gentlemen-vthers befoze Princes, On afoze my Lordes. Let all these fowre estates take their places befoze, because that these our Learned discourfers so assigne them. We will not greatly stryue with them about the roome, where they please to place Christian Princes, firste or laste, or middlemooste, if Christian Princes may entirely retaine their supreme authority in Ecclesiasticall causes.

Peuerthelesse, there is no reason to the contrary, but it may be thought of some, or of mooste, if not of these Learned discourfers, that they should hane treated first on the Supream authoritie of Christian Princes: that the reader might first hane knowen, what Gouvernement perteyneth to them, and howe farre it extendeth by the worde of God, that hane the Supream authoritie of Eccl. causes: and then to hane treated on those in their orders, dignities, and places, that are vnder them, and seene likewise the differences of their inferiour Governements. And so should the reader of these controuersies, hane easily & plainly perceaued, whether any of their inferiour Governements & authorities had inroached on the Christian Princes Supream government & authoritie, yea or no. This (mee thinketh) had bene the better, the simpler, and moze direct way: then first to bring in all the other inferiour persons, and to assigne this and that Gouvernement vnto euerie of them, and when all hane had their places offices and gouernementes assigned to them: then, to come to the Christian Princes, and tell them: this is the place and office of Supream Gouvernement, left for you. Your Maiesties come late, these 4. are your Seniors, ye are but their punies: and therefore be content, there is no remedie, you must take that which by them is not stalled, & howe farre your Supream authoritie extendeth, we shall hane better occasion to entreate hereafter, when we hane described the Eccl. state. He thinketh, that Christian Princes may take grieve hereat, yea, euerie indifferent Reader may suspect, that Christian Princes might hane great wrong offered them by this dealing.

The iniurie offered to the Prince in the last place.

But, whether our brethren, Discourfers, meane thus, or no: by bringing in first all the inferiour persons, and taking vp before hande (ere the Princes be so much as mentioned) the direction of all Ecclef. matters to bee directed onely by them, and bid the Princes be content, they shall haue the Supream place of authoritie, that is, the last place (as they perhaps meane it) and the Princes vnderstande it for the chiefest place: let them now go on, and tell their owne tale, and shewe their reasons for thus placing of the Christian Princes.

Where-uppon it seemeth, that all the regiment of the Church dependeth.

Where-upon? And where-upon (I pray you brethren) speake you this: eyther vpon the giuing to Christian Princes the first treatise? or vpon the Supream authoritie of Christian Princes? The supream authoritie you hane graunted. But the first place of the treatie, yee will not graunt. Where-upon, it may be taken, that this your (where-upon) seemeth as if ye sayde: If we should first intreate of the Supream authoritie of Christian Princes: then it might seeme, that all the regiment of the Church dependeth on them. But confinne your owne words where-upon ye please, eyther vpon the one sence or the other. There is nothing yet alleaged, but that onely it seemeth that all the regiment of the Church dependeth on it. But if it be understood for the onely first place of the treatie: it can not so much as seeme to depende all vpon the first treating of the same. If it be understood of the Christian Princes supream government, in Ecclesiasticall causes, which you haue granted and we take holde thereon, and that somewhat yet in time, least all be cleane giuen from them, if all be not giuen away already, but yet will wee take as good holdfast as we can, for the Princes right, that Christian Princes haue supreame authoritie in Ecclesiasticall causes: which once being granted: then, whether yee treat there-upon first or last: whatsoeuer would seeme to fall out, will seeme so still. But what is this that would seeme to fall out hereupon?

lous surmise
of the Christian Prince.

That all the regiment of the Church, dependeth on the Christian Princes supreame authoritie in ecclesiasticall causes.

Would this seeme, if the Prince had the first place? Doeth it seeme that all the regiment of the Church, dependeth on the Pastor? And yet here you assigne the Pastour the first place. Though afterwarde vpon further aduiseement, you put him backe, and make him come downe with shaine, and take the lower roome, giuing the first place to the Doctor, notwithstanding your selues doe thus heere for a while exalt the Pastour. But it seemeth, ye haue a greater Jealousie of the Christian Prince, then of any of all these foure Tetrarkes. For howsoeuer ye set them one before or after another, the Christian Prince must come behind them all, for feare it might seeme that the regiment of the Church dependeth thereon.

But shall the Christian Princes be debarred of the right of their place, in the treatie of their authoritie, because it seemeth that there-upon the Regiment of the Church dependeth? It seemeth, that these wordes are suspitionlie cast forth, as though her Maiestie would haue all the Ecclesiasticall functions, and all their ministerie of the worde and sacraments, and all the mysticall state of Christes militant Church in her Maiesties Dominions, to depende on her Maiesties supreame authoritie in Ecclesiasticall matters. It seemeth, this is not verie good dealing, to burthen her Maiestie with suspicion of such things. But we will suspende our iudgement, for all this that seemeth to depende: for if wee should be not, but straight condemne a thing, because it seemeth this or that: what if this dealing of our brethren seemed harde to the Christian Prince? What if it seemed to her Maiestie, that the bringing in of all these foure Estates before her Maiestie, and the giuing vnto them onely, the direction of all Ecclesiasticall matters, might be greatly preiudiciall to the state of gouernement established; to make a murther in the common-weale; to sit vs all together by the eares; to make an infinite number of factions and alterations; yea, to take from her Maiestie the best part of her supreame authoritie, authoritie; and to breed many mischiefs and inconveniences, then the or you, or we, or any yet salve? cesuprema 99. 1. 1. 1.

If (I say) it should seeme so unto her Maiestie, and to a great number besides, which thinke themselves as sounde Protestantes, and as good subiects as you either would seeme to be, or are: would ye not straight wayes answer? What though it seemeth so: yet, it is not so: it is but onely your surmise, and though it seemeth so to you: yet it seemeth not so to vs (ye will say) nor to many other. But sure it is not so, what soeuer it seemeth ynto anie. *Things not

If now we replie: well, yet it seemeth not so of nothing. There can be no smoake, where there is no fire: and if it be not smoake indeede, yet since it seemeth to be smoak, it is not amisse to feare fire. We must abstaine from all appeaunce of euill. 1. Thes. 5. Would ye be content, to haue the matter ouerruled thus; against your Learned discourse for this Tretrarchie, because these daungers might so seeme to insue, yea, to depende there-upon? And I pray you brethren, what stronger reason call ye this?
 It may be thought of some, that we should first intreate, of the supreme authoritie of Christian Princes: whereupon it seemeth, that all the regiment of the Church dependeth. should A hands of the prince?

Yea, but you will say: if it seemeth so, then, it cometh not of nothing.
 There is no smoake where there is no fire, We must abstaine from all appearance of euill. Who saide this? Forsooth (brethren) that did euery: and hardily returne mine owne wordes to mine owne selfe, Leges Talionis, For ye see I am bolde with you (brethren) in so doing. Well then (will you say) it seemeth that all the Regiment of the Church, dependeth on the supreme authoritie of the Christian Prince in Ecclesiasticall causes; and this seeming, cometh not on nothing. So verely, doth it not. For, to set aside your partiall suspicion, and goe to the matter it selfe. The Christian Prince hauing supreme authoritie in Ecclesiast. causes: doeth no Regiment of the Church at all, though not all the Regiment of the Church depende thereon. *Some regiment of the

Yea, this is a thing, which is such a myste (say you) to dazell the eyes of the ignorant persons, that they thinke all thinges in the Eccles.
 state, ought to be disposed by that onely high authoritie and absolute power of the ciuill Magistrate.

A ha (brethren) I thought it would proue somewhat. It seemed (as the saying is) either a fore or a feare brake. I toke it for smoake, and it was a myste. So that I myst my marke. And yet till it came, it reeled like a smoake. And a myste will not onely dazell the eyes, but so darken the obiect, that wee cannot discern the trueth, till the myste bee dissipated, and then, (if we haue good eyes) we shall see all thinges as they are.

ces supreme
gov. scian.

A scande-
rous myste.

But what is this, which is such a myste, so loth, that all the regimēt of the Church dependeth on the authoritie of Christian Princes?

This is a soule, thicke, stinking, sclaunderous, darke myste indeede. Whence riseth this myste? Doe we raise anie such speeches on the Prince? Doth the statute yelde anie such authoritie to the prince? Doeth her Maiestie claime, or take vpon her anie such authoritie? I heare of none but of the common aduersaries, (and you knowe which are our brethren,) that cast forth anie such speeches. Al-be-it, I loyne not you and them in like condition. For, they most maliciously doe answere and blase it: you onely say it seemeth: but whether to them, or to the people, or to your selues it seemeth: that you tell vs not. But it seemeth, ye will exempt your selues, and I am glad thereof: for I would not haue it, that you, who are our brethren in Iesu Christe, and her Maiesties true meaning subiectes, as we are, should haue either your eyes dazeled, or the verie paper (whereon you write) to be stayned, with the supition, or but with seeming to suspect, such false, foggie, and infectiue mystes as those are.

If ye be Jealousie of them, to daine this myste away, it is well done: so that in this Jealousie to daine away the myste, ye daine not away with all our Mistresses Supream authoritie. It is no reason her Maiestie should loose her cleare right, vnder pretence that a myste dazeleth the eyes of ignorant persons.

The eyes of the ignorant dazeled with this myste.

But if they be ignorant, then it is for that they knowe not the truth hereof: and then is the truth of the matter cleane contrarie. And although the ignorant be deceaued: yet they that be not ignorant, be not deceaued. And can not the ignoraunt bee taught the truth by them that are not ignoraunt? The ignoraunt persons were deceaued in manie moe thinges, of which ignorant persons then, manie knowe (thanks be to God) doe knowe the truth, except such as loue mystes and darke nesse more then light.

But let not vs suppress the truth, for feare of what may seeme to ignorant persons. For to them truthe seemes falshode; and all that we say both of vs, may seeme starke lyes. But it lyeth vs vpon so much the rather, to tell them the truthe: and then if they will be ignorant, let them be ignorant still. But what is the point, wherein by this myste the eyes of the ignorant persons are thus dazeled? That all thinges in the Ecclesiasticall state, ought to be disposed by the only high authoritie & absolute power of the Christian Magistrate. This indeede is a dangerous error of ignorant persons. But if any be so ignorant: would this error be confirmed in them, if the authoritie & power of the Christian Princes were first treated vpon, and thoroughly biewed: And not rather, if there be any such as holde that opinion (as by our brethrens speeches it seemeth there there should be made) I take it were the best waye which could be taken, that this myste, were first cleared, and the Treatie of the Christian Princes first treated vpon: least, epther the Princes should take anie such onely high authoritie and absolute power vpon them, or that the people should so grossely and erroneously conceaue anie such matter of the. This is my opinion in such cases. And I woulde wish you (brethren) to take heede, home in these your discourses, (let them carie what name of learning soever, ye will) sith that the people are taught no such matter, sith that her Maiestie taketh no such absolute power vpon her, but (as becometh a good Christian Prince,) that, which of right pertaineth to her Maiesties royall office, and most godly, with all humilitie, patience and cindenes, tempereth the Justice of the same: you abuse not so much her Maiesties clemencie, that deserueth no such slanderous nor suspitions at your hands.

The casting forth of such false suspitions is not wel
done.

Will this put you such surmises in the peoples heads, if they were ignorant, to decrease them worse? For this is the way, to make the people epther become Atheistes, as only and absolutely to depende on the Prince in all matters and causes Ecclesiasticall: or to grudge against her Maiestie, as taking on her such an onely highe authoritie and absolute power to dispose all thinges in the state Ecclesiasticall. What could her open professed enemies haue sayde worse? Soane that they no lesse impudently then falsely, like arrant Traytors, doe not shame to affirme it: and should you (brethren) come after those shamelesse chyldren of Beliall, and say: But while we speake of Ecclesiasticall gouernment, it may be thought of some, that we should intreate first of the Supream authoritie of Christian Princes: where-upon it seemeth, that all the regiment of the Church dependeth: which is such a myste to dazell the eyes of ignorant persons, that they thinke all thinges in the Eccles. state ought to be disposed, by the onely high authoritie and absolute power of the ciuill Magistrate? What suspicious speeches, and byous glaunces, vnder the name of some, and of it seemeth, and of they thinke, are heere cast forth: and all this thinking and seeming to some, is turned to the people, and to ignorant persons: they, poore soules, must beare the fault of all. What is rayling of mystes, dazeling of eyes, walking in cloudes: yea, bounding naked in a net, and when all the world looketh on, to thinke no bodie seeth vs, if this be not? And whie is the Soueraigne Prince called hereby no better terme, then the ciuill Magistrate: who before, was acknowledged in more reuerent manner, to be the Christian Prince, and to haue also Supream authoritie? What, and did you likewise meane, hereby to graunt vnto Christian Princes, that all the regiment of the Church dependeth on their Supream authoritie, and that all thinges in the Ecclesiasticall state ought to be disposed by that onely high authoritie and absolute power of the ciuill Magistrate? What? do ye here graunt them all this? Or graunt them some thing? Or denie them all this, and graunt them nothing, no; any regiment, no; anie disposing at all: Pse saye, the ignorant persons, thought thus and thus: and would you for all that, giue so much vnto Christian Princes, as the Supream authoritie in Ecclesiasticall causes? Did not you feare also, leass ye should raple a myste to dazell the eyes of ignorant persons? And what did you meane, when you gaue the direction of all Ecclesiasticall matters to your foure estates onely in the Church? And among other termes, here speaking of the Christian Princes, ye call their estate the onely high authoritie, and absolute power: but it sufficeth vs, (if ye will abide by your graunt,) that Christian Princes haue supream authoritie in Ecclesiasticall causes, as for the termes, onely and absolute, which are due onlie vnto Christ; in talking of anie others vsurpation of them, we knowe no Christian Princes that doth vsurpe them. It is manifest, that our most gracions Soueraigne (the mirrour of all Christian Princes of this age) claimeth or vsurpeth, no such onely high authoritie or absolute power, whereby all thinges in the Ecclesiasticall state ought to be disposed.

And woe ye not astraide, leass, the fourth terme, that is to saye, absolute power, would followe in a myste, to dazel the eyes of ignorant persons? Well, if after absolute, Absolon folloiw not also, it is the better.

But let vs now with-draue our selues out of these mystes; and come to clearer coasts, concerning some particuler pointes, what is here graunted, or denied to the Christian Princes by these our Learned discoursing brethren.

Others there be, with more colour of reason, that referre only indifferent matters to the disposition of Princes: but in determining indifferent matters, they shewe themselues not to be indifferent Iudges. For, whatsoener it shall please the ciuill Magistrate or themselues to call or count indifferent, it must be so holden of all men, without any further inquirie. But of the Supream authoritie of Christian Princes in Ecclesiasticall causes, how farre it extendeth by the worde of God, we shall haue better occasion to intreate hereafter, when we haue described the eccl. state.

Bridges.

When vnder the name and blame of ignorant persons, these Learned discoursers haue answered (as they thinke) sufficiently, that they haue not first treated on the Christian Princes estate, for feare, leass in giuing the Prince place, before they had inuected in full seazure and possession, these foure Tetrarks in their offices assigned already vnto them, the Christian Prince

Prince might be thought to haue gotten to great aduantage, as hauing his share set out before theirs: and therefore, hee is put backe, till all these saue be serued: under pretence, that if the Prince were serued first ignorant persons would thinke, that al the other had their shares from him, and all depended on him, and that his power might be thought absolute, and that this were a myste to dazell the eyes of ignorant persons, which might sound to the Princes great reproch. At last, now the Christian Prince, or any other his wel-willers, should espie, that this indeede, were but a myste to dazell the Princes owne eyes, that pretending to staye him, for feare he might come to haue too much, they might leaue him no authoritie at all, in the directing and disposing those matters, wherein his Supream authoritie most of all consisteth, to wit, (be they politike, mo:all, or Ecclesiasticall things) in matters indifferent: least they might thus seme to spoyle the Prince of all: they come nowe to answer those men, that yet would leane to the Christian Prince a Supream authoritie in disposing of these indifferent matters.

Others (say they) there be, with more colour of reason, that referre only indifferent matters to the disposition of Princes.

Who those others are, they doe not name: but we may well perceauce, that these our brethren discourfers fauour not greatly those mens opinion, that the Christian Princes should haue anie disposing of indifferent matters. Notwithstanding, because they dare not in plaine wordes denie it: it is worth the sight, to see howe pretely they fetch it about, in the answering to the opinion of those others.

And first, they claime these others, howbeit with a harde curricombe, that they at least haue more colour of reason, yet not reason, but colour of reason: Which rough or gentle yielding some what to them, at least of a colour, must serue for a reasonable colour, to seeme to giue them something, though (saue a colour) nothing: both to bereaue these others of their reason, & the Chr. Princes of all their Supream auth. in indifferent matters. And indeede, as they tell their tale, they dyne it to as little reason, as they can, for in saying: they referre onely indifferent matters to the disposition of Princes: they plainely insinnate, that these others should say, that the Princes are not onely the chiefe or Supream, but also, the only disposers of indifferent matters: and this also our brethren affirme of indifferent matters indefinitely; as though, not some, but all indifferent matters, were in the onely disposition of Princes, at their pleasure.

Nowe, although that in some things, which of their nature are indifferent, all lawes, of God and man, haue had no small regarde, of those that are called Principum placita, drawing neere to the kinde of her Maiesties Proclamations: yet what good Prince hath ever reigned, (were he neuer so wise,) euen Salomon himselfe, but he had his counsell:

Not to give authoritie and life to his decrees in such indifferent matters, which lieth (I graunt) onelie in the Princes disposition: but to give aduise and counsell vpon waightie and mature deliberation, what were best in all respects, according to the Analogie of Gods worde, the groundes and rule of reason, and all other thinges to be considered, for the advancement of Gods glorie, the establishment of the Princes estate, and the benefit of the common-weale. But howsoever anie other Princes haue abused their authoritie, and followed their owne disposition, rather then reason in these matters: or their owne reason according to Machiauelles rule, rather then the aduice or consents of their wise and goodly Counsaile. Shall we so deeme rashly, and beyonde our dutie, of her Ma. our most gracious Soueraigne, or of any other goodly Christian Princes? Well then what say our brethren these Learned discoursers here-unto, hauing moued this case? For, it is at this day a great question, & toucheth the matter to the quicke, what the Christian Princes authoritie is, in the disposing of indifferent matters? Let vs now listen to their answer & determination in this point. Wherby we shall see, what they leaue to the Christian Prince, all or somewhat, ought or nought, in the disposing of these things.

Their motion is this:

Their answer is this:

But in determining indifferent matters, they shewe themselves not to be indifferent Iudges.

The reasons of their answer.

This answer they confirme with this reason:

For, whatsoeuer it shall please the ciuill Magistrate or themselves to call or count indifferent, it must be so holden of all men, without any further inquirie.

And with this answer they breake off the matter, saying:

But of the supream authoritie of Christian Princes in Eccles. causes, howe farre it extendeth by the word of God: we shall haue better occasion to intreate here-after, when we haue described the Eccles. state.

And is this al then, that we shall looke for here, concerning this so great and important matter? Who moued here this point now? Indee it was looked for before. But why at the length was it not moued, and shall not now be thoroughlie answered, but thus be posted off, till better occasion here-after? Verre was a verie good occasion, and moued by your selues, and the matter waightie and necessarie: and who would not now euen haue saide to him selfe, although some great busines or friends had called him away? Nay, soft, I will stay a while, and here these our brethrens Learned discourse and answer, in prouing and determining of this great point: & then be gone. But we may now be gone when we list.

we have our answer here already, such an one as it is: and till better occasion hereafter, we must be content with this. Well, and therefore no remedie, then content: we will live in hope.

But then (Brethren) forget not the matter quite and cleane, when that better occasion hereafter cometh. But it is an old saying, promissum est aut debitum aut dubium. I doubt we must take this answer for all, in this Learned Discourse. For hereafter, when our brethren at the end of all this their Learned Discourse, take their better occasion (as they thinke) to treat more largely of the supreame authoritie of Christian Princes in ecclesiasticall causes, how shall it stand with the worde of God: there is, faire and well, better and worse, more and lesse, per gry quidem, not so much as our two mentioned of indifferent matters. And is this indifferent dealing in such a matter? But since it is so, least we should go emptie away, we may take this for none for an answer. The obiection propounded by themselves, was this: Did you not say?

Others there be with more colour of reason, that referre onelie indifferent matters to the disposition of Princes.

To this they answer. But in determining indifferent matters, they shew themselves not to be indifferent iudges.

This answers beginning with a But, is given rhetorically Ex abrupto. Uttering (as it were, for quicker dispatch, in a Learned Discourse,) the one halfe, or parte of the answer, by which they would have us to gather their whole minde: as who should say: it is true which these others affirme, that referre onelie indifferent matters to the disposition of Princes: all this we gladly graunt and yield unto. But in determining indifferent matters, they shew themselves not to be indifferent iudges.

Is not this (brethren) the meaning of your answer? For I would be loath wittinglie to misconster you. Doubteit, to all that shall be indifferent iudges of us both, I hope, they will say, I have more then colour of reason, thus to conister your words. You have moved here a weightie obiection: Your full, plaine, and resolute answer is expected. If ye say nothing at all unto it: either it might be thought, that ye reieced it, as a matter not worthie to be answered: (and why then did ye move it?) Or else, saying nothing thereto: the old rule may hap to fall on you: Qui tacet, videtur consentire. He that holdeth his peace, dooth seeme to consent. Notwithstanding, that is but seeming, which though it inferre not, yet still it carrieth more then colour of Reason, that by all probability, the partie yieldeth. And it is commonlie, and in some cases necessarilie taken, pro confesso, as a close graunt. But if a man of purpose, will take upon him to answer to that, which is objected either by others or by himselfe, and answer onelie by way of exception, as you have expresselie begunne with this exception, But: what can that intend, but that ye freely graunt, to

to all the obiection, so farre forth as is not expessed nor contained, w^{ch}ly in the compass of your exception: And this goeth beyond your mist of videtur, it seemeth: and I plainly take it for a plaine granting.

Now, if ye graunt to the opinion of these, to whom ye call others, that referre onelie indifferent matters to the disposition of Princes: why do ye so minceinglie, or rather obfuslie saye of them: they do it with more coulour of reason, as though they had no reason, but a coulour of reason for it: And what reason or coulour of reason haue you to propose it and graunt it, and yet to finde fault with them that do mouche it? If ye say, ye finde faulte with the abuse of it: that is nothing to the obiection which was, whether onelie indifferent matters were to be referred to the Princes disposition. But (say you) in determining indifferent matters they shew themselves not to be indifferent iudges. So that, if they shew ed themselves to be indifferent iudges, in determining indifferent matters: then they did well, and ye will allow Christian Princes to haue au-thoritie in the disposition of indifferent matters.

Who are these now, that in determining indifferent matters, shew themselves not to be indifferent iudges? If ye meane those others, with their coulour of reason: with what coulour of reason referre ye this to them, who (as ye say) referre onelie indifferent matters to the disposition of Princes? And how then are they become such determiners and iudges of indifferent matters, referring them onelie to the Princes disposition? What iudgement or determination is that in these others, that hath no disposition of the matters, whereon they should iudge and determine, but referreth the disposition to the Prince? And what disposition is that of the Prince, if these others and not the prince, be the iudges and determiners of it? If ye say these others finde out onelie, what be indifferent matters, and the Prince onelie dooth dispose them, how they shall be bled, when by these others they are determined and iudged to be indifferent: where is then the faulte? In mistaking matters not indifferent, for indifferent: and indifferent, for not indifferent: and so in determining indifferent matters, they shew themselves not to be indifferent iudges. And who do thus: these others, that referre onelie indifferent matters to the disposition of Princes. What is this to the Princes right, in the disposition of indifferent matters? The right of the Prince heerein, may remaine intier, for all this abuse of others. So that (I hope) we shall sooner agree, then we were aware on. For, so that Christian Princes may haue their right inuolable reserved: I dare hazard this farre of all good Christian Princes, and will presume (by hir Maiesties leane) to giue warrant for our most gracious Soueraigne, that she will not abuse hir authoritie, nor hath doone: nor (if any others haue abused hir authoritie herein, committed by hir Maiestie vnto them) would maine

mainteyne them, or allowe thereto. But all this will not serue. For, under pretence of this abuse, though doone by others, which others notwithstanding are not wanted: not onlie they (whosoever they be) in authoritie under her: but also her Maiestie her selfe is most unworthilie defaced, and her right herein, which cannot be denied, but for a she is granted vnto (albeit not in neither in expresse wordes, but in necessitie of consequence is euicted from them) is here cleane undermined, and with reprochefull contumelie ouerturned. Pretending not onlie that the Prince disposeth all these things himselfe, according to the wrong determining of others: but that the Prince ioyneeth with these others, in the wrong determining and iudging of these matters. And that either the Prince and they, or els the Prince or they, rule all at their owne pleasure, disposing of indifferent matters for not indifferent: and of not indifferent, for indifferent: and so in determining indifferent matters, shewe themselves not to be indifferent iudges.

For, whatsoener it shall please the ciuill magistrate, or themselves, to call or count indifferent, it must be so holden of all men, without any further inquirie.

What doo they (bzechzen)? sage me that againe: doo they deale thus with enerie matter whatsoener? And at their owne pleasure, whatsoeuer it shall please them? And haue they no better prooue, then their bare calling or counting it to be indifferent? is that all the reason they alledge? And would they hereupon onlie, haue it holden for such a maxime, that, not onlie it may, but it must be so holden, and that, of all men: and that, with our any further, so much as, inquirie? This is a verie strange dealing: this is an heynous matter indeed. If the matter go thus: alas poore men, I cannot greatlie blame you, if ye mislike such euill dealing; and thought them not to be indifferent iudges.

But (I beseeche you bzechzen) who are they that vse such dealing? The ciuill magistrate, or themselves? What? The ciuill magistrate? God forbid. Take heed what ye say, yea, vnsway that againe. No, no, we say (you will say) the ciuill magistrate. And will ye so indeed? Whome then meane ye by the ciuill Magistrate? For, all our question was about Princes, and those not Heathen, but Christian Princes. And we (will you say) by the ciuill magistrate, doo meane also the Christian Prince? Well then (bzechzen) I now perceiue your meaning. Neither doo I denie, but that the terme (ciuill magistrate) is a fit and reuerend terme, as time and place serueth. Notwithstanding, here treating of the supreme authoritie of Christian Princes, to come in (as before in a myst ye did, and now againe, and that openlie) with a terme, that maye as well fitte the great Turke, or anye Heathen, Infidell, prophane, or twicked Prince, as a Christian Prince: and speaking of not indifferent judges, to call here the Christian Prince, onlie and in generall, the Ciuill Magistrate, as though it were some Ciuilian, or Iudge in the Ciuill lawe, or some other Inferiour Magistrate; under the Prince: Quam contempnimus quam incuile?

The subiects accusatioⁿ of the Prince.

But would God, this were the greatest faulte in this discourse, to stumble now and then, on a course terme, though some what unfitting for so learned discourfers, and more trust in this treatise for the maiestie and reuerence of the Christian Prince, to be termed by. But let termes passe, and tend to the charge. Not onelie others, but also the Christian Prince, is here charged and accused by the subiect, of an heynous crime: that whatsoeuer shall please the ciuill Magistrate, (meaning the Prince) or them-selues (meaning others by authoritie called by the Prince) To call or counte indifferent, it must be so holden of all men, without any further inquirie. What a sore and sharpe accusation is this? And what a number of waightie branches hang thereon? For a Prince, a Christian Prince, yea the owne liege, naturall, and most goodlie Christian Prince: of the subiects, yea, of the owne naturall, loyall, and swozne subiects, yea, of the protestant reformed Christian subiects: yea, of those that pretend to be the most zealous, goodlie, learned, faithfull Ministers subiects, to be thus burdened and exclaimed vpon. If this had bene true: yet would it haue required a more reuerent admonition. And if it be false: then, to haue been spoken in neuer so great secret, is both a sinne gratiuous before God, and to our owne estate, dangerous. But to accuse the Prince openlie of so foule a matter, not onelie before God and his Angels: but to publish it in the hearing of all your fellow subiects: to thrust it out in print to other nations, to the wide world, to perpetuall memorie: and as it were, in tables of Masse, to set it downe in a plottoyme, and in a Learned Discourse of Ecclesiasticall gouernement: that the Ciuill Magistrate, pointing as it were with your finger, to that so gratiuous Christian Prince, vnder whom bothe you and we doe so happilie liue: to whom we all doe owe obedience, loue, dutie, honoz, fealtie: to whom by so manie great benefits we be obliged: that his Maiestie doth deale with vs so violentlie, so wilfullie, so vniustlie, that whatsoeuer he please to call or count indifferent, it must be so holden of all men, without anie further inquirie: What greater crime almost can ye laye to anye, not Christian Princes, but barbarous tyrants charge, in such a matter, then here yee haue done? For, anye to be called a Iudge not indifferent, that is appointed to be a Iudge: is to charge him with a sore matter: that either of ignorance (which is too bad in a Iudge,) or of knowledge (which is worse) he is an affectionate, partiall, corrupt, and not a iust Iudge. For, what of all these, and worse, if worse can be in a Iudge, is not contained in this infamous terme: He is not an indifferent noulesse of

indifferent Iudge. When a Iudge determineth a doubt or controuersie, indiciallie, then to be not indifferent, is the manifest perverting of his office. For, what is the cheefest point of a Iudges office, but to giue iuste indgement, and that iustlie? Thou shalt not (saith God vnto a Iudge, Leuit. 9.) doe vniustlie in iudgement, thou shalt not fauour the person of the poore, nor honour the person of the mightie, but thou shalt iudge thy neighbour iustlie. And what is iustice, but, Summ cuique tribuere, to giue to euerie partie and part that, that apperteineth to the same: so that if there be accepting of the persons, moze then of the waighing of the causes: if right be not ministred indifferentlie to all: if the scales be not of themselves of like poyle, other wise then as the weight of the matter that is put in them, causeth the one to weygh downe the other: and if the tung of the balance incline not downe that waye, after the heauier weight: it were euen against the course of nature. And if the Iudge, into whose hand God hath put the sword of Justice, should not strike right, but cleane ouerthwarte: condemne the innocent, iustifie the guiltie, saye god is euill, and euill is god: light is darkenesse, and darkenesse is light: sower is swete, and swete is sower: false is true, and true is false: not indifferent is indifferent, and indifferent is not indifferent: then indeed he were a Iudge not indifferent, but vnust and false. Such not indifferent Iudges God accurseth, and will rote them out. Because, where they execute not their owne, but (as Iosaphat calleth them) the iudgements of God: they peruert them to Gods dishonour, to the maintenance of wrong and falshood, and to the iniurie and oppression of the people. This therefore is a most dreadfull accusation.

The cheefest point of a Iudges office.

The danger of this accusation.

If ye replie, that ye speake this of others, not of Princes, that in determining indifferent matters they shew themselves not to be indifferent Iudges: had ye said no moze thereof, but so left it in suspense, what we might gather by this word they: although it had bene spoken verie suspitiouslie, to saye: others there be, with more coulour of reason, that referre onelie indifferent matters to the disposition of Princes: but in determining indifferent matters, they shew themselves not to be indifferent Iudges: which they, doe thus shewe themselves? The Princes to whose disposition the matters be referred? Or these others that referre them to the disposition of Princes? Because here this word they, might be doubtfullie taken: and we ought not to consider doubtfull words odiouslie, to the worst parte, if they may be construed to the better: had ye therefore gone no further in the matter, and not your selues made your meaning plaine, and withall a great deale worse: I might haue bene thought to haue offered you as great wrong, in theaping that sence on your words, as your words offer great wrong to Princes, in burthening Princes with so great a slander. But when as vpon these wordes: they shew

The Prince

cused so well

authoritie.

shew themselves not to be indifferent Iudges: yet pursue it at the harde heel, with this illatiue cause: For, whatsoever it shall please the Ciuill Magistrate, or themselves, to call or count indifferent, it must be so holden of all men without anie further inquirie: doo ye not most apparantlie (to any that hath but his common sense) inferre this sentence on the other: And although ye utter it dishonourlie, saying: The Ciuill Magistrate or themselves, and not iointlie, the Ciuill Magistrate and themselves: do ye not speake it of the one as well as of the other? Yea, and place the Prince in this crime, before the other, as of the twaine, the more culpable.

The grieuousnesse of our breth-
ers offence in this slander.

If this be not a great overshooting of your duties, a soule forget-fulnesse of your estate and calling, and a verie soze crime for the subiect to burthen the Prince withall: then with all my heart I crie God mercie, and I crie you mercie too (my brethren) and will be most readie to make all the amends I may, for mistaking this to be so great a fault in you, that ye haue laide here so great a fault, vnto your and our Princes charge. And though I would (God he knoweth) be most woe and loathe, to be found culpable of such a crime, as to become an accuser of my brethren, be the matter neuer so true, and much more loath, being false: yet could I rather with, to susteine all punishment of a slanderer, then that you or anye ther could proue, such soule matter as this is, in her Maiestie. for what one word haue ye brought in all this your Learned Discourse, to proue that the Prince inforceth you, to hold any one thing as indifferent, that is not indifferent?

And now (brethren) alleadging no one proue of anye such matter not indifferent, to be holden indifferent: consider better with your selues, what ye haue here done against the Lords annointed, against your one lie, so good, and gracions Soueraigne: who hath of you hetherto deserved so well, and shall the now of you hir subiects, be rewarded so ill: What should you not be ashamed to be thought so vnthankfull: yea, not tremble and quake, to be found so vndutifull: Not so much for feare onelie, to incurre the danger of hir Maiesties indignation: for, (God be blessed for it) we haue a most milde and mercifull Princess, readie to forgive you.
But what will ye answer to Almighty God, (for I hope, ye feare God more then man) and God (whose annointed hir Maiestie is) giueth this straight charge to euerie subiect, Exod. 22. Thou shalt not raise vpon the Iudges, neither shalt thou speake euill of the ruler of thy people. Do not re-prache the Prince (saith Salomon) so much as in thy thought: Neither speake thou euill of the ricke, in thy bed chamber: for the soule of the ayre shall carrie thy voyce, and that which hath wings shall declare the matter, Ecclesiast. 10.
And yet (brethren) haue not you feared with open mouthes, to crye out these speeches in the ayre, and adde your paper wings vnto them, to flye about

about in the worlde. Vision therefore (my brethren) these wilde wings: scandalized laye your handes on your mouthes, and acknowledge this great faulte, that ye haue committed: Leane these contumelious speeches, sifter for enemies then for Subjects: crye God and her Maiestie in your hearts hartlie mercie, and with humble reuerence and good opinion, submit your selues to her Maiesties disposition of these matters.

And as I hope (on better aduising of these your vnadvised dealings) ye will not be græued thus to do: so I trust that God, and vnder GOD her Maiestie, (considering that all this hath bene risen on a seruencie of zeale (I graunt) to Gods glozie, but not according to the knowledge and learning, wherof you persuaue your selues, and not of anye cull will ye beare her Maiestie, but otherwise, loue, honour, obeye her, and wishe as well as we, withall your heartes vnto her) will most readilye bothe forgive and forget all these your dis tempered speeches and demeanors.

If ye thinke, ye haue not committed so great a faulte, since that the matter (when all is doone) is but for indifferent matters: and whye then, should the matter be made so great, the ground being so little: I praye you (brethren) dooth the lessening of the matter, lessen the faulte:
 or not rather aggrauate the same? And yet, who make this great adoe, and this foule out-crye on the Prince for indifferent matters? Whereof (in the meane while) ye cannot denie, but the Prince hath the disposition: and when she hath disposed them, then to crye out on her disposition of them, on this fashion, that she disposeth them so, that if she call or counte them indifferent, it must be so holden of all men without any further inquirie: call ye this (my maisters) a small matter? Dooth not the importance euen of all religion hang vpon it? For, if by this slander, the Prince please to call or counte indifferent anye one, or all the articles of our faith, it must be so holden of all men without anye further inquirie. Maye they not then dispose thus of all religion, and alter the same as it pleaseth them? The verie Antichriste of Rome, went neuer yet so farre, neither doo we burthen him to haue gone so farre, in all his in-tollerable blasphemy, although, hee come verie nere vnto this blasphemie.

Ande the Pope and his blasphemous raylers, most impudentlie doo laye suche crimes vnto our Princes charge, and yet hardlie they goe so farre as this reacheth. And shall we then our selues (to confirme their most shamefull lies) accuse our owne so blessed a Prince, with so outrag-ious and apparant a slander?

If ye thinke, ye are to hardlie pressed, as speaking these thinges against her Maiestie, whereas ye name her Maiestie not at all, nor anye other Prince particularlie. I confesse, ye shew herein a pointe of witte and learning, in this your Learned Discourse, to learne vs, that although we susteine a smutte for an vnseemlie terme: yet to saue our selues vp-right, and out of daunger, in speaking of Princes, it is good to speake some-what more at random, and not of this Prince, nor of that Prince, but in generall termes, of the Ciuill Magistrate, and then cannot one Prince finde himselfe, more touched then an other: or at least, though they see themselves gleeked at, yet cannot such holdfast be taken on their words. Indeed if ye delte thus with meaner persons, it were more toller-able, to put a case of Iohn a Stile, or of Ly homo, an Individuū vagum would saue all cleanly, and might be counted but a p^resupposall.

But when ye treat, not of a thing that mought, or mought not be done by Princes, or by the Ciuill Magistrate: but flatlie anouche thinges to be done by them, and withall complaine of, and accuse the doing of them: What: doe ye here complaine of no bodie? Or, as if it were, not yet done: doe ye crye and be not touched? Or who offendeth you? Doe all Princes? Or some Princes? Or which Princes? P^raye, (will ye saye) we name none. The Ciuill Magistrate is a tearme indefinite. But how indefinite soener it be, either it containeth all, some, or none. If none: why tohine ye? If some: name who. If all: ye haue mended the matter verie well. But what need this? Will you now also your selues, hauing (as most euen in your last wordes) found fault with mystes to dazell the eyes of ignorant persons, goe about here to cast mystes to dazell all mens eyes, with these indefinite termes of Princes, & of the Ciuill Magistrate? thinke ye men are such ignorant persons, and verie fooles, that they perceiue not, of what state ye speake, and of whome ye here say, they shew themselves? Go to, go to, I perceiue you will shew your selues quickly, whom ye meane. Perhaps, some other reformed Church, not ours: it is not our state that is so disordered: Neither is it our people, whom ye perswade to leaue this disordered state of ours. Of ours? What said I? No, not of ours: and to imbrace that most beautifull order of Ecclesiasticall regiment, which God so manifestlie dooth blesse and prosper in our neighbours hand: it is not our Princes disposition of indifferent matters, that ye mislike: it is not our Prince, nor others (in authoritie vnder our Prince, that (ye say) in determining indifferent matters, shew themselves not to be indifferent Iudges: it is not our Ciuill Magistrate, or anie others vnder our Ciuill Magistrate, that ye meane, dealing thus with their subiects, that whatsoeuer it shall please the Ciuill Magistrate, or themselves, to call or counte indifferent, it must be so holden of all men, without anie further inquirie.

Fie, Fie, (my maisters,) doe ye thus so lotte and soothe your selues in so Learned a Discourse, to thinke so courstie of all other men, as that they know not a B from a battie-dore. Who seeth not whome ye meane ye meane by all these speeches? And what Prince and other persons ye note, and whom, ye were as god, (saue for fashions sake) to haue euen pointed out with your finger, and named them by expresse name. But descease not your selues, thinke not thus to bleare all mens eyes with these generall speeches. For, how-so-euer ye may dazell the eyes of the ignorant persons: all men, that haue any sight, or wit, not blinded with affectiō, doe see, as cleere as noone day, whom ye aime at. Yea, the blinde eyes of the aduersaries see it and reioyse at it; and all godlie zealous, with discretion and knowledge, doe see it, and lament it. And all her Maiesties obedient faithfull subjects, your vnfaigned well wishing brethren in the Lord, but here in greatlie dissenting from you, doe see it with our eyes bedewed with our teares, and in our heartes bewaile and rue the view thereof: praying for you, that God would open your eyes and moue your hearts to consider better of these inconsiderate dealings.

But these our brethren perhaps, will bid vs praise for our selues here in, and not for them. For, if there be any faulte about these matters, they impute it not to her Maiestie, so much as vnto others. And therefore they will say, if ye marke our wordes well, ye shall find that we rather burden others then the Prince. Others? Who be these others? Haue they no names neither? Say (will they say) we name none, loke you to that, and take it among you. As for vs, we expresselie say, whatsoeuer it shall please the Ciuill Magistrate or themselves, &c.

Yea (my learned maisters) are ye good at that? Say, then I see we must marke your wordes better, and whatsoeuer the Princes calling or counting must be holden without any further inquirie: we must yet by your leaue, enquire further, and take better hold of these your wordes, and call ye to account also, not onelie for the Ciuill Magistrate, but for them, whom here ye call and counte these themselves, and others that ye mention.

If yee would posse it off to others, to excuse your selues of any ill meaning ye had, to blemish her Maiestie: I holde well with it: neither doe I bidge your wordes, to the intent to accuse you, but so farre as I may, rather to excuse you. Wishing you (where your accusation of her Maiestie is too apparant) that you should with submission and amendment, acknowledge the overshooting of your duties. For, what dooth this relaeue your accusation, if not onelie the Prince, but others also be accused of these things? If there be others besides the Prince, well may it lessen the Princes faulte, but it dooth not cleare it; if in giuing the disposition of the matters to the Prince, and placing herein the Prince before them, yee make not the Prince rather principall in the faulte, then accessarie.

bold to inquire further of these others? What haue others to do in these matters? What? Whatsoeuer it shall please them-selues also, to call or count indifferent, it must be so holden of all men, without any further inquirie. Do they so? Then are they as deepe in, as the Prince. And do they all this, without the Prince: or with the Prince? We say: whatsoeuer it please the Ciuill Magistrate or them-selues. When, if ye meane it dissimulielie without the Prince: the Princes faulte was by it selfe, as theirs also by themselves, and the one neither burtheneth nor easeth the other.

Page (will they say) we meane not so, but by the one or the other, we conclude them bothe. But the question was, of the Princes authoritie and disposing. Belike then the Prince both not dispose these indifferent matters all alone, nor whatsoeuer pleaseth him or her selfe: but, whatsoeuer pleaseth them-selues: so that, the Prince hath some others assistant, at least for enformation what these things are, yea to be determiners and iudges, to haue the same so called and accounted. Here then, the Prince playeth not the Tyrants part: this is not, Sic volo sic iubeo, slet pro ratione voluntas, thus will I haue it, thus I command it be: let that stand for reason, whatsoeuer pleaseth me: but contrariwise, here is the token of a good Prince, that will not dispose of these matters alone, but call others vnto this deliberation. Well then, the Prince is cleared of that point. And now if there be no greater, or not more faultes in these others, to abuse the Prince (so ought that I see) the Prince will soone be quitte.

But now, though the Prince be of a good nature and meaneth well: yet great fault may be in these others, who to flatter the Prince, will referre all matters to the princes disposition. Such I graunt there may be, yea, there is no prince so good, whom flatterers tempt not now and then.

But (brethren) take heede here, that you do not estimes abuse the prince, vnder pretence of speaking against such flatterers: and that ye also abuse none others in authoritie about the prince, by such odious and suspicious speeches. It is (ye know) the common practise of the arrantest rebels, not to pretend so much their quarrell directlie against the prince: as to saye, the prince (whom still they praise to be naturallie of a good disposition) hath others of counsell and authoritie, by whom the Prince is lead and abused. And these others, they would haue onelie remoued. I do not (brethren) bring this, as an instance to resemble your doings: but that ye should beware, least ye should resemble them. And yet as it is good for princes to take heede, what counsell of others they doo follow: so it this Prince here, whome ye call the Ciuill Magistrate, examine these others, of whom yee haue mooued this suspicion, whether they be such flatterers, yea or no: needs they desire anye better witnesses for them, than than your felues: for who-so-euer they be, (bicaufe it might be odious to inquire their names) they feeme to be no flatterers of the Prince. for your felues faye of them: others there be, that referre onelie indifferent matters to the difpofition of princes. In which wordes, although they giue to princes an authoritie of difpofing: yet they reftreine it onelie to indifferent matters. So that, they giue not princes that onelie high authoritie and absolute power, that all things in the Ecclefiafticall ftate are to be difpofed by the Ciuill Magiftrate: or that all the regiment of the church dependeth on the fupreame authoritie of the Christian princes: but the difpofition of princes (by thefe men, whom ye terme others,) is reftreined onelie to indifferent matters. Whereby it feemeth, that thefe others, are men of confcience and knowledge, hauing the feare of God before their eyes, nor giue the prince the difpofition of any one thing, which God already hath difpofed. So that hetherto, and that by your felues, thefe others alfo are acquitted, except there be further matter againft them.

But (fay our byethzen) in determining indifferent matters, they fhew themfelues not to be indifferent Iudges.

What are thefe others then, Iudges alfo and determiners of thefe matters? Thefe are great offices: who called them hère vnto? The prince called them to be examiners, and the iudgement and determination of thefe matters, apperteyneth to their office. And did they not then intrude themfelues? No. But they fhew themfelues not to be indifferent Iudges. Why fo? Are they partiall to themfelues? And Iudge or determine, that indifferent matters, belong to their owne difpofition? No; they referre that, from themfelues, to the difpofition of princes.

These others

How are they partiall then? Belike they referre it to the Prince, becaufe they are matters that onelie concerne the Prince, and not themfelues. Saye, they concerne themfelues, as much, or more, then any other: and the iudgements and determinations what is the nature of thefe matters, doe especiallie apperteyne vnto them. Doe they fo? Let how thefe things fall out, both for the Prince and for thefe others.

Both thefe others and the Prince
cleered.

The Prince hath hère authoritie to difpofe of indifferent matters. How be it the prince will not difpofe of them alone, but choletly and calleth others, which by their office and funtion, are moft skilfull, to difcerne indifferent matters from matters not indifferent, which intrude not themfelues into the iudgement and determining of thefe matters: which are fo farre off to encroche anye aduantage or authoritie to themfelues hèreby, that they referre thefe matters to the princes difpofition: neuertheleffe the prince will difpofe nothing, nothing, but that which these men shall be Iudges and determiners of it, to be such an indifferent matter, as whereof the Prince maye dispose: neither dooth the Prince impose any thing upon them, against their willes, nor traueith any thing of them, to Iudge or determine, this waie or that waie, what is, or what is not, an indifferent matter, but leaueth that free to these others iudgement and determination. Here the subiects giue the Princes their due, and goe no further: here the Princes take no more then is their due, nor all that neither, and but by the subiects owne consent, and by their aduise, iudgement and determination, of the matters indifferencie, to whose skill and function it chiefly appertainerh. Here neither the Princes can complaine of the subiects, to intrude themselues, and to vsurpe upon the Princes authoritie and disposition, neither the subiects can complaine on the Princes, to encroche on matters disposed of already by G O D, to rule all alone, to determine all by selfe-will, or to take aduise of those that haue no skill, or to impose on them matters that concerne them, with-out their owne consents and determinations.

What a pittifull peece of worke is here. Is not this a heynous matter, and this Prince worthe in such a Learned Discourse, to be courted & tried out upon: yea to be blazed forth in reproche to all the world, for this so great and foule a crime? But what then shall we saye to these others, these most perillous others, who-so-euer they be, these others, that are the causers of all this the Princes doing? For they, they of all others, are such off-scowrings, out-parings, wonderments, and gazing-stocks of the whole world, as he was, on whom the Jewes cryed, Accus, accus. Awaye with such a fellowe from the earthe, for hee is not worthe a line.

ferentlie
these others
are thus accused for these indifferent matters.

The further parts of this accusation.

Ha, brethren, is this your indifferent dealing with Christian Princes, about indifferent matters, and that with your owne so gracions Soueraigne: (yea, let it be what Christian Prince ye please, to shift it vnto) and is this also your indifferent dealing, with such others as these are, enen by your owne testimonies of them? How can ye (for very shaine) aboue this saying, that this Prince, and these others, doo call and count indifferent matters, whatsoener pleaseth themselves? Quicquid libet licet? Or Quicquid licet libet? Doo ye meane, that (without all regard of G O D, of their callings, of their people, of the matter,) they runne altogether on a head, and follow onelie their owne pleasure, without any deliberation of the matter? This were not onely wilfull and wicked, but more brutish. Or meane yee, when they haue deliberated and throughlie debated thereon, that that (whatsoeuer it bee) pleaseth them to call and counte for indifferent, which they shall shall finde indeed so to be? Yea, but holowener they be it: yet, whatsoeuer shall please themselves to call or count indifferent, that must be so holden of all men.

What: of all the nations in the world? What haue they to do with all men? I praye, of all men, that they haue to do with all, as the subiects to that Prince. And whye not I praye you? Would ye haue the subiects to dispise or disobey their determination? Or to esteeme those things which they call and account indifferent, to be not indifferent? And not indifferent to be indifferent? And still to vse them, as they their selues listed, at their pleasure? Or that things indifferent of their owne nature, should be vsed still according to their owne nature: indifferent things indifferentlie, by euerie man at his owne disposition? Or that whether anye vsed them or no, it makes no matter which end go forward? Would ye haue the subiects still at this libertie? But what need then anye disposing of them at all? Or anye question of them? Or to trouble the Prince, or anye others about them? Or what authoritie at all call ye that, either of iudging, determining, or disposing of them, when euerie man maye do as he please, and is not so much as bounden to hold them, or to account of them, as they be iudged, determined, and disposed, but maye still dispose of them at his owne pleasure, without anye restraint or controullement? For so they might haue done before, and as good neuer a whit as neuer the better. If a matter be lawfullie adiudged, determined, and disposed: whye should it not of all men that liue vnder those Iudges, determiners and disposers, be so holden and accounted? Either it is an order, or it is none: and if an order, either to be counted and holden orderlie, or as god make none.

Whether things lawfullie determined are not so of the subiects to be holden inuoluble.

Yea, but (say they) must it be so holden and accounted of all men, without anye further inquire? And what would yee inquire further? Would yee call it againe in question? And when shoulde we then haue done? And what would yee inquire vpon? Whether it were so? What is alreadie iudged and determined. Whether it were to be obserued and holden or no? What is likewise alreadie disposed. And how would ye inquire? as those that would gladly learne, what is Iudged & determined of the matters indifferentie, and what is disposed to be so holden & accounted? And understanding the same, beleue it so to be, and obey it: Or to be fresh Iudges, determiners and disposers of it? And yet when ye haue so done, may not other saye as much on your iudgement, determination, and disposition? So that, if further inquire for these matters shall be thus admitted: then shall none of all these matters be cuer fullie iudged determined or disposed: but still further inquiries made one after another, and neuer an end, neuer any certaine resolution of these matters: but herein to be alwaies like those, of whom the Apostle 1. Tim. 3.

speakeeth, Ever learning, and neuer able to come to the knowledge of the truth. Should ye haue it thus? No, if it were once thoroughlie inquired vpon, it should goe no further. And who should be these last and full inquisitors, once for all? Will our brethren step out and say: that will we be? You? Who are you? Princes or subiects? Saye, but subiects also, as these others are, some of the cleargie, and some of the laitie. What, and would you be Iudges and determiners? Whye not, as well as those others, sithe the matters concerne vs also. And would ye be Iudges and determiners without the Prince, and without these others: or with them? Saye, we would Iudge and determine with them. And must they then reuerse their owne former iudgements and determinations? Or else how is it a further inquirie? Let them choose: we will inquire of the matters further. What, vncalled of the Prince? Saye, the Prince shall call vs. And will ye prescribe the Prince to call you? When you call the Prince, rather than the Prince you. We will not prescribe nor compell the Prince so to do: but if the Prince call the others and not vs, we will call bothe the Prince and them (by their leaues) not indifferent Iudges. And what if the Prince cut off bothe them and you, and (to doibe partiallie and stinte all strife) will Iudge all alone? Will ye then stand to the Princes iudgement? If the Prince Iudge as we would haue it: els not. And must it be as euerie one of you would haue it? What if some would haue this, and some would haue that? Must euerie man, or some for all, be admitted on your side with the others? Saye, not all, that wold confusion, and cannot well be done: but we would compromise our voices vnto some. And what now, if ye had already all this, that yee seeme to desire: and those some for you, that haue bene in the Iudging and determining the indifferencie of such matters, haue assented vnto the orders of them that are already disposed: Or were by the most and best part of the assemblee so euided: that the matter hath bene sufficientlie inquired of, examined, Iudged, determined, and resolved already, and therevpon by the Prince also disposed? Will not all this yet content you? No, no: we will then say and still crye out, that In determining indifferent matters, they shew themselves not to be indifferent Iudges. And whye will ye thus complaine on them? For, whatsoeuer it shall please the ciuill Magistrate, or themselves, to call or count indifferent: it must be so holden of all men, without any further inquirie.

The conclusion of all this accusation.

This then (I perceau) must be the sa-burden of all this song. The Prince shall haue a title of supreme authoritie, to dispose indifferent matters: and others shall inquire, iudge, and determine, which be and which be not indifferent matters. But if the Prince or these others, who soeuer they be, either inquire of, or Iudge, or determine, or dispose, or ther wise of them, then shall please such as these our brethren the Learned

Dis-

Discourfers: not onelie they may course them for it, and discourse these matters againe more learnedlie: but it must be still free for all men, when and as often, and how they please, to inquire further, on all that is doone, and reuoke all their former inquiries, iudgements, determinations and dispositions: or else they shall haue this peale rung them: In determining indifferent matters, they shewe themselves not to be indifferent Iudges. For, whatsoeuer it shall please the Ciuill Magistrate, or themselves to call or count indifferent, it must be so holden of all men without anie further inquire. And now if there be any indifferent Iudge, let him Iudge (I beseech him) indifferentlie: If they deale thus with indifferent matters, (wherein the Princes supremacie hath the greatest force) what is left to the Prince, or to any of these others, to enquire, Iudge, determine, or to dispose vpon?

And how now: may not this also reach, by as much (not colour of reason) but substance of reason, to all politike matters in the common-weale, as well as to these Ecclesiasticall, so farre forth as both of them be indifferent? Whereby they may as well, when the Prince and all the States of the realme, haue determined, Iudged, and disposed, of any such indifferent matter, crie out on the Prince and all others in the Parliament, and repeate this slander in their former leoden: that in determining indifferent matters, they shew themselves not to be indifferent Iudges. For, whatsoeuer it shall please the Ciuill Magistrate and themselves, to call and count indifferent, it must be so holden of all men, without any further inquire. And thus may all the supreme authoritie of the Christian Prince, both in politike and ecclesiasticall matters, be cleane overthrowne: and euerie man set at libertie, to exclaime with open mouthe on their soueraigne, and of all others in authoritie: and vnder pretence of further inquire, God knowes how farre they will runne. We see a turbulent & Comickall beginning, but we see not the lamentable & Tragicall ending of these things: Principijs absta. sero medicina paratur.

But of the Princes authoritie in these matters, thus roughlye betwixt at the entrie, they will here for this time make a pause, and promise for a while to go no further, hauing indeed at this verie first stepp gone ouer the shoos already, more then a little to farre: and yet would God, they could here haue made a cleanlye stoppe, and not made the matter a great deale worse, but haue rested at these words, saying:

But of the supreme authoritie of Christian Princes in Ecclesiasticall causes, how farre it extendeth by the word of God, we shall haue better occasion to intreate hereafter, when we haue described the ecclesi. state.

And I pray God, better intreating and treating to: for, this was but a harde intreating of Christian Princes, and a worse treatie of their supreme authoritie. But belike the mooning here of these matters, for the Prince, (though indeed moued by themselves) in the course of their Learned Discourse of ecclesiasticall gouernement, by their foure estates, to be thus but a little interrupted, by touching onelie, rather then by treating, of the christian Princes supream authoritie, did somewhat perhaps disturbe and moue their patience. And therefore, as they here till heere after take their leaue: so in this perturbation at the parting, declaring the cause of their departure now from them, and whye they need not, and will not talke further with them at this time: in stead of shaking or rather wising hands, they giue them such a parting blow for a farewell, such a volie for a vale: that it were enough (vlesse they handle them gentlier heereafter, at their better occasion) to dash all Christian Princes, for all their magnanimitie, out of countenance: yea, to thrust them cleane out of Christendome, except they will holde themselves contented, with such places and authoritie, as they (after they haue at large described the ecclesiast. state, and fullie serued all their foure Tetrarks) shall please to assigne vnto them. And now, declaring their reasons hereof to euerie man, thinking (belike) that euerie man hath an interest in the further inquirie of these matters, they saie as followeth.

and 10.

And that it is neither needfull nor agreeable to good order of reaching, to begin first therewith, it may be plaine to euerie man by this reason. The church of God was perfect in all hir regiment, before there was any Christian Prince: yea, the church of God may stand & dooth stand at this daie in most blessed estate, where the Ciuill Magistrates, are not the greatest fauourers. By which it is manifest, that the regiment and gouernement thereof, dependeth not vpon the authoritie of Princes, but vpon the ordinance of God: who hath most mercifullie and wiselie so established the same, that, as with the comfortable aide of Christian Magistrates, it may singulerlie flourish and prosper: so without it, it may continue, and against the aduersaries thereof preuaile. For the church craueth helpe and defence of Christian Princes, to continue and go forward more peaceable and profitablie, to the setting vp of the kingdome of Christe: but all her authoritie she receaueth immediatlie of God.

Bridges.

In these words our bretheren the Learned Discourfers, to breake off this matter, hauing alledged one of their reasons, (as we haue heard) why they will not make their first treatie, on the supream authoritie of Christian Princes: which reason was this, that they would not seeme to confirme the opinion of those, to whom (it seemeth) that all the regiment of the Church dependeth, on the Christian Princes supreme authoritie: and by the way answered (as we haue likewise heard) the opinion of others, that referre indifferent matters to the Princes disposition: They now conclude this point with another answer, saying:

It is neither needefull, nor agreeable to good order of teaching, to ^{with the} ^{Princes} ^{shor. neede} ^{full.} beginne first therewith.

This scruple (I perceave) sticketh yet in their stomakes, & peradventure suspecting, y they had hitherto sayd nothing oughtes worth unto the purpose, whie the Prince in this their Learned discourse, should not haue the principall place: that they might therefore procede more frankly, this offence beeing taken away: (for the Princes supream authoritie is no small moate in their eyes) they will yet, ere they part, confirme it further, with a fewe more reasons, and so leaue it (as they promised) till hereafter.

And first (they say) it is not needefull to beginne first therewith. If by needefull, they meane necessarie: they might seeme to say somewhat to the purpose. For so, it was not needefull for them at all, to haue entred into this Learned discourse, nor to haue delt on this wise, nor to haue proceeded so far therein. Neither yet needful, as behouefull for them, or to all the parties to whom they haue communicated the same: but more needlesse, and better if they had dealt lesse: yea much better, if not at all, but had bene deedelesse to therein. But hauing vnneccessarily intruded themselves into this discourse: I thinke it had bene verie needefull, though not in necessitie, yet of conueniencie and of duetie, to haue giuen the Prince (being the principall partie) the principall place. Yea, had it bene but for verie reuerence and and comelinesse, or to auoyde offence and suspicion, both of the Prince and of manie others, especially in this last age of the worlde, whereof S. Paule prophesied. 1. Tim. 3. saying: This knowe also, that in the last dayes shall come perilous times, for men shall be louers of their owne selves, couetous, boasters, proude, cursed speakers, disobedient to parents, vnthankfull, vnholie, without naturall affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, intemperate, fierce, dispisers of them that are good, traitors, headdie, highe minded, louers of pleasures, more than louers of God, hauing a shadowe of godlinesse, but hauing denied the power thereof. Turne therefore away from such, &c.

With no we of such as all these are, we see the manifest experience, both in the Papistes, and in the Anabaptistes, in these last dayes: howe much needefull therefore might it well be thought for vs, in anie treatie of gouernement in Gods Church, next after Iesus Christe himselfe, to haue preferred none in place, till we had sene howe farre the Princes right had stretched. And to haue followed S. Peters order, who, after hee had generally handled the spirituall state of our Christianity, entring into the treatise of conuersation and gouernement of the Church: first requiteth submission to Princes, as to the chiefe, and then proceedeth to the dutie of husbandes, and wiues, of neighbours one to another, and so cometh to the Pastors and the people. Not, that this order is so needefull neither, that it should prescribe: and yet, if the Apostles at any time gaue the chiefe place

place to Princes, which at that time (as our brethren here say) were not yet become Christian Princes: what would they haue doone, had they bene Christians? And howe much more should we (they now being Christians) when as wee treat of the externall Regiment of the Church, next and immediately after Christe, giue the first treatise to Christian Princes, as to the Supream Governours of the same. Especially, the Princes, being in lawfull possession of the Supream Government, and the same possession established vnto them: how needfull were it, (if not necessarie,) first to consider the title of them that pleade in possession established, or euer any other Governours be brought in. But needing not stande so muche on neede: All things (sayeth Saint Paule) are lawefull vnto me, but all thinges are not expedient. 1. Corinth. 10. You needed not (brethren) to haue kept this order of your treatise, but you should haue bene more heede full to that, that is expedient, than to that that is needefull. So that the Princes supreame authoritie be referred intyer, (so that is needefull) vse your libertie in the order of your treating thereon, a Gods name.

But ye adde, that it is neither needefull, nor agreeable to good order of teaching, to beginne first therewith.

The beginning with the Princes treatise agreeable to good order of teaching.

It will perhaps set your teachers and Seniors out of the order that ye haue placed them in, if it cleane remooue not some of them. And so graunt, it is not agreeable to your order of teachinge in this Learned discourse. But other wise, it is agreeable to all good order of teaching well ynough. And I take it to be as good an order of teaching, as any other. Namely, treating of the order of Gouernement, first to set downe the best and chiefest Governour.

The order of our brethren in placing their Tetrarkes.

Your selues do teache this Order in your Tetrarchie: first, Teachers, then Pastours, thirdly Governours, and lastly Deacons. Wherefore (I pray you) doe ye marshall them thus, and treat on them afterwarde in large in this order? (For I can shew you an other order in Gods word) but that you thinke this to be a good order of teaching, to place them according to their dignities. And so you say, page. 15. the office of teaching is the first and principall office that is in the Church. If you nowe asseme their dignities thus, and according thereunto giue them their former or later places: since that by your owne confession already past, the Christian Princes haue Supreame authoritie in Eccles. causes, which none of these 4. Tetrarkes, nor all of them haue, and so, are higher in dignitie then they all: how is not then the office of the Christian Princes, the first and principal office in the Church: which you attribute to the teachers? And why may not by this your owne reason, the Princes interest & office be treated vpon, before any of all these Tetrarkes?

So, no, to beginne first with the Supreame authoritie of Christian Princes Princes in Eccle. causes, is neither needfull nor agreeable to good order of teaching. But to beginne with all these 4. Tetrarks, first Teachers, then Pastors, then Gouvernors, & then Deacons, and then to see what remaineth for the Christian Princes: yea, yea, that, that, is needfull, and is very agreeable to good order of teaching.

And this is a proper, needfull, agreeable, good, and orderly kind of teaching, is it not? But I pray you (my Pastors) in this your Learned discourse, teach me one thing here for my learning. Wherefore make ye all this a-doe, to haue the Prince come after al these 4. Estates? Doe ye strue so earnestly (as did, yea, moze the did the Pharisees) for the highest ruine, that Princes and all, must giue rōme to these your newe Tetrarkes, and that so soone as euer their heades peepe out of the shell: Our Chronicles tell vs of the old struing for places nowe and then, among the Popes, the Archbishops: and do you so reprehend all Archbishops, that not only they must be cleane put downe, but Princes and all put backe, till euery one of these newe Tetrarkes come forth, and haue taken their places. What, (brethren) you of all men, shoulde not thus doe, who pretende equalitie. What, is it to be equall to Princes? or to haue equalitie in the ministerie? You can-not abide these names of Grace, of Honour, of Lordes. Doe ye shunne the names, and shoue at the matter? And so farre, that Emperours, Kings, Queenes, and all Christian Princes, for all their supremacie, must backarie, and come after you; or else, it is not agreeable to good order of teaching? If ye teache in this order, it is such a lesson, that (I am a-fraide) some can not easilie learne it. But for my parte, I hope it is not of anie pride in you. Neuerthelesse, I tell you playnelie, as my friendes and bretheren, leaue it: for manie mislike it, and suspecte it shrewdely, if it be not of pride; yet, to be no orderlie kinde of Teaching, nor good and plaine dealing with Christian Princes.

But you say, it may be plaine to euery man, by this reason.

The Church of God was perfecte in all her Regiment, before there was any Christian Prince: Yea the Church of God may stand, and doth stande, at this day in most blessed estate, where the Ciuill Magistrates are not the greatest fauourers. By which it is manifest, that the Regiment and Government therof, dependeth not vpon the authoritie of Princes, but vpon the ordinance of God.

May it be plaine to euery man by this reason? Querie reason or argument, as it should be good and true, both for forme & matter: so it ought to be directed to the purpose, and to conclude the point that is to be proued. And then, to euery man it is a plaine reason.

What nowe is the point here to be proued?

It is not needfull nor agreeable to good order of teaching, to begin with intreating of the Supream authoritie of Christian Princes in Eccles. causes.

This then (beeing the point to be pꝛoued) must by necessarie consequence of the pꝛemisses, be plainly argued and set doꝛne in the conclusion: oꝛ else euerie man may plainly see, it is no plaine reason, nor needfull to be yeldd vnto, nor agreeable to good order of teaching; but either some intricate Sophistication, oꝛ some vnnecessarie conclusion. little oꝛ nothing pertainning to the purpose.

Plaine dealing (sayeth the pꝛouerbe) is a Jewell. Let vs therefore see this plaine reason, and the parts thereof, whether it conclude this point, oꝛ no.

The Church of God was perfect in all her regiment, before there was anie Christian Prince:

Yea, The Church of God may stande, and doeth stande at this day in most blessed state, where the Ciuill Magistrates are not the greatest fauourers.

What is the conclusion?

By which it is manifest, that the Regiment and Government thereof, dependeth not vpon the authoritie of Princes, but vpon the ordinance of God, &c.

Loe, howe plaine to euerie man, and howe agreeable to good order of teaching, in any figure and mode of Syllogisme this reason is framed, and how patte the conclusion of this reason, bittes the point to be pꝛoued, which they haue here so lustily auouched, may be plaine to euerie man by this reason.

A Learned
discourse.

What, will our Learned brethren here say? Tush, we meane not, in saying: it may be plaine to euerie man by this reason; to reason so strictly, according to the order of teaching in Logike: but we reason at large Rhethorically. This is (ye wotte) a Learned discourse, and therefore we are not bounde to make short conclusions, but according to our title, to shewe our Learning in discoursing on it.

Call ye this discoursing? It is a Discourse indeede, but of the courtest fashion that euer I saw. I know these Discourfers haue learning ynough, though they spare it here: yet if they should vtter it, I would bee loath, for my part, to contende with them.

The hurt of too much affection.

But see, howe affection in discoursing may carrie Learning and all quite a way, so farre from reason: that here neither in matter, truthe nor lie (which is principall) is remembred: nor in forme and manner, and good order of teaching is obserued; nor yet in the conclusion, the principall point is marked, but gone cleane from, whereunto all the reason should be leaneled.

Well, yet, since this is the best reason, and all, that here, oꝛ hereafter they haue, to make this matter plaine to euerie man: least perhaps in the partes, or in the conclusion, there might lie hidden some further matter, or reason, then they would open plaine to euerie man: let vs weighe the partes and conclusion better, and lay them more open, that euerie man may perceauie plainly, the plaine truthe, and full validitie of this reason. For this seemeth to be a great reason, and to haue many small reasons in it.

First, on this first and maior proposition of the same, the Church of God was perfect in all her regiment, before there was anye Christian Prince: although they make no direct conclusion thereon, yet they seeme to giue an argument, a priore, from the former, as pleading from the elder hande, by senioritie, and on that also proceeds to the greater perfection, and thereupon reason, as it were, in this manner.

Our brethren
arg. fr. 6 senioritie.

That which in the regiment thereof, was perfect before the other: that is to be treated vpon before the other.

But the Church of God was perfect in all her regiment, before there was anie Christian Prince:

What followeth hereupon but this?

Therefore the Church of God is to be treated vpon before Christian Princes.

But the question is not here betwixt the Church of God, and Christian Princes, whether of them shall first be treated vpon. For, whereas the name of the Church, is an integrall worde, and conteyneth the whole: and the Christian Princes are, though principall partes, yet but particular partes thereof, included in the whole: and so the question were, as if one should aske, whether is the man before the head, or the head before the man: they offer therefore herein an iniurie to Christian Princes, as seeming to contende with the whole, and so strined against themselves, being partes of the whole.

Our brethren
conclusion not in question.

And yet, if a man would make an Anatomie of the whole body, and beginne with the treatise of the head, as the principall part, though the head was not the first part that was formed, but the heart, or some other, and afterwarde the heade: yet, beginning with the head, and to treat first of the office and powers thereof, hee should not doe a thing disagreeable to good order of teaching. Or, in the description of a house, though the house was not perfect till all the partes were made: if hee treated first of the court, or of the hall, or of the roome, which perhappes were builded last: yet might hee in processe, orderly describe the whole house.

For our question is not heere, of anie part compared with the whole: but in the whole, of anie parte compared to another. For, as the Christian Princes are but partes of the Church of God: so these foure estates that claime the direction of all Eccl. matters in the Church, are but partes of the the Church also. So that, this first and Maior proposition, might haue bene lesse captious (as will appcare after in the viewe of the conclusion) and a great deale plainer: not to say, the Church of God was perfect in all her regiment: but, this kinde of gouernment: or, these only 4. estates in the Church, were Gouvernors, before there were in the Church of God any Christian Princes.

But because in this proposition, you include here these two things: the one that these foure Tetrarkes (vnder the name of the Church) were before anie Christian Princes: the other, that their regiment was in all pointes of regiment, a perfect regiment, before that Christian Princes had in the Church of God anie being at all: let vs therefore consider a litle better, either of these two things, both of what force they are in consequence, to strengthen your reason; and of what truth in substance, to giue credite to the matter thereof.

saide to be before another in di-
uers senses.

And first, for the force of the reason and argument, A Priore, admitting the case, that these foure Tetrarkes were the former: yet, sic Præ est multiplex: Tempore, Natura, Ordine, Honore: A thing is sayde to be before an-other, in diuerse respectes: eyther before it in time, or in the nature of the thing, or in the order of the place, or in the honour of the dignitie: we must looke to your tracke, howe ye confounde these things. For if ye make (as heere yee saie to doe) your reason for these Tetrarkes from Senioritie, that because they were in time before, therefore in the order of treating on them, they must be placed before: and hauing encroched thus farre: creepe yet further, that therefore also in dignitie, and honor, they must be set before, to make vp the perfection of the Churches Regiment. This must bee cut shorthe, and your Senior in time (presupposing he were so) must be bidden to leaue his peaching, and drawe backe with shame, to come after both in order of place, and in honour of regiment, for anie necessitie that he can claime, but to be Master Prior in his owne Cell, which is of time onely. So that Aristotles rule thereof is true: but euerie cocke on his owne dunghill: there let him crowe and crake, as fast as he will. And yet notwithstanding without exceptions.

reth not for-nour.

Antiquitie of time makes a iolie claime. Bonum, quò antiquius, eò melius. A good thing the more auncient, the better. Howe be it, this is not true in all good things. Neither doeth this rule so much respect the time, as the nature and continuance of those good things. So that, it is true in those good things, which eyther of their nature are not mutable, or their mutabilitie doeth better their state, and so the time is limited till they come to their perfection. For otherwise, in things that are the worse for wearing, or are past the periede of their ripeness: the former and the elder are the worse. And if the former in time be thus

and yet more, restrayned, in his owne kinde of foemenhip: When the former in time, will waie so proude of his birthright, that he must needs haue place in order, and preferment also in regiment, before all his younger brethren: I could shewe you not onely manie specialties and examples against it, but you can shewe no necessarie rule, to prescribe vpon it, that, that which was former in time, must alwaies haue the first place in treatie. Except the treatie be, to discribe the manner howe the thinges beganne. For though Moses, writing of Gods creation of the worlde, set downe the manner, and tell what was created the first day, when as yet other things were not created, and so the second and the third day, and all the residue, mankinde being created last of all: yet cannot we rightly say, y^e he, which would take vpon him to treatie eyther by writing or speaking of Gods works, or of the gouernment of his Church, or of God him selfe, which in euerie respect in nature, time, order, honor, & cause, is first and before all other thinges, is tyed to this order, so that God must bee first treated vpon: or else it is not a treatise agreeable to good order of teaching. Did S. Paule teach the Romanes amisse, when he sayd, Rom. 1. His invisible things, being vnderstood by his workes, through the creation of the worlde, are scene, that is, both his eternall power and godhead? Doth not Caluine beginne his institutions first with the knowledg of man, and so ascende to the knowledge of God? Had not Christe a number of Disciples first, out of whom afterwarde he chose his 12. Apostles? And yet doth not S. Paul 1. Cor. 12. reckon them by in this order, that God hath ordeyned some in the Church: as first Apostles, secondly Prophets, thirdly Teachers? And Ephes. 4. He therefore gaue some to be Apostles, and some Prophets, and some Euangelists, & some Pastors & Teachers? Yea, doe not your selues also fetch your Seniors pedegree so high, that ye make them to be Seniors in antiquitie of time, both to the Euangelists, and to the Apostles? And neuer thelesse in this your treatise ye place them after them: What, shall we say therfore: it is not agreeable to good order of teaching, thus to place the after: because in the Church of God, ye say, there was a regiment of the, before there were Euangelistes or Apostles?

If ye saye, ye stande not so muche of the placing of them, in respect of the Prioritie of the time, as of the dignitie: saying, that ye speake of perfection and of regiment, and therfore in time and honour also it is before them: and whie not then in order of place to haue the former treatie? yet soloweth this no more the the other. Is not God before al thinges, in all respectes? And yet first or last, by good order of teaching may be treated vpon. And as in the regiment of a mans life, though he first apprehend a thing with his senses, & his senses conueigh it to the intellectual powers: besides, that his senses be freshest when he is young & vnerpert, his science groweth after vpon long experience, when his senses decaye againe,

againe, his habites of vertues arise first on his actions precedent, and so little succedeth on his habites last of all, though in dignitie of honour first and chiefest: yet may anie man treating of these naturall and morall matters, pertayning to the regiment of mans life, eyther (per synthese) beginne with the partes, and so by little and little ioyn and knitte them altogether, till he come to the highest and make vp the whole: or beginne with the whole, and per analyfin resolute it and make (as it were) an Anatomie of all the partes and powers: and eyther beginne with the soule and the faculties thereof, and so come to the bodie, and the partes thereof: or beginne with the bodie, and so come to the soule: so that (which way so ever he procede) when he cometh orderly to any facultie or parte, he so set out the same, with the full power and perfect regiment of it, that no iniurie to anie facultie or part be offered, nor any confusion, by shuffling one into the office and regiment of an other. This rule therefore, that because it is first in time before another, it is in order to bee first treated vpon before an other: or, because other as yet were not, therefore that which was before, made a perfect regiment: is no perfect nor good argument. Which argument being grounded on so vncertaine and weak foundation: all that is built thereon is easily shattered.

The Papists argument a p. iore for traditions.]

The Papistes for the traditions of the Church which they call the vwritten worde, or veritie vwritten, vse the like argument against the authoritie of Gods written word, and veritie of the Scripture. The word was deliuered by tradition of preaching, before it was deliuered by writing: therefore, traditions are of no lesse authoritie, nor lesse to be beleued, then the written worde and holie scripture: yea, the Churches authoritie is aboue the scriptures, and is the iudge thereof. Thus doe the Papistes encroche from the time to the authoritie, as our brethren here doe.

The proposition vntue.

Howe, as this reason faileth, both for the Senioritie of time, and for stalling the order of place, and much more for claiming any priortie in dignitie, and most of all for inferring any such honour as perfection of regiment: so for the truthe of this proposition, that, The Church of God was perfect in all her regiment, before there was any Christian Prince: I can not yet see howe directly it can be iustified. For, if this were true: then there neede no regiment of Christian Princes at all. And howe then haue the Christian Princes anie authoritie at all in Eccl. causes? Or, if they haue anie, howe came they by it: if the Churches regiment were perfect, or the Church perfect in all her regiment, before there were anie Christian Prince? Or whereto serueth the Christian Princes supream authoritie in Ecclesiasticall causes, if not to make the regiment of the Church in better estate. For otherwise, the Church were as good without it, if she be no better in her Regiment by it, then she was before she had

The Churches regiment bettered
by Christian princes had it. But it is not so: both the church, and her regiment, is bettered by it. And hich your selves are faine in part to confesse, even heere in the conclusion of your argument: saying of God: who hath most mercifully and wisely so established the same (to wit, the churches regiment) that as with the comfortable aide of christian Magistrates, it may singulerlie prosper and flourish, &c. And againe, for the church craueth helpe, & defence of christian Princes, to continue and go fore-ward more peaceably and profitably, to the setting vp of the kingdome of Christ. Al- though heere ye will affirme, no more but this: yet, if there were no more, this is enough to overthrow your saying, that the church of God was perfect in all her Regiment, before there was any christian prince. For, if this comfortable aide, helpe, and defence, to continue and goe fore-ward, (in so great matters as) more peaceably and profitably to the setting vp of the kingdome of Christe, were taken away: then, the church of God, though (I graunt) it may continue, and against the aduersaries thereof preuaile: Yet should she not be perfect in al her Regiment, needing this comfortable ayde, help, and defence of christian Princes. And the setting vp of the kingdome of Christe, shoulde with more trouble and lesse profit, go fore-ward: yea, rather it should go back-ward, and be hindered, though it continue, and not so singulerly flourish and prosper, but decay.

The helpe, that Our Bretheren graunt, the Church receiveth by the Christ's Prince.

And is this so smal a matter in your eyes, (brethren) as that it nothing appertained to the Regiment of the church, but that craning all this of christian princes, and so without them, wanting the same, ye dare so boldly avouch, that she is perfect in all her Regiment without it? Doth she craue that she wanteth not? When is she a wanton. Doeth she want it? then is she not perfect in all her Regiment? Or doeth it not greatly pertaine unto her Regiment? Or, doe yee thinke, that this shall salve the matter, because the church may continue, and againste the aduersaries thereof preuaile without it? Our question now, is not of the substance and being of the church, but of the Regiment of it. Neither yet simply of the Regiment, but whether she were perfect in all her Regiment, before any christian princes were, or no. The church (I graunt) was then, and shall continue ever, and she had even then a Regiment also. Yea, and that Regiment in some respectes might be called perfecte for that time, while there were not such open professed christian princes to be foster fathers, and nourling mothers of the church, as (God bee prayed) now there are. For, concerning the Rectors of the church then, as they were then more perfect and singuler persons: so had they more perfect and singuler extra-ordinary offices, and withall, more excellent giftes to be able to governe it the better.

Our brethren straye from the question by them selves propounded.

ment (vnderstanding the same of all her ordinary externall Regiment, whereupon our question is,) which Regiment there was not then so perfectly come vnto: that rather their extra-ordinary gifts and offices of Apostles, Euangelistes, Prophetes, &c. were added for that time, to supply & furnish that part of the Regiment thereof, that was afterward to be made more perfect, concerning the ordinary state, by the access of the Christian Princes following.

Except therefore our Bzethren intende, utterly to shake off all Christian Princes, and account their supream authority in Church causes, if not now to be nought, yet to be nought woorth, and altogether unnecessary to the perfection of the Churches Regiment, how can this be any good argument to infirme it now, because (admitting this also were true) there were no Christian Princes then? & what do they inferre here-upon: that there is no more neede herein of Christian Princes now, then there was then, (presupposing that then herein there was no neede at all of them,) that were a very suspitious and perrilous conclusion: For, although the there were the lesse neede of them, because that neede was then other-wise supplied: yet, those supplies not continuing: and malice increasing, both of aduersaries without, and of Hipocrites within: and the giftes also that remaine decreasing: there is now farre more neede of the Christian Princes supream gouernment, to the perfecting of the Churches Regiment. And so, the state of the time for the regiment of the church differing: the argument of the Regiment, from the time then, to the time now, is defective. But if they needed then herein, the helpe of christian Princes, as they do now, then was not the church perfect in all her Regiment, other wise, than as it was extraordinarylie supplied, before the christian Princes helpe and comfortable aide, was added. Before which time, those temporary supplies comming to the church: as the Manna and other extraordinary helps, made the Iewes estate to flourish, prosper, and goe foreward in the Desertes, though they ceased when they came to the land of promise: So, the church might bee said to bee perfecte in al her Regiment, meaning that Regiment which was fittest for the state of her affliction and trauelles then: because she had such extraordinary helps. But this is no diminishing of that perfection (if it may so be called) that is requisite to the ordinary regiment of the Church, vnder the Supream Gouernment of Christian princes, albeit the offices and giftes of Apostles, Euangelists, Prophetes, &c. are ceased, no2 to be expected, no2 renewed.

Howe then, as the proposition, (admitting there were no christian princes) is not true, in affirming that the church of God was perfecte in all her regiment, before there was any Christian prince: vntlesse wee vnderstand that perfection of all her Regiment, which was appropriate to her, by the extra-ordinary prerogative, of that particuler age, and peculiar state thereof; & not extending it to all her ordinary Regiment that shoulde perpetuallie continue: So is this proposition likewise moste untrue, in this other parte, that there was not any christian prince then.

Albeit this also be no good argument: there were no christian princes then: & they were not reckoned among the Gouvernours of the church then: therefore they are not to be reckoned among the gouvernours of the Church now. Purther this argument The Apostle Rom. 12. 1. Cor. 12. and Ephes. 4. reckoneth vp onely in the church these 4. Pastors, Teachers, Gouvernours, and Deacons, as the perpetual offices, by which the Church of God may, according to his worde, be directed in all matters, which are commonly called Ecclesiastical: therefore Christian princes (as not mentioned) haue not to deale in the regiment of the same.

Which kinde of argumentes, I am the soxier that these our Brethren, in the earnestnesse of their zeale, shoulde vse: because, as Gellius Snecanus Phrysius noteth (from whome our Brethren seeme to take manye thinges in this their Learned discourse) all these reasons that our Brethren heere vse, are the very plaine reasons of the Anabaptistes, against christia Magistrates. Whose heresie sith our Brethren do vtterly detest: I would haue them vtterly detest, & in any case not to vse their reasons, which is nothing but to bolden & strengthen the Heretikes, & to breed suspicion to theselues.

Snecanus de Magistratu pag. 637. alleadgeth the Anabaptistes obiection, saying: Hucque trahunt quod Ephes. 4. &c. And to this they drawe, that (Ephes. 4.) the office of a Magistrate is not to be reckoned vp among the functions of the church. Whereunto he aunswereth in the nexte page, Quod autem, Ephes. 4. But as for that, Ephesians. 4. S. Paule doth not mention the office of a Magistrate, that is to bee supplied out of other places, to witte, Rom. 12. & 1. Corinth. 12. Whereas Rulings, and gouernmentes are reckoned vp, among the giftes of the church, and kinds of vocations: as is aboue declared. Otherwise many things ordeyned in the church to edification, should be condemned. Yea, euen as the Apostle Rom. 13. properlie treating of the ciuill Magistrates, mentioneth not the Bishops: so it is no maruell that Paule heere passeth over the mention of the Magistrate: Namelye, when heere hee reckoneth not vp the kinds of al offices, but specially and properly the functions onelic of the Ministers of the word. Whereby not onely we see, that this argument is the very argument of the Anabaptistes, and therefore not to be used of our Brethren: but also that those places, Romaines 12. & 1. Cor. 12. cited also by these our Brethren: where-as they vnderstande the woordes of the Apostle, Rulers and Gouvernours, onely for their supposed Seniors and thirde sorte of Tetrarks: those woordes are as well to bee vnderstoode of Christian Magistrates. Yea, if those woordes of Rulers and Gouvernours shoulde not bee so vnderstoode, to witte, for Christian Magistrates strates: many thinges ordeyned in the church to edification; shoulde be condemned: those wordes therefore being thus understood: both such ordinaunces in the Church ordeined by Christian Magistrats, are not to be condemned: and Christian Magistrates haue power to ordaine suche things. And the argument that our brethren here vse, that there were no Christian Princes, at that time, is also confuted.

But this is handled by Gellius more at large, pag. 555. To this purpose (saith he) serueth the likenesse and conueniencie of the Ciuill Magistrate, and the Ecclesiasticall Ministry, which fighte not one with the other, but from the beginning haue alwayes beene most neerely ioyned together, although the proprieties of them both, in the Church are distinguished. Euen as it is manifest by the example of Moses and Aaron. This order was distinctly obserued in the Church of GOD, in the time of godly King Iosaphat, 2. Chron. 19. Which thing of all other, is most euidentlie declared in the new Testament: Mat. 22. Where Christ saith, Giue vnto Caesar that that is Caesars; and to God, that that is Gods. Where-upon it is manifest, that God is no lesse the authour of the order of Magistracy among the faithfull, Rom. 13. then hee is of the order of the Churches offices, Ephes. 4. ver. 11. These things doth Paul most effectually confirme, while Rom. 12. ver. 8. and 1. Cor. 12. v. 28. he reckoneth vp Rules and Governments among the giftes of the Church, and among the offices thereof. For the proprietie of the wordes which the holy Ghoste, both in the Greeke and in the Latine tongue doth vse, not only signifieth especially the censure of the Eldershippe: but may be also generally stretched to the Rulings and Governements of all offices, as it is manifest by the declaration & conference of the Scripture.

Act. 27. v. 11, and Apocal. 18. v. 17. it is referred vnto Ship-maisters. Tim. 1. v. 9. 10. and the spirituall power and reuengement giuen of the Lorde, to the Apostles, for the edification of the church, against all contumacie: 2. Cor. 10. v. 6. 8. and the thirtieth chapter, the tenth verse. For in both places he useth these wordes, ἐξουσία and ἐκδίκησις insinuating by these selfe same wordes, that the distincte proprietie of power and re- uenge-

power and reuengement, (both wherby the Magistrate taketh vengeance of the contemner of the Lawes, and wherebye the Church hath yet in a readines reuengement and power against all contumacy) is of God, and to be reckoned among the offices of the Church. Sithe that therefore, the ordinaunce of the Ciuill power, and of reuengement, and the matter and the endes thereof, are no lesse of God, then the spirituall power and reuengement of the Ecclesiasticall ministry: & sithe these two distinct functions haue alwayes bene ioyned together in the Church, and the holy Ghost (reckoning vp rulings and gouernements, among the giftes and functions of the Church) doth generally comprehend all kindes of offices: yea, doeth rather expresse both the Ciuill and the Ecclesiasticall power and reuengement by the selfe same meanes: With what rashnesse would the aduersaries exclude that from the Church, except they will take this away withall? Besides this, not only the Scripture calleth the distinct Ciuill and Ecclesiasticall function, by the selfe same names, by reason of the coniunction and vse of them both in the Church: but also calleth the ministers of them both, Guides and Præsidentes: This is manifest, by the conference of the Testimonies Mat. 27. ver. 2. Act. 23. ver. 26. Hebr. 13. ver. 7. and 17. & 1. Pet. 2. ver. 14. for in these places the worde munus, is commonly attributed as well to the Ciuill Magistrate, as to the Ministers of the worde. To conclide, when Paule, 1. Cor. 12. v. 10. 28. & 29: And 1. Cor. 10. v. 5. & 6. doth reckon vp powers and reuengement against all contumacie, lifting vp it selfe against God (wherewith Peter strake down Ananias and Sapphira, Act. 5. and Paule strake blinde Elymas the Sorcerer) among the giftes and powers of the Church: who woulde exclude the powers of the Magistracie, ordeyned of God for the punishment of euil-doers, from his Church? Either of the powers is of God, as well this ordinary of the Magistrate, as that extra-ordinary: you see the reuengement of the wicked, to be both waies approued of God, although the properties of the offices & the forme of the reuenging are distinguished. It is not to the purpose, whether ye kil with sworde or with worde, (as saith Lactantius;) there is no difference, in the very substance of the reuengement: the end of either power is al one, to wit, the glory of God shyning in the righteous punishment of the euil. Yea, rather, since that temporary power of punishing the obstinat, hath ceased, after that kings are now made the nourishers & champions of the Church: Therefore the church of Christ hath so much more need of this ordinary power & reuengement of the Magistrate, wherby the good may be defended, & the euil punished. Lo Christian Reader, the scripture teacheth, that the Ciuill power hath alwayes bene ioyned with the ministry of the word in the Church.

The ciuill & Eccles. power alwaies ioyned in the Church.

arguments
confuted.

Thus saith Gellius Sinecismus (one of the p^rincipal writers at this day, of these our b^reth^ren, the Learned Discourfers sⁱde.) Wherein we see, how our b^reth^ren runne vpon the same flats, that the Anabaptistes do. Counting themselves (against the Princes supream authority in Ecclesiasticall matters) on the very selfe-same reasons, that those Heretikes doe. And the very same reasons, whereby Gellius confuteth the Anabaptistes, doe also directly confute these Learned discourfers. The Anabaptistes say these words, Gouvernours and Rulers, Rom. 12. and 1. Cor. 12. are to be vnderstoode onely of Ecclesiasticall Gouvernours and Rulers: and doe not our Learned discourfers anouche the same? But Gellius here verberately doth confute it. The Anabaptistes say, that in Christes and in the Apostles time, there was no Christian Magistrate, as Gellius setteth down their obiection, pag. 568. and what doth this differ, from this assertion of these our Learned discourfers: The Church of God was perfect in all her regiment, before there was anie Christian Prince? I doe not speake this, as though these our Learned discourfers did saunour of Anabaptistry, or faunour Anabaptistry wittinglie: God forbid. Howbeit in a heate zeale inconsideratlie, they runne vpon these quick sands. But, Iesus Piscator sapit. Gellius who sawe the state endangered, when this old supposed and new deuised Seniorie, was set vp: and that the Anabaptistes v^sed their arguments against the Christian Magistrates, was diuinen, not onely to w^ring these weapons out of their handes, but to breake them in peeces, as naughtie argumentes. And will our b^reth^ren now take vp the broken hy^pocrites, and fight with them, to put backe the treatise of the Christian Princes Gouernment?

Gellius con
futation of our bretherens argu-mentes.

Let Gellius therefore come forth, and plainely tell them, that this is no plaine reason to proue their matter by, but both a frivolous and untrue assertion, that the Church of God was perfect in all her Regiment, before there was any Christian Prince. No, no (b^reth^ren saith Gellius) it is nothing so, your saying is not agree-able to good order of teaching. The Scripture teacheth, that the Ciuill power hath alwayes bene ioyned with the Ministerie of the worde in the church. If it were alwayes ioyned, it was ioyned euen then, when our b^reth^ren anouche it was not onely disioyned: but that the one was perfecte, when the other was not at all.

But because this Gellius, a Phrygian in the Lowe Countries, is one of the chiefest writers of our b^reth^rens sⁱde, in those reformed Churches, of whome our Discourfers willed vs before, to embrace that moste be-tiffull order of Ecclesiasticall Regiment, which God so manifestlie doth bless and prosper in our neighbours handes; and heere they remember vs againe, that the Church of God doth stande at this day, in moste blessed estate, where the Ciuill Magist. are not the greatest fauorers:

it is good therefore, that our brethren should see, both how they are troubled with Anabaptistes, among these our neighbours, where this order of Ecclesiasticall Regiment, so much extolled by our brethren, is set up: And to see the iudgements of our brethrens best favorites, and most experienced in these matters, how cleane contrary it is, to these our learned, (but not experienced,) discourfers iudgements.

Our neighbours state commended before so much by our brethren, see how it is troubled with the Anabaptists.

Whereby our learned brethren may learne, not onely to make better reasons, but much better, and with more reason, to waite wiser herein, with this Gellius, and rather vse their reasons to beat downe the Anabaptistes: then to vse, such as the Anabaptistes vse, to beat back the christian Princes. And good brethren marke the reasons of this Gellius well, and ye shall finde them fully to aunswere your reasons in this matter. Gellius still proceeding against the Anabaptistes, beatech especially on these points that, the Church and the faith, of the olde and new Testament, is but one and the same. pag. 559. That there is one and the same doctrine of both the conenants: aswell concerning the article of Magistrates, and controuersie of punishing the euill, or vse of the sworde, as concerning the morall workes of Gods Lawe. pag. 560. Whereupon hee discourseth by particuler collations of the olde and new Testament: how, not onlie God in them both, is shewed to be the authour of the Magistrate, but how the like thinges are required of the Magistrate in both estates: how both Testaments direct the Magistrate to one ende: how both Testaments giue Magistrates like authority in punishment: how all manner of persons, aswell Ecclesiasticall as Ciuill, were and are subiecte to the Prince in both estates: and how euen from the beginning of the world, alwayes the Magistrates authoritie was, to see, that the Lawe of God be in all points maintayned: which authority is not diminished by Christe, no not one iota. pag. 562.

After the proues of all this, hee concludeth thus in the 565. page. Non ergo noua, &c. Therefore, there is no new and diuerse doctrine deliuered of Christ: but the doctrine of either Testament is one and the same, agreeing with the Lawe of nature, engrauen in Adam euen in his creatiō, and at length set forth in the Tables of the tenne commaundementes. Yea, let the aduersaries shewe, that Christ hath taught any thing, which is not extant, either in expresse wordes, or in consequence of the Scripture, in the old Testament: not in respect of all things done, but as pertaining to this controuersie, and to the rule of life: and we, will yeeld. The extra-ordinary examples of Moses, Elias, &c. and other peculier doings of God, as was that also of Peter, Act. 5, and the change of the circumstances of the policy of Moses, do not preiudice the general law of God.

There is therefore no difference betweene the faithful of the olde Princes from the beginning. and new testament, so farre forth as appertayneth to the reason of iustifying, and of living, saue that, certaine in these last daies, beeing louers of them-selues, glorious, and prowde, 2. Tim. 3. Dispile Abraham and other godliemen in respect of them-selues; as though (to saye no worse of them) they were but rude children.

The state of the old Testament and new all one.

And so Gellius knits vp all this point out of S. Paule 1. Cor. 10. from the examples of punishment then, to be admonitions to vs now, saying: Thou seest heere (Gentle Reader) that, either the punishment of the euill is not together with the policie of Moyses abrogated, but abideth perpetuallie: Or else these examples of punishments for our admonition, are of Paule naughtily applied: especiallye when the same were not immediatlie of God inflicted vpon the Israelites: but by Moyses, as ech-one of them are read of, in their places. To the which purpose, are to be applyed the examples of Gods vengeance against Ananias and Sapphyra: Act. 5. and Elymas the forcerer, Act. 14. which, although they be extra-ordinary, yet they teach, that God also in the newe Testament, would haue sinnes punished with bodily punishment.

Of the extraordinary power of punishing where they wanted the ordinary.

Thus doth Gellius shew, that, as the state of the Magistrate still remained one in all times, before the coming of Christ, and after perpetually: so, euen at that time when the Apostles liued, they extraordinarily did exercise an extraordinary supply of the Magistrats authority for punishing. And S. Paule brought in the examples of the Israelites punishments inflicted by Moyses extraordinarily, to the Corinthians in those dayes, when the chiefe and ordinary Magistrates, ouer them, were not Christian princes.

Here vpon Gellius proceeding to especiall arguments, among other cometh to the Anabaptistes obiection, of this selfe-same reason that our brethren in this Learned discourse doe urge: That the Church of God was perfect in all her regiment, before there was any Christian prince, saying: pag. 568.

The Anabaptists obiection.

But they object, that in the time of Christe, and of Paule, there was no Christian Magistrate, Ergo: &c.

I answer. The authoritie of the Magistrate is not therefore weakened, albeit in the time of Christe and of Paule, Emperours and Kings set in high estate, were aliens from the faith. For, the higher power tooke not then her, beginning from the vnbeleuing Gentiles vnder the newe Testament or in the time of Paule: but euen from the verie beginning of the worlde it was ordained of God himselfe, and approued of Christ and his Apostles: as appeareth by that aboue declared. Yea indeed, where Paule doth say, the powers are ordeyned of GOD, hee not onelie respecteth the Magistrates of the Gentiles in his tyme: (as most of all the first institutio of God:) in the Church of the Patriarks and and the Israelites: expressly signifying, that one and the same ordinance is yet ratified vnder the newe Testament, and that God is aswel the Lord of the Gentiles as of the Iewes. Neither yet to this daye are the people of all the worlde lesse gouerned of him, than in times paste Israel was. For, the foundation of the ordinaunce of God beeing layde, Rom. 13. the vse of the same, is withall established.

Moreouer, heere lurketh a fallacion, whereby, vnder pretence of part, the whole is denied. For it is false that no godly persons or such as feared God, did execute the office of a Magistrate in the new testament, as by the example of the Centurion, &c. wee may heereafter perceauce. Besides this, the aduersaries heere do stumble at that fallacie, whereby they snatch at the causes which are accidentall, for those that are necessarie: and whereby, for the vices of men, seruing the Prince of darknesse in the time of Pauls, they condemne the thing ordeyned, which is good and holie. Might not by the same reason, all honest kindes of life be condemned? yea, the Magistracie in the Church of Israell, for certaine wicked Kings whom God would haue reign, to punish the sinnes of his people, might be improued in the godlye Kings that followed. We must therefore of necessity distinguish the matter it selfe from the persons. Nor subtilly confounde the good ordinaunce of God with the infidel men, that executed the office of the Magistrat in Pauls time. The power both of the old & new Testament, is one and the same: which, as it dependeth not on the dignity of men, but on the highest: Sap. 6. v. 4.

Rom. 13. so, it is not vitiated by their indignity, or by circumstances of time and places. Moreouer those things, that are separated in time, are not by and by in the matter it selfe, and in the nature of their definition diuerse. Many things may be done agreeable to Gods word, whereof no examples in Pauls time are extant. Otherwise the credit and authoritie of the New Test. should be weakened, because the new Test. was not yet set downe in writing in Pauls time. Yea, it had not bene lawful to haue translated the scripture in the mother tongue. Besides, that Pauls according to the letter, maketh no expresse mention of Schooles, &c. Also, the common aduersaries do not yet baptise the infants, of the faithfull. And manie that yet are louers of them-selues, but without charity, & not regards of their bounden dutie, wil not keepe the night watch, with the residue of the Citizens: who will therefore anowe that they ought not to do these things? we must distinguish the Law it selfe, from the factes of men, neither is iudgement made of the whole, vnder pretence of the part.

If againe they demaunde, how the wicked Magistrate, such a one as in the old time Nabuchadnezzar was: and as there was at Rome, in the time of Pauls: may be called the good ordinaunce and minister of God: Or how the giftes of the holie Ghoste, as the care of Peace, of honestye, of godlinesse, can haue place in them: I aunswere, we must distinguish the matter by it selfe, from the person: and the lawfull from the vnlawfull vfe. For, the vices of the men are not to be imputed to the order. Moreouer, the giftes of God are diuerse, of the which, some are common, as well to the euill, as to the good: as miracles, Matth 7. externall peace, fertilitie, &c. For God suffereth his Sunne to arise, both vpon the good and vpon the euil. And heereunto Mariage and Magistracie may be referred. The substance of which things by it selfe, (as the good ordinance of God,) we must distinguish frō the vice of mē. The question betwixt our aduersaries and vs, is not of the persons, or of the abuse of the Magistracie: but of the very matter it selfe. Which as it is not vitiated by the impietie of the Gentiles in Pauls time: so, most commodiouslye may it, and ought, to bee administred of a Christian. To conclude, it maketh nothing for the aduersaries, nor hindreth the godly which execute the office of a Magistrate, that Nebuchadnezar is called the seruauant of god. Hier. 25. For, albeit the euill Magistrate also be of god (in respect of the Diuine ordinaunce) notwithstanding, the malice of man is not therefore to be imputed to the order it selfe. But of necessity, we must distinguish the persons, from the offices instituted of god. Heere, the aduersaries stumble on the fallacion of composition, and on the fallacion of the accident: (as also in that sentence Rom. 13.) wherby they confound the persons of the wicked & their vices, with the ordinaunce of god. Nebuchadnezar is not absolutely called the Seruauant of god, but in a certaine respect, to wit, of the iudgement of god, as it were a scourge, wherewith the sinnes of the Israelites were visited. But Paul calleth the Magistrate, the minister of god simplie. Yea, he calleth him also a good ordinaunce.

Moreouer, if Nebuchadnezar, and the heathen Magistrate, bee called the seruauant and Minister of god, to whome the godly were compelled to obey: much more therefore, euen by the comparison of the lesse to the greater, the godly, executing the office of a Magistrate, are GODS Ministers, to whome we owe obedience, according to Paul, 1. Tim. 6. vef. 1. 2. would god all would heere marke the venome of the olde serpent, howe much more wee endline rather to rule, and to abuse the Christian liberty, than to obey. Last of all, Nebuchadnezar is not reprehended in the Scripture, in respect of his Magistracy, but in respecte of his malice, &c.

The necessi-
tie of a Magistrate among Christians.

Lo, (gentle Reader) out of these thinges, one of these two followeth of necessity: either there ought to be a Magistrate among the Christians, and that they may administer their Magistracie: Or els Paul did amisse in writing to the Romaines of the matter. Whether of these 2. shall wee beleue? The Apostle saith, the Magistracie is of God: the aduersaries denie, that a Christian may execute this ordinaunce of god: Is it not lawfull for a Christian to be of god? Yea, to bee good, and to bee gods Minister? See, whyther pertinacy, and partialitie will carry men awaie. The aduersaries exclude Christian Princes, that fauour not Anabaptistry, from saluation: when they them-selues are not afrayed, to exercise among themselves, the office of a Magistrate, and to ioine it with Faith. Did not god commit vnto Moyse, and to Esdras (as to the Politique Magistrate) the Libell of Diuorcement, and matrimoniall controuerfies to bee decided? Wherefore, doe you take vpon you the separation of those that are married, for the cause of Fornication, and and of departure made from the infidels: yea, and that also, the iudgement of Ciuill controuerfies among your selues: fith that these things (according to your saying) haue no place in the Church of Christe, nor can stande together with Faith? Trulie one of these twaine followeth of necessitie heere-upon: either the office of the Magistrate ought to haue place among them, (as the onely Christians:) or else they thruste their sickle into an-others harvest, and arrogate to them-selues, that, that properlie belongeth to the Magistrate.

Lo, (gentle Reader) thou seest the aduersaries, contrary to their own doctrine, turne indeede the office of the Magistrate, to their own commendation, which in Christian Princes they discommend. As though that were lawfull for them, whiche vnto other were not lawfull. Not that the thing is diuerse, but because the men are diuerse. Markest thou not heere in the aduersaries the venome of the olde serpent, and the seditious spirit of the Iudaicall Rebellion, howe it enclineth more to Ruling, than to obeying? God requireth men, that are valiaunt, fearing God, louers of the truth and of righteousness, which hate filthie lucre, and are prudent, to be the ministers of God. Exod. 18. ver. 21. Deut. 1. ver. 13. & 2. Chr. 19. Psal. 2. v. 10. &c. also Rom. 13 v. 4. Whether of these men are the fitter to execute these properties of Magistrates: those that are straungers from Christe and from his church, as the Iehusites & Cananites (to whom the aduersaries compare at this day the Magistrate:) or those that are true Christians and beleuers?

Paule Rom. 13. & 1. Peter. 2. do concordantly teach, that the Magist. is Gods minister, ordeyned for the praise of those, that do well: and for the punishment of those that do ill. To this accordeth Paule 1. Tim. 2. teaching that we must pray for all manner persons, placed in highe authority, that we may lead a quiet and honest life, with all godlines. Out of which places conferred together, we see in breefe the Magistrates office is to minister vnto god: the parts of whose Ministry, consist generally in the custody of both the Tables of the tenne Commaundements, and first in the care of Religion.

Heereupon the volume of the Lawe is commended vnto the King. Deut 17. and the execution, against the despisers of religion: Heereunto appertaine the examples of Moses, David, Iosue, Ezechias, &c. and 1. Tim. 2. godlinesse properly respecteth the worship of God: and then in maintaining the publike peace, as well in defending the good, as in punishing the euill: and thirdlie, in honesty of life, whereby euerie one performes his dutie, 1. Tim. 2. These finall causes therefore of instituting the Magistrate being set downe: with what boldnesse take they awaye the vse thereof, out of the Church of Christ? Or els, doe they dreame of such a Church, as no man hath euer seene? And if the office of the Christian Magistrate, and custodie of the tenne commaundementes were taken awaie: What I pray you would remaine in the worlde, but meere Libertinisme, and a licentiousnesse of all mischiefes? If the aduersaries were not blinded in their owne selfe-loue and boldnesse: they would easily learne this, not onelie in them-selues, but also in the examples of the faithfull, both of the olde and newe testament. For if the godly haue no manner of neede at all of the Magistrate: Why doeth Moses complaine of the Israelites (who did eate of the same spirituall meate, and drinke of the same spirituall drinke that we do) Howe can I labour alone, and beare your burthen and contentions? Why were struiings and contentions among the faithfull Corinthians? Doe our aduersaries (holier then they) want Darnel and euill doers?

The godlye
haue neede
of the Mag.

But if they obiekt, that albeit these things may be graunted, concerning the latter table of the Lawe: yet the former table properlie respecteth conscience and faith, ouer which the Magistrate hath no power, but God alone.

I aunswere: the aduersaries are heere deceaued, and do deceaue: in that they exclude out of the former Table of the Law, outwarde Idolatry, and prophanation of the name of G O D, and of the Saboth, and the punishment of these things. Sith that this former table of the Law, comprehendeth in one and the same nature of definition, not only the inwarde worship of faith, and the Idolatrie contrary thereunto: but also the outwarde workes and punishments of them both. As, when the Magistrate punisheth periury: God testifieth, that he accurseth the soule that reuerenceth not his name. But the Magistrate when hee punisheth, properly respecteth the outwarde woorke, although hee be not able to change the minde.

These thinges orderly considered: it were rather to bee wished, that there were no common-wealth without a true Christian Magistrate: that the same should bee excluded from the Church of God. For, who is able better to fulfil the conditions of a Magistrate, before already noted, or the office and endes pertayning to him, then is a Christian? In so much that if we shall iudge aright of the giftes of God, we muste confesse that it is a mighty benefite of God, when he giveth a godly and a Christian Magistrate vnto his Church. Is it not lawfull for a Christian to be of G O D, and to administer the Ordinaunce of God? Is it not lawfull for a faithfull person to defende the godlie, to punishe the euill, to exercise iustice, to defende the Widowes, and the Father-lesse, and to be the Minister of God? Rom. 13. Is it not lawfull for a Christian, to preserve the publike tranquillitie, with all godlinesse and honesty? 1. Tim. 2. By these works God is glorified. And the Prophetes and Apostles exhort the faithfull thereunto. Therefore, the Christian Magistrates office beeing taken away, all the former vertues are taken away with all.

With what rashnesse therefore (O man) darest thou exclude the Magistrate from God, by reason of the vse of the sworde, whome Paule euen for the same reason calleth Gods Minister? Yea, when Paule sayeth, Wilt thou not feare the power? do well. He signifieth that it is a manifest testification of an euill conscience, to dispise the Magistrate. Christe and the Apostles acknowledged the Heathen Magistrate to be Gods ordinaunce, and gaue honour vnto him. It is maruell therefore, that the aduersaries will not admit, that a Christian may exercise that diuine ordinaunce. Especially, seeing that Paule wished after holy Iudges, & preferreth them before Infidels: Yea, and expressely teacheth, that the Saints shall iudge the world. 1. Cor. 6. ver. 1. 2. Heer-unto serueth that that Paule 1. Tim. 6. ver. 1. 2. saith: Let seruants: whosoever bee vnder the yoke, esteeme their Maisters worthy of al honour, & those that haue faithfull Maisters, let them not despise them, in that they bee their brethren: but so much the rather serue them, because they are faithful and beloued. These things teach, and exhort saith the Apostle. Woulde to God, the aduersaries would teach also those that are theirs, in like manner, and enforce these things with exhortations. If Christe and his Apostles yeelded thus muche vnto an Heathen Magistrate: howe muche more is due vnto a Christian Magistrate? If the ende of the Magistrate bee, to haue the care of Religion, and to defende good men: with what reason do the aduersaries exclude the Magistrate from the proprietie of Religion, and of good? If they describe the office of the Magistrate, onely by Politrique constitutions: I pray you, what difference make they betwene the Turkish, and the Christian Magistrate? If the office of the Magistrate be not necessary to the Church: Why did Paule and Peter write of that matter to the faithfull, that were subiect to the discipline of Christ.

Wherefore had the aduersaries rather, to dispise rule and to rayle on dignities, by comparing them vnto Ielusts, &c, according to the Apostles

And by well dooing to bridle the ignorance of madde men, and to honour the King? With what boldnes call they Magistrates, murtherers: because they kill homicides, and the transgressors of the Lawe? Which (Magistrates) the holie Ghost calleth Gods; and the Ministers of God, Psal. 82. Ioh. 10. Rom. 13.

No man in very deede will denie, but that al men (none excepted) are subiecte vnto their ordinary Magistrates, and may be compelled to render vnto them, that they owe them, &c. Rom. 13. ver. 1. &c. If obedience be godlie: the vse of the sworde is also godly. These things of necessity followe one another mutually: to be subiect to the Magistrate, and render that we owe them; doe generally comprehend all things without the which, the sworde of the Magistrate, by it selfe alone, cannot be borne. It followeth therefore, that the subiectes owe obedience in the vse of the sword vnto the Magistrate, to defend the good, and punish the euill, and that for conscience. See, the aduersaries make a matter of conscience, to obey the Magistrat in punishing the euill: But Paul saith, wee ought to doe the same, euen for conscience. Vnto whome agreeth Peter, saying: for the Lorde, or for the Lords will. Lo, whether of these shall we beleue: the holy Ghost speaking by the Apostles, or the aduersaries?

Certaine of the Proph. & Apostles exercised also, the office of the Magistrate.

If anie man shall say, we must more obey God, than man: Paul answereth: the Magistrate, and the vse of the sworde, for the punishment of Malefactors, is the ordinaunce of God: and therefore heere, we owe obedience not to man, but vnto God him-selfe. Furthermore, no man can serue two Maisters, Mat. 6. Neither God at anie tyme hath commanded, that we should obey wicked constitutions: but all the godly of the olde and newe Testament: the Prophetes, Christe, & the Apostles, haue not onely serued God and the Magistrate both together: but certaine also of them haue exercised the office of the Magistrate. Heb. 11. &c. Whereupon most forcibly it followeth, that to be a Christian: or to serue and to exercise the office of a Magistrate, and to punish the euill, are not contrary, neyther fight with the faith in Christ, but rather are ordeined one vnder the other, which may both without any damage to Christian godlinesse, consist together in one man. And this is euident (among other, by the examples of Melchisedech, Heli, and Samuel: who were Priestes and Magistrates both at once. Yea, God did not distinguish those two offices, for that they fought one with an-other, but that one man was scarce sufficient to exercise both, &c.

Why, God distinguished these Offices.

All this and much more writeth this Gellius Phrysius, in his answers to the Anabaptistes obiection, who made this one of the cheefest of their argumentes, that in Christes and *Paul*es time, there were no Christian Magist.

Magistrates. Neither do I set downe all this, as though these writers of this Learned discourse were so farre gone, as these Anabaptistes, to denie that there ought to be any Christian Princes: But rather to give them warning to take the greater heed, that they come not too neere them, either in whole or in parte: nor strengthen their error, and weaken the Princes state, and breede themselves suspicion: by using the selfe-same argumentes, that they vse. It is an olde saying, He that will no euill do: Must do nothing that longes therto. For, if they doe, loe here, how (wee neede not) one of the chiefe of their owne side, among these our neighbours, whom they befoze so highly commended vnto vs, will not spare to set againste these our Brethren also. Neither yet doeth Gellius Snecanus Phrysius end this matter thus, but (as it were) sets afresh againe, vpon this proposition, that the Church of G. O. D. was perfect in all her Regiment, before there was anie Christian Prince. To improue this further, Snecanus doeth enter into the fowrthe parte of his treatise againste the Anabaptistes, saying.

Pag. 599.

It nowe remaineth, that hauing opened the fore-said rules of the Scripture (taken from God, the onelie authour of the Magistrate in both the Testamentes: from the agreeable proposition of the Ciuill and spiritual power in the Church; fro the Church and the doctrine being one in both the Testa. and from the examples of punishments declared by Paul for our admonition: and also from the definition, nature, or proprietie and final causes of the Magistrate, and the office of the subiects: & at the length from the special sentences of Christ and his Apostles) we should nowe set downe vnder these thinges certaine liuely examples, that that which is in sentences set before the minde, maye in a certayne manner be euidentlie layde before the senses, by examples. Firste, thou hearest Mat. 8. That the Centurion at one and the same tyme together, was both a Minister of the military affayres of the Romaynes, and had so great faith, as Christ at that time founde not in Israell. Ver. 9. 10.

The exāple of Christian Magistrats, in Christs & the Apost. times.

Also Ioseph of Arimathia is called a disciple of Iesus, who looked for the kingdome of God, who was also a Senator (exercising iudgement against the wicked, and those that were guilty of death, as appeareth by that, that the Scripture mentioneth, and excepteth him, that he consented not to the death of Christe) beeing a good and a righteous man, Mar. 27. 57. Mar. 15. 43. Luc. 23. 50. &c.

Moreover, Theophilus vnto whome Luke dedicateth his Gospell, was a Prince and gouernour of some certaine Region, as it appeareth by the propertie of the Epithete, The most excellent: which is a title agreeable to men that are Princes. For, Acts 23. ver. 26. it is attributed vnto Felix. And in the 26. chapter likewise, the 25. verse. vnto Festus, either either of them being the Ruler of Iudea, &c. Furthermore, Nichodemus one of the chiefe Rulers of the Iewes, instructed by Christ him-selſe in the Faith: 10. 3. remayned in his vocati- on and his Magistracy, as appeareth 10. 7. v. 50. Neither did he for the same cause forsake Christ, as it is evident, by his officiousness of Christs buriall. 10. 19. ver. 39. Besides this, in that royall Courtier Ioan, con- uerted by Christ vnto the Faith. And in the Eunuche that was the chiefe gouernour of Candace Queene of the *Ethiopian*s, Act. 8. baptized by Phillip. And also in the Pro-consull Sergius Paulus, Act. 13. &c. Also Cornelius, Act. 10. ver. 1. &c. who also is called a Centurion, and a godlie man, and one that feared God: who also continually prayed to G. O. D. which coulde not be done without Faith in the Messias, (except a man will absurdly say, that all before the time of Christ were without faith, when as this man especially is called, one purified of God, and accepta- ble vnto him, ver. 1. and 3. &c.)

Heere I passe in silence the example of the chiefe rulers of Asia: For, who will affirme, that they being the friendes of Paul, were without the knowledge of Christ? Act. 19. ver. 30 &c. To these aboue named, com- meth the example of Erastus the procurator of the citie. Rom. 16. ver. 1. Exercising the office of a Magistrate, and reckoned by the holy Ghost, among the Faithful. Yea, and the example also of the Saints who were of the house of Cæsar, Phil. 4. v. 22, &c.

Thus we se most euidentlie, even by the testimony at large of this one man, as one of the principall of their owne side, (to presse them with more) how this reason that heere these Learned discourſers stand so much vpon, that the churche of God was perfecte in all her Regiment, before there was any christian Prince, is not only one of the principallest reasons of the Anabaptistes, (whom they, I hope, no lesse than we detest) albeit in this affectionate zeale, they do in so many pointes as we may hereby ge- ther, even in a manner iutte with them (though binaways) to iustifie the authority of Christian Princes: but also how weake and of no forces at all this their reason is. And with what a multitude of far better reasons, yet, as the Apostle saith, with a cloude of wittnesſes, it is beaten downe. And that, (which is most of all to be respected) how greatly they overshoot the- selues in the truth thereof. Neither doth it auaille them to say, that none of these were Emperours: For, it smiteth the cause sufficientlie, that they were Princes, or at leaste, anie kinde of Magistrates. If they re- plye, that yet they did exercise no authority & gouernment in the church but liued as priuate persons among the Christians: albeit this is also the refuge of the Anabaptistes; yet howe can this be proued? Which if it were true, might make indeede, not colour, but groundes of reason for the Anabaptistes.

But as those Princes, were converted into Christianitie: so (no doubt) they retyred their estates still, and the Christians so acknowledged and called them, as before. And if they submitted themselves before to their authoritie, while those Princes were Infidels: that we thinke, that either the Princes did not much more thinke themselves bounden to oversee (so far as their abilitie stretched,) all the these especiall points of their charge, in the maintenance of both the Tables of Gods Law, Peace, honestie, and godlinesse, to be maintayned among the Christians: or that the Christian Subiectes did not now much more honour them, obey them, & commit the Government of their controuersies to them, when after they remayned among them being Christians, and retyred still their Governments being Princes? But Gellius also saith somewhat herunto, Page 634. Moreover they obiekt that Paule 1. Cor. 6. Forbad the faithfull, that they should not hale one another, before the iudgment seates of the vnfaithfull. I answer, Paule did not absolutely, and by it selfe, condemne here the iudgements ordained of God. Deut. 16. & 17. si the Paule himselfe without any reuenging of himself, appealed to the iudgement of Cesar. Nether forbidde he those things to the Christians in generall, but reprehendeth the Corinthians, in respect of circumstances, & of their vices. As those, who prosecuted the extreme rigour of the law against their neighbor, & that before infidel Iudges. Yea rather, they themselves endamaged their brother. Whom notwithstanding, he did not by & by therefore excommunicate; much lesse did he disallow the function of the Magistrate, in respect of it selfe, or denied that it might be administred of the Christians: but rather contrariwise, permitted vnto them Arbiters and Iudges, & wished that the Magistrate were a christiā, in that he requireth holy Iudges. And this he clearly setteth out by a comparison from the more, to the lesse, affirming that the Saintes shall Iudge the world, yea and the Angels. Lo (Christian Reader) here the controuersie is most evidently decided. The aduersaries require an vnjust, and Infidell Magistrate. Paule would haue a Saint, and a beleeuing person, to be appointed. If Paule permitted Arbiters to be chosen out of the faithfull, in deciding controuersies among the brethren, and saith that those, (albeit the basest of the faithfull,) are fitter than the infidell Iudges: how much more then are the greatest faithfull ones, & wise ones, fit persons to be set in the publike Iudgement seates. Besides, that the Apostle expressly vnder-hand, setteth out a shew, wherein, whensoever better times should shine vpon them, those Iudgement seates should be brought into a more happie order, and more holy Iudges should be ordayned. For what-soeuer is graunted to an vnfaithfull: can much lesse be denied to a faithfull person. Howsoever it be, Paule wisheth not (as doe the aduersaries) Infidell, but holie and faithfull Iudges. Yea, except the Iudge be be holle, he can scarce with good conscience before God, be a Iudge. Here-unto we may applie, that S. Paule wisheth Kinge Agrippa to be a Christian. Whereby we perceiue, that wheresoeuer anie of these Christian Princes were at that time among the Christians, they had no small authoritie, in decision of such controuersies as rose among them. Neither onely in titles of lands, breaches of peace, ciuill cases, and other wooldly matters: but also in matters pertayning to the Regiment of the Church and Ecclesiasticall: as were the matters, for the which Saint Paule so often pleaded against the Iewes, euen before such Iudges as were not Christian. And al-be-it, Actes 18. When Paule was accused before Gallio by the Iewes, saying: This fellowe perswadeth men to worshipp God contrarie to the lawe; as Paule was about to open his mouth, Gallio sayde vnto the Iewes: If it be a matter of wronge, or an euill deede (O ye Iewes) I would according to reason maintayne you. But if it be a question of wordes, and names, and of your lawe: looke ye to it your selues, for I will be no Iudge of these thinges: Yet Paule, when he came before Felix, and he also woulde heare the plea betwene his aduersaries and him, Actes 24. After that the Gouernours had beckned vnto him, that he should speake, hee answered: I doe the more gladlie aunswere for my selfe, for as much as I knowe, that thou hast bene of manie yeares a Iudge vnto this Nation, perhaps thinking that in all that time, hee might (as Cornelius and others) haue attayned to the knowledge of God, and so bene the fitter Iudge of these matters.

And although he was but a corrupt Iudge, both in affection and religion, and Festus also that succeeded him: yea, Nero the Emperour was worst of all: yet, because he occupied the roome of him, that should haue bene a better, yea, the highest Iudge in earth vnto him, albeit Paul were himselfe an Ecclesiastical person, & an Apostle and one of the chiefest pillars in the Church of God: yet he appealed euen to Neros Iudgement seate. And when Festus brought him forth, to pleade before Agrippa, he so reioyced of it, that he sayth, Act. 26. *I thinke my selfe happie (King Agrippa,) because I shall aunswere this daye before thee, of all the thinges whereof I am accused of the Iewes. Chiefely, because thou hast knowledge of all customes and questions, which are among the Iewes. Wherefore, I beseech thee, heare me patiently, and when he was euen in the chiefest point of his plea, concerning the resurrection of Iesus Christe, ver. 24: As he aunswered thus for himselfe, Festus (who had little skill of those matters) sayde with a loude voyce: Paule, thou art besides thy selfe, much learning doeth make thee madde. But he sayde, I am not madde (O noble Festus) but I speake the wordes of truth and sobernesse. For the king knoweth of these thinges, before whom also I speake boldly, for I am perswaded, that none of these thinges are hid from him. For this thing was not done in a corner. O King Agrippa, be-

believest thou the Prophets? I knowe that thou beleeuest. Then Agrippa sayde vnto Paule: almost thou perswadest mee to become a Christian. Then Paule saide, I would to God, that not only thou: but also all that heare me to day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these bondes. So that, if Paule did thus submit himselfe vnto them, in the decision of these Ecclesiasticall controuersies, hoping they had bene more faithfull Iudges, than they were: did not other Christians to other Princes that were in those Christian Princes, submit themselves also, to the decision of such their Ecclesiasticall controuersies, arising among them? And though S. Paule missed in the person, yet he wished those persons, to haue bene such, as he hoped, and as they ought to haue bene. But (as Gellius saith) if they were not such, yet this expressely insinuateth a shewe vnto vs, of those better Iudges that should come after, and better employ those places if they abused. So that, although no Prince had been good or Christian at those dayes: yet this argument had not been good nor Christian. And there being (no doubt) euery at that time, some, (if not many) it is not only no good argument, but an vntrue, and wrong assertion to ground vpon, that the Church of God was perfect in all her regiment, before there was any Christian Prince.

But would God, these our brethren would haue made the matter no worse against Christian Princes, then that they had not yet bene come in to the Church of God. But it followeth at the harde heeles, with so heate a pursute, euery to the estate at this day, saying: yea the Church of God may stande and doth stande at this day, in most blessed estate, where the ciuill Magistrates are not the greatest fauourers.

What haue we heres? Lo, who would haue looked for such speeches at the handes of our brethren, & in so Learned a discourse of the Churches government? Yet was it much better sayde before, speaking of the state thereof in the Apostles times: that the Church of God was perfect in all her Regiment before there was any Christian Prince. For that might yet haue bene restrayned to that time, considering the speciall prerogatiues, of that age, to haue supplied the want of Christian Princes. Notwithstanding it was not euery then so perfect, but that S. Paule wished the Regiment thereof to haue bene better. And that better euery by Christian Princes. Else, had he neuer had such troubles, nor needed to haue wished, that Agrippa, Festus, Bernice, &c. had bene Christians: nor haue appealed vnto Nero, nor haue had such hinderances in his function. But when these our bretheren, thinking to haue carried this cleare away, will nowe make a generall rule thereon, that the Church may stande perfecte still in all her Regiment, and that in most blessed state, without any Christian Princes: then O O O helpe poore Christian Princes. For, beinge such poore helpes vnto the Regiment of the Church, they may bee as well spared, as wished away (which the Anabaptists wish them) as to be wished for, which S. Paul did wish them, saue for the Princes saluation of their owne soules, in which respect, they are not Christian Princes. May, if this were true: wile may they not as well wish the verie Anabaptistes, set downe this rule to, that the Church of God may stande, and doth stand, better without them? For, howsoeuer they seeme here to allure the reader, with these godly titles, of the Church of God, of perfection in all her regiment, and that she standeth at this day in most blessed estate, where Christian Princes are not at all, and the ciuill Magistrates are not the greatest fauourers: yet dare we not ascribe these titles of perfection in all her Regiment, and of most blessed state vnto the Church of God, being militant and trauelling still vnder imperfection. But we acknowledge (as S. Paule sayeth 1. Cor. 13.) that we knowe imperfectly, and we teache imperfectly, but when that which is perfect shall come, then that which is imperfect shall be done away. And then shall come indeede the most blessed estate of the Churches perfection in all her regiment. But if it be nowe already, and that where no Christian Princes are, or where the Ciuill Magistrates are not the greatest fauourers; then whereto serue the Christian Princes, and the Ciuill Magistrates, to fauour the Gospel, but rather to hinder the perfection of the Church in all regiment, and to cause it not to be in most blessed estate? For where any Christian Princes are, yea, the greatest fauourers of the Church of God that euer were: it could neuer yet aspire heere. But where they were not, and are not, there these Learned discourfers tell vs, that the Church of God was perfect in all her Regiment, and standes in such estate as is most blessed. But where was this perfection in all the Regiment of it, before Christian Princes? And where standeth it yet at this day in most blessed estate, where the ciuill Magistrates are not the greatest fauourers? May not the places be named, that we might vnderstande the? Must we runne to Vtopia for to seeke them out? Where was this in Sodome and Gomorra, vnder Chedor-laomer, & where the ciuill Magistrates, nor al the people, were any great fauourers of the Church of God? Where Lot being righteous, and dwelling among the, in seeing & hearing the, they vexed his righteous soule fro day to day with their vlawfull deedes? Was he & his family in most or more blessed estate, or the Church of God there, better gouerned, then in Salé, vnder Melchizedeck, or then in the Pilgrimage it made vnder Abraham? Was the Church of God better vnder Pharaon, then vnder Moses? vnder the tyrants that oppressed the, then vnder the Iudges that deliuered the? Was the Churches gouernment better vnder Saul, then vnder Dauid? vnder Ieroboam, Achab, Manasses, & other Idolatrous Princes: then vnder Salomó, Iosaphat, Iosias, Ezechias, & other godly Princes? & is it moze perfect in all her regiment, and and standeth in moze blessed estate at this day, vnder the great Turke in Europe, vnder the Sophie in Asia, vnder the great Chan in India, where also great partes of the Church are disperfed; then vnder godly Christian Princes in Englande, Germanie, Scotlande, Denmarke, Suecia, Polonia, Hungarie, and all other places where Christianitie is openly professed at this day? Is the regiment of the Church of God better, & in moze blessed estate in Italie vnder the Popes tyrannie, or in France, in Spaine, in Flaunders, &c. where the Christian Princes are not the greatest fauourers of the light of the Gospell, then here in England, where her Maiestie fauoureth the same so tenderly, and hath venterd her state & life so often for it? vntthankfulness. v blind: (what should I call it?) Malice? No, but selfe willed opinion, y, to deface the good estate of the Church of God, wherein we are (vnder such a right Defender of the faith) defended & shielded from all our enemies, in a farre moze blessed estate then we deserue; will make such an odious comparison, as this is. But, as the old saying is, itch and ease, can no man please. But if the Church be so imperfect in all her regiment vnder our most gracious and true Christian Prince here in England, if our estate be so disordered and so little blessed, in comparison of theirs at this day, where the Ciuill Magistrates are not the greatest fauourers: why do not these Learned discourfers take their course thether, where the Church is so perfect in all her regiment, euen as they would haue it, & in most blessed estate that they can wish it? If this be a matter of such moment & necessitie, as they would beare vs in hande, why go they not thether, where they say it is euen at this day? & they may goe thether when they will. No, I warrant you, they wil none of it on that price: but will tarrie here still, & trouble their brethren, though they haue it not. No, no, whatsoeuer is pretended, to get that they would haue: if they can not haue it, they haue learned this (or they may easily doe, if they trie experience) that it is good keeping themselves wel, when they are wel. And wel fare a good Christian Prince, that fauours the Church of God and the Gospell of Iesus Christ, when all is done.

But what meane they by these glaunces, that the Church of God doth stande at this day in most blessed estate, where the Ciuill Magistrates are not the greatest fauourers? Do they meane by ciuill Magistrates, as they do before, where they sayd, Whatsoeuer it please the Ciuill Magistrate to call or account indifferent? &c. Referring this terme to our most gracious Prince & Soueraigne? But I thinke they do not meane so, for as they speak moze at large, saying, Where the ciuill Magistrates are not the greatest fauourers, noting many, or moze then one, & some other estates, which they compare with ours: so they here giue the an harder title, to be not the greatest fauourers, then that (I hope) they will say, they imple our gracious Soueraigne in that tearme. If then they meane, that we liue vnder such a blessed Prince, as fauoureth the Gospell: doe these men speake it in god sooth (as indeede sooth it is) or doe they Jest, or speake it but for fashion sake? But howe-soeuer they seeme to glaunce herat, (for they neither say it in expresse wordes, but as it were by comparison, doe seeme to inferre as much, in telling vs of other places in the worlde, where the Princes are not the greatest fauourers) notwithstanding they tell vs neither what thing it is, whereof they are not the greatest fauourers. But I ghesse, that in this their Rhetoricall breuities, they meane that they fauour not the Gospell, or the Church of God. For it seemeth, they refferre it not to this Regiment, that themselues fauour and desire. For so, they knowe, that her Maiestie being also not the greatest fauourer of their desired Regiment: they might conclude, that the Church of Englande, which they crie out of to bee in a state disordered, should bee in that most blessed estate which they desire. They seeme therefore to meane this, that her Maiestie is indeede a fauourer of the Gospell, or Church of God, and yet the state of the Church of God, (under Her Maiestie) is in an vnperfect, lesse blessed, and more disordered estate, than it is, where the Princes are not the greatest fauourers of the Church of God, and of his Gospell. Which if it be their meaning, (as I woulde be loath to gather of their wordes anie thing beyonde their meaning,) so I had rather they expounded themselues, or that their wordes needed not an expositer, as well many times, as an aunswere. Nowe then, if their meaning be thus, that her Maiestie is a fauourer of the Gospell, and of the Church of God, although this in some sense, may seeme but a colde and slender commendation bestowed on her Maiestie, to bee but a fauourer; as though shee liked well ynough thereof, and liked of others that professed it, but her selfe were not so zealous a professour, and loue of the Gospell: yet construyng all this to the best interpretation of her fauour thereunto, that her Maiestie is a great fauourer of the Gospell of God and of his Church: howe then doth shee so highlie fauour the same, and yet not suffer the Church of God, to be so perfecte in all her Regiment, as where no Christian, but Heathen Princes are: and not to be in so blessed estate, as it is under those Ciuill Magistrates, that are not the greatest fauourers? Meaning indeede (under a gentle name for reuerence sake) are no fauourers at all, but so much as they can, hate and persecute the Gospell and Church of God: and yet (will they, will they) suffer it more to flourish herein, than her Maiestie doeth, being so great a fauourer of the same. What a soule rebuke, (under pretence of commendation) is this to her Maiestie? Yea, what a kinde of fauouring call ye this, when the not fauouring of the enemye, is better for the Regiment of the Church, than the fauourers loue? Indeede, accidentallie things may fall out so cleane contrarie, (as he that thought to kill his enemye, enemie, did him more good in thrusting him thorough, and opening that hypocrisie festered within him, then all his friends and Whistlers that could not helpe him. But what gra-mercie was that to him? Whereas directly of it selfe, is not this threatned of God, that he will take away a good Prince in his wrath, and giue an euill Prince, to punish the wickednesse of his people; and doeth not God promise, as a great blessing to his Church, that Kinges should be the foster fathers, and Queenes should be the nourishing mothers thereof? But by these men, they had a better Regiment, when they had Pharao to nurse them, with drowning of the infantes in the water, and oppressing their parentes on the land; and when Herode bathed the infantes in their owne blood. Did G D meane, they shoulde haue suche Papper with an Hatchet, and that Princes should be nurses on that fashion? Or did hee rather meane, that when he would sende such Princes as should fauour his Gospel and his Church, euen as the good nourse comforteth and guideth well the childe, and is as it were an-other Parent to it, vnder whom the childe battelleth, and is well brought vpp; so next vnder G D D our heavenly Father wee should be nourished, fed, comforted, defended, and guided, till we growe to our perfect age in Iesu Christe, vnder the godlie Gouvernement of our Christian Princes.

Isai. 49. 23.

And is this, that is promised for so great a blessing, turned to a curse?
 And the curse turned to so great a blessing? God is able indeede, to turne all thinges to good. God had his Church still, euen in the most dreadfull persecutions that euer were, and the gold is finer that is tryed in the fornace seuen times. So that this reboundeth in the end, both to the greater glozie of God, and to the better confirmation of his Church. But what can we conclude hereon? That the Church, when such haucke is made in the congregation, and it is dispersed here and there: is then more perfect in al her Regiment, and in most blessed state? S. Paule saith, Rom. 5. Where sinne abounded, grace did more abound. But what? shall we say then, (saith S.
 Paule, Rom. 6.) Shall we continue still in sinne, that grace may abound? God forbid. And in those dayes of more iniquitie abounding, in the time of planting amonge the Gentiles, the faith and Gospel of Iesus Christe:
 the most parte of the Gentiles raged, and the people imagined vaine thinges: the kinges of the earth assembled, and the rulers came together against the Lorde, and against his Christe. Al-be-it, the faith took root amonge some, both Princes and people. And G D D in that extraordinarie time, dealt extraordinarilie with them, both with extraordinarie gifts and extraordinarie offices. Whereby he so helped and beautified that Primitiue estate of the Church of Christe; among all those troubles, persecutions & dissipations; y the Church seemed rather to flourish the to be oppressed, & to be in most blessed estate in some respects, when in other respectes, it was in most pitifull estate, as S. Paule sayth, 2. Cor. 6. of Gods helpe at such times: For he sayth, I haue heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of saluation, haue I succoured thee. Behold now the accepted time: behold now the day of saluation. We giue no occasion of offence in anie thing, that our ministerie should not be reprehended: but in all thinges wee approve our selues as the ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in prisons, in tumults, in labours. By watchings, by fastings, by purenesse, by knowledge, by long suffering, by kindnesse, by the holie Ghost, by loue vnfeined, by the worde of truthe, by the power of God, by the armour of righteousness. On the right hande and on the left, by honour, and dishonour, by euill report, and good report, as deceauers, and yet true: as vnknown, and yet known: as dying, and yet behold we liue: as chastened, and yet not killed: as sorrowing, and yet alwayes reioysing: as poore, and yet making many riche: as hauing nothing, and yet possessing all thinges. The state of the primitiue Church struing thus against all these temptations and calamities, but by the grace and power of God surmounting them: in this respect was in more blessed state, then when afterwarde enioying peace and prosperitie, and abusing the same, contentions and other corruptions arose thereupon, in which respect the state was not so blessed.

Is therefore persecution and al these troubles, better for the regiment of the Church of God, then peace & prosperitie? Yea, was not that regiment that the Church had then, abused also, in those that had the gift of tongues, the gift of healing, & the gift of prophecieng? Which gifts not only many among the Corinthians, did abuse? but also there were many false Apostles, many euill Pastors, many Teachers of false doctrine, & some Deacons not all the best. And (no doubt) their Segniories were as much corrupted as the residue, if they had anie suche standing officers among them, as these Discourers doe conceaue, and as wherein they saye, the Churches regiment most consisted, with the Pastors, Teachers, & the Deacons. So that the Church of God, no, not at y^e time, no, not in that regiment that she was gouerned by, was then so perfect in al her regiment, no, in most blessed estate; for all that the Apostles were then liuing, and for all the extraordinarie giftes and offices, that then she had.

And may we thinke, if there had bin such Gouernours among them at that time, that eyther they (if they had not theselues bene infected) would not haue reformed so manie soule abuses? Or did not their authoritie stretch so farre? Or would not the residue be rather ruled by such gouernours among themselves, then to trouble and endanger themselves being Christians, before Infidell Iudges? Or if they had had any such gouernours among them, would not S. Paul (chiding the for going to lawe before infidell Iudges) not rather haue exhorted, yea charged them, to haue referred those matters to the Segniorie & Gouernors, & he had appointed ouer the ye he had appointed any, having builded so great and famous a Church of God among them, continuing at Corinthus a yeare and a halfe togither: or to those that they had chosen among themselves to be their Gouernours, if that were the onelie order of the Churches regiment; then, and of such importance and necessitie? Q2 how chance, Saint Paule finding these inconueniences (in his absence from them) to haue fallen out, (perhaps because there wanted such Gouvernours among them) doth not will them (among so many precepts, pertaining to the regiment of the church) in one place or another of both his Epistles, to chose and ordeine such Gouvernours ouer them? Q2, mentioning Gouvernours, and other giftes and offices, 1. Cor. 12. Would not say, these Gouvernours, are those Seniors, that either ye haue, to direct these matters by: or at least, if ye haue them not, ye ought to haue them? But as though, they neither had anie suche, nor vrging them to haue any such Consistorie of Gouvernours ouer them, speaking of their hauing busines one against another, he saith vnto them, 1. Cor. 6. Do ye not know, that the Saints shall iudge the world? If the world then shall be iudged by you, are ye unworthie to iudge the smallest matters? Know ye not that we shall iudge the Angels? How much more, things that pertain to this life? If then, ye haue iudgement of things pertaining to this life: set vp them which are least esteemed in the church. I speake to your shame. Is it so that there is not a wiseman among you, no, not one that can iudge betwene his bretheren? By which wordes it appeareth, that, not onelie in those matters, (whatsoeuer they were) but that also in other matters pertaining to the regiment of the church, being matters pertaining to this life, they had no such Consistories of Iudges or Gouvernours among them.

For S. Paule enforceth any such vpon them: but onelie to haue some one or other wise and godlie man, to be chosen among themselves (and that also without any prejudice to the authoritie of the gouernement then established) to bee their Gouvernour. For, they being without a Christian Prince, to be their Gouvernour, and being at that time also giuen to such corruptions and contentions: either they must go before Infidels, or breed a confusion among themselves. So necessarie at all times is it to haue a Gouvernour, that euen the primitive Church could not be without his Gouvernours. And yet neither the thing that S. Paule perswades them to, (being one of the greatest Christian churches in those daies) was to set vp a Consistorie among them, but some one Gouvernour. Neither the matter that he diswades them from, is anye other thing more, then for bringing their brethren and causes before Infidell Iudges. So that, this is not to be stretched beyond the state of the Corinthians then, nor any rule prescribed to any particular church of GOD now, liuing vnder a prince or Iudge that is a Christian: That anye church may, (other wise then by waie of private arbitrement, as charitable, neighborlie, and blessed peace makers) take authoritie to elect or ordeine hereby among themselves, any one or other publike Iudge or Gouvernour, and much lesse elect among them selves, and set vp a Segniorie or Consistorie of Gouvernours, in matters pertaining to this life, as are all indifferent matters, pertaining to the Ecclesiasticall regiment of the Church: but that, when any controuersie ariseth about them in the church, (if they be not already prescribed in Gods word) we must all, after all our deliberations on them, bring them to the small determination, and disposition of the godlie christian Princes iudgement and censure, how they shall be vsed of the subiects. And thus maye we keepe any other good order of Iudges and iudgements, even as well in ecclesiasticall as ciuill controuersies, according to the gouernement already established, with out any moze neede of reuining those consistories whatsoever, that were then in any christian church vsed, than of reuining this constitution of S. Paule for Iudges, for, although S. Paule gave such a prescription of Iudges to them, in the wante of other Christian Gouvernours: yet we that haue now Christian Princes, and Christian Iudges, and I hope godlie and righteous Iudges also, are not bound to chofe Iudges in our owne Parishes. If we could indeed take vp manie needlesse controuersies among our selues at home: it were well done, and would saue much trauell, vexation, and expenses, and perhaps the Iudges might be eased to. But if we should thereupon make a rule, and say that we must needs haue Iudges at home in our seuerall Congregations, because S. Paule prescribed the Corinthians so to haue: and that all such publike Iudges to serue a whole realme or countrie, were not lawfull or were needlesse, because, in the Primitiue Church they had no suche publike Christian Iudges for a whole realme or countrie: might not this growe to the manifest iniurie not onelie of the Iudges, but of all the whole common-weale? Yea, might not the Christian Prince feare, that by the same rule, (if it were true that ye saye, there was no Christian Prince then, when the Church was perfect in all her regiment) he might be diuened cleane out of his ciuill regiment too, and out of all, not supream onelie, but anye authoritie at all, among the Christians, and cleane dispossessed of his kingdome, except he would content himselfe, to be a Iudge chosen in one particuler citie? So that, neither inheritance, nor a whole Realme or Realmes, to bee ruled by anye one christian Prince, could hold any plea, if such rules might be coined on such examples.

And then for sothe, the church of GOD, as, before there was anye christian Prince: so after, they are all thrust out, or reduced to that state that they were in, might be saide to be perfect in all hir regiment, once againe. And that the Church of God may stande and dooth stande in moste blessed state, where the ciuill Magistrates are not the greatest fauourers, nor beare the greatest rule, but all is brought againe to the state it was in before, in the Apostles time. Doe ye not see, what a most blessed blessed estate the church of God would come unto, by this rule? And I pray you (bretheren) what warrant haue you more, or so much, for the prescription of your Seniorie in euerie congregation, as is here prescribed by S. Paule, for the choosing of this Iudge or ruler, among the particular congregations of the christians? We must take heed therfore, how we stand on such examples, or how we enlarge any rule, that was particular to the time, or state then, or to the place or persons there, to become an ordinarie, generall, absolute, or perpetuall rule to vs, and to the whole Church, whether it be by S. Paule, or by S. Peter, or by any, or by all the Apostles, or by our Lord and Saviour Iesus Christe himselfe, practised, yea, or commanded. For diuerse examples and commandments were but for certeine times, states, & places, and stretch no further. As the Disciples, to carrie neither golde, nor siluer, nor money, nor scrippe, nor two coates, nor shooes, nor staffe, Matth. 10. To abstaine from things offered to Idols, and from bloud, and from that that is strangled, Acts. 15. And that men should praye bare headed, &c. 1. Cor. 11. And albeit, that in the commandments and rules prescribed of these things, and of the like, neither Christe nor his Apostles tell, that they were to continue, but for a time: yet leueling the same by the analogie of our faith, and by the proportion of our Christian libertie, we find no such necessitie in these thinges, nor of any other such like orders, as in the regiment of the Primitive church was vsed. For though they were vsed as orders, or as ornaments, to beautifie the blessed estate of the Churches regiment then: yet neither the blessednes, nor the estate thereof, consisted in them, when they had them. And if any church that now flourisheth haue any of them, it is neuer the more blessed for them, as of anye necessitie to the estate thereof. And if any haue them not, and haue other good orders of regiment established among them, it is neuer the lesse blessed of God, for the not hauing of them. If they haue what is necessarie: that sufficeth. For none either this Seniorie to be necessarie for vs, imagining there had bene any such: or els all this most blessed estate, resolues to nothing.

But neither of these is yet proued, nor (I feare mee) ever will bee: that there were any such Governours at all: or that we are bound in euerie particular congregation, to obeye, or to haue suche a Segniorie. But we are bound to haue, and to obeye in all lawfull ordinances, our Princes and Magistrates: especiallie being Christians, and fauourers, and fosterers of the Church of God, defenders of the faith, setters forth and professors of the Gospell. Where suche Princes are, (as wee must needs confesse we haue, except we be too vnthankfull) there indeed the Church of GOD may stand, and standeth at this day, in farre more blessed state, with-out this Segniorie, then where this Segniorie standeth, and the Ciuill Magistrates are not the greatest fauourers: or to speake plaine English, are no fauourers at all, but haters and perfect ters of the Gospell.

And thus wee see, how weake and vntrue, both these propositions of these reasons are, by the which as a notable great reason, in the end scarce worth a little currane, these our Learned Discourfers auouched, that, it might be to euerie man so plaine, that it was neither needfull nor agreeable to good order of teaching, to begin first to treat of the su-preame authoritie of Christian princes in ecclesiasticall causes. Now, as we thus haue seene the baloz and truthe of these two propositions, whereon their reason is made: so let vs see their conclusion of this reason. Their conclusion is this: By which it is manifest, that the regiment and gouernment thereof, dependeth not vpon the authoritie of princes, but vpon the ordinance of God: who hath most mercifullie and wiselie so established the same, that as with the comfortable aide of christian Magistrats, it may singulerlie flourish and prosper: so without it, it may continue, and against the aduersaries thereof preuaile. For the church craueth helpe and defence of Christian princes, to continue and go forward more peaceable and profitablie, to the setting vp of the kingdome of Christe: but all her authoritie she receaueth immediatlie of God.

The conclusion of our breth. argument against the first treatie of the Prince.

Is this then the conclusion of their reason? What is this to the present question: Do how hangeth this vpon the premises? Maye not the princes supream authoritie in ecclesiasticall causes be first created vpon on, except this must streight be concluded on it, by which it is manifest that the regiment and gouernment of the church dependeth not vpon the authoritie of princes, but vpon the ordinance of God? Wherefore is this so farre fetched conclusion brought in here? Before, you said it seemeth, (not yet telling to whome) but now it seemeth, that it seemeth so to you, and that for a manifest and plaine conclusion, that if the princes supream authoritie be first spoken of, then all the churches regiment dependeth on it. But I cannot tell how it seemeth to you, to be a manifest and plaine consequence: I promise you, it seemeth not so to me. Now (I thinke) to any man, that will way the reason with any reason. And yet you threape such kindnesse on vs (that are, God be thanked, reasonable creatures also) that it now goeth beyond it seemeth: for it is manifest.
Whereas indeed, not onelie it seemeth, but is manifest, to be a manifest violent, and extorted conclusion. Yea, a manifest iniurie both to God, to his church, and to all the authoritie of all godlie Christian Princes, and most manifest wrong vnto her Maiestie. Doth her Maiestie in claiming the supream authoritie in Ecclesiasticall causes, in that portion of the church of God committed to her Maiesties gouernement, or in not yel-ding to this your desired regiment, claime this, that the regiment and gouernement of the church, dependeth vpon her authoritie? And if re-say

dence of

say ye meane not her Maiestie, but speake still vpon Princes at large: though ye mend not the matter, but make it worse, yet would to God ye would once name some, to put the matter out of all suspicion, and let them beare the blame, that claime such highe authoritie and absolute power, that all the regiment of the Church dependeth thereon. No, I am sure ye can name no gobbie Prince that doth so. And yet see, not onelie how ye make this a manifest conclusion, but how to aggravate the matter, and make it more odious, ye conclude it also with an opposition, betwene the Princes authoritie and Gods ordinance: saying, by which it is manifest, that the regiment and gouernement thereof, dependeth not vpon the authoritie of Princes, but vpon the ordinance of God. As though the Princes authoritie, were not also the ordinance of God. As the Apostle expressely saith, Rom. 13. Let euerie soule be subiect to the higher powers, for there is no power but of God. And the powers that be, are ordeined of God. Who soeuer therefore resisteth, resisteth the ordinance of God.

And shall we now make an opposition, betwixt the authoritie of Princes (especiallie speaking of Christian Princes) and Gods ordinance? How could the verie enemies of vs both, either the Papists or the Anabaptists, haue ronge between a sharper conclusion, against Christian Princes authoritie, than this is? Notwithstanding, least Christian Princes should take iust offence, not onelie to haue their authoritie thus cleane cut off, but cast out of the doores also of the Church of God, with such a contumelie, as an authoritie opposite to Gods ordinance, and yet claiming all the Churches regiment to depend thereon: This conclusion shall bee afterward smothered with gentler termes, and Christian Princes shall haue somewhat graunted to appease them. And what in this conclusion is that authoritie, that shall be now yielded vnto Christian Princes? For sooth, that God hath most mercifullie and wiselie so established the same, that as with the comfortable aide of christian Magistrates, it may singularly flourish and prosper: so without it, it may continue, and against all the aduersaries thereof preuaile. For, the Church craveth helpe and defence of Christian princes, to go forward more peaceable and profitable, to the setting vp of the kingdome of Christe, but all hir authoritie she receaueth immediatly of God. Will ye, what againe is this to the supream, or to any authoritie of Christian Princes in ecclesiasticall causes? Here is some what indeede for the Churches authoritie: but we speake not now of the Churches authoritie, so much, as of the princes authoritie in the Church: except they will here make a double opposition, not onelie betwene the princes authoritie and Gods ordinance: but also betwene the prince and the Church, and either of their authorities, the princes, and the churches, and so enter into a new question, which of the is greater. But this is another great iniurie offered to christian

Princes, who are by this meanes (as it were) thrust out, not onlie of their authoritie in the Church, but as being, either none at all of the Church (saue as an opposite part therunto), or if a parte of the Church, yet a contentious parte, for authoritie striving with the Church, of the which them-selues are a principall parte and member. For what else meane they by these wordes, the Church craueth helpe and defence of Christian Princes, but that they seporate the Christian Prince and the Church? And whom meane they then by the name of the Church, the whole or particuler bodie thereof? But, all the people deale not with the gouernment of them-selues, nor are their owne Gouernours, which would breed a great confusion in their gouernement, and quicklie come to no gouernement at all. If they meane these foure Tetrarches, (as it seemes they do:) they likewise be but partes to the Church, as are the Princes, and inferior parts of the Prince also: except they will contend for superiouritie aboue the Prince. But, inferior, or superior, they be but partes, and cannot claime to them-selues any more the name of the Church, being but the Churches Ministers, (if all be so) then the Prince or the people may. For so much neither the Prince representing the head, and the people being the bodie. And if they say, they be Christes ministers, so is the Prince also, no lesse in his fundion, then anye of them in theirs. And let them looke to it, thus vnder the name of the Church, to part all the churches authoritie among them, and so oppose their authoritie (as the churches) to the Princes authoritie. For thus played euen the verie popish Priests, the common enemies to vs bothe. And vnder pretence of the churches authoritie, and that they were the church, the Ecclesiasticall persons, and the church men; and that the Prince and the people, were but mere laye and ciuill persons, seporate from the church: they not onelie kept the people doونه, but also wronng all authoritie in Ecclesiasticall causes from the Prince. And vsed euen the same tearmes of the church, and the Ciuill Magistrate, that here these our brethren vse. Yea and the same reason, and giue the christian Princes as much, yea, the selfe-same titles, that here our brethren do. While thus, betwene them bothe, the christian Princes are spoiled of all their authoritie in Ecclesiasticall causes. For what is all that is giuen to christian Princes here, but to be onelie aiders, helpers, and defenders of the church?

And do not the Papists vse the same tearmes? And giue as goodlie titles as these, to christian Princes? Yes, and more, and better too. But what is this vnto regiment, gouernement, and authoritie? No, here is nothing mentioned, but the regiment and gouernement thereof. Whether of? Of the Prince? No, of the church. And the church craueth helpe and defence of christian Princes, but all her authoritie is immediatlie of God. So that, of the Prince she receiueth no authoritie at all, for, if she receiue all immediatlie of God : then she receaueth none immediatlie, no: mediatic of the Prince. And if she receaue none from the Prince, but all of God immediatlie, without anye authoritie of the Prince: then is she exempted from all the authoritie of the Prince, and all her authoritie, is aboue all the authoritie of the Prince. Yea, the prince, hath no authoritie at all ouer her. And so not onelie the Prince, for anye not supream, but any authoritie at all, ouer the church in Ecclesiasticall causes, maye goe seeke it else-where: (for the church is sped already of all her authoritie from God immediatlie, with-out any from the Prince) but also the prince hazardeth his ciuill authoritie too. For if the church singe any of that also, it is as good as a Port-maine against the Prince. For why? the prince may helpe her, make her flourish and prosper: but all hir authoritie is immediatlie of God.

spoiled of

matters.

Haue not Christian princes here, a faire supream authoritie in Ecclesiasticall causes left them? If the church deale thus with christian Princes: is that church worthy of the comfortable aide of christian Magistrates, and to haue it, when it craueth helpe and defence of Christian princes, that will acknowledge her selfe to receaue no authoritie at all of christian princes? If she saith, she will acknowledge that she receaueth, that is to say, comfortable aide of christian Magistrates, with the which it may singularlie flourish and prosper: and that she acknowledgeth the helpe and defence that she craueth of Christian princes, to continue and go forward more peaceable and profitablie, to the setting vp of the kingdome of Christe: This is yet some-what more, then before was graunted.

So that, the church hath neede of Christian princes comfortable aide, helpe, and defence. And then with-out them, she is not so perfect in all her regiment, no: in moste blessed, no: so much blessed estate, but that I perceaue she is more blessed with them: and where the princes are fauoures of the church, and Gospell, and kingdome of Christe: there it may flourish and prosper, and that singularly: which is some-what more yet by one ace, then where the princes are not the greatest fauorers. But where they are fauorers, there the church (that belike, stood still before, or went backward, or went forward more difficultlye) may goe forward not onlie more peaceable but also more profitablie, to the setting vp of the kingdome of Christe. This is much more then was before graunted. Yea, but say they, as it may haue all these benefits by the princes helpe: so without it, it may continue, and against the aduersaries thereof preuaile. W D D forbid, else. But doth it nota great deale better preuaile, with it? Yea, but what is all this vnto anye gouernement, regiment, or authoritie in the Prince, ouer the Church? thoritie.

Under my gouernement, and with their comfortable aide, helpe, and defence, when I craue it, I may singularlie flourish and prosper. Yea, the prince himselfe (be he neuer so high and mightie) may craue comfortable aide, helpe, and defence, of an other prince, or of his owne subiects, wherby he may both singularlie flourish and prosper. And also continue and go forward more peaceable and profitablie, not onelie to the maintenance of his owne estate, but also to the setting vp of the kingdome of Christe: what shall we conclude hereon? that such persons therefore, haue any authoritie ouer him? And this is all that is here allowed to any Christian prince ouer the church of God. And how much is this? For sothe, for any authoritie, moze or lesse, when it comes all to all: none at all. And why so? For, the church receiueth all hir authoritie immediatlie of God. What, and nothing mediatelie of man? No: Not of the Apostles: No: by all, or by any of these foure estates: No, are they onelie the church, and haue all the authoritie? Yea, are they God himselfe, if they onelie, be not the church? No, both God giue them still that power that they haue, or pretend to haue of him, immediatlie, and by his owne selfe, without any mediation, and that in all the authoritie, not onelie of preaching the word, and ministring the Sacraments, and binding and loosing, but also of electing, imposition of handes, and ordeining ministers, and of calling Councels, and of making any ordinances and constitutions concerning any Ecclesiasticall matters: What if some of these be of God, but yet mediatelie of God, by Gods Ministers? And what if some of them be of God also, but mediatelie from the Christian Prince? Yea, what if the Christian princes authoritie be of God also, as much immediatlie as the churches authoritie? Yea, and moze immediatlie, then can be proued for all these foure estates: But, be the princes authoritie of God immediatlie, or mediatlie of God by man: hath not the Christian prince as much authoritie now, since Christes and his Apostles time here in earth, as it had ordinarilie before? No, did the church of Christe begin onelie then: and not rather from the beginning of the worlde: as Gellius proueth against the Anabaptists, that the church still, not onelie in substance of the mysticall bodie, and of doctrine: but also of the authoritie of gouernment, was euen from the beginning of the world, one and the same? Adam, Abraham, Moses, Iosue, the Iudges, Dauid, Salomon, Asa, Iosaphat, Iosias, Ezechias, Zorobabell, &c, were all christian princes. Had all of them authoritie from God, either immediatlie or mediatelie: and haue christian princes no moze authoritie, then is here allowed? No, howe, and when, & where, haue they since lost it? When we reason against the papists, that still pretend the churches Authoritie (meaning thereby their popish Hierarchie) that they might bereaue all christian princes of their supream authoritie in Ecclesiast. causes: we bring forth the examples of of Moses, Iosue, David, Salomon, Iosaphat, &c. If they had not bene (in ches authoritie. (though not so called) as well as these that are called Christian Princes now: or if Christian Princes haue not as much authoritie now, as the Princes in and ouer the Church of God had then: that are these examples, and the arguments draue from them, nothing to the purpose, but the Papists and the Anabaptists will deride them.

Yea, as Saint Paule saith of the Resurrection of Christe, 1. Corin. 15. If Christe bee not risen, then is our preaching vaine, and your faith is also vaine, and wee are found false witnesses of God. So, if these arguments for the Princes authoritie, from the Olde Testament to the New, are not substantiall and good arguments: then our preaching and alleadging of them against the Papists, and against the Anabaptists, is in vaine, &c. But these arguments of their examples are firme and good: (standing vpon one and the same perpetuall rule of the Princes charge and gouernement, in bothe Testaments:) & so confute bothe the Papists and the Anabaptists: Our Breth. confirming the aduersaries and the Anabaptists in all these examples. Christian Princes therefore, according to the examples of Adam, Moses, Iosue, David, &c. Haue as much authoritie both mediate and immediate from God, as the Ministers of the Church, or the Church it selfe hath, to be Gouernours in the Church, and ouer the Church of God also, or ouer any other of Gods Ministers. Not to haue the Ecclesiasticall Ministers peculiar offices, and Ecclesiasticall authoritie, or to execute the actions proper to their Ecclesiasticall functions; but to ouer-see, gouerne and direct all Ecclesiasticall persons, to do their duties in all Ecclesiasticall causes, and to haue the highest authoritie in the Church, for the ordering, disposing, and authorizing, any order or constitution Ecclesiasticall in indifferent matters: notwithstanding any assertion, reason, or p[ro]fesse, in this Learned Discourse, as yet alledged to the contrarie.

And as the Christian Prince hath immediatlie vnder Christe, this supream, first and principall authoritie: so ought the Christian Prince, by as good reason, in the treatise of the gouernment of the churches Ecclesiasticall matters, to haue had that supream place which is first and principall; and not that supream place which is last and least of all, or rather which is none at all: while all Ecclesiasticall matters must be firste distributed among these foure estates, and be onelie directed by them. But vntill these foure, be all serued in their places and orders: her Maiestie, and all Christian Princes, must hold themselves contented with this: and in the ende, they shall see further, if any more authoritie in Ecclesiasticall matters, be left vnto them. In the meane season, let vs now returne, vnto our B[re]theren leade vs, to the producing of these foure Tetrarkes, what their offices are, how necessarie and important they be: and what severall authoritie, or in common, is assigned vnto them.

The second Booke of the Doctor or Teacher.

The Argument of the second Booke.

THE second Booke, is of their first Tetrarche, called the Doctor or Teacher: wherein, after their resolutions of all the 4. Tetrarches, with the effects, & necessitie thereof, with challenge of the Fathers alteration, and the unhappie successe, & of our disordered state: & after their Apologie for their methode of this Learned Discourse: they come to their treaty of their Doctors. That this is the cheefest office in the Church, & most necessarie, and to be had in euery congregatio. And of their name, institution & office, whether they be a seuerall office necessarilie distinguished from Pastors: whether the Apostles words, Rom. 12. 1. Cor. 12. & Eph. 4. do infer such distinction of office: the interpretation of the ancient fathers, and of the late writers on these places for this question: especially, whether the Doctors or Teachers must onelie teach true doctrine, and confute false, or may with their teaching ioinc exhortation and application, to their hearers. Whether there were euer, in the Olde Testament, or in the New, any such Doctors as our Bretheren suppose: with the examination of the examples they alleage. What was the maner of the Doctors and Catechisers, teaching in the Primitiue and auncient churches: and what now in the churches reformed.

LET vs therefore returne to those offices of Ecclesiasticall Regiment, which remaine to be exercised in the Church of God, being instituted and ordeined by Christe himselfe, which before we haue proved out of the Scriptures, to be onelie these? Doctors, Pastors, Gouernors, and Deacons, whereof some appertaine to doctrine, some to gouernement and discipline. The dutie of Doctors and Pastors, is chiefly to teache and instruct the people of God, in all things, that God hath appointed them to learne. The office of Elders and Deacons, is to provide, that good order and discipline be obserued in the Church.

these foure Tetrarches.

In this returne, to these foure offices of Ecclesiastical regiment, these Learned Discourses first set before us as a cleare case, these resolutions. That onelie these, Doctors, Pastors, Governours, and Deacons, doo remaine to bee exercised in the Church of God: That these foure offices of Ecclesiastical regiment be instituted and ordained by Christe himselfe: and that they haue prooued this out of the scriptures. Soothe a while (Brethren) let vs returne with you. Where (I pray you) and when, and how, and out of what places in the scriptures, haue ye prooued this? It was saide so indeed, but not prooued. We alleaged onelie these places, Rom. 12. ver. 6. 1. Cor. 12. ver. 28. and Eph. 4. ver. 11. But neither haue ye Prooued out of any, or all of those testimonies, all these foure offices of Ecclesiastical Regiment: neither can ye doo it. What these Governours were: whether the same that Bishops, or Pastors and Teachers, or your supposed Seniors, or any Ecclesiastical or ciuill officers, is not there, or in any other place, that ye haue yet cited, either in the Text of scripture expressed, or by any argument, that you haue made, Prooued. Neither haue ye prooued, that all these foure Ecclesiastical offices, were instituted and ordained by Christe himselfe, as here you affirme. Neither haue ye prooued that all these foure offices, now remaine to be exercised in the Church of God. None of all these things are yet prooued, as maye appeare by that we haue seene in all this your Learned Discourse hetherto, and by all the places themselves in the scriptures. And thereupon, I put me to the veredict of euerie indifferent Readers iudgement. And yet see, how boldlie you dare aboue all this, and flatlie say thereon: (which we haue prooued out of the scriptures:) where, neither the scriptures which ye haue cited, haue it: nor ye haue prooued it out of them; yea, neither with them, nor without them, ye haue prooued it at all.

Now concerning the distribution of this foure squared gouernement, to the which these offices are seuerallie to bee assigned, whereas these Learned Discourses saye: Whereof some apperteyne to doctrine, some to gouernement: what doe ye here deuide these foure officers, into thre wardes, or into two? If ye say into two (so, the distribution is manifest) some to doctrine, and some to gouernement & discipline: and not, some to doctrine, some to gouernement, and some to discipline: but the latter two gouernement and discipline, (not deuiding the same by a seuerall some, but by the copulative and, conioyning them together, gouernement and Discipline,) we conteyne vnder one of these two seuerall somes: Werye well sayde, and canne you thus your selues deuide these thinges, and conioyne, and if must bee holden so, a good denying and conuincing; and can you not bee content with Saint Pauls like distribution, where he saith, Ephes. 4. ver. 11. Hee therefore gaue some Apostles, and some Prophets, and some Euangelists, and some Pastors and Teachers: The Apostle here distributeth them by somes, as you doe, & when he comes to this, and some to be Pastors: he addeth not, as an other different office, and some to be Teachers: but as you doe here saye, some to gouernement and discipline, including bothe together, (without any further distribution) vnder one some, bothe appertaining to one office: and yet you will solemnely breake this order of Saint Paule, contrarie to your owne order here of distribution; and where he makes but one office, in two diuerse wordes: you will deuide them into another some, and make Pastors one office, and Teachers another office by it selfe, as that of the Euangelists distinct from the Apostles, or from the Prophets. But of your reasons, why ye thus deuide these things, we shall see God willing more, in your severall handling of these offices.

But now, because, besides this distribution of these foure offices, some are referred but to one Province, that is doctrine; meaning the two former offices, as you deuide them, Teachers and Pastors: and some are referred to gouernement and discipline; meaning the two later, Governours & Deacons. Howbeit, not telling which appertaine to which, whether gouernement to Governours, and discipline to Deacons: or gouernement to Deacons, and discipline to Governours: or (as they saye in the Schooles) Confuse capitur, let them take both indifferently betwixt them. Except ye will saye, that ye meane these wordes conuincing; as though diuerse wordes, yet but one matter. But I cannot perceiue how ye can well doe so, distinguishing so precisely betwixt feeding and teaching, and yet confounding gouernement and discipline. For though discipline, as we usually take the word (which other wise, by the Etimologie thereof, might be drawne nearer vnto Doctrine,) maye be comprehended vnder the name of gouernement: yet is not gouernement, being the genus, or generall worde to discipline, comprehended vnder discipline, nor all one with it. And therefore, as this is a confused distribution, or rather disturbance of these offices: so the bounds and limits here assigned to them, are much disordered, and out of all proportion.

Neither is this any better that followeth, of the severall partitioning these foure officers duties in their charges, saying; The dutie of Doctors and pastors, is cheefelie to teache and instruct the people of God, in all things that God hath appointed them to learne. What meane ye here by this worde cheefelie? Not, all their dutie: but the principall? And is this the cheefe dutie, of bothe these two? Or the cheefe dutie of one of these two, that is to saye, the Doctors? To teache and instruct the people of G O D, in all things that G O D hath appointed them to learne.

This

This indeed is properlie called doctrine, and thereupon, ye are not content (although it were long before) to affoord this title of Doctor vnto anye. But belike some of you that compiled this Learned Discourse, or some other that way affectionate, haue taken the degree of Doctors: and therefore the name is more gracions, then when it was expresselie exclaimed vpon. And if anye of that degree had written against them, he was meete well, Maister Doctored, for his labour. But Maister Doctor is now become one of these foure estates. Yea, Maister Doctor is the firste man that shall be treated vpon. And Maister Doctor hath his authoritie assigned to him, before anye of the other three estates. Onelie this, me thinks, Maister Doctor is some-what hardlie pent vp, and scarce offered elbowe room, in his cheefe dutie and peculiar office. For here, doctrine, teaching, instructing the people of God, in all things that God hath appointed them to learne, is made as well the cheefe dutie of the Pastor, as of the Doctor. As for the office of Elders & Deacons: it is to prouide, that good order and discipline be obserued in the church, but what they containe vnder the name of order, and vnder the name of discipline, and which of them shall haue which, or both alike: and howe they shall prouide: and whether they shall make any order more then the other: or whether the other two, or any of the other two, shall not do this, as far forth as they: or whether they shall onelie looke to the obseruation of these things, not making orders, but prouide onelie that the orders made among them, be obserued: or whether they shall be like to our Church-wardens and side-men, as we call them: These things and manie other arising hereon are not here exprest. But we shall peradventure see more hereafter, what shall be leuered out to euery seuerall office, when they shall come forth more orderlie in their orders. In the meane season, hauing thus distinguished and assigned these duties and charges, to these foure offices: they tell vs of the fruite and benefite, that shall redound vnto vs, by the establishing and exercising of them.

The Doctor hath the cheefest place.

These offices being rightlie established and exercised in the Church, are able to make vs meete together, in the vnitie of faithe and knowledge of the sonne of God, vnto a perfect man according to doctrine. And both for doctrine and order of gouernement, to make vs one bodie of Christe, and members one of an other.

The learned Disc. Pag. 10. and 11.

All this (we hope in God) may well be done, by the Pastor or Teacher, without any bringing in, establishing or exercising of anye such Gouernors, as is pretended. And yet this may be granted well inough also: these offices being rightlie established and exercised. For thereby hangs a question, about the right or wrong establishing and exercising of them. And as for the order of gouernement, what these are able to make vs: GOD grant, they may not as well (our order of gouernement established being

But the marke, that we must aime vnto, is not, what we may be made able to or fro, but whether these offices be of such importance and necessitie, that without all these foure offices meete, we cannot meete together in the vnitie of faithe, and knowledge of the sonne of God, vnto a perfect man, according to doctrine, &c. For then should we condemne all the Churches, that haue not all these foure offices, thus distinguished, established and exercised, as they prescribe. Yea, then had God no Church at all, in any part of the world here on earth, this manie hundred yeares, untill these daies. For these Gouernours, that they would set vp, haue not bene anye where, since the Primitive state: presupposing, there were then anye such, as they imagine. But God forbid, that, for the wante of these Seniors, whome they call Gouernours, we should condemne all the militant Church of Christe, so vniuersallie, and so long a time, hauing had the vnitie of faith and knowledge of the sonne of God, according to doctrine: albeist, it were not vnto a perfect but an vnperfect man. And yet all this (appertaining to the office of Pastors and Teachers) may make vs meete together, in these things, vnto a perfect man also. And is not this inoughe withall, to make vs one bodie of Christe, and members one of another? And is this done by the order of gouernment? Or not rather by the vnitie of faithe and knowledge of the sonne of God, vnto a perfect man according vnto doctrine? For, the place here quoted, Ephes. 4. ver. 13. For any verse thereabouts, mentioneth Deacons or Gouernours, or anye order of gouernement, concerning any externall forme of Ecclesiastical regiment: otherwile then precepts of godlie life, going before and following in that chapter. And yet the Apostle notwithstanding, setteth downe all this effect, and more to, saying? Hee therefore gaue some to be Apostles, and some Prophets, and some Euangelists, and some Pastors and Teachers: for the gathering together of the Saints, for the worke of the Ministerie, and for the edification of the bodie of Christe; till we all meete together in the vnitie of faithe, and knowledge of the sonne of GOD, and vnto the measure of the age of the fulnesse of Christe, that we hence-foorth be no more as children, &c. Here Saint Paule addeth three other things, vnto those cited by these our Learned Discoursers. For the gathering together of the Saints: for the worke of the Ministerie: and for the edification of the body of Christe. And yet is no mention at all made of any more offices remainder with vs, then Pastors & Teachers, hauing also ioyned these together as is aforesaid. Now then, if God doe all this that is here expressed,

Example thereof wee haue moſte euident: That, which is alledged as the cheefe defence of this diſordred ſtate, which nowe remaineth in our church: namelye, that our fathers of olde time were not content with the ſimple order inſtituted by Chriſte, and eſtabliſhed by his Apoſtles: but for better gouerning of the Church, thought good ſome offices to adde thereto, ſome to take awaye, ſome to alter and change: and in effect to peruert and ouerthrow all Chriſtian and Eccleſiaſticall policie, which was builded vpon the foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles, Ieſus Chriſte being the cheefe corner ſtone.

True indeed, the diſorderlie dealing of theſe our Brethren, is a moſte euident example of all this: we neede not runne to olde and farre ſetted examples: That this ſtate is diſordered, is but the former ſlanderous and diſordered ſpeech of theſe Diſcourſers: Reaching further in ſuch a generall word of ſtate, then humble and goodlie ſubiects ought to doe. Yea, if the ſtate were in ſome points diſordred: yet would theſe ſpeeches haue bene moderated in better order, then ſo lauiſhlie to laſhe out ſuche tearmes, againſt the ſtate. But if any thing therein were out of order, were this the waye to order it better, to turne all the orders eſtabliſhed cleane out, and to bring in new ſtrange orders, or olde antiquated orders: or that either neuer were, or we are not bound to be ordered by? Were not this rather the verie high waye, to make a more (if not moſt) diſordered ſtate, and to bring all the gouernement eſtabliſhed out of order? But what order call ye this: to ſaye, that is alledged as the cheefe defence, &c. Namelye, that our forefathers of olde time were not content with the ſimple order inſtituted by Chriſte, and eſtabliſhed by his Apoſtles? Which of all vs doth alledge this, as his cheefe defence, or any defence, or alledging at all thereof? And which of our forefathers (I pray you) are alledged, and of what olde time do we alledge them ſo at randon, that a man maye neither know who they be that alledge them: what they be that are alledged: when, where, & what they alledge: & yet to ſay that they were not content, but ſpale-contents (as you ſaie herein to ſhewe your ſelues) & not content with the ſimple order inſtituted by Chriſte, & eſtabliſhed by his Apoſt. What ſimple order do ye meane, ſo inſtituted & eſtabliſhed? If ye meane, the order of regiment, of all theſe your ſoure offices: I pray you, where did Chriſte inſtitute all theſe ſoure, & the Apoſtles eſtabliſh them, in ſuch order as you preſcribe them? And I beſeech you, did not the Apoſt. themſelues thinke good, for better gouerning of the Church, to adde to ſome offices, that Chriſte inſtituted not? And with-all (I pray you) were all the offices that Chriſte did inſtitute, yea, & all thoſe that the Apoſtles added, to be ſimplie ſo holden for perpetuall offices, that neither they, nor the Church euer after, might take away some of those offices, nor alter and change some, that were instituted euen by Christe himselfe, yea and established by the Apostles themselves in their times; but that this must be thus roughly censured, to be in effect, to peruert and ouerturne all Christian and Ecclesiast. policie, which was builded vpon the foundation of the Prophets and the Apostles, Iesus Christ being the chiefe corner stone.

Ephes. 2. 20.

And did S. Paule (I pray you) in this place, mentioning building on this foundation, either speake of, or meane, all Christian and Ecclesiast. call policie? If he did not: howe dare you adde this sense vnto the Apostles wordes? Which speaketh there altogether, of our mysticall incorporation into Iesus Christ, by the spirit of God and preaching of his word, building ~~to~~ into his Church and habitation and not of any externall forme and order of offices in the Church, builded, whether they were perpetuall or to be altered. Of the which orders that all were not perpetuall, but some to be altered and changed, though Instituted by Christe, and established by his Apostles, for that time: the olde Fathers that succeeded the Apostles, did so little peruert and ouerturne, anie materiall part of the Church of God builded vpon the foundation of the Prophetes and the Apostles, Iesus Christ being the chiefe corner stone, letting go those orders and offices which were not perpetuall: that some of those olde Fathers, rather did offende (succeding the primitive Church) in that they laboured to retaine some of those orders and offices still, holding and vying them as necessarie and perpetuall. And howe much more then should they offende, that when one of these offices presupposed, so manie hundred yeares hath ceased in all the whole Church, would not we goe about, (and that of necessitie) to vize & prescribe the same to all Churches? Yea, what offence then, should we call this: when to vying in those offices that haue bene out so long, wee should thrust out those, that haue bene continually in: to wit, the offices of Bishops, which were instituted and established in the Apostles times, and haue continued ever since, notwithstanding any corruptions and abusings of them, euen as well as the office of Pastors, and Teachers hath doone, which haue like wise bene corrupted and abused: And now, after so manie hundred yeares establishment, to remoue the office of Bishops and take it away: what were this, but to peruert and ouerthrowe a great part of the Christian and Ecclesiast. policie which remaineth.

 hangeth the greatest moment, both of truth & perspicuitie, in al controuer-sies that arise. And many there be (eue in these controuer-sies betwix vs) that talke much of discipline, and (God wote) full litle know they, what it of the life of mā, which is Membruū diuidens here with knowledge or Do-ctine; nor cōtaine all the regiment of the Church, but a part thereof: yet because discipline (as it is vsually taken) is a necessarie part of Regiment:

 true it is, that both in doctin & in discipline, the glory of God is sought, and shineth. And this also is verie true, that when the good intentes of men, are contrary to the good pleasure of Gods wil, expressed in his ho-lie wordes, there is deserued this unhappie successe, that in steede of true doctrine, followed all maner of corruptions of the same. At least wise, this is a readie way to make it to haue folowed. For we must here againe, temper & mollifie this peremptorie speech: Withe (God be prayesed) it hath not so folowed in the whole Church, & euerie part thereof, neither in the whole coꝛps of doctrine and euerie part thereof, as ignoraunce, heresies, Idolatrie, superstition, &c. For then, the faith of Christe had utterly sap-led, contrarie to the promise of Christ Matth. 16. and the gates of hell had preuayled against his Church: these Good intentes (I graunt) hauing doone much hurt, euene in all places, at least wise in one thing or another. And likewise I graunt, that on this occasion among others, the Discipline degenerated into intollerable tyrannie and externall domination: Whereof ensued all vnbridled licence of vngodlie liuing. Nowbeit, wheras you conclude, saying: To be short, the exchange of the ordinance of God and Christ, brought in nothing but the Deuill and Antichrist. This is somewhat too short a conclusion on this matter, and too sharpe also: to im-pute all this, to the exchange of the ordinance of God and Christe. Wee spake befoꝛe, of good intentes of men, contrarie to the good pleasure of Gods will, expressed in his holie woꝛde. And if ye meane, such exchange of the ordinance of God and Christe; you say something: but, to vs, or to this present question betwix vs, nothing. But if you thinke, that the Church of God, is so necessarilie and perpetuallie tyed to all those Offices, which eyther God (meaning the Father, or Iesus Christe his sonne our Loꝛde, being God also) did eyther himselfe ordayne, or the Apostles, or the Church (in their dayes) ordayned, that the can. not let goe some of those offices, and bying in other some, still retayning those, that are by Christe and his Apostles ordayned to

And Christe (whom ye will confesse to be God also) did his owne selfe ordayne Apostles, and Euangelistes, &c. And these were the principall offices that were established: and yet euen these are ceased and gone also. So that here we see the manifest exchange of the ordinance of God and Christ. And wil you conclude straight waies hereupon: Is there a change of the ordinance of God and Christ? Then, to be short, it brought nothing but the Deuill and Antichrist. Yea, but (will you say) you take us now too shorte: for we meane not such changes as God and Christ made: but such changes as men make of good ententes, contrarie to the good pleasure of Gods will expressed in his holie worde. Well, if that be your meaning, what is that to vs? Or else, how doth your argument followe? For (God be blessed) none of all these vnhappy successes are hapned yet to vs, and I hope, and pray, that God will blesse vs still from them. Haue not we the onely, and whole doctrine of Gods truth? Doe we maintaine anie errors? No, themselves can not denie it. I report mee to these Learned discourfers owne testimonie in their Preface, that we differ not in matter, or in the substance of Religion, which hath in diuerse assemblies abroad and at home, beene disputed, resolved, and nowe publikely maintayned, for our true and holy faith. If then, we maintaine the true and holy faith, and differ not from themselves (as they say) in substance of Religion: can these speeches be charitable or truely applied vnto vs: that we bring in, or maintaine nothing but the Diuell and Antichriste? Or doe we bring in, or maintaine the Deuill and Antichrist? So hardly vnder the name of the olde Fathers, these speeches runne against vs their Brethren, whom they confesse to agree with themselves in doctrine. and who is this Antichrist that they meane? If it bee the Pope: haue not we driuen him out, and all his errors: and professe and Teach the only truth of God? And if we teach the truth, haue we the Deuill? Or rather, may we not say with our Saviour Iesus Christ, both in our defence, we haue no Deuill; and demaunde of you, If wee speake the truth whie doe ye not beleue vs? Or Brethren, take heede of such bitter speeches, as prepositional and eager zeale (howbeit grounded on good entent) made the Iewes breake forth against Iesus Christ, with such reprochfull tearmes as these are. And although these Discourfers quotation here: Theff. 2. 12. be both impertinent to the matter in hande; and also to the prouing of the bringing in the Deuill and Antichrist: and least of all, (as we trust in God) shall any whit touch vs: yet see here, with howe sharpe a censure, they be alleaged against vs: which wordes are these; that all they might be damned which beleeued not the truth, but had pleasure in vnrighteousnesse. But sithe, (by their owne confession) wee are so farre from pleasure in vnrighteousnesse, that we both beleene and professe the truth, so well as they, or any other doe; we moze repose our selves selues upon the mercie and righteousnesse of God: then that we feare to be damned for these thinges, or for the rash iudgements of our Brethren. For while, to those that be in Iesus Christ, there is no condemnation. And if God iustifie vs who can condemne vs? But what is now the conclusion of all this drift?

Wherefore if we minde such a reformation as shall be acceptable to God, and profitable to his Church; we must throughlie be resolved to set vp no newe kinde of ministerie, of our owne inuention, neither for teaching, nor for discipline in the Eccles. state, but bring all thinges to that most perfect and absolute order, which God himselfe hath established by his worde.

The learned Dis.

Pag. 13.

We haue indeede minded such a reformation. And God be prayed for it, who gaue vs the minde, that he hath giuen vs the meanes also, to doe the thing we minded. And we beleue, the Church of Englande (for the publike state thereof) hath such a reformation, as is acceptable to God, and profitable to his Church. And would be yet more acceptable vnto God, & more profitable to his Church: if it were not for such vnnecessary schismes and hindraunces of our Brethren. And if among vs beeing reformed from the Popish errors and abuses, there remaine any particular defectes, or personall faultes: they also being conuincd so to be, may be reformed in such good order, as shall not be preiudiciall to the gouernement and reformation that is established. And if we must (as these discoursters say) be throughly resolved to set vp no new kinde of ministerie, of our owne inuention, neither for teaching, neither for discipline in the Ecclesiasticall state: Surely then (for any thing I see) we must be throughly resolved, not to set vp, either the officers for teaching, whom they call Doctors, or the officers for discipline, whom they call Gouernours, in the Ecclesiasticall state of this their desired regiment: yea, their Pastors and their Deacons to. For, in such order as they prescribe them, I thinke they will be all founde a newe kinde of ministerie: howsoeuer they pretende, to bring all thinges to that most perfecte and absolute order, which God himselfe hath established by his worde. But, to let aside these termes of perfect and absolute: what doe these men meane by so often inculcating of these sayings? Would they haue vs looke for Apostles, Euangelistes, and Prophetes againe? For, they were the chiefest that were then, of God himselfe established by his worde. If they say, they meane of such established, as should be perpetuall: let goe, the perfection and absolutenesse of them, and proue the perpetuall and necessitie of these offices.

The reformation of our Church

No new Ministerie to be set vp.

And because all offices of the Church are so linked together, as the members of one bodie, whereof Christ is the head: we will so describe one parte, as the description of them all may be sufficiently comprehended.

hended therein. As if a man would set forth the manifold office & vices of the hand; he should declare what it doth alone, and what it doth with the helpe of the other hande, or with the arme, with the brest, with the knee, or with the foote. &c. what it can doe, with diuerse kindes of tooles, and what without all manner of instrumentes. This order wee thought good to obserue in describing the ministerie of the Church, as by which, both the distinction and communication of all offices & seruices in the Church, might most plainly appeare. Otherwise, we force not, by what Methode: so the same truthe bee plainly set forth by any man. And as we controll not other mens Methodes by ours, so wee would not, that other mens manner of teaching should bee prejudiciall to ours. This we say because of them which eyther for lacke of wit, or through too much wilfulnesse, if they see anie difference in the forme and order of teaching of diuerse men, though in matter and substance they all agree: they exclaime there is no vnitie, and therefore no truthe among them.

Bridges.

How the head and partes of the mysti-
call and naturall body are linked.

That all offices of the Church are so linked together, as the members of one bodie, whereof Christe is the head: I thinke may be further called in question, howe it may be rightly vnderstande. For the members of one bodie are so linked together, and especially the officiall partes thereof; that if any of them be disioyned from the bodie, be it hande, or arme, or brest, or knee, or foote: the whole bodie is maymed. Yea, without the brest (I take it) it can not liue. And as for the mysticall bodie of Iesus Christe, whereof he is the heade; though this communion bee in such a mysticall sorte, as the life of this head dependeth not vpon the mayming, or taking away of anie parte or member of the mysticall bodie, not taking anie life at all, of anie parte of the bodie, but giuing all the life they haue: vnto all the partes thereof (as the Apostle sayth, Ephel. 4.) that we should growe vp in him which is the head; that is Christ: by whom all the body, being coupled & knit together by euery ioynt, (for the furniture thereof, according to the effectuall power, which is in the measure of euery part) receaueth encrease of the bodie, to the edifying of it selfe in loue. So that, no true part or liuing member of this mysticall bodie, can inuade be seuered from Christ their head, as Christ himselfe saith, I am the vine, ye are the branches, &c. except they be such vnfruitful branches, of whom he saith: If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch and withereth, and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they burne. But if they bee members of the mysticall bodie inuade, then may they safely boote with Paule, Rom. 8. and say, Who shall seperate vs from the loue of Christ? shall tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, or famine, or nakednesse, or perill, or sword? As who say, no. For (saith he) I am perswaded, that neyther death, nor life, nor Angelles, nor principallities, nor powers, nor thinges present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate vs from the love of God, which is in Iesus Christ our Lord.

And shall we now say, that all offices of the Church, are so linked together, as the members of one bodie, whereof Christe is the heade?
For my parte, I dare not answere it, of all offices of the Church. Neither onely of those offices, that are ceased, as the Leviticall Priestes, or as the Apostles, Prophetes, Euangelistes, and diuerse others: no, nor yet of all the offices of the Church remayning, and that haue continued, and be still among vs, as Pastors and Deacons: which are two of these your four offices. For if we had no Deacons at all, (as we haue :) yet might the Pastors and Teachers office still continue entier, in the substance of the office (and much lesse empayred) without any such necessitie of these supposed Gouvernours, that are so importunately required. But this cannot be eyther in all the members of a naturall bodie, and muche lesse in any of the members of the mysticall bodie, whereof Christe is the head, that they can be separated one from an-other, and remaine entier: and therefore all offices of the Church are not so linked together, as are the substanciall partes thereof.

The church

partes of

As for these our Learned discourfers description of the Churches offices, promising so to describe one part, as the description of them all, may be sufficiently comprehended therein: although it be not materiall; yet I see not also, howe they haue discharged this promise of theirs, in describing enerie one of their four officers, after this manner, as wee shall plainly perceame in their treatise euen of their first office of Doctor immediately following. Wherein they neither deale with, nor speake of, eyther their Deacons, or their Gouvernours, or shewe howe their Doctor hath any intermedling with them at all. And therefore, they faile both in the manner of this description, that here unnecessarilie they tie themselves vnto; nor they do not after this example, as if a man would set forth the manifold office and vses of the hand, he should declare what it doth alone: and what it doth with the helpe of the other hande, or with the arme, with the brest, with the knee, or with the foote, &c. What it can doe with diuerse kindes of tooles, and what without, a maner of instruments. This order that here they affirme, they thought good to obserue, they haue not obserued. Although, if they had obserued the same: the truthe and substance of the matter had bene, neither the further, nor the nearer, saue that the perspicuitie of the order, maketh the truthe of the matter more plainly appeare. Otherwise (as they say) euen so say we: we force not by what Methode; so the same truthe be plainly set forth by any man.

ye would say it; or rather obserue it, of the plaine truthe it selfe, and for the matter of the regiment concerning these offices: that except ye can hereafter shewe (which is yet not done) that we are bound by any commaundement of Christ or his Apostles, vnto this your regiment, of all, and onely, these 4. offices: ye would say likewise with vs, for the Government established in the Church of Englande, that as wee controll not other mens gouernement by ours, so we would not that other mens manner of gouerning, should be preiudiciall vnto ours.

But if ye will not haue vs controll your Methode; utter the same also in plaine wordes. Our controuersie is all of the gouernement of the Church, and you tell vs what Methode ye will obserue in describing the ministerie of the Church, as by which, both the distinction and communication of all offices and seruices in the Church might most plainly appeare.

What doe ye make all offices and seruices in the Church to be of ministers? Or, all the offices & seruices to be of gouernors? How the distinction or communication of these may plainly appeare, would haue bene somewhat more distinctly and plainely spoken. As touching the reason of your request, why ye would not haue your Methode controlled, nor other mens methodes preiudiciall to yours? I thinke it reasonable, if there were no further difference; then in the forme and order of teaching of diuerse men, when in matter of substance they all agree. And yet, in such matters as these are, and so precisely bided, an vniformitie not onely of matter, but also of the Order and Methode in teaching of them, might perhaps haue made the matter lesse offensive. Howbeit, if they all agree in matter of substance; and the matter of substance bee true, be good, be necessarie, which they all agree vpon; so that, they like the truthe in deede, and plainesse in their Teaching: then is (as they say) it is but either for lacke of wit, or through too much wilfulnesse, if any exclaime, there is no vnitie, and therefore no truthe among them. But when in matter and substance, they differ not onely one from another, but from themselves also: then blame not men, nor impute it to them, that either for lacke of wit, or that through too much wilfulnesse, they say, there is not so much vnitie and truthe among them, as in matters so earnestly bided, there ought to be. But now to the particuler viewe of these 4. offices.

Pag. 15.

Let vs then proceede in our purpose. The office of Teaching is the chiefe and principall office that is in the Church. By that we are taught to knowe God, and howe to serue him, and what benefits to looke for at his hande: without which knowledge, there can be no felicitie, but only destruction looked for: according to the saying of the wise man: Pro. 29. 18. where prophesying faileth, there the people perish.

Albeit

Albeit the office of teaching in these respectes: as to know God, and how to serue him, and what benefites to looke for at his handes, (as the ordinary cause, sine qua non, without which there is no knowledge, and without knowledge, there can be no felicity, but, &c.) may wel be said to be the chiefe and principall office, that is in the Church: yet in respect of the Ecclesiasticall government, which is the title of all this Learned discourse (vnderstanding the same truly and plainly, for the government in, of, or ouer al Ecclesiasticall causes, how they should be ordeined, directed, or disposed) I take it, that this office of teachers (admitting it were such a distinct office by it selfe, from the office of Pastors, as they woulde haue it) is not the chiefe and principall office in the Church. In Christe him selfe are the offices of a King, of a Prieste, and of a Prophete. And in that he was a Prophete, he was a Teacher also or Doctor. Which office was so necessary to reueale the will of his heauenly father: that both God the father said from heauen, This is my welbeloued sonne, in whome I am well pleased, heare him. Mat 17: And Christ of himselfe Luc. 4. did reade this sentence, The spirit of the Lord is vpon mee, because he hath anointed mee, that I shoulde preach the Gospell to the poore, &c. So that, where no man saw God at any time, except the onely begotten Sonne which is in the bosome of the Father, had declared him Io. 1: As he saith also, Io. 17. I haue giue vnto the the words which thou gauest mee, and they haue receaued them, and beleued them, &c. without the which teaching there can be no felicitie, but only destruction looked for, as he said before in þ same prayer. This is life eternall, to know thee to be the onlie very God, and whome thou hast sent Iesus Christ: yet not-withstanding, the chiefe and principall office of governing the Church of God, was neither this high and necessary office of his teaching: nor yet that of his Priesthoode, which was as necessary: yea, and higher in the actions of the office, then the other.

But his royall and kingly office was, and is, the chiefe and principall office in him. And much more is it, in the outward regiment of the Church in Ecclesiasticall causes: wherein Moses, was aboue Aaron, Iosue, Dauid, Solomon, &c. were aboue the high-priestes them-selues. And so remaines it still, except ye can shew the order of these offices of the church inuerted. Of which the Papistes would be glad, and vrges it harde: especially from Peter, wrytting there-to the threefold saying of Christ to him: Ioan. 21. Feede my Lambs: feede my sheepe: feede my sheepe. Meaning, not only his gouerning, but his office of Teaching, which was his especial feeding of them, and they giue it all to gouerning, aduancing them-selues before all Christian Princes. And yet (we graunt) that in the action of their severall Ecclesiasticall function or Church ministry, they are aboue all Christian Princes, representing God vnto them, teaching and admonishing them, and all other: But not aboue them in government of all Ec-of teaching clefiasticall caufes. Which is the question in contronerte now betwixt vs on the one parte, and the Papists and these our owne Learned discourfing Bzethren, leuering them-felues from vs, and adhering (though not to them) yet to their errour, by a new deuife, on the other parte.

though ye differ from your felues also: and fpeake yee care not what contradictions, both one againft an other, and againft your owne assertions? We fay here, The Ministry is deuided into two functions: that is, Paftors; and Doctors or Teachers. And when yee made this requeste in the Page precedent, ye faide: This order we thought good to obserue, in describing the Ministry of the Church, as by which both the diftinction and communication of al offices, and feruices in the Church, might most plainly appeare. Did yee meane these 2. onelis, whome heere onelis ye call Ministers? No, did ye meane all your 4. Offices, for the which ye request this immunity? If ye did: how are now these 2. only ministers? as inuolde yee fay here the fruer of the twaine, and better than your Counterpoifon that faith. Chrift hath expreflye in his woorde fettedowne fufficient ordinary Ministers, of Exhorters, Teachers, Elders, Deacons, &c. But now, as you herein do counter your Counterpoifon, deuiding the Ministry into two functions: Pastors, and Doctors: which I would not haue forgotten, nor contrarie any more hereafter: being a difference not of methode, but of matter: So, I pray yee withall, remember this, that the forme of the Scottifh election deuides not the Ministers into two diftinte offices or officers: but makes them both all one. And this also is an other difference of matter or fubftance, not of methode.

The English Church in Geneva concerning Doctors. Besides that, the order of the Church of England vfed at Geneva, maketh firft the election and office of Ministers, (whom they make to be al one with Pastors:) and after them, the election and office of Elders, & then of Deacons. And when al these 3. are at large fet down, they fay: We are not ignorant that the Scriptures make mention of a fourth kind of Ministers, left to the Church of Chrift, which also are very profitable where time and place doth permit. But for lack of opportunity in this our difperfon and exile, we can-not wel haue the vfe thereof. And would to God it were not neglected; where better occafion ferueth. These Ministers are called Teachers or Doctors. Whose office is to inftitute and teach the faithfull in founde doctrine. Providing with all diligence, that the purity of the Gofpell be not corrupted, either through ignorance, or cuill euil opinions. Notwithstanding considering the present state of things; we comprehend vnder this title, such meanes as God hath in his church that it should not be left desolate, nor yet his doctrine decay, for default of Ministers thereof. Therefore to tearme it by a worde more vsuall in these our dayes, we may cal it the order of Schooles. Wherin, the highest degree, and most annexed to the Ministry and gouernment of the Church, is the exposition of Gods worde, which is contayned in the olde and newe Testaments. But because men can-not so well profite in that knowledge, except they be first instructed in the tongues and humane Sciences: (for now God worketh not commonly by miracles) it is necessary that seede be sowne for the time to come, to the entent, that the Church bee not left baren, and waste to our posterity. And that Scholes also be erected, and Colledges maintayned with iust and sufficient stipendes: wherein, youth may bee trayned in the knowledge and feare of God, that in their ripe age they may proue worthy members of our Lord Iesus Christ: whether it be to rule in ciuil policie, or to serue in the spiritual Ministry, or else to liue in godly reuerence & subiectiō.

By this order of the English Congregation in Geneua: many thinges are different not in methode, but in matter and substance, from the plat forme of Ecclesiasticall gouernment, that these our Learned discourfers now set downe. Firste, here is but three offices, as of necessitie, vrged. Ministers, Elders, and Deacons. Secondlye, the Ministers that haue the first place are the Pastors; and not Doctors, according to the forme of the new communion booke, & to the Counterpoysen; but contrary to these Discourfers, and to the Frutefull Sermon vpon 1. Cor. 12. Thirdly, they giue these Doctors the fourth place, and call them a fourth kinde of ministry. But they vrgē them not, but say it is very profitable where time and place doeth permitte. Fourthly, they referre these Doctors to the Schooles and Colledges, and call them the order of schooles. Fiftly, they tie them not only to teaching of Diuinity, and to the function of the spiritual Ministry: but also to bee professors of morall, ciuil, and politike professions. Howbeit, they make the chiefeest and highest degree in these orders of Schooles, and most annexed to the Ministrye and gouernment of the Church, to be the expositors of Gods worde, which we cal Doctors or professors of Diuinity. And belike, these our Learned discourfers mis- vnderstanding these words, make them the chiefeest and highest office in the Churches gouernement. All these differences are in substance and matter: not in methode onely. But our Learned Discourfers here, do not onely in these materiall things differ from the English congregation in Geneua, and from the Scottish: but from theselues also. For, if the office of teaching be the chiefe and principall office that is in the Church: how then is this true that followeth here?

The Ministry is deuided into 2. functions: they, that exercise the first, are called Pastors: the other are called Doctors or Teachers. Should they not rather haue said, they that exercise the firste, are called Doctors or Teachers; and the other Pastors? Except wee shall haue another quicke founde out betweene these wordes, office and function, or betweene these wordes, first, chiefe and principall. For, if ye will say, ye meane by the word (first,) the first place, & not the dignitie: ye neyther giue the Pastor the first place: and ye call the Teachers office, to whome yee giue the first place, the chief and principall office that is in the Church. But what? Do ye meane the Doctor shal ouer-rule al the residue? No, God wot. For when it comes to the government in Ecclesiasticall matters, except it bee for an Ergo in the Schooles, I am afrayed, Maister Doctor were as good come last, as first: or left cleane out, or, but permitted in time and place, (as the Geneua & Scottish forme do say) for any great government & that be allowed him. But let him shift for his share of government as he can, he is in place already, and admitted first: and now let vs heare, what shal be his office.

The office of a Doctor

Bridges.

The name of Doctor.

The office of a Doctor is to teach, as the very name doth declare: but yet every Teacher is not ment thereby, for it appertaineth to Pastors also to teach. yet this later is distinct from the former.

Sith, the office of a Doctor is to teach, (as the very name doth declare:) I marvell, that not long ago, the very name of Doctor was hissed out both of the Schooles, and of the Church, by some of these our chiefest reformers, that it coulde not bee named, but in disdain & reproch. And now, the very name of Doctor is not onely admitted, but thus advanced, that it is named the firste, the chiefe, and principall office in the Church. Thanks be to God, they see now more into the matter: at least, the name hath gotten greater credite. Welike, some of these Learned discourfers, or some of their fauorites, are either Doctors: or coulde be now content to be named, Maister Doctor. And (by the grace of God) as this title of Doctors is now so plausibly admitted, not onely into the Schooles, but into the Church: so (I hope) we shall waite more temperate and wise also, in accepting of other reuerent names and titles of the Ministers, offices, and dignities, of the Church: then so obviously and contemptuously, to exclaime vpon them, by that time we shall haue more aduisedly considered of them. But yet (say they) every teacher is not meant heereby, for it appertayneth also to Pastors to teach. Ye say wel, and so it may appertaine to Deacons to. Example Stephen Act. 6. and Philip, Act. 8. &c. Yet this later is distinct from the former. What meane ye by this: is the Pastors office now againe the later, that in your former wordes was so late, the former? Where you saide but halfe a dosen yeres before: & first are called Pastors, the other are called doctors or teachers.

What a Teaching call ye this? that what is later, or what is former, neither you can teach us, nor we can learne a certainty, by this teaching.

But former or later, how is it distinct? For if the Pastor not onely maye teache, but also it appertaineth to Pastors to Teache; and so it is a parte of their office, yea, and as the forme of the English Congregation in Geneva saith, The Pastors or Ministers chiefe office, standeth in preaching the word of God, and ministring the Sacramentes: howe then are these offices distinct, (e that in Teaching,) one from another? Especially sithe that these Learned discourfers say withall, that the office of a Doctor, is to teach, as the very name doth declare. But, it pertaineth to Pastors also to Teach: therefore it appertayneth to Pastors, to be Doctors, e that by their office: Where-upon it followeth, that these offices in the Pastors and Doctors, are not such distinct offices (as is pretended,) yea, their own repugnant confessions do confute it.

Pastours & Doctors not distinguished in teaching.

But they not so carefull to auoide these contradictions, as carefull to followe their purpose: proceede, and say,

Almightie God being careful, that true doctrine should continue in his Church from time to time most wisely provided, that certaine men should be appointed in euery Congregation, (whome he hath endewed with giftes meete for the same purpose) which shoulde employ theselues either wholly or principally, to the studie of holy scriptures: thereby to learne, to auoiche the principles of true Religion, and to repress & beat downe all false and straunge opinions, of which, Sathan neuer ceaseth, to sow the seedes, but cheefelie where this office is not set vp and mayntayned according to Gods ordinaunce.

The learned Dis.

Posse true it is, that Almighty God is carefull, that true doctrine should continue in his Church: And so, (he be praised for it) it hath done: spite of all the enemies practises to corrupt it. And his prouision also (we acknowledge) is most wise. But, that he hath provided, that from time to time, certaine men should be appointed in euery Congregation, whom he hath endewed with giftes &c. as a distincte office from the office of the Pastors of the Church: this is confidentlie auouched, but no so carefully considered, or as yet proued at al, of these so Learned discourfers. The English Congregation in Geneva, more carefully considering of this matter, durst not go so farre, but onely said, it was a kinde of Ministry verie profitable, where time and place doth permit. For, otherwise they saw that Christ left no such necessary and ordinary officer, appoynted for euery congregatio, nor they saw any such practise of it from time to time in euery congregation. But vnderstanding the office not so precisely neither, (as these Discourfers do): they saw it had been in some times, and in some Congregations, but not in all, and euery time and congregation. Yea, they plainly confesse, of their owne time and congregation, that they

of teaching neither had, nor could wel haue it, saying: But, for lack of opportunity in this our dispersion & exile, we cannot wel haue the vse therof. So that, (all things considered) it is almost impossible (I speak as to man) so to haue it: nor there is any absolute necessity of it at all. 2. 7. therefore making a difference betwene Pastors and Doctors: saith, Pastors are those, that gouerne the Church: Doctors are those, that gouerne the Schooles. And yet see, howe these our Learned discourfers make so close a matter of it, how, carefully and most wisely god hath appointed: yea, and prouided, that from time to time, & in euery congregation, such Doctors distinct from Pastors should be: and the continuance of true doctrine and Religion depends vpon it, &c. But their very owne words do still (and better) confute their owne selues. For, speaking of false and straunge opinions, of which Sathan neuer ceaseth to sow the seedes, chiefly where this office is not set vp, and maintayned: it clearly appeareth by these words, that they themselves do grant, that in euery congregation, & that from time to time, such Doctors distinct frō Pastors haue not bene set vp, nor maintayned. And yet had God his Church and many congregations, and the carefull wisdom and prouidence of God, and his true doctrine & Religion still continued, for all Sathans seedes sowne of false and straunge opinions.

The learned Dis. These men must not content themselves with cōtemplatiue knowledge but, as by the grace of God they excell other men in vnderstanding: so they must diligently instruct other men in the same learning, and openly confute all false doctrine and heresie: & especially they ought to take paine in the instruction of such men, as may be made meete to serue in the Church: as Pastors, and to succede in their place, as Doctors.

Bridges. All this in the Schooles, or in any place else convenient, that professors of Diuinity, Teachers, Readers, or expositors may bee maintayned, were a very good thing. But to tie every congregation, and that from time to time there vnto: and to make thereof a distincte office seuerall from the office of Pastors: and to limite these Doctors onely to teach & confute, and not to exhort, and dissuade, and to say, they must instruct other men, in the same learning. yet, that especially they ought to take paine in the instruction of such men, as may be made meete to serue in the Church as Pastors: where as these our brethren discourfers, make the principall part of a Pastors office, to exhort and rebuke, not to instruct and confute: how they can proue all these thinges to be true, and the last of them to hang together with it selfe: I referre it to their better aduice, and more Learned discourse, and proues thereof.

The learned Dis. Their institution is set forth, 1. Cor. 12. 28. also Eph. 4. 11. In the former place the Apostle teacheth, that they are the ordinance of God: saith hee, GOD hath ordained in the Church, firste Apostles, secondly ing.

In the later place hee testifieth, that our Saviour Christe ascended on high; ledde captiuitie captiue; and hath giuen giftes vnto men: amongst which giftes, he accounteth the function of Teachers. Who should then refuse to embrace the ordinance of God? Who should deprive vs of the free gift of Christ? Pag. 16. and 17. Ephes. 4. 11.

Your argument is this: The ordinance of God, & free gift of Christ is such, as none should refuse to embrace it, or deprive vs thereof: The institution of Doctors.

The office of Doctors or Teachers distinct from Pastors, is the ordinance of God, and the free gift of Christ:

Ergo: None should refuse it, or deprive vs of the office of Doctors, or Teachers distinct from Pastors.

Your Maior you let alone, as so cleare and innincible, that nothing can be said thereto. Your Minor you confirme by 2 places out of St. Paule, 1. Cor. 12. 28. Eph. 4. 11.

And first, because you would carry your Maior so cleare away, without touch of best: Let vs see, how the very proofe of your Minor beates it: if we should go no further. True it is, in your former proofe, 1. Cor. 12. that it is the ordinance of God; and that there be reckoneth bp, thirdly Teachers: but if this be named there the thirde, then belike there were two reckoned bp before. Neither doth the text stay at the third, of Teachers; but proceedeth, saying: Then them that do miracles: after that the giftes of healing, helpers, gouernours, diuersities of tongues. And euen so lyke- wise for your other proofe, Ephes. 4. that the function of Teachers, is among the giftes of Christ: he reckoneth bp there also, three other before it: yea, fower, by your reckoning of them, if a Teacher be distinguished from a Pastor. Now then, if the Maior of this argument may go so scot-free, what aileth this argument on the same.

The Ordinance of God, and free gift of Christ is such, that none should refuse to embrace it, or deprive vs thereof.

But, Apostles, Prophetes, Euangelistes, they that do miracles, the giftes of healing, helpers, Gouernours, diuersities of tongues; are the ordinance of God, and the free giftes of Christ:

Ergo: None should refuse to embrace Apostles, Prophetes, Euangelistes, them that do miracles, &c. or deprive vs of them,

My Minor I proue out of these two testimonies, 1. Cor. 12. 28. and Eph. 4. 11. Nay, soft, (will you peraduenture say) stay your proofes of your Minor, till yee haue proued your Maior. For, except yee distinguish what manner ordinance of God, and what manner free-giftes of Christ they bee: your Maior can not be so roundly yielded vnto. For can (say I,) are they not all the ordinances of God, and free gifts of Christ.

of teaching Who then should refuse to embrace them, or deprine vs of them? say, be not so hasty (perhaps will you say) so, we refuse not to embrace them in their kindes, nor we deprine any of them, but allowe them, as ordinaunces and free giftes of God: but not ordinaunces or giftes all alike. So, (say you) of these offices, some were temporall, seruing onelye for the first planting and foundation of the Church among the Heathen: some are perpetual, pertaining to the nourishing and building vp of the Church for euer. Is it euen so: I pray you then (my Pastors) turne the glasse, and looke here vpon your owne argument. Yea, (but wil you say) we speake here of that ordinaunce and gift that is perpetuall. Doe ye so? Looke on your wordes better once againe, and also on the p^{ro}ues of your Minor. Doe ye finde there any such distinction, either specified or inferred, of these two Testimonies? What though it be not: (wil you say) will you deny that the ordinaunce and gift of Teaching is perpetuall? No I denie it not, in that sence the Apostle speakes it. Howbeit, as you would distinguish it, from Pastors, and make it a feherall office, and in that sorte make it as perpetuall as Pastor is: I may well denie it. no: you be p^{ro}ue or euer are able so to p^{ro}ue it. But the thing that in your Minor, I nowe denie, is, that every ordinaunce of God, & free gift of Christe, is so perpetuall, that none may nowe refuse it or be deprived of it. And yet properly we may wel say, it is no refusal, to embrace the ordinaunce of god no: deprivation of the free gifte of Christe, on our parts: when Christe him-selfe refuseth to continue the ordinaunces and giftes in his Church, then are we no longer to brge them, or to looke for them.

To the Minor, that the office of Doctors or Teachers (distincte from Pastors, in such sorte as is here prescribed) is the ordinaunce of GOD, or free gift, or any gift of Christ at al: til ye can better p^{ro}ue it out of these 2. places: I denie it. So these places doe rather inferre, that the ordinaunce, gifte, or office of a Teacher, is not so precisely distinct from a Pastor.

The former place, 1. Cor, 12. 28. not omitting the ordinaunces giftes & offices transitory, and comming to those that are perpetuall, mentioning Teachers: (Since Pastors are Teachers also by your owne teaching) both rather inferre by Teachers, Pastors: then cleane omittethem. And so doe many both auncient and late interpreters, expounde the worde, Doctor, or Teacher in that place. Chrysostome. Tertio Doctores: Nam qui &c. For hee that fortelleth thinges to come, fore-telleth them all by the spirite suggesting them. As for the Teacher, it often falleth out, when as hys reason is of his own making. Wherupon also he saith in an other place, the Elders that gouerne well, should be honoured with double honour, especially they that labour in the administration of the worde & of do-

Lauboma accordeth Theodoret, Tertio Doctor. Namque Theodoret. For they also being inspired with Divine grace, did both allage doctrine out of the divine sentences, and also they brought forth the morall Exhortation: whiche these Discourfers here forbid them, as appertaining unto the Pastors office. Hieroms opinion of the word Doctor or Teacher in the said place, as it is in his common places cited by Musculus to the same Wolfgangus Musculus on 1. Cor. 12, saith: Non recipiunt nec curate. &c. He doth not exquisitely reckon up all the offices of the Ministers of Christ. For, Eph. 4, he placeth Euang. & Pastors after Prophetes, and then placeth Teachers. And it appeareth that Teachers are the same whom there he calleth Pastors. The worde is apparant, that wee should vnderstande them to be Teachers, who Teach in the church. This was the office of Bishops and Presbyters, who also by a Metaphorical word, were called Pastors. Whome the Apostles placed ouer the Churches that they had planted. And notwithstanding A.C. 20. Paul here by the spirit of God saith, that they were placed to this ende, that they should feede the Church of God, Which can not bee vnderstood but of the Doctrine of the worde.

And in his common places on the title de Ministris Verbi, hee saith also: Pastors and Teachers are all one or the same, who also are called Presbyters and Bishops. These are assigned to feed and teach certain Churches. But by a Metaphoricall speech they are called Pastors of feeding, that is to say, of Teaching: Where-upon they are also called Teachers, (or Doctors.) But they are called Presbyters, (or Priestles,) bicause they are Elders to other both in age and wisdom. (For, that word signifieth Elders or Seniors.) But they are called Bishops, for because that a care is committed vnto them, ouer the people of God. But as for this, that Pastors and Teachers are all one, euen as to feede and to teach, is al one thing: I suppose it is a manifest matter. The which also Hierome noteth vpon that, that the Apostle saith, not some Pastors, and some Teachers, but ioyntly some Pastors and Teachers, &c. Yea, Caluine himselfe vpon this place 1. Cor. 12 saith. Betweene them (speaking of the Prophetes) and the Doctors or Teachers, this difference may be noted. That the office of Teachers consisteth in that, that sound opinions may bee retained and continued, wherebye the puritie of Religion maye remaine in the Church. Neuerthelesse, this name also (Doctor or Prophet) is taken diuerse waies, And heere peradventure it rather signifieth a Pastor. Except perhaps, ye had rather take it generally, for al that are furnished with ability of Teaching. As A.C. 13. 1. where also hee ioyneeth them vnto Prophetes.

more learned, auncient, and late fathers; inferre not, that this ordinance of God, or gift of Christ, or office of Doctor or Teacher, is alwayes distinct and severall office from the office of Pastors, as these our Learned discourssers so peremptorily affirme: but rather that sometimes, either they may be taken all for one ordinance, office, gift, or function: or at least-wise, though diuerse in some respects, yet compatible, and conioynt in one and the selfe-same person. As Hierome noteth on this later testimonie Eph. 4. Nec Verò putandum, &c. Neither must we thinke, that as in the other three hee saide, some to be Apostles, some to be Prophetes, some to be Euangelists; so also in Pastors and Maisters (for so Hierome interpreteth the word didascala) he should haue made them diuerse officers. For he saith not, and some Pastors and some Maisters: but some Pastors and Maisters: that he which is a Pastor, ought also to be a Maister. Neyther in the Churches, although he were a saint, should he take on him the name of a Pastor, except he can teach those whome hee feedeth, or verily otherwise, that one and the same Prelate of the Church be Pastor and Doctor.

And albeit Caluine himselfe on Ephes. 4. disalloweth there, in some part the fore-said fathers interpretation of the worde Teacher: yet is hee not so peremptorie. By Doctors and Pastors (saith he) some do thinke one office to be therfore assigned, because this disiunctiue particle, is not so far as in the former, that it discerneth the one from the other. In which opinion was Chrysostome and Augustine: for those things that are redde in the commentaries of Ambrose, are too childish and vnworthy of Ambrose. And verily in part, I doe subscribe unto them, that Paule speaketh of Pastors & Teachers indifferently, or as mixt together, as though it were one and the selfe-same order. Neyther do I deny that the name of Doctor or Teacher, doth agree in a certaine sort to all Pastors. Notwithstanding, stil this reason moues me, not to confound them two, which I see differ betweene them-selues. For, although it be the office of all Pastors to teach: notwithstanding there is a peculier gift of interpreting the Scripture, that the soundnesse of opinions may bee retayned, and some man may be a Teacher, that is not fitte for preaching. They therefore (in my iudgement) are Pastors, to whome the care of a certain flock is committed; vnto whome the name of Doctors or Teachers to be giuen, misliketh me not. So that, in the meane while, we know, that ther is another kinde of Doctor or Teacher, who hath the gouernement as well to enforme the pastors, as to instruct the whole Church. Not, but that now and then, the Pastor may bee the selfe-same which is the Doctor, but bicause the faculties are diuerse. To conclude, Bullinger saith on this place Eph. 4. There is none that may not see, that these words are confounded together, and one taken for another. For as an Apostle, is also a

Prophet, a Doctor, or Teacher; an Euangelist, a Presbyter or Priest, and a Bishop; and a Bishop is an Euangelist, and a Prophet; a Doctor or Teacher is a Presbyter or Priest and Euangelist. So that on these words thus confusedly here taken: what argument of necessary distinction of offices, especially between pastor or Teacher, can be inferred: yet see how these Learned discourfers urge the perpetual necessitie of these offices, not only to be distinct in faculty: but to be severed in severall persons, and to be so continued in every cōgregatiō. And now (as they imagine) having proved out of these 3. places, the institution and ordinaunce of their Doctors: they proceede unto their office.

The office of Doctors is breifly expressed in Rom. 12. 7. Let him that is a Teacher, attend upon teaching, where also it is distinguished from other offices, and namely from the office of Pastors. For it followeth immediatly, Let him that exhorteth (which is a principal part of a Pastors office, not necessarily required in a Teacher) be diligent in his exhortation. For the office of Doctors is onely to teach true doctrine, and to confute all heresies & false opinions, by the word of God, concerning all articles & principles of Christian Religion, without applying their teaching to any particular state of time, of persons, or places.

This place (as ye say) is briefly indeed expressed, and brieflier than you do set it down: not in i. d. d. name, or he that is a Teacher, But, in i. d. d. name, Or, he that teacheth in doctrine. Which brevitie sameth rather to inferre some distinct part or action of an officers gifts or duties: the to expresse a distinguished office of a distinct officer. So that, of this actiō there noted by the Apost. can not be concluded by any necessary consequent to be any distinct office of a Doctor, and much lesse that it is distinguished from other offices, and namely from the office of Pastors. For, howe can it be namely distinguished, that is not there namely expressed?

If ye say, what though the Apost. name it not? no more he doth al these words, Let him that is a Teacher attend upon his teaching: but only saith: Or he that teacheth in doctrine: no, let him that exhorteth be diligent in his exhortation: but only this in brieve, or he that exhorteth, in exhortation: yet, though these words be not named, they are intended: or, at least, they are not contrary to the meaning of the Text. What is this to the purpose? Doth that warrant you, not only to paraphrase thus largely on the Text, in a distinguished letter, where no such words are, & perhaps no such meaning: but expressly to avouch of the Doctors office, that in this place, it is distinguished from other offices, & namely from the office of Pastors: no such distinction, or officers names, either exhorters or teachers, being there so much as named? If ye say, although, neither these words, Let him attend, nor let him be diligent, be named in y^e text: but either they or some like words be desired: yet are these words named there, Or he that exhorteth, in exhortation, & they follow immediatly vpon the other words.

Bridges.

The action of teaching distinguished from exhorting: inferreth no necessity of distinct offices in Teacher & Exhorter.

They

of teaching

They do so, But how chaine ye interprete it not? Let him that is an Exhorter, &c. might ye not as well have said so, as to say, Let him that is a Teacher, &c. yet, he that Exhorteth, is an Exhorter, in respect of the action of exhortation: & so is he that teacheth, (I grant) a Teacher, in action wherein he teacheth. Yet, as the action of exhorting giueth not to the exhorter a proper & ordinary denomination, as by a distinguished office to be called an exhorter, more then of his rebuking, a rebuker, of his admonishing, an admonisher, of his applying, an applyer, of his comforting, a comforter; of his perswading, or dissuading, a perswader, or dissuader. By all which tearmes, hee may bee well called, in respect of the partes and actions of his office: so, no more doth it follow, that he that teacheth, true doctrine, should be named a Teacher, as by a peculiar office distinguished from an exhorter, more than he that confuteth false doctrine should be called by a distinguished office, a Confuter. And yet, he is a confuter, in that action, no lesse, if not more, distinguished from teaching true doctrine, than exhorting to embrace true Doctrine or godly life, is distinguished from Teaching.

Junius translation

And although Iunius do translate the Syriake thus, Et est qui Doctor est in doctrina sua, & est qui Exhortator est in exhortatione sua: And he that is a Doctor is in his doctrine, & he that is an Exhorter, is in his exhortation. At which translation, I doe somewhat muse: yet, doth not Iunius so exactly separate these, as distinguished offices: but expounds these wordes thus: He that hath a singuler aptnesse and dexterity in executing these gifts. Standing, neither he nor you, can inferre ther-upon, that he that teacheth is alwayes a distinguished officer from an exhorter: and more, then hee that exhorteth, is alwayes a distinguished officer from a Teacher. And least of al, can ye rightly conclude hereon, that a Teacher is distinguished from the other offices, and namely fro the office of Pastors: For, what is a Pastor, but a feeder? and what is more, his feeding, then his teaching? Saue that, (as Musculus noted well before) Pastor is a Metaphorical and vnproper terme: and the proper terme is Doctor, or Teacher.

The signification of the worde Pastor.

But (say you) exhorting is a principall parte of a Pastors office, not necessarily required in a Teacher.

That exhorting is a principall part of a Pastors office, I assent: albeit the principall part is that, whereof he hath his name, Pastor: & that principally is teaching, though the Greek name ποιμαίνω betoken also a Gouernour. But now, if exhortation be a principal part of a Pastors office, it is it but a part, though a principal part, and not a whole seuerall and distinguished office by it self. And if exhorting be but a part: why may not Teaching be another part also: and not a full, seuerall, and distinguished office by it selfe, as exhorting is?

Yea, if we shall go thus precise to worke, with all the giftes that the Apostle

Apostle here setteth downe, and of euery of them make distinguished offices, and seuerall officers.: we should not onely racke and hale S. Pauls both meaning and wordes, cleane from his purpose: but bying in more offices and officers, then these our Learned discourfers would create: and make them still speake one contrary to another, about these offices. Doth the Note hereon in the English Geneva Testament, make suche distinguished offices, of all here mentioned? Doth it not say, by prophesying heere hee meaneth preaching and teaching? and yet yee see, the Apostle setteth them downe distinctlie. first, Prophecy: then office, Deconship (or) Ministry: then teaching: then exhorting: then distributing: then ruling: and then shewing mercy. And saith the Geneva Note, by office or ministry, all such offices as appertayne to the Church, as Elders, Deacons, &c. And yet is euery one of these, by the Apostle set down distinctly by it selfe, distinguished from that which he called Ministry, office Ministry, or Deaconship.

Yea, where he speaketh here first of prophesying, saying: Whether in Prophesying according to the proportion of Faith: the Geneva Note saith: By faith, he meaneth the knowledge of God in Christe, with the giftes of the holy Ghost. And yet, S. Paule 1. Cor. 12. saith: To one is giuen by the spirit, the word of wisdom, to another the word of knowledge by the same spirit: to another is giuen faith, by the same spirit.

As therefore it can not necessarily be inferred, that, because they were all seuerall and distinguished giftes of the spirite of God, they were seuerall and distinguished offices, and so to continue perpetually seuerall & distinguished offices in the Church, the gifts of wisdom, knowledge, faith, &c: so more can we necessarily inferre it of these two giftes, Teaching and exhorting, that they must needs be in the Church, seuerall & distinguished offices.

And as we haue seene the iudgement of the auncient fathers: so it shall not be amisse, to consider withall, the iudgement of the moste famous late writers for this point.

The Historiographers of Magdeburge, noting the Primitiue Churches order, for the vse of these offices in the Apostles times to say: Prophets, Euangelistes, Pastors, and Doctors, did not make certaine degrees of persons in the Ecclesiasticall regiment: but eyther they seeme to be numbred among the Apostles and their fellowes, or among the Presbyters, or the Deacons.

With what moderation Caluine distinguisheth the gift of teaching & of exhorting into 2. offices: we haue some what already heard. He that is ordeyned a Minister (saith hee) let him exercise his gifte in ministring. Neither let him thinke, that hee was taken into the degree for himselfe, but for others. As though he should say: let him fulfill his office, by ministring truly, that hee may aunswere to his title, euen as straightwaies vnto Doctors, he commendeth vnder the name of doctrine, whole (or sownde) edification, in this sense: he that excelleth in doctrine, Lett him knowe the end thereof is, that the Church may be instructed truly, and let him meditate that onely: that he may make the Church more learned by his doctrine. For, he is a Doctor that formeth and bringeth vp the Church in the worde of truthe. He that excelleth in the power of exhorting, let him looke to this ende, that he exhorte effectually. But these offices haue a great affinity, and also a knitting together betweene them-selues, albeit they leaue, not be diuerse. No man indeed can exhorte, but with doctrine: neuerthelesse, he that teacheth, is not straight wayes indued with the giste of exhorting. Now, no man either teacheth or exhorteth, but, he ministreth. But as we see also and acknowledge in Gods gifts: it is enough to be fitte for the order Ecclesiasticall. Thus modestly doth Caluine mitigate the matter, euen where he maketh them diuerse offices. Not, that he which teacheth, can not, nor may exhorte (as our brethren here peremptorily permit him not) but that straightwaies he is not endued with the gift of exhorting. As wha say, in time he may be, and many are, and it is enough, if he be fitte for the Eccl order of the ministerie.

Petr. Mart. in Rom. 12.

Peter Martyr saith on these wordes, He that teacheth, in teaching: The Apostles gaue a moste fayre example of this precept, when they saide, It is not meete that we should leaue the word of God, and minister at the Tables. For, sith they were instituted of the Lorde to teach the world, their will was to be done in doctrine.

Now, if this be the fairest example of this precept of Paule concerning teaching: Did not the Apostles alwayes intermingle exhortation with their doctrine? But, let Peter Martyr procede on these wordes, He that exhorteth in exhorting. These two are of very neere affinitye between themselves, to teach and to exhorte, and sometimes both of them are graunted to one man. Notwithstanding now and then, and for a great part they are deuided. For, ye may see some, that can teach aptlie, and clearely set forth most cunning matters, and expounde hid thinges manifestlie: and yet for all that, euen the same men are meruelous colde in exhortations. Some there are whose dexterity and forciblenesse is wonderfull in exhortations, who notwithstanding to teache, are of all other most vnfitte. Out of the words of the Apostle to the Corinthians a little before alleadged, wee see, how the giftes of Prophecie are distinct. We haue in the first place, He speaketh edification, which appertayneth vnto doctrine: Secondly, exhortation, wherby men are stirred to do good and to shunne euill. In the 3. place is added Consolation. For it often commeth to passe, that some are broken with aduersitie; who thereupon may seeme, eyther that they wil dispayre, or that they will fall away from the truth.

Wherefore it is necessary, that they be helped with consolation. this part Paule heere doth not prosecute: I suppose, bicause hee comprehendeth it vnder exhortation. But howe much, doctrines and publike exhortations were in vse accustomed in the Church in the auncient time, may be gathered of that chapter to the Cor. 14. Yea, these were neuer left off: no, not in the Synagogues of the Iewes, so often as the sacred assemblie was. Which may be proued of that, that when Christ sat among them in the Synagogue, a booke was sent to him, to expounde somewhat to the people. And when Paule and Barnabas came to Antiochia of Pisidia, as is conteyned in the 13. chapter of the Acts, and when they came to the Synagogue with other Iewes, the ruler of the Synagogue said vnto them: If yee haue the word of consolation for the people, saie on.

Examples of the Doctors teaching with consolation

Whereby it is apparant, that consolation being contayned vnder exhortation: and by these examples of the Doctors and the Teachers, thus intermingling consolation with their doctrine and teaching: that although in some, excellling in one of these gittes, and not in both, yet the ordinary vse was, aswell to ioyne exhortation vnto doctrine, as doctrine vnto exhortation.

And this doth Gualter set out yet more plaine. In the 3. place (saith he) he setteth Doctors. These he willet to bee diligent and industrious in teaching: to witte, that they should instructe the people committed to their trust, diligentlie; and edifie all in true faith and godlinesse, &c. To conclude, let them apply euery thing vnto their hearers, that they may perceaue these things to be spoken vnto them, and to appertayne vnto them. And so shall they be true Doctors, and cutte the woorde of God aright: when they shall remember, that there is no lesse neede of prudence, then of faith, if they will performe these thinges.

Gualterus in Rom. 12.

In which woordes he maketh not onely the doctrine of true faith, but godlinesse, prudence, and application to the hearers, to bee necessary points: and no lesse needefull than the other, appertayning to the office of the Doctors.

In the fourth place (saith he) he setteth exhortation vnder doctrine. For, although these 2. maye seeme to bee ioyned together, moſte neerely betweene them-selues: yet are they diuerſe gittes. Neither is hee alwayes furnished with both of them, that hath the one of them. For, such there are, that haue an excellent perspicuitye and facilitye of Teaching, and when they come to Exhortation, those men are very colde: especiallye if they light vpon such as are stubborne, and such as will answere them againe; and vpon great personages, and on suche as are exhorting. are aduanced with publike authority.

Againe, yee shall see others, who; when they can do lesse in teaching, if at any time they must dispute of darker matters: and yet are they most vehement in exhorting, and with a certaine maruelous waight of argumēts, do pierce euen the most obstinate mindes. But howsoeuer things are, we ought alwayes to remember, that in the Church of God there is neede not onely of meere doctrine, but also of exhortations, and that for the disposition of the froward flesh, which often is woont to looke backe: yea, and to stay in those thinges, which it knoweth to-bee holye and wholesome.

Hemingsius in Rom. 12.

For, there is such negligence of men (saith Hemingsius) yea euen in the businesse of their owne saluation: that except they bee prodded with the goades of exhortations and chydings: the doctrine remayneth vneffectuall. Let therefore the Preachers of the worde in this place be admonished, that not only they shoulde thinke it is their office, to teach those things that are right: but also to applie the doctrine to the hearers. Which thing is done, when as according to the example of Christ, of the Prophetes, and of the Apostles, those things which they haue taught, they do (as it were) instill them by exhorting, & stirre vp diuerse motions of affections.

Bullingerus in Rom. 12.

Let him teache in doctrine, exhorte in exhortation (saith Bullinger) that is to say: let him so teach and exhorte, as godlinesse perswadeth, and becommeth the Christian doctrine to be. Of the which also the Apostle Peter saith, If any man speak, let him speak as the words of God. In which wordes he maketh both these actions of teaching and exhorting, to belong to one person.

Oleuianus in Rom. 12.

Of which wordes also, He that teacheth in doctrine (Oleuianus saith:) It is said Act. 2. that the people persenered in the doctrine of the Apostles. And what especiall doctrine the Apostles vrged, that Sermon of Peter, Act. 2. teacheth, to witte, that Christ died, and was rayssed againe. And nowe let vs shewe the contrary example out of the 7. of the Act. how they reprehended false doctrine. But in either of these examples, both Peter and Stephen are full of exhortation, and application, and vse not onely bare teaching of true doctrine, and confuting of false doctrine. Hee that exhorteth, in exhorting, &c. Before hee spake of those that set their study on doctrine, as the professors in the Schoole, and certaine Doctors also in the Church: now, of those that haue the office of exhorting. Sometimes, these offices are distinguished; sometimes, both of them are borne of one and the selfe-same person.

Thus do all these late and excellent learned writers agree, in the exposition of these wordes, that these gifts (or if you will so cal them, offices or dueties) though they bee distinguished: yet not so, but that they are either either and both of them, and well may oftentimes concur in one officer, together ye call him Doctor or Pastor. But it seemeth these our B^{is} the Learned Dis. relye more on Beza's interpretation of this place, then upon all these. Let vs therefore see also, what is Beza his iudgement hereupon.

When the Apostle (sayth he) had generally admonished, that every one should consecrate himselfe to God; he woorthily placeth after the same, those thinges, that appertaine to the difference of vocations, that euerie man should containe himselfe, within the compasse of his owne lotte. Which thing nowe he expoundeth by the parts. And first he remembreth the Eccl. functions: which he deuidenth into 2. sortes (or kindes) which they cal subalternall, that is to say, into prophetic, & into Deaconship or ministerie: to wit by the name of prophetic, cōprehending those things that pertaine to the gift of teaching: But by the name of Deaconship or ministerie, those Eccl. giftes which the Apostles renounced. 1st. 6. 4. 2. 3. & 4. But nowe because in the gift of teaching, there is not one function, but there are diuerse degrees, neither in one and the same function the measure of the spirite is a-like euen: therefore the Apostle admonisheth the Prophetes, that they shoulde prophetic according to the proportion of the faith. That is, that euerie man keepe the measure of his reuelatio: least one should seeme to himselfe to know all. Which thing if it had beene kept in the Church, it had neuer fallen in those dangers, from the which, when now scarcely it hath begunne to wade out, we must still take very great heed, least it fall not againe therein: except that be done which the Apostle admonished, 1. Cor. 14. f. 30. 32. & 33. Otherwise, the name of prophetic is taken in a streight signification, as Ephes. 4. b. 11. & 1. Cor. 12. d. 28. And Deaconship or ministerie in a larger. So that it comprehendeth all Ecclesiasticall giftes. Yea also, the Apostolicall function: To wit, because that publikely and priuately we must all minister vnto God, as is abouesaid. Cap. 11. b. 13. Actes. 6. 4. & 12. d. 25. In ministring, 1st. Erasmus administration. Which interpretation though I refuse not: yet I put it backe. For, Erasmus in the former place, signifieth the gift it selfe: and in the later the verie function of the gift. Which distinction the old Interpreter, by the gerundive moode, methinkes did better expresse, then, he that teacheth: sicut iudicium. Or as the vulgare translation and Erasmus; or he that teacheth. But in that Paul altered the kind of his speaking: I see, it wrong diuerse, who yet seeme not to haue knowen the cause of that matter. For these things are wont (of the the most part of the Interpreters) to be so expounded, as though the Apostle reckoned 5. diuers kinds of Eccl. functions. Which, I suppose not, neither doubt I, but that they will assent vnto me, whosoever shall more attentively consider this place. I therefore thinke, that Paul first of all (as I haue before said) reuoketh the Eccl. functions that are perpetuall.

(for the other that are temporarie, he worthily omitteth) vnto 2. kindes, after the example of the Apost. Att. 6. d. 2. 3. 4. (as a litle before we haue said) that is to wit, to prophecie, & to Deaconship (or ministerie.) which distribution also, our Apostle followeth. 1. Tim. 3. making mention onely of Bishops & Deacons. Afterwardes, to diuide euery of those 2. kindes, into 2. sortes: that is to wit, Prophets into Pastors & Doctors: but Deacons, into those that distribute almes, into Gouernors, and them which serued to care for the poore of the Church, who for the most part were widdowes, of who is treated seuerally 1. Tim. 5. b. 9. and that this distinction might be better vnderstoode (my opinion is) the Apostle changed his kinde of speech. In teaching, in tri didonaria the vulgar and Eras. in doctrine. Which interpretation (as doubtfull) I refuse. For, to the Latines, (for the most parte) it declareth the thing it selfe, the which is taught. Whereas didonaria, signifieth the gift it selfe of teaching. But the Apostle calleth him Doctor, who studieth the onely interpretation of the Scripture, in the Church, that the pure & synccere doctrine may be retayned. As the most learned interpreter in the Institution of Christian religion, (he meaneth Caluine) most truely taught, &c. But he calleth him an Exhorter, which other-where is called a Pastor, as 1. Cor. 12. d. 28. and Ephes. 4. c. 11. And nowe & then also, a Prophet. as 1. Cor. 4. f. 31. that is to say, him that ioyneth doctrine, with admonitions & exhortations: yea, and that with the administration of the Sacramentes.

This is Bezaes interpretation on this place. *Whō, ho wsoener in the 1. for my part (as I trust al other godly do) I honoz as an holy, learned, & reuerend Doctor himselfe, & with admiration prayse God, for his great and manifolde giftes in him, to the edification of his Church: notwithstanding if it be lawefull for Beza so freely herein to dissent from al the holie, learned, and auncient ffatheres, and from all these already named (as ye see) & from many other such excellent interpreters, and Doctors of our owne age, (the proportion of faith, and bonde of charitie alwaies reserved:) may it not be as lawefull for another, vpon the moze attentine consideration of this place, (which himselfe here requireth) finding his reasons not to be of sufficient weight, against all these olde and new wryters, to dissent herein likewise from him. For what sufficient pꝛoofe is here alleaged, that S. Paule here only speaketh of perpetuall Eccl. offices, & those to be alwaies distinguished by diuersities of persons? What sufficient pꝛoofe of this general diuision and subdiuision? That first Paule diuideth all generally into two subalternall kindes: Prophecie, and Ministerie or Deaconship: (although therein some of these late wryters agree with him) and then, that prophecie must be taken larger here, than it is 1. Cor. 12. and Ephes. 4. where he likewise speaketh, of diuersities of giftes & offices in the Church, so well as here he doth. Why may it not be taken there as large as here? Or rather* ther, here as strict as there? And what sufficient prooſe is here alleaged, that propheticie is here to be ſubdiuided into theſe 2: Doctors & Prophets? And that miniſters or Deacons are againe ſubdiuided, into other 2. ſortes: to wit, into thoſe that diſtribute almes: into Gouvernors: and thoſe that ſerue the Church in caring for the poore, ſuch as for the moſt part were the widowes? And ~~why~~ why are theſe called the miniſterie, more thā the other, that miniſter the worde and Sacramentes, and ſo are more properly to be called Miniſters? And if we call the Deacons, how are Gouvernors called Deacons, ſo well as the diſtributers of the almes, to who that name more properly was attributed? And if the name muſt be diſtributed into theſe two: whence riſeth this thirde, or out of which doeth it reſult? And why is it rather put with Gouvernours, than with diſtributers of almes, bearing called ſhowers of mercie: and the name of almes, deriued rather of mercie, than of Gouvernors? And if theſe Gouvernors be the Segniorie ſo much contended for: why are the Deacons diſtributers, placed before the Deacons gouvernours? And what ſufficient prooſe is here alleaged, that theſe prophetical Doctors muſt onely be interpreters of the Scripture? He appealeth to Caluines Institutions. But I appeale to the Scripture it ſelfe. Doth not S. Paul manifeſtly 1. Cor. 12. 29. 30. diſtinguiſh between Doctors and Interpreters? Are all Apoſtles? are all Prophetes? are all Doctors? are all powers? Haue all the giſte of healinges? Doe all ſpeake with tongues? Doe all interpret? And alſo if Doctors be Prophetes (in the large ſenſe of Prophet) ſo well as Paſtors: doth not S. Paule euen in that ſenſe of Prophet, diſtinguiſh betweene Interpreters and Prophetes? 1. Cor. 14. 5. He is greater that prophecieth, than he that ſpeaketh with tongues, except he interpret it, that the Church may receaue adification. & 17. 27. 28. 29.

And if Caluine be heere appealed vnto, as the moſt Learned Interpreter, in his Chriſtian Institution: why is he forſaken euen in the verie interpretation of this place? 1. Cor. 12. and yet, doth he not ſay in the ſame place, in his Institutions, where he handleth this matter: Quod ſi, &c. But if we ſhall ioine Euangelists to Apoſtles: there will remaine vnto vs two payre, in a manner answerable the one to the other. For looke what like- neſſe Doctors haue with the old Prophetes: the ſame haue Paſtors with the Apoſtles. The Prophetical office was the more excellent, for the ſingular giſt of reuelation, wherein they excelled. But the Doctors of- fice hath almoſt the ſame reaſon, and altogether one ende. But which of all the Prophetes can ye reckon, that was but onely a bare and mere Interpreter of the Scripture? And this better appeareth by Caluine in the place which ſolloweth that, which I cited before, vpon 1. Cor. 12. 28. But why I aſſent not to them, that include all the office of a Prophet in the interpretation of the Scripture: this is the reaſon. Becauſe Paule pre- ſcribeth the number of 2. or 3. that ought to ſpeake, and that in order.

Which would not agree, with the bare interpretation of the scripture.

To conclude, I thus thinke, that they may be called Prophets, who by applying the fortellings, the threats, the promises, & the whole doctrine of the scripture, rightly & cunningly vnto the present vse of the Church, do make open the wil of God. If any man think otherwise: I easily suffer him. Neither will I raise vp brawlings for that matter. For it is a difficult thing to iudge of the gifts & offices, of which the Church hath so long while been destitute: saue that steppes only or shadowes, do yet appeare. Thus modestly speaketh he of these things, to whom Beza referres himself. And withal, Caluine is to be noted in this, that where he thus denieth, the Prophet to be all one with Interpreter: yet he doth it not absolutely: but he doth it in this sense (that you vnderstand) if he should only interpret, which he calleth bare interpretation: but he would haue application ioyned thereto, and so he admitteth him for an Interpreter. Yea, he saith, if interpretation come thereto, (meaning, to the speaking with tongues) then it is prophetic. Of which, we shal (God willing) see more afterwards. In the meane season, Caluine retaineth the old interpretation of the word here, didacalia calling it Doctrinam, Doctrine, as also Peter Martyr doth. Albeit, Beza reprooueth the vulgar, & Erasmus his interpretation, for calling it doctrine. For (saith he) doctrine betokeneth that thing it self, that is taught. Whereas didacalia signifieth the office of teaching. And if it doe so, then, in descending, In teaching, (which Beza followeth) is not the true interpretation, neither. For these wordes, in teaching, signifie rather the action or exercise of teaching, then the office of teaching. And that is the point that Paule toucheth all his exhortation vnto. That they should exercise themselves therein. And take away this interpretation, in doctrine, that is, the thing it selfe, the which is taught: then what letteth, but the Doctors office may stretch further then doctrine or teaching, euen to exhorting, comforting, applying, &c. As well as the Pastors may? Yea, if Beza may say of the word didacalia, that in the former place, it betokeneth the gift or office it selfe: but in the later the function or exercise of the gift or office: which distinction (saith he) the old interpreter (me thinkes) did better expresse, by the gerundiu moode: then, why may not likewise, (for any thing here alleaged) by the same reason and proportion, if not the doctrine, yet the action exercise or function in teaching, (being by Beza also translated) by the gerundiu moode be so expounded, in teaching rather than expounded, the office of teaching? But, be it actio, gift, functio, office, or what ye wil call it: if (as Beza saith) the word prophetic signifie a general subalternall kynd, which is diuided into these 2, Doctor & Exhorter: how may not the Doctor be called as well a Prophet, as may the Exhorter? And this rule holding, nebra diuidentia non debent confundi, if the Exhorter may labour in doctrine, so wel as exhortations and admonitions

whie may be not be called, and be indeede, and haue the office of Doctor or Teacher: so well as of Exhorter, which ye call Pastor? And then, how doe not both these offices, concurre in one person: he hauing the gift, and exercise also, of the Doctor? And so all this deuise of so precisely, necessarily, and perpetually distinguishing these degrees into severall officers, is cleane confounded and confuted, even in their Pastors office. And if it be so in Pastors: what reason is heere alleaged, whie Doctors on the other side, may not be called, and be Pastors, so well as Pastors Doctors; and deale, (besides the interpretation of the scripture) with exhortation, admonition, consolation, application, &c. so well as Pastors may with teaching and interpreting? But when all is done, both Caluine & Beza standing vpon their (purs): I thinke so (saith Caluine) and yet with suche a lowly modestie, as ye haue heard: and Beza, I suppose thus, or, I thinke not thus: and shall we now vpon these 2. reuerent Fathers only thinking and supposals, be pressed with plaine assertions; or rather, oppressed with the necessitie and enforcing these things vpon vs? For here these Learned discourfers come not in, (as Caluine and Beza) with purs & opinion, I thinke it, I suppose it: But resolutely they determine the matter, saying: For the office of Doctors is onely to teach true doctrine, and to confute all heresies, & false opinions, by the worde of God, concerning all articles and principles of Religion, without applying their teaching to any particuler state, of time, of persons, or places.

Doctors may be Pastors as well as Pastors DD.

The modestie of Caluine and Bezaes supposall.

This is a verie precise and streight limitation, of this supposed old lost, and prescribed new founde (or rather) bystarted Doctor. Neither, as I thinke & suppose, (to vse Caluines and Bezaes moderate termes herein) can they shewe in the old or newe Testament, any such one Doctor, that was thus restrained, that hee might vse no application of his doctrine or interpretation, to his hearers. Doth Saint Paule speake of such interpreters? Although he distinguish Interpreter from Prophet: yet (saith Caluine, vpon 1. Cor. 14. 29.) In disputing, the interpreter was in place of a Prophet: As I shewed also before, in Caluines comparison of Christian Doctors, to the Iewes Prophetes. And therefore, the name of Prophet comprehending alike both Doctors and Pastors, by Bezaes owne opinion; when S. Paule declareth, 1. Cor. 14. 3. the vse and ende of prophecying: he that prophecieth, speaketh to men to edification, exhortation and consolation: though he distinguish, ratione, (as wee say) in consideration of the diuerse gift or vse thereof, betwene these things: yet, he ioyneth them altogether in the Prophecie. Which prophecie (as he said, Rom. 12.) must be according to the Analogie or proportiō of faith. Faith properly in respect of the matter it relieth vpon, appertaineth vnto doctrine: howbeit, not so strictly, that it goeth no further then, it is heere bounded: only to teach true doctrine, and to confute all heresies & false opinions by the worde of God, concerning all articles and principles of Christian Religion, without applying their teaching, to any particular state of time, of persons, or places: But as Paul saith here in plain words, to all these ends & bles, to edification, exhortation, & consolation. Uther, upon (saith Caluine) to speake to edification, is to speake that, that con- teyneth doctrine fit to edification. For I take this for doctrine, whereby we be instructed to godlines, to faith, to the worship & feare of God, and duties of holines & righteousnes: because that oftentimes, we haue need of proddes or goades: & other are pressed with afflictions, or labor thorough imbecillitie, he addeth vnto doctrine, exhortation, & consolatiō.

Caluine.

14. ver. 3.

And hereunto accordeth Beza himselfe. Edificationē induit. That is, those thinges that further men in the knowledge and studie of godlines.

On which words also saith P. Martyr. Edificationē loquitur hoc maxime, &c. This most pertaineth to the cōfirmatiō of the faith, to the purity of opinions & synceritie of religion. Ambrose expounding this place, said, the church to be edified, because the dissoluing of questions may be had. He speaketh exhortation & consolation, because generally, we exhort men, that they be heedfull to their saluation, and according to their strength strue thereunto. But consolation is, when singularly we exhort thē, that they should not be brokē for aduersities, nor discourage their mind but haue it erected & vnfearefull. And either of these things cometh to passe by setting before their eyes, the profit & the damage that will followe.

1. Cor. 14.

And to declare further, y^e Doctors are here vnderstande by these Prophets, Musculus saith: But this sentēce (I suppose) doth enough declare, of what kind of Prophet he doth speake: to wit, of him, by whom the Church is taught & instructed. He saith not: he that prophecietieth foretellet things to come: for here he speaketh not of foretellings. But, he that prophecietieth, speaketh to men edification, exhortation, & consolation. But this do the Doctors of the Church, who with the word of doctrine, exhortatiō, and consolation, do edifie the people of the L: those Prophets therfore that in the Church do teach, are more to be made of: then if by a miracle they fange, or prayed with tongues. But marke the brief & cleare description of this Prophetical office. He that prophecietieth (saith he) speaketh to men edification, exhortation, & consolation. The parts therfore of an Eccl. Prophet are, to edifie, exhort, & comfort. Edification is a Metaphorical word, set for doctrine. He that teacheth the ignorant & rude doth edifie thē to the building of the Lords house. Hereunto appertaine all those thinges that cōcerne faith & godlines, to be planted in the hartes of the elected. By the which, vpon the foundation (that is Christ,) we are builded into the temple of God, as liuing stones, &c. The 2. part is exhortation, in Greeke παράκλησις, he rebey the Prophet diligently exhorteth those that already beleue & pro fesse the religion of Christ, that in faith and

and true godlines they should constantly go forward. And as it were by name, he calleth on the: euen as those that are wont to be cried vpo, who being set on a iourney, either stray aside, or go forwarde more slowly. This part of prophecie is chieflie necessary for them, who haue knowen the truth of Christ & all godlines; but in studie & cōuersation of life, do not expresse it, as it were meete they should. This part the Apostle diligently executed. Who whē he was at Ephesus for 3. yeares, he ceased not day & night, with teares to admonish and exhort euery one of the faithfull, Act. 20. The 3. part is consolation in Greeke παρηγορία. But παρηγορία is, to speake louingly to those that trauell, are afflicted, are sad: Such as are the poore, the desolate, the captiues, the distressed, especially for Christ: And to lay before the such things, whereupon they may receaue consolation, & be confirmed in the spirite of patience. This studie to comfort pertaineth to all Christians, especially to Prophets, the ministers of gods word. The people of Christ gathered together, hath ignorant, hath sluggish & slowe, hath afflicted persons. The gift of prophecie is therfore giuen to the Church: whereby the ignorant should be taught, the sluggish admonished, & the afflicted receaue consolation.

Bullinger in 1. Cor. 14.

Bullinger also saith of these Doct. He vnderstandeth prophecie, not the foretelling of thinges to come: but the interpretation of the holy scripture. For saith Ambrose, by Prophets he vnderstandeth, the scriptures interpreters. (which you say are your Doctors) for as a Prophet foretelleth things that are not knowē: so also he is said to prophecie, while he openeth the sense of the scripture that to many is hidden &c For the church hath nothing greater, & more profitable then Christian doctrine & the interpretation of the scripture, &c. And again: he that prophecietieth, studieth on euery part to profit his Church. For he that prophecietieth, performeth that for which cause the assembly is gathered together. For, he speaketh vnto mē edification, exhortation, & consolation. To wit, while he expoundeth the secrecies & mysteries of the scripture, and out of the doth either exhort to the studie of godlines, or else cōforteth those, who faint heart, or terror, or dispaire, or impaciencie of trauaile, hath almost broken. And this it is, to speake to edification. That is to say, by speaking to endeouour & tende therto, that thou mayst profit the hearers. But, of this place it is cleare, that a Prophet is the same with Paul, that vnto vs is a Doctor, a Bishoppe, a Preacher, or an Euangelist.

Aretius in 1. Cor. 14.

To this agreeth Aretius, and saith: Hereupon it appeareth, that most great are the profites of interpretation, whose partes are so bright.

And saith Gualter vpon the same place: Heereupon Doctors in the scriptures, are called Edifiers. And for this cause the Apostle called himselfe a Maister builder. It pertaineth to these men before all things, to care, that they lay a good foundation, that is to wit, euen Christ, which otherwher is called the foundation of the Proph. & Apost. And the, that vpon that alone they build, nor mingle any stubble, hey, wood, or ought else straunge frō Christ. Moreouer, that diligently they plie the work, & with all care: least sathā with his mynes secretly wrought, do vndermine it; nor that it be ouer-turned with the whirle-windes & stormes of tempestes; nor finally, that any (as sande without lime) of their owne voluntarie, slide and fal away. Ministers also must remēber, that there is need of continuall & perpetuall building. Partly, because the infirmitie of the beleeuers requireth dayly a-new renewing: partly, because new stones must often be layde vpon this holy edifice: that more may dayly be gathered to Christ, and his kingdome be enlarged perpetually. But in this place is euident the craft of Sathan: who, that hee might make all men more remisse and slouthfull in this studie, deuised certaine edifices of Temples, Towers, Colleges, and Chappels, that are called eternall, and are builded with great charges, the spirituall Temple of the Lorde being in the meane time neglected, which lyeth there almost altogether in ruine, where this frantike lust of building raygneth. For eyther there are no builders at all, or they are trecherous. Who (as the scripture speaketh of the Priestes of the Iewes, hauing reiectēd that precious stone of the foundation, do declare that all their help of saluation, is in things unprofitable & pernicious. Let them take heed therfore of their exāples, that will speake edification. The other head of the eccles. ministerie, is

Exhortation. There is need of this, for those, who do not straightway obey, when they are taught those things, that are necessary to attain saluation. For by nature we be more slow to heauēly things. And (that is more hurtful) we are delighted with sinnes and errors. Wherefore there is need of rebuking our sins & errors, need of reprobuing & exhorting. Whereof we haue most graue exāples in the Prophets, whom God in old time commanded, as watchmen to blowe the trumpet of his word, that they might stirre vppe all men to doe their duetie. The Apostles each where followed these, (to say as nowe, nothing of Christe) whose most graue exhortations are read in the Euangelistes. Therefore they do very greatly erre, that at this day will haue none of this to bee doone, but as though the naked and simple doctrine might suffice, do take most greedously all rebuking and exhorting. But howe necessary these are: the licentiousnesse of most cruell wickednesse daylie encreasing, and the most corrupt manners of all men, abundantly beareth witnesse: but because the Church hath many that are exercised with tentation and all kind of afflictions, there is added a third head, consolatiō. To the which appertaine those things, that in Ezechiel are spoken, of the office of the good & faithfull Pastor: when as the Lord promiseth that he will be hee, which will require the losse sheepe, reduce the expulsed, binde vp the wounded, & strengthen the weake. And in consideration of these things,

the ministers of the Churches ought so to behaue themselves, that they alwaies remember, they shall then at length be faithfull to God: if that (being intentiue with all their minde, on the peoples studies & maners) they set foorth all these things most diligentlie, according to the consideration of the hearers, and of the times. To this ought to be referred those things, that S. Paule to Timothie writeth: of cutting aright the word of God. And the things that Christe deliuered vnder the parable of the Steward, 2. Tim. 2. Matth. 24. Zuinglius on the 24. verse of the same chapter, by these knits vp all the matter, saying: To prophesie is to teach to admonish, to comfort, to reprove, and to rebuke. And Peter Martyr vpon 1. Sam. 10. ver. 9. But in the Primitiue church, when Prophecy flourished: what difference was there between a Prophete and a Doctor? I aunswere, that although the office of them both were al one, yet were Doctors instructed by Maisters: but Prophets spake on the sudden, beeing moued by the inspiration of the holy Ghost, without anie helpe of man.

Thus do all these, and manie moe late and notable learned writers (agreing with the old fathers, and almoste with all the interpreters of the Scriptures) accord, that by this Prophet here mentioned he meaneth a Doctor or Teacher: But withall, that this Prophet, Doctor, or Teacher, communicateth in his teaching and interpreting of the Scriptures, in all the parts of a Pastors office, without restraint, anye moze then the Pastor is restrained from any part that apperteineth to a Doctor. Yea, as Peter Martyr noteth on the same chapter, verse. 6, on these words: What shall I profite you: except I speake vnto you, either by Reuelation, or by knowledge, or by Prophecie, or by Doctrine? Chrysostome thinketh, reuelation, prophesie, science, and doctrine, to signifie the same thing. And that Paule by a certeine circumlocutio, exprest a gentle diminution, that might easilie be perceiued of the hearers. Other beleue, that these are diuerse giftes, by which the Church might be edified: and some do fit these wordes thus: that reuelation should bee ioyned to prophesie: for Prophets doo not treate or speake but that thing that is reuealed to them. And likewise they will, that knowledge should cleaue to doctrine. For no man teacheth right, but that which before he knew. Wherevpon also it appeareth againe, that we said before, the estimation of the giftes are to be esteemed according to the profit & edification of the church, which is set in the confirming of faith & religion. And Musculus to the same purpose saith, Wherefore enen as he there said, he that prophesieth speaketh to men to edification, exhortation, and consolation; so heere also, when he had said, except I speake to you: he addeth, either by reuelation, or by knowledge, or by prophesie, or by doctrine, &c. Or by doctrine, (saith he) hee that speaketh by reuelation, or by science, or by Prophecie, of Doctors. prophesie, serueth to informe vs in our faith and vnderstanding of things, either hid or to come. But he that speaketh by doctrine, serueth to compose our life, and frame our manners. Thus farre I thinke this terme doctrina in this place, may not vnfitly be seperated from the generall doctrine, by the which all things in the word of God are taught. Hierome also thinketh so, for he expoundeth it with this paraphrase: except either I interpret it vnto you, or make plaine those hidden thinges of the lawe that I know, or expound propheties, or teach you morall institutions. I knowe that Ambrose diuides not these things.

Ambros. For he saith, all these signifie one thing. For none can teach, except it be vnderstood: neither indeed can they be Reuelation, knowledge, prophesie, and doctrine: except they be vnderstood. Wherefore, to speake by Reuelation, by knowledge, by prophesie, or by doctrine, is altogether to speake with vnderstanding. And so dooth Chrysostome expound it, ἐν λόγῳ, καὶ ἐν ἔργῳ, &c. But that which he saith, is on this wise: Except I shall speake that, which may of you bee easilie conceiued, and is cleere. Notwithstanding, in the meane time, he forbiddeth not, that we may not by a fittē diuision, and pertainig to the purpose, distinguish betweene these things, and giue to euerie one his proper sense. For as, when he said before: he that prophesieth, speaketh to men to edification, to exhortation, and to consolation, hee expressed the profit of generall prophesying: so heere he setteth downe certeine parts and instruments thereof, or rather founteines. For that, whereby, is one thing: and that, wherevnto, is another thing, that the Prophet speaketh in the Church. And therefore (saith Gualter). Paule setteth doctrine after these things, which applieth euerie one of them to the hearers, according to the consideration of the places and times: that they may serue for the instruction of euerie one. And to conclude for the amendment of their life and maners. And this is that parte, wherein the edification of the Church, and of euerie member thereof, doth cheefelie consist, &c.

Gualterus in 1. Cor. 14.

And to this purpose, speaking of these gifts, as instruments to edification, Paule byingeth in the similitude of muscicall instruments. Whereon (saith Gualter) we will not thinke, that Paule doth rashlie vse this similitude, For verie well and elegantlie, it shadoweth out the vse of the Ecclesiasticall ministerie, and office of the Ministers. The Pipe admitteth manie and diuerse waies of tuning: and the Citheran or Harpe consisteth of diuerse chordes and stringes: and euen so the maner of preaching the worde of God, is not one: but often in one Sermon, with a marueilous harmonie, do concurre, doctrine, admonition, exhortation, rebukings, threatnings, and consolations, &c. This was Saint Pauls doctrine for a Doctor, (whome here hee calleth a Prophet) and for Prophesying. And which your selues call teaching, saying; The office of teaching is the principall principall office that is in the Church. By that wee be taught to know God, and how to serue him, and what benefits to looke for at his hand. Without which knowledgethere can be no felicitie, but onelie destruction looked for: according to the saying of the wiseman, Where prophesing faileth, there the people perish. So that as your selues confesse also, that by Propheciyng is meant this your firste office of Teaching, which is indeed (being vsed as it ought to be) an excellent office. But (as Gualter saith, on the verse, 24.) concerning the vse thereof: it is not a simple reciting and interpretation of the scripture (as you would make it) But (as we haue heard in the beginning of this chapter) suche another, as is applied with exhortation & consolation, to the edification of the whole Church, and of euerye one. And therefore it ought so to be exercised: that it should pearse into the mindes, and conuince them of sinne (which propertie, Christe sayde should be the worke of the Holy-ghoste in the Apostles.) And to conclude: that it so worke, that all may perceiue, that they are spoken of. But of this chapter you giue more occasion to note hereafter. Onelie this note at large, for the office of Doctors or Teachers of Doctrine, called here Prophets and interpreters of Scriptures: that they were not thus limited, onelie to teach true doctrine, and to confute all heresies & false opinions by the worde, concerning all articles and principles of Christian Religion, without applying their teaching, to anye particuler state of time, of persons, or places. And now let vs see howe yee can proue this by examples.

The example or practise of this office, is set foorth Acts. 13. 1. where it is recorded by S. Luke, that Paule and Barnabas (before the Holy-ghoste commanded them to be seperated for the worke wherunto he called them) were in the number of Prophets and Doctors, with Simeon Niger, Lucius of Syrene, and Manaben in the Church of Antiochia: where they continued in that office a whole yeare, in which Citie the Disciples were firste called by the name of Christians Acts. 11. 26. Likewise, Apollus which was an eloquent man and mightye in the Scriptures, firste at Ephesus but afterward being more perfectly instructed in the waye of G O D, by Aquila and Priscilla in the Church of Acbaia, exercised the office of a Teacher, with great profite of them which had beleued, and to the great confusion of the stiff-necked Iewes, while hee proued plainely by the Scriptures, that Iesus was the Christe, Acts. 18. 28.

For the practise mentioned in the Scripture, this might suffice that is noted by Sainte Paule, in this chapter 1 Corinth. 14. with the iudgements of all these writers: yea of themselves, concerning these prophets that were Doctors, and of the manner of their teachings.

examples of Doctors.

But now, because for this practise and example hereof, these our Brethren the Learned Discourers, have here set downe some other examples also, to p^roue this practise: let vs follow and peruse the same. And first note this, that these examples here alleaged, mention no perpetuities, much lesse p^roue it: no: any prescribed rule vnto themselves, much lesse to others. And because of all the persons here named, Act. 13. Barnabas is first, and Paule is last, the other haue little record save the bare names: let vs looke vpon this first and last, as the more notable, by whom we may leuell the others as lesse knowne. And here at the entrie, in plaine and expresse terme, we meete (in all these persons) with those that are intituled by the name of Teacher or Doctor, on which title our Brethren take holde. And albeit the Text setteth it downe not in the name of Doctor onelie, but calleth them Prophets and Teachers or Doctors: yet that makes no matter. For, as (speaking of teaching) they alleaged prophesie before; so here they take these names οὐνομιμας, as diuerse names betokening one matter. For, if they doe not so, either they speake contrarie to themselves: or nothing to the purpose. Contrarie: if the Doctors intermeddle in other mens functions, distinguished from theirs. Nothing: if they meane not, they were suche Doctors, as here they take vpon them to p^roue vnto vs: whose office is onelie to teache true doctrine, and confute all heresies and false opinions, by the word of God, concerning all articles, and principles of Christian religion, without applying their teaching to any particular state of time, of persons, or places. But it followeth: The example or practise of this office is set forth, Acts. 13. 1. &c. So that their meaning is, to p^roue all these here recorded by Saint Luke, to be suche, and no other sorte of Doctors. To which purpose, how truelie these examples fitte; let vs see (besides the conference of the Scripture) howe they contrarie (in these examples) the Doctors, that themselves most esteeme.

Act. 13. 1.

Caluine vpon these words, Acts. 13. 1, writeth thus: What Doctors differ from Prophets (at the least-wise in my iudgement) I haue expounded on the fourth chapter to the Ephes. 11. And on the twelue of the former Epistle to the Corinthians, 28. In this place these two are synonyms, (that is, diuerse words signifying all one thing) that Luke might signifie, there were manie men in that Church, indewed with a singuler grace of the spirite, for to teache. Truelie I see not how it agreeth to take prophets, for those that excelled in the giste of foretelling. But rather I suppose, it is noted that they were excellent interpreters of the Scripture. But such did exercise the giste of teaching and exhorting, euen as Paule dooth testifie, in the foureteenth of the former to the Corinthians, 29. Wee must regarde the drifte of Luke: Paule, and Barnabas, were ministers of the Church of Antioche: from thence God now calleth calleth them to another place. Least any should thinke, that Church to be stripped naked, of good & fitte Ministers, that God provided for others with the damage thereof: Luke prevents it, and teacheth, that there was such plentie, that helping the neede of others; notwithstanding it had a residue left, so much as was inoughe for the vse of it selfe. Wherevpon it appeareth, how liberallie the grace of God was powred on that Church: from whence Rivers might bee drawne, hether and thether. So also dooth God enriche certeine Churches, about others in our time, that they might bee Seminaries, to spread abroad the doctrine of the Gospell. By which iudgement of Caluine it appeareth, that those Prophets of whome wee haue spoken, 1. Cor. 14. were these Doctors, being Interpreters of the Scriptures. How be it, not bare interpreters, but such as toynd the gifte of exhorting with their teaching. Gualter saith on the same place, Act. 13. 1. But they are called Doctors, who do publikelie instruct the Church, and doo orderlie applye the holie Scriptures, to the institution of all, whome at this daye we call either Pastors or Ministers of the worde. Therefore, there was not at Antioche onelie a Church, but also a Schoole, out of which the learned Ministers were sent to other Cities, &c.

Gualterus in Act. 13. 1. These Doctors were applicers of their doctrine.

Beza also upon the second verse, Act. 13. When as they ministred, λειτουργούντων, that is, while they exercised their office, to wit, of teaching, & of Prophefying. For a little before he had said, they were Doctors & Prophets. Therefore Chrysostome rightlie interpreting λειτουργούντων, while they were ministring, that is, saith he, κηρύσσοντας, while they were preaching. Wherevpon saith the Geneva note. The worde signifieth to execute a publike charge as the Apostleship was, so that heere is shewed, that they preached and prophefied. While they preached (saith Bullenger) while they redde holie things, interpreted and taught others, and while they were occupied with holie thinges. For holie things are preaching, the reading of the Scripture, interpretation, doctrine, and such other matters.

Bullengerus in Act. 13. 2.

So that by all these learned mens iudgements, and by the apparance of the verie text it selfe, concerning the example and practise of this office: it appeareth how vntrue this is, that the office of Doctors, is onelie to teache true doctrine, and to confute all heresies and false opinions, by the worde of God, concerning all articles and principles of Christian religion, without applying their teaching to any particuler state, of time, of persons, or places. But to see this practise better, by these particuler examples: let us begin with Barnabas, which in the text is first named. And whose verie name (saith Saint Luke, Acts. 4. 36.) is the sonne of consolation. On which Beza saith, they that are skilfull of the Chaldie deriue it from בר Bar, which is, Sonne, and נב Nephesh, that

Barnabas. that is, Soule, as though yee would saye: he that refresheth the Soule.
Vatablus. Vatablus saith: Full of consolation, that is, one moſte apte to comfort. And (trowe yee) this surname, giuen him of the Apostles, (for other-wise his proper name was Ioses, as some copies haue it Ioseph, euen as Chriſte had giuen surnames to some of the Apostles; as Peter, signifying a Stone: and Boanerges, signifying the ſonnes of Thunder,) was giuen him by them for anye greater cause, then for his comfortable and effectuell kinde of Teaching? And if it were so: can we suppose his Teaching was with-out application and exhortation? But let vs not stand vpon coniectures, nor on his name, but on his doing. Doth not the text expresselie say? Acts. 9. 26. When Saule was come to Ierusalem, he assaied to ioyne himselfe vnto the Disciples, and they were all afeard of him, beleening not that hee was a discipule: but Barnabas tooke him, and brought him to the Apostles, and declared to them, how he had seene the Lord in the waye, and that hee had spoken vnto him, and howe he had spoken boldlie at Damascus in the name of Iesus. Can we conceaue that Barnabas could doe all this, (or be it that Paule did declare some parte thereof) with-out application of the particular state, of the time, of the persons, of the places? But what say you to this place, conteyning the foure verses, 22. 23. 24. and 25. immediatlie pceding that place, that is cited by your selues, Act. 11. 26. Then tidings of those things, (to witte, that a great number in Antiochia, beliened and turned to the Lorde,) came to the eares of the Church, which was in Ierusalem. And they sent forth Barnabas, that he should goe to Antiochia. When he was come, and had seene the grace of God: was glad, and exhorted all, that with purpose of heart they would cleaue vnto the Lorde: for hee was a good man, and full of the Holie-ghoste, and faith. And much people ioyned themselves vnto the Lorde.

Bullingerus
in Act. 11.
Calvinus in
Act. 11.

Upon these wordes, they sent Barnabas: (saith Bullinger) for consolation and for helpe. Moreouer (saith Caluine) this was the cause of sending Barnabas. The Apostles did then susteine the whole burden of the kindome of Chriſte. It was their partes therefore, euerie where, to forme (or frame) the Churches, & what companie of the faithfull were any where, to reteyne them in the pure and holie consente of faith. Wheresoeuer there was any number of the faithfull, to ordeyne Ministers and Pastors. The sleight of Sathan is knowne, so soone as euer hee seeth a doore opened to the Gospell, by all meanes hee labourerh to corrupt, that that is sincere. Wherby it hath come to passe, that streight wayes with the doctrine of Chriſte, diuerſe heresies haue boiled forth. Wherefore, with how greater giftes euerie Church excellerh: it ought to be carefull so much the more, least Sathan mingle and disturbe any thing among the rude, and suche as are yet but little established in the faith. For nothing is more easie, then the corne to be corrupted in the prime prime grasse thereof. To conclude, Barnabas was sent, that hee should aduance higher the rudiments of the faith: that hee should compose their matters into a certeine order: that hee shoulde giue a forme vnto the edifice newe begunne: that it might bee a lawfull state of a Church.

So that, the end wherunto Barnabas was sent, was not onlie to teach the principles of religion, with-out applying his teaching to any particular state of times, of persons, or places: for; no doubt, this his applying his teaching to the particular state, bothe of the time, and of the persons, & of the place, was one of the greatest partes of his office in his commission, and causes of his sending thither. And if it were not; he had done greatlie amisse, and bene an intruder into another mans office: and so, not answerable to his highe commendation that is giuen him, that he was a good man, and full of the Holie-ghoste and faithe. And being full of the Holie-ghoste, the comforter: no doubt his teaching was correspondent to his name, and not boide of consolation. And euen so expresse he saith the text, καταπαύει, and hee exhorted, or beseeched, or comforted them all, that with purpose of heart they should continue in the Lorde.

Heere (saith Marlorate) he brought no new doctrine into the church of Antiochia: but rightlie and simplie encourageth and confirmeth them, being instructed in Christe Iesu: that being constant, they should perseuer in that purpose to cleane vnto the Lord. Laste of all (saith Caluine) the exhortation of Barnabas is to be noted. Nowe, wee haue before said, that Barnabas to the former doctrine which they had embraced, did subscribe. Howbeit, least the doctrine should slippe awaye, it is necessarie, that the same should throughlie be fixed in the minds of the faithfull, with continuall exhortations, for when as we must haue continuall battell, with so manye and so mightie enemies, and our mindes are sickle; except euerye one doo diligentlie arme himselfe: hee will streight-ways fall away. And that doo infinite numbers declare to be too true, by their daylie revolting. And here Marlorate addeth Bullingers note: We gather also with how fewe lawes the apostles being contented, did bend all the force of their minde on this, that those which are set in the waye of the Lorde, they might reteine them, and vnie farre set them forward in the same. For, except wee trauell in the waye which we haue entred into, we haue begunne the iourney to no purpose. For he that setting his hande to the Plowe, shall looke backe; is not fite for the hingdome of G O D. Luke. 9. verse. 61. And by these continuall exhortations of Barnabas, God wrought so effectualitie in this people (who before were taught by others) that (saith S. Luke:) et great multitude was added vnto the Lorde.

Act. 9.

Whereupon, saith Caluine : Where the number of the faithfull was already plentifull, Luke saith it increased by the coming of Barnabas. Thus dooth the building of the Church go forward, when one helps another, with mutuall consent. This addition therefore of the faithfull, (saith Marlorate out of Bullinger) is the effect of Barnabas his preaching. So that he did not onelie teach: but with all he preached, he exhorted, he comforted, he applied, &c. So cleane contrarie is the practise of Barnabas example, to this imagined office of a Doctor. Whereunto these our Learned discoursers, applie the same. And as we thus most euidentlie see, for Barnabas, before he sought out Paule to helpe him, in that place: so likewise for Paule, both before this his coming to Antiochia, and iointlie with Barnabas being there, and alwayes after, for the manner of his teaching, ioyned with applying, exhorting, rebuking, &c. For, Paule, Acts. 9. being replenished with the Holie-ghoste, after he had taried certeine daies with the Disciples at Damascus, he streightwaies preached Christe, that he was the sonne of God. Here the principall point and ground of his Treatie, was Doctrine. But did he barelie teache it? No, saith the text, he preached Christe, and that was done with such persuation and application to the hearers, that saith Luke ver. 21. All that heard him were amazed, and said: is not this he that destroyed them, that called vpon this name in Ierusalem: and came hether for that intent, that he should bring them bound vnto the high Priests? Came this astonishment among his hearers, of bare teaching? Trowe yee, Paule did not as earnestlie exhort them to embrace Christe, as he did breath out threatnes before, against all those that professed Christe? If he had done the one earnestlie, and the other barelie, without all applying and allenging of himselfe vnto them for a liuelie example, of the mightie power of Christe, that had beaten him downe and conuerted him: could his bare teaching of Christe, haue moued suche amazement in them?

No, (saith Caluine,) hee that of late rushed with a furious onset against Christe, dooth not onelie mildelie submit himselfe at his commandement; but euen as a stander bearer to recouer his glorie, dooth fight euen to the extremest danger. True it is, that he was not so soone enformed by the labour of Ananias; but when as he had receiued the rudiments by the mouth of man, he was by diuine influence exalted to higher matters, &c. And he increased (saith the text) more in strength, and confounded the Iewes, &c. Whereupon saith Caluine: Heere Luke not onelie commendeth the zeale of Paule to be strong, in confessing the faith of Christe: but he teacheth also, with howe mightie reasons he did fight, by which he conuincd the Iewes. Hee waxed strong, that is, he was on the ouer-hand in disputing, and his confession had a force and efficacie ioyned therewith: because, forsoothe, hee being furnished with with the testimonies of the Scripture, and other helpes of the Holie-ghoste, did (as it were) ouerwhelme all his aduersaries. For the word (of disturbing them) that Luke vseth, dooth signifie, that when Paule pressed them beyonde measure, they were so dashed, that they were not their owne men. The manner of his disturbing them is expressed, in that Paule confirmed Iesus to be Christe. For the sense is: when the Iewes cheefelie would striue against it, they were notwithstanding ouercome and confounded. So that Paule by experience prooued, that it was moste true which he pronounceth, that the Scripture is profitable to reprove.

2. Tim. 3. 16. And he performed that, which in another place, he required of a Bishop and a Doctor. For he was armed with the word of God to auouche the truthe, Tir. 1. 9. And indeede Luke comprehends two things, that Paule in disputing was a Conqueror, in suche sorte, that he made the Iewes to fall. And yet their stubbornesse was not so broken and tamed, that they would yeeld vnto the truthe. Bicause for all this, their consciences turmoiled within them, and being dashed downe from the degree of their false opinion, they neuer a whitte submitted themselues to Christe. Therefore, so often as heretikes doo arise to oppugne the right faith; so often as the wicked doo enterprise, to shatter all godlinesse; so often as naughtie persons doo obstinatelie withstande: let vs remember from hence to fetch our armour, &c.

Thus doth Caluine liuelie expresse the vehement mouing of affections, to astonish the hearers, that S. Paule vsed in his teaching, and making it all one office in the Doctor and in the Bishop, and applying his precepts to Timothie and Titus, to this doing of Paule, and to the dutie of all true and zealous Teachers. And hereupon also doth Gualter gather this generall rule: This place (saith he) admonisheth, that the doctrine of the Gospell ought to be preached. In which pointe the opinion of manie is, that they thinke a simple and full explication of the mysteries of saluation dooth suffice, and that they labour in vaine, and are intollerable authors of dissensions, which reprove the tyrannie of Antichriste, op-pugne superstition, and publikelie vndertake to enter into controuersie with the professed enemies of the truthe. True it is, that the simple doctrine of the truthe mought haue sufficed, except there were suche, as would endeuoure to lappe the same in errors and darkenesse, and with-drawe the vnheedfull out of the pathe of truthe: but sithe there haue beene suche bothe in times paste, and at this daye maye commonlie be founde: it behooueth the faithfull to be admonished, that they should not giue care vnto them. Which thing you shall neuer bring to passe, except yee make an euident prooffe, that they erre all the world ouer. Againe, when the impudencie of manie breaketh out so farre, that openlie they dare gaine-saie the truthe, they are publikelie also to be confuted, least by their rashnesse they shoulde make the cause of the truthe suspected.

Wee read, that not onelie the Apostles, but Christe himselfe did either of these things. Whose example all these worthilie ought to follow, whofoeuer will be called and counted the Ministers of his Church. Which is the cause, that Paule would haue such kinde of Doctors, which cannot onelie instruct the rude in sounde doctrine, but also conuince those that speake against it, Titus. 1. And he testifieth also that the Scriptures are giuen to the same end, that they may serue for rebuking of the aduersaries, 2. Timoth. 3. Which seemed to the Holie-ghoste a matter of such importance, that he would not onelie haue the Deceauers of that age to bee reprooued by the Apostles, but hee would haue vs also to bee admonished of those, that in the laste times should molest the Church.

By which generall rule of Gualter, agreeing with Caluine hereupon, it appeareth, that Paule applyed his doctrine, and ioyned admonition and redargution, as well as exhortation and consolation, to his Teaching. And that this Teaching is so little distinguished from the Pastors office: that it is common with the office and dutie of all Bishops and Ministers of the worde. And that except these applications be ioyned therewith: the simple declaration of the truthe, although it be fullie set out, doth not many times suffice, to ouerthrowe the malapart importunitie of the aduersaries. And as Paule thus, not onelie for the occasion of that time, but for the example of our and all times, made this introduction into his office of Teaching: so hee continued in such seruencie, till he met with Barnabas at Ierusalem, after thre yeares tranell in Arabia, and all in this Citie of Damascus, that the Iewes (no doubt, exasperated by his laying so hardlie their errors and obstinacie to their charges:) wente about to kill him. From the which daunger being escaped, and come to Ierusalem, after Barnabas had exhorted the Disciples to admitte him into their companie: Hee was conuersante (saith Luke, verse. 28.) with them at Ierusalem, and spake boldlie in the name of the Lorde Iesus, and disputed with the Grecians, But they went about to slaine him.

Welike he was still moze earnest in reprouing them, than all the rest. For the worde μαρτυροῦν, signifieth, not onelie that hee spake boldlie or confidentlie, but frankelie and freelie, and that with liberty and reprehension.

Whereupon the Geneua Margine noteth, making open profession of the Gospell. And saith Caluine; In which wordes, Luke praiseth his fortitude in professing the Gospell. For among so manie hinderances, hee durst neuer haue hissed: had not his brest beene endewed with a rare conſtancie. In the meane ſeaſon, all are preſcribed what they ought to Paule.

doe, to witte, euerie one according to the meaſure of his faith. For althoughe all bee not Pauls; neuertheleſſe, the faith of Chriſte muſt breed ſo muche confidence in our mindes: that when it is needfull for vs to ſpeake, we waxe not altogether dombe. We muſt (ſaith Marlorate here) be alwaies readie, to render a reaſon to all that aſke it, of the hope Marlorate.
that is in vs.

And is all this freeneſſe, of Saint Pauls teaching, and example to all men, without any application, &c. that ſo moued the aduerſaries, that they ſtill went about to murder him: Loe (ſaith Caluine) for zeale: furie. Neither can it be otherwiſe, then that ſuperſtition ſhould be fierce & Caluine. cruell. Indeed it beſeemeth the godlie, to be kindeled with an holie anger, when they ſee the pure trueth of God to bee corrupted with falſe and naughtie opinions: but ſo, that they moderate their zeale, that they determine nothing, excepte the cauſe be throughlie viewed, that they maye reduce them that erre, into the waye. Laſte of all, if they ſee their frowardneſſe to bee paſte hope: yet maye not they ſnatche the ſworde: becauſe they ſhould knowe that reuengement is not of GOD committed vnto them. And therefore Paule peaccablie auoydeth from them, whome hee had thus prouoked by his earneſt teaching, &c.

Therefore (ſaith Luke) the Churches through-out all Iurie, and Galilee, and Samaria had peace, and were ædified: and they walked in the feare of GOD, and were replenished with the conſolation of the Holie-ghoſte.

Wherevpon (ſaith Caluine) Luke ſignifieth, that the preſence of Paule was a greuous prouocation to the enemies of the Goſpell. For whie did peace ſo ſuddenlie ſhine vnto the Churches by his departure: excepte that euen the ſighte of him, did prouoke the furie of the enemies? Neither is this turned to him for a reproch, as though he had been as it were a Trumpet for a battell: but Luke rather ſetteth downe this for his commendation, that hee draue the enemies to a rage, euen with the onely ſmell of his approaching neere vnto them. For ſo woulde Chriſte triumphe in him, that hee ſhould ſprinckle vpon the Church no leſſe moleſtation, then renowne. Wherefore, by this example we are admoniſhed, that they are not ſtreight-ways to bee condemned, whoe doe more enflambe the rage of wicked men, then other do. Which admonition, is not a little profitable. For as we are too ſoſte and louing of our owne quietneſſe: ſo nowe waxe we angrie with the beſt and moſte excellent ſeruants of Chriſte, if by their vehemencie, wee thinke the euill will-be ſtirred vppe to hurte vs. But by this meanes, wee bee iniurious againſt the ſpिरite of GOD, whoſe force and breathing hath kindeled all this flambe.

Paule in his Doctorship, changed not his manner
of teaching.

Thus as we still see the zealous manner of S. Paules teaching: so when afterward, A.Ct. 11. 25. 26. Barnabas being also another Teacher and exhorter, and having such an excellent gifte therein, (as is aforesaid) and yet knowing he was in these things, especiallie, in the vehemencie of exhortation, application, and persuation, nothing comparable to Paule, (as appeareth A.Ct. 14. 12. Where the Licaonians called Barnabas Iupiter, and Paule Mercurie, bicause hee was the cheefest speaker): yet Barnabas sought out Paule, and found him, and brought him to Antiochia. And they were conuersant with the Church (saith Luke) a whole yeare, and taught much people: in so much, that the Disciples were the firste called Christians, in Antiochia. Shall wee now thinke that Barnabas haueing begone so soone, to ioine exhortation to his teaching, and that Paule being more vehement in exhorting, than he: they bothe of them left their former trade of teaching, and all that whole yeare fell to a newe trade, to teach onelie without exhorting, admonishing, rebuking, comforting, and with-out applying their teaching to any particuler state of time, of persons or places? Neither is it any thing likelie: neither the texte inferres it: neither doth any learned writer so gather on the texte, that I haue yet seene: neither doth it accorde with such a frutesfull sequels. Their preaching (saith Marlorate) was so effectuell and so fruitefull. So that their continuance the whole yeare in teaching, was in such teaching, as was preaching, which consisteth much in exhortation, admonition, application, &c. and apperteineth to the office of a Pastor. Whereupon, saith Gualter: Let the Ministers of Churches follow this example. And while they persuaue perseuerance to other, they themselues perseuer constant in their office: neither let them glorie in the bare name of a Pastor, but let them doo that, which becometh true Pastors. Least they seeme to be followers and successors of that foolish pastor, that is described in Zacharie, the eleuenth chapter.

So that S. Paule, practising all that whole yeare at Antiochia the office of a Doctor, (as these our Learned Discourfers say) and this Doctor preaching, and shewing an example for Pastors to followe: howe is this any example for suche, as muste not meddle with the Pastors office? But neither here, nor at anye time else, (that I can finde) Saint Paule neuer practised the office of suche a Doctor. But loke, as he began, so without anye alteration, for this pointe of ioyning exhortation, admonition, & application, to this doctrine, he still continued. For as I noted before on these words, λατρευοντες αλληλων τω κυριω, While they were ministring vnto the Lorde, that is, (as Beza, and the Geneva Margine noteth) while they were preaching: and calleth it a publike charge, as the Apostleship was, and the Apostles were not tyed to suche an office, as taught without exhorting or applying.

so doth not the Holie-ghoste saye here, Separate me Barnabas and Saule into another office, then they were in before: but, for the worke whereunto I haue called them. Which worke was still the same, that it was before, though done in other places. For Paule changed not here his office, as though he had bene but a Doctor untill now, and now was made an Apostle: for, as he continued a Doctor still, so hee was an Apostle before. And loke what manner of Teaching he vsed after, he vsed before: And as before, so he still continued in his teaching. Whereupon saith the Caluine. But heere Luke saith, that Paule was ordeined by voices, which seemeth not to be agreeable to Paul's words, Gal. 1. 1. Where he denieth that he was called either of men, or by men. I answer: he was created an Apostle (and that, not by any mens voices) long before, that hee was sent vnto the Gentiles: And had already exercised his Apostleship for manie yeares, when hee was called to the Gentiles by a new Oracle. Wherefore, in that respect, that hee had God the author of his Apostleship, he doth not vnworthilie exclude men. Neither doth he now command him to be ordeined of the Church, that his calling should depend of the iudgement of man: But that decree, that was knowne as yet, but to a fewe, God dooth now set forth the same by a publike edict; and command it to be sealed with a solemne subscription of the Church. The sense therefore of the words is: Nowe is the time that Paule must spread the Gospell among the Gentiles, and pulling downe the wall, Ephes. 2. 14. Collect a Church out of the Gentiles, who before were strangers from the kingdome of God. For although hetherto, God vsed his trauell at Antiochia, and in other places: this peculiar pointe is added now at length, that God would adopt together the Gentiles into the selfe same inheritance of life with the Iewes. Howbeit, if he had been created Doctor thus euen from the beginning, neither yet then had he bene called by man. For when as the Lorde pronounceth that he was called of him: what remaineth for the Church, but obedientlie to subscribe thereto? For neither is heere the iudgement of man placed betweene, as in a doubtfull matter; neither haue the voices freedome. But we must hold that which I said, that Paule and Barnabas are not now at length, ordeined in the order of Doctors: but an extraordinarie office is ioyned, that they should begin to set forth at large the grace of God in common to the Gentiles. And this doo the words found when it is said; separate to the worke: for (no doubt) it signifieth a newe worke, and as yet vnaccustomed. But how is Barnabas ioyned heere a companion and colleague with Paule: whome wee neuer read to haue exercised the office of teaching? Yea, who alwaies him-selfe holding his peace, yielded the partes of speaking to Paule? I answer: he had manie occasions inowe, of speaking offered him in Paul's absence; that there was businesse inough for them bothe; for one could not be alwaies present in all places. There is no doubt, but that hee faithfullie went about the parts that God commaunded, nor was a dombe looker on. Neither is there any cause that we should maruell, whie the Sermons that he made, are not in plaine wordes expressed of Luke: sithe that hee scarce reciteth the thousand Sermon, of those that Paule made. Thus saith Caluine.

Whereby it appeareth, that as Pauls Doctorship and Apostleship, was all one, bothe before and after: the difference being onelie this commission, of doing the same thing in common to the Gentiles, the which also was foretold before, bothe to Ananias that baptised him, and to himselfe in his fraunce at Ierusalem, as he declared after in his Sermon, Act. 22. 31. But here it was enioyned vnto him. And being a Doctor before he was here made the Doctor of the Gentiles: euen so, his manner of teaching, and executing this doctors office, was euer one and the same manner: that is to saye, euer ioining exhortation, admonition, consolation, rebuking, or some kinde or other application to his doctrine. And this appeareth, euen in the selfe-same 13. chapter, verse. 14. &c. But when (saith Luke) they departed from Perga, they came to Antiochia of Pisidia, and went into the Synagog on the Sabbath day, and sat downe: and after the Lecture of the Lawe and of the Prophets, the rulers of the Synagog sent vnto them, saying: ye men and Bretheren, if yee haue anye worde of exhortation for the people, saye on.

Heere (saith Caluine) is no mention made of praiers, which notwithstanding (it is certeine) were not omitted, nor neglected. But bicause Lukes purpose was to rehearse the Sermon that Paule made there: it is no maruell, if hee onelie mention those things, that appertaine to the order of teaching.

But this is a notable place, out of which wee learne, what was the manner of treating on doctrine among the Iewes in that age. The firste place was giuen to the lawe and the Prophets. For it was not lawfull to propound any thing vnto the Church, which was not drawne out of that founteine. Heerevpon also we gather, that the Scripture was not suppressed among a few, but all were indifferentlie admitted to the reading thereof. After this, they that extelled in the grace of teaching and exhorting, had the second partes, as interpreters of the Scripture that was read. Notwithstanding, last of all, Luke dooth shewe, that all were not permitted to speake: least of that licence, confusion should spring.

The interpreters vsed teaching & exhorting.

But the office of exhorting was committed vnto certeine men, whome he calleth the princes of the Synagog, or the Maisters: Paule therefore and Barnabas, doo not by and by, shooue themselves forth to speake; least they should disturbe with too much haste, the accustomed order: but they modestly expect, vntill leaue bee giuen them for to speake, and that by the permission of those, vnto whome the authoritie thereof by publike consent belonged. Wee knowe howe corrupte the state of that people at that time was: and Luke at length in the end of the chapter will declare. how these Antiochians in refusing the grace of Christe, were more then proud & froward. And yet notwithstanding this goodnesse remained among them, that their assemblies were ordered comely and honestlie, &c.

Which saying of his is worthy to bee the more considered, for that diuerse of these our Bretheren, doe make an argument of proportion, for the offices and orders of the Church vnder Christe, correspondent to the offices and orders of the Jewes Synagogs, vnder Moyses. That for their sacrificing Priests, wee haue Pastors: for their Levites, Doctors of the Lawe, we haue teachers, doctors of the Gospell: for their rulers of the Synagogs, wee haue Gouvernours: for their Leuiticall lookers to the treasure, wee haue Deacons: for their presbyterie wee haue Elders, &c.

The Count

Pag.

Which enumeration and proportion, though it be very disordered and confused, and the argument thereon more weak and faultie: yet to make the best of it that might bee, it appeareth (if wee goe no further then this place) that these Jewes obseruing their ordinarie custome, were not acquainted with suche a kinde of Doctors, as vsed no applying, nor exhorting in their teaching, but suche as styll ioyned these together. For what did they else meane in this demaunde: If yee haue anye worde of exhortation: But that they toke it to bee the office of a Teacher, to ble to the people, the worde of exhortation, with the worde of Doctrine?

The Jewes

But perhaps they did this of ignorance of their owne orders, and had not bene acquainted with suche Doctors. But what-so-euer they thought, or conceaued, or demanded aright or amisse heerein; let vs see (as we began) Caluins iudgement.

Dooth hee mislike it? No This speeche (saith hee,) dooth betoken that whatsoeuer grace is in men to edifie the Church, it is, as it were pawned vnto them. Although the particle, in, (if there bee in you anye worde of consolation) according to the Hebrew phrase, maye bee superfluous: and therefore I vrge not stiffelye that matter. Because the sense maye bee plaine, if you haue anye exhortation, that is apte and profitable to the people: howbeit, exhortation excludes not Doctrine. But this name seemeth to come of the common vs that was receaued among them. For properlie the office of a Doctor is, not to bring forth anye newe thing of his owne sense, but the Scripture, wherein all the wisdome of the godlie is comprehended: and to make it fitte vnto the presente vse of the people. By this meanes they do not so muche teache, as they applie the doctrine taken from another matter vnto the edification of the Church. Which I suppose to be noted by the worde exhorting. What can be spoken of the office of a Doctor, moze plaine then this? And howe plaine withall, this iudgement of Caluine (bothe for the Doctors of the Iewes, and the Doctors of the Christians) is cleane contrarie, to these Discouersers distinguishing, and limitting of a Doctors office from a Pastors, by exhorting and applying; I referre me not onelie to anye Doctors, but to any godlie Christian readers iudgement, be he neuer so simple, yea (almost) be he neuer so much affectionate.

The Geneva
note, on
Act. 13. 15.

And with-all, let the Reader marke the Geneva note hereon: This declareth the Scripture is giuen to teache and exhorte vs, and that they refused none, that had giftes to set forth Gods glorie, and to edifie his people. Belike then they regarded not the nice distinguishing of the persons office, but onelie respected these ends in him, Gods glorie, and their edifying. To which endes they required, not bare teaching, but teaching and exhorting: wherevnto, they thought, the Scripture to be giuen them. But whatsoeuer they thought: did S. Paule satisfie their demand, being now appointed to become the Doctor or Teacher of the Gentiles? as he calleth himselfe, 1. Tim. 2. 7. And would he ioyne exhortation to his teaching? Yea, the verie first words of his Sermon are an Exhortation to them, to giue him audience, verse. 16. And although he procede from the 16. verse, untill the 26. verse, all in doctrine: yet hee entereth againe into application; and bleth, not onelie a mozte graue exhortation and reprehension: but (returning to matter of doctrine) knits vp all his Sermon with an application, and a breadfull admonition to the disciples of his doctrine.

application.

And the next day againe, both Paule and Barnabas, as they begin with persuasion: so afterwarde reprehending the obstinate Iewes, and comforting the believing Gentiles, they conclude with Doctrine. And this order, to ioyne and enterlace these things together, was alwaies the manner of Saint Paules teaching, being the Doctor and Teacher of the Gentiles. And this manner of teaching he constantlie obserueth, in all his Epistles, and willeth other Teachers so to do. For, charging Timothee, to giue attendance, to reading, to exhortation, & to doctrine, 1. Tim. 4. 13: And willing him to teach and exhorte, 1. Tim. 6. 2: And bidding him to ordaine Teachers; doth he limite it onlie vnto doctrine? No. But saith he, 1. Tim. 2. What things thou haste heard of me by manye witnesses, commend the same to faithfull men, which shall be able also to teache others.

And

And what was that? All and only doctrine? No. But doctrine intermingled with exhortation, admonition, reprehension, consolation, persuasion, or still some kinde or other application.

These things (saith he) admonish, &c. ver. 14 and 15. studie to shew thy selfe an approoued workeman before God: and one nor to be ashamed of cutting a-right the word of truth. 14. Moreouer the seruant of the Lorde must not strue, but be gentle towards all men, apt to teach, suffering the euill men patiently, instructing them with meekenesse, that are contrarie minded: proouing, if at any time God will giue them repentance, that they may knowe the truth. Lo here the dutie and office of a Teacher. And both he not herein most plainly insinuate, that he should teach them so, that with exhortation, perswasion, application, and all gentle meanes, he should assaye to winne them: and both not this Doctor of the Gentiles, to this purpose, set out himselfe an example thereof, 2. Tim. 3. ver. 10. saying: But thou hast fully knowen my doctrine, manner of liuing, purpose, faith, long suffering, loue, patience, &c. 14. but continue thou in the thinges, which thou hast learned, and art perswaded thereof, knowing of whom thou hast learned them, and that thou hast knowen the holy scriptures of a childe: which are able to make thee wise vnto saluation, through the faith which is in Christ Iesus. For the whole scripture is giuen by inspiration, and is profitable to teach, to improve, to correct, and to instruct in righteousness: that the man of God may be absolute beeing made perfecte vnto all good workes, cap. 4. I charge thee therefore before G O D, and before the Lorde Iesus Christe, which shall iudge the quicke and the dead at his appearing and in his kingdome: preach the worde, be instant in season and out of season, improve, rebuke, exhort, with all long suffering and doctrine. He thereto alwayes with teaching doctrine; Paule toyneth exhortation: and willety Timothie to ioyne application of these thinges with doctrine, and the like he doeth to Titus. Tit. 1. 9. Holding fast the faithfull worde according to doctrine, that he may bee able to exhort, with wholesome doctrine, and improve them that say against it.

If now it be replied, that here he speaketh of a Bishop, and Paul was an Apostle; and Timothie and Titus Bishops: not onely the text maketh them Teachers or Doctors: but what office or degree of the ministerie of the worde soeuer they had, S. Paule doth alwayes to ioyne these together, that Caluine on, 2. Tim. 3. 16. saith. He setteth doctrine in the first place, as in order it goeth before all other. For hee should exhort or reprove to no purpose except yee should teach before: but because doctrine is colde by it selfe: he addeth improving and correcting, &c. and on 2. Tim. 4. he willety him to be instant in reproofing, rebuking, exhorting: by which wordes hee signifieth, that there is neede to drine vs on with manie proddes, that we may proceede in a straight course: for if there were that docilitie in vs that ought to be, the minister of Christ might drawe vs with his becke onely. But now, no, not moderate exhortations (I say not, sounde counsellles) do suffice to shake off our sluggish- nesse: except a greater vehemencie of reprehensions and chydinges doe come thereto. With all lenitie. A very necessarie exception. For, repro- uings euen with the very pushe of them doe fall away, and vanish into sinoulder, except they be strengthened with doctrine. For as well exhor- tations, as reprehensions are helpes onely vnto doctrine. And therefore without it, they are of small force. Example whereof are they, which ex- cell only in seruencie and eagernesse, but they are not defended with sounde doctrine: for they stoutly tyre themselves, they make loude cryes, and make a turmoyle, and that without profit, because they build without a foundation. I speake of good-men otherwise, but too little lear- ned, & too much feruent. And on Tit. 1. 9. But what meaneth he by this, according to doctrine? To wit, such an one as is profitable for the edifi- cation of the Church. For, whatsoever is learned or knowe without any fruite of godlinesse, Paule is not woont to account it in the name of do- ctrine. But rather he condemneth for vanitie all speculations, that bring no profite, although otherwise they be neuer so wittie. So to the Rom. the 12. chap. 7. He that teacheth let him doe it in doctrine: that is to say, let him studie to profite his audience. To conclude, this is the first point, that a Pastor must be furnished with the knowledge of doctrine: but the second is, that he must reteyne the confession thereof, with a firme con- stancie of minde, euen to the vttermost. The third, that he apply his ma- ner of teaching in edifying: nor flie about by subtleties of friuolous cu- riositie, but al onely seeke the sounde profite of the Church.

Thus doth Caluine not only in a Bishop, Pastor, or any Minister of the woode, shew how these two, Doctrine & Application, cannot conueniently be disioyned: without the hindrance of edification, doctrine is colde and moues not men without these helpes: and yet they helpe not without do- ctrine: but also one of these very places, which these our Learned Disc and other of their minde do chiefly bage for Doctors, Rom. 12. 7. Caluine spea- king of Pastors, applies it to them, & to their dutie. And simply expounds it thus: he that teacheth, let him do it in doctrine: that is to say, let him studie to profite his hearers. As who say, let him euen in this sorte as I haue saide of Pastors, not stande vpon mere speculation of doctwin, which moueth coldly of it selfe, by reason of the hearers dulnesse or hardnes. but let him ioyne such application thereof vnto his doctrine, as may best re- dound to their profite and edification.

And now, as this was Paules continuall teaching, both by mouth & wri- ting, and mouing all others to do the like, euen the Doctor, so well as the Pastor,

Pastor, as appeareth in all his Epistles: so Barnabas (if the Epistle to the Hebr. be his, & not rather, as it is commonly accepted, S. Pauls) though the argument stand most of doctrine above all the other epistles: yet doth he still among the greatest points of doctrine, insert application & aduocacy sum-up & singular exhortations, admonitions, reprehensions, consolations, &c. to his doctrine. And the like doth Peter both in all his preachings, recorded in 2 Acts of the Apostles, & in both his Epist. And Iohn & Iames, & Iude, & Stephen, Act. 7. &c. For they all learned this order of Iesus Christe the chiefe Doctor. and both their & our M. of all our doctrine, & of all our teaching of it: Who euer toynd exhortation, application, &c. to his doctrine. And sent out both his 12. Apostles, & his 72. Disciples, to keepe the like manner of teaching: and neuer taught, or enioyned other to teach in other order. Which is eue as much, as so to seuer the letter & the spirit, in seuering the doctrine from application of the same, & the lively and quickning sense thereof is damped. neither only to say, that a man may do so upon occasion, or in time & place, as some Doctors in the scholes, & in their lectures note & then: but to make a rule thereon, & a general office, of such Doctors, & that ordinarie & perpetual, distinct from Pastors: and y they must not exhort, nor rebuke, nor comfort, nor apply, but only teach without all these things; and that such Doctors must be in euery congregation, & must so teach the common people, who, of all other are most moued by affections; and that if the Doctor should perswade or apply he is an intruder into other mens functions, & a confounder; and breaketh off the ordinance of Christ: I do not only see how this is not yet sufficiently proued, but y (as some thinkes, and I will speake it vnder correction of better prouers, than is yet brought, either in the Frutefull Sermon on, 1 Cor. 12. or in the Counterpoyson, or in this Learned discourse): I take it not agreeable to the Apostles precept, 1 Tim. 2. 8. to cut a-right the worde of God; nor fitte for the man of God, which is his minister; nor according to the effectually working of his worde, which is the power of God to saluation to all that beleue it: which is written to our consolation; which is profitable to teach, to improve, to correct, to instruct, &c. which is, lively, and mightie in operation, and sharper then any twolyed sworde, and entereth through, even to the diuiding asunder of the soule and the spirite, and of the ioyntes, and of the marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. All which; and all other principall vertues therof; are no lesse brought by the apt and right application, then by the true interpretation of the same.

And thus much for these examples of these Doctors teaching, or rather (never teaching) without applying of their doctrine.

But softe, wee haue yet an other example, that if all these will not doe it (as on the contrarie they plaine confute it) to see, if that, will yet at length inferre it.

Apollos eloquence.

Apollo ministered the Sacrament of baptisme

Apollos was an eloquent man. (I grant). But can you (my Learned Masters) with all the eloquence and learning ye haue, prooue this; that Apollos did exercise the office of such a Teacher, as you haue here described: Which if ye could doe, yet, one swallowe would not make a spring.

But euen this example of Apollo, maketh as much against you, as the reason. For, Apollos being so eloquent, and mightie in the Scriptures, so seruient in the spirite, and so diligent in his teaching, (as Luke testifieth,) doe ye not see, how all these things do manifestly infer, & he perfect application & perswasion with his teaching? He was excellently wel learned; which he calleth mightie in the Scriptures: which point more properly inuene doth appertain to doctrine, and he was diligent also in his teaching which thing like-wise belongs to doctrine: and yet was not he so mightie in the Scriptures, for all his diligence in his teaching, but that he was (God not) a verie meane and insufficient Teacher, till hee was taught further, even by a poore meane learned handie-crafter man, and his wife. So that his Eloquence was more in perswasion then in doctrine: and his seruencie of the spirite to moue affections; as much as his diligence in his teaching. And what (I beseech you) were the matters, he taught? Were they not those things that are of the Lorde? And is not life and manners, and exhortation thereto, & rehortation from the contrarie, pertayning also to the way of the Lorde? But only the teaching of the articles of religion, and the confutation of the contrarie? And what was the doctrine that he onely knewe and taught? Is it not here named Iohns Baptisme? And did he not then administer the Sacrament that he taught? Yea, was not the Sacrament of Baptisme that Iohn vsed: vnto repentance? And did not Iohn in ministring it exhort and applie, saying: Repent ye: for the kingdom of heauen is at hand? Did he not applie, when he pointed out Christ with his finger: When he sent them to Christ, that came to him? Did he not applie, and exhort, and rebuke, euen in particuler, almost all sorts of persons: when they came to be baptised of him? And doeth not the name of Iohns Baptisme comprehend all his ministerie? And howe was Apollo then such a Doctor as is here imagined, without all ministring of the sacramentes, or preaching, or exhorting, or applying? But now, when Apollo was instructed more perfectly, and was mistred to goe into Achaia, and the brethren exhorting him thereunto, wrote to the Disciples to receaue him; when he was come he helped them much, who had beleueed through grace. For, mightilie he confuted publickly the Iewes, with great vehemencie (saith Luke) shewing by the Scriptures that Iesus was Christ.

mighty teaching.

Now, as though he did nothing there, but onely teache and confute, you leaue out these wordes (mightily, and with great vehemencie,) and thrust in another of your owne, plainly as though he had said nothing but plaine teaching. Which wordes left out by you, notwithstanding Beza doth especially obserue, For with great contention: I would vse this Periphrase, to expresse the forceableness of the Greeke word: whereby is signified, that this eloquent man stretched all his sinewes, to overcome the Iewes. The vulgar, and Erasmus, call it, vehemently, that is, Moreouer a little after, they doe not seeme sufficiently to haue expressed, they ouercame. For the preposition, encrease the signification, as in, thoroughly to endure, an exquisite, perfect, knowing, or doing of a thing: and in such like. And therefore I translated it, he did more and more conuince them. As who say, he did more by his vehement, eloquent, and zelous exhortations and admonitions, on the one side, confirme and strengthen them, that had before beleued, and were taught the principles, and groundes of Religion by others: then he did by teaching. So that, though he taught them also by the Scriptures, that Iesus was Christ, which is the foundation of our doctrine: yet, he did this greater help vnto them, in confirming of them by application and exhortation in his teaching. And euen so against the aduersaries: he did mightily conuince them with the Scriptures. But this mightinesse, this vehemencie, and so exquisite conuincing of them, could not be done; without a singuler application, and great reprobation of them. And to this (besides that Caluine doth agree,) Gualter gathereth a general rule of this teaching of Apollōs, saying: This example also doth admonish, what manner of teaching ought to be retained in the Church. First there is neede of zeale and seruencie of spirite, that all men may perceaue the matter is handled euen from the heart. For except this zeale be ioyned thereto, the doctrine will serue but for ostentation. Euen so, that Christ did burne in zeale: his studie of teaching (which was neuer wearied,) and that seruent spirite in reforming the temple, doe abundantly declare. Neither shall those luke-warme Doctors, or Teachers be euer allowed of him, when as Christ would haue, no not so much as private men in the cause of religion, to be luke-warme. Looke. And then, it is necessarie that diligence be added both for the slownesse of our wit, which receaueth not matters that are diuine, and also for the corruption of our nature, which alwayes is woont to strue against the commaundements of God. To the which also commeth the wicked indolentie

And therefore Paule commaundeth Timothie, whom he knew to be trayned vp in the studie of the Scripture from his childehoode, to applie reading. 1. Tim. 4. and the same Paule will afterwarde exhort with most graue argumentes, the Pastors of the Ephesians, to watchfulnesse and diligence. Thirdly, it behooueth the ministers to be endewed with a freednesse of speaking, least they should dissemble any thing, being deceaued either with feare or fauour.

Gualter.

Thus doth Gualter declare, that this teaching of Apollos, was not a peculier kinde of teaching in Doctors without applying and exhortation: but such as was the office in common of all ministers, and namely Pastors. And upon this, that he profited the faithfull, and conuincd the Jewes, (saith Gualter): Further, this place admonisheth vs of manye thinges necessarie to be obserued. For first, we are taught, that there is neede in the Church not onely of institution, but also of confuting of the aduersaries: for it cannot be that they should profite the Churches much, that indeiour not with chiefe diligence to roote out false opinions: as neither husbandrie can be fruitfull which suffereth shrubbes, or vnfruitfull darnell to growe vp. Jeremie therefore is bidden to plucke downe, and roote vp, & then to builde and plant. And Paule would haue a Bishop to be such, as should be able also to conuince the gainesayers. Tim. 1. but that, that is spoken of false Doctors, who must vtterly be confuted: that also ought to be vnderstoode of those, that are openly wicked liuers, ad euill doers, which are woont to be offense to the weaklinges. For against these also, the faithfull ministers with the sworde of the spirite ought to fight: except they will lay open the Church, to be spoyled of wolues. Greatly therefore do they erre, who at this day would haue the Gospell so to be preached, that we should not withstande wicked doctrines and corrupt manners.

Besides, we are admonished, what weapons in the Church we must fight withall, to wit, with the scriptures, which (Paule teacheth in another place,) to be inspired from God, and to be profitable to teach, to reprove, to exhort, and to rebuke, 2. Tim. 3.

Thus doeth this example of Apollos, not serue for such a Doctor, as may not doe the actions of a Pastor: but may as well deale with life as doctrine, and may as well applie, exhort, and rebuke, as teach and confute. And yet, to the further consideration heereof, let vs note enen the place it selfe, & the office of a teacher, (that ye say) Apollo in Achaia exercised. Which as it appeareth, cap. 19. 1. enen in the next wordes following to your own quotation: (and it came to passe, while Apollo was at Corinthus) conferred with this 18. chap. by you cited for Apollos teaching: this this Apollo succeeded Paule, who had planted a Church to Christ before at Corinth: after this (saith Luke v. 1. &c.) Paule going from Athens came to Corinth, so that Apollo was Pauls successor in that place. And even by that terme both Caluine call him, ver. 28. This is rightly to be attributed to the prouidence of God, that while Paule is forced to go from Ephesus Apollo is sent in his place, who might recōpence the losse of his abſence. And it is to purpose, to note, in what sort this mans beginning was, ſithe he was also Pauls successor among the Corinthians, and behaued himſelfe ſo excellently, and employed ſo faithfull and earnest tranſaile, that Paul commendeth him honorable, as his ſingular colleague, as one ſent in the ſame commiſſion with him, 1. Cor. 3. 6. & 4. 6. &c. So then, this Apollo ſucceeding Paule in place & office; by Pauls exerciſe in the ſame place and office, we ſhall ſee Apollos: except Apollo did not his office, as were inferiour in execution of the ſame: where Paule preferreth him euen aboue himſelfe, in the point that we are now in hande withall. And how did Paule teach at Corinth, and at Ephesus: in which places this Doctor Apollo did ſucceede this Doctor Paule? He diſputed (saith Luke) in the Synagogue euery Sabbath day, and exhorted the Iewes and Græcians. therefore, that is, to perſwade (saith Caluine) I take it for that, that is by little and litle to induce. For in my iudgement, Luke ſignifieth, that when the Iewes did coldly and fooliſhly handle the lawe: Paule ſpake of the corrupt & loſt nature of mā, of the neceſſitie of grace, of the promiſed redēption, of the maner of obteyning ſaluation: that he might awake them. For this was a fit & an apt preparatiue vnto Chriſt. Then, when he ioyneth vnder it, that he was ſtraightly driuen in ſpirite to teach Ieſus to be Chriſt: the ſenſe is, that he was ſtirred vp with a greater vehemencie, freely and openly to diſpute of Chriſt. So that, we ſee, Paule brought not forth all at once, nor at one time, but tempered his doctrine according as occaſion ſerued. And becauſe at this day that moderation is profitable: it behooueth faithfull Doctors prudently to waighe, from whence they ſhould make their beginning, leaſt a prepoſterous, and a confuſed manner doe hinder the courſe of the doctrine.

And was this done in him, as may be done in any, without application? It conſiſted it all in doctrine, and nothing in exhortation, where exhortation, as perſuaſion is as expreſſely named as diſputation. Beza on this word, ſaith, that it ſignifieth ſuch an ardencie of Paule, that altogether forgetting himſelfe, with an heroical force, he was caried forth to preach Chriſt. He watched (saith Gualter) the Sabbath dayes, & the ſacred aſſemblies, that (according to the maner in thoſe daies) were gathered together. And firſt he prudently did tēper his doctrine, applying himſelfe vnto the capacite of the hearers: Which in an other place confeſſeth, while hee writeth, that hee ſtirred them them with milke. Because, as yet they could not brooke stronger meate. That doth Luke expresse in the worde of perswading. To declare that he insinuated himselfe aptly vnto the mindes of the hearers. Leaste he should euen in the verie threshold, (as they say) offende any. And truly it is credible that he proceeded in the same order, that otherwise he was accustomed to doe, &c. And afterwarde when the Iewes resisted and blasphemed, he renounced a most dreadfull threat against them, ver. 6. and turned from them vnto the Gentiles there: among whom he abode teaching the worde of God a yeare and 6. monethes. From whence he departed to Ephesus, where, in what sort and manner he taught, is not here so largely set downe: as after ward in the two next Chapters following, perswading, exhorting, admonishing and applying.

Paule planted, Appollo watered.

So that Apollos succeeding Paule in this commission of teaching in these places: it followeth, that Apollos teaching was not without these thinges. And no doubt, he had with such eloquence, and his perswasions so moued the Corinthians, and he was growen thereby into such estimation: that sectes and contentions springing among them, S. Paule 1. Cor. 1. 12. & 1. Cor. 8. noteth, howe one sayd, I am of Paule: and another I am of Appollo. Whom he rebuketh saying: Are ye not carnall? who is Paule then, and who is Appollo: but the ministers by whom ye beleueed? And as the Lord gaue vnto euery man. I planted, Appollo watered: but God gaue the increase. And to gaine, These thinges brethren, haue I figuratiuely applyed to mine owne selfe, & to Appollo, for your sakes, &c. By all which, it is manifest, that Appollo was of so great fame, that he was comparable, in many mens opinions, to the chiefest Apostles. And shall we thinke that all his eloquence, and might, and vehemencie, was onely in teaching, and planting the articles and principles of Christian religion, without applying his teaching to any particuler state of time, of person, or places? Nay rather, S. Paule (in this comparison, and as in time he was befoze him, in those places) takes that to him selfe. And saith not, Appollo plantes, and Paule waters: but Paule plantes, and Appollo waters. As though he had (not figuratiuely) but in plain wordes saide, I am rather the Teacher and the Doctor of the Gentiles, as he also calles himselfe, 1. Tim. 2. 7. But (saith he) Appollo waters: he cometh with his flowing streames of eloquence, and watereth that, that Paule had planted, to confirme and strengthen them by exhortation and perswasion, as Paule there saith, ver. 10. I haue laide the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. Now, if S. Paule liken himselfe (for teaching) to the Planter, and layer of the foundation, who notwithstanding spiceth all his teaching with so manifolde figures of surpassing eloquence, full of exhortation, admonition, reprehension, consolation, and all kinde of perswasive application, to who all Orators may giue place: shall we thinke of Appollo this eloquent waterer, whom Paule so highly advanced, whom the Corinthians so greatly esteemed, whose zeale and labours God so mightily blessed and prospered, to his glory, his Churches benefite, and his enemies confusion; that he used no exhortation, no admonition, no reprehension, no consolation, no application to any particuler state, of time of persons, of places, in his teaching? But the Text in all these points is plaine contrary. This therefore is a mere surmised kinde of Doctorship, that is here pretended, nor any one testimony of the Scripture as yet alleaged, nor any one of these, or any other examples in the Scripture, doth enforce it. And as this Doctorship can not be proued by these examples, but rather that they were Presbyters or Priestes, whome you call Pastors: so the compilers of the Ecclesiasticall historie of Magdeburge, Centuria 1. Lib. 2. cap. 7. fol. 508. Colum. 2 do say: In the Church of Antioche, for a time, were Paule and Barnabas, who are called Apostles, and Prophetes, and Doctors: whome it is lawfull to call Priestes or Presbyters. And so likewise the same writers, speaking of all the Doctors of that age, doo further say, fol. 509. Prophetes, Euangelistes, Pastors and Doctors, didde not make certaine degrees of persons in the Ecclesiasticall Regiment, but they seeme to be numbred either among the Apostles & their fellowes, or else among the Priestes or Deacons. So that there was no seuerall degree, or any ordinazy appoynted office distinguished in persons, by reason of these diuerse giftes at that time.

No testimony of Scripture for this surmised Doctor.

Which Centuriographers also in the same booke and chapter, fol. 510. De ratione & forma Gubernat. do say: These were the works in common of the Apostles, and Prophetes, Euangelistes, Pastors, Doctors, Priestes, Deacons: they taught the Church purelie and sincerely, concerning al the points of Christian doctrine, &c. They interpreted the Scriptures, &c. They deliuered the Catechisme, &c. They preached repentance, &c. towarde the obstinate they were more sharpe, &c. they exhorted those that were iustified, &c.

To conclude, they had Schooles no doubt and teachers in many churches: and while they taught, they employed their diligence in teaching, as S. Paule willed, He that teacheth in teaching. But that those Teachers might not exhorde, nor applie, and that if they so did, they encroched vpon the office of the Pastor: this is not yet, (nor I thinke wil euer be) proued. The foresaid Collectors of the Ecclesiasticall storie, of that first Centurie or hundredth yeeres, Chap. 10. in the title of the Doctors of the Church, reckon by indifferently, all the Apostles, the Euangelistes, Barnabas, Agabus, Timothie, Titus, Silas, Siluanus, Iudas, Barsabas, Aristarchus, Aquila, Prisca, Archippus, Alexander, Andronicus, Iunias, Crispus, Chloas, Carpus, Apollo, Zenas, &c. And of this Doctor Zenas they write, saying: Paule mencioneth once onely, of one Zenas together with Apollo, and he calleth him a Lawier. As, Tir. 3. Bring Zenas the expounder of the Lawe, and Apollo diligently, that they lack nothing. But it is likely, that in the encreasing of the Gospell, he sustayned the same office that Apollo did. As Hierome witnesseth these things of them both, in his declaration of the 3. Chapter of the Epistle to Titus, rehearsing it in this manner. Apollos was a man of Alexandria extraught of the Iewes maruelous eloquent and perfect in the Lawe, the Bishop of Corinthus: who is thought to haue sayled ouer with Zenas the Doctor of the Lawe, vnto Creta an Isle neere-hande, by reason of the dissensions that were at Corinthus, & to haue returned to Corinthus after that, by the Epist. of Paule the dissensions sproong at Corinthus were appeased. But who this Zenas the Doctor of the Lawe was, we can-not by anie other place of Scripture, tell: but onely this, that he also being an Apostolical man, had that worke in hand, of building vp the churches of Christe, that Apollo exercised. Whiche by the waye declareth, that this Doctor Apollos was also a Bishop: and that this Doctor Zenas, did ioine exhortation and applicatiō to his teaching, as is befoze shewed Apollos did.

Doctor.

And so the wryters of this Centurie, proceed on in the liues of the Doctors of that age, taking Manahen by the way, cited by these our Learned discourfers for one of these Doctors, that may neyther exhorte nor applye. Of whome they say: Who also without doubt was among them, that first conuerted the Antiochians vnto the acknowledging of Faith in Christe. After whome these Centuriographers descende to Gamaliel. Who because he was a Doctor of the Lawe among the Iewes, I would note also their testimone of him out of the Scriptures, the rather, that we may the better perceauē what was the manner of the Doctors teaching among them. Because some thinke, this office of onely teaching, was ordained in the Church, to be correspondēt to the manner of teaching, in the Synagogues and assemblies of the Iewes. Gamaliel (say they fol. 621. was borne at Tharsus, a worshipfull Doctor of the Lawe. Act. 5. Of whom Paule declareth before the tribune at Ephesus, Act. 22. That hee was at his feete instructed in the Lawe of his Fathers. Where-upon Athanasius in the booke of the passion of the image of the Lorde, calleth Gamaliel the Doctor of Paule, which was the Doctor of the Gentiles. When-as the multitude of the Iewes beeing stirred vp at Ierusalem, against Iohn and Peter, tooke counsell to kill them: Gamaliel with very prudent counsell, did withdrawe them: whiche thing Luke declareth in this manner. A certain Pharise (saith he) in the counsel by name Gamaliel, a Doctor of the Lawe, honourable among all the people, arising vp, commaunded the men, for a little while to be put forth, and saide vnto them: Men of Israel, take heede to your selues, what yee are about to doe, concerning these men. For, before these times, rose vp Theudas boasting himselfe, to whome resorted a number of men, about fower hundred, who was slaine, and they all that obeyed him, were scattered scattered and brought to naught. After this man arose up Judas of Galilie, in the dayes of the Tribute, and drewe away much people after him. Hee also perished, and all that obeyed him were scattered abroad. And now I say vnto you, refraine your selues from these men, and let them alone. For, if this counsell or worke bee of men, it will come to naught; But if it bee of God, yee can-not destroy it; least ye be founde euen fighters against God. Vnto whose counsell shee declareth, that all the multitude agreed, and hauing beaten the Apostles, sent them away.

Did not this Doctor here also among the Jewes, both exhorte, & apply to the particuler state of time, of persons, and of places? And as this Doctor Gamaliel, so no doubt, (opportunity seruing) did all the other Doctors of the Lawe. Yea, Eldras him-selfe did not teach the Lawe vnto the Iewes, without exhortation and application to them. And as it was thus befoze Christes time among the Jewes, and in all the age of Christe, and of his Apostles: So, for the ages succeding them, as the Churches had their Doctors or Teachers, so did those Doctors continue aswell in exhortation, and application of their doctrine to their audience, as in teaching of them.

Eldras a Doctor.

To which purpose, in steepe of particuler examination of all the Doctors that succeeded in thre or foure Centuries following, I will note the onelie collections of Hyperius De Catechesi, which was the especial office of the Doctors and Teachers: as Beza testifieth euen in his distinction betweene Doctors and Pastors. Confessione Christiana cap. 5. Artic. 26. For the Doctors office is simplie to declare the word of GOD, that the true sense maye bee drawen forth: and especially, to instruct the learners of the Catechisme: Which office Origen enjoyed in the Church Alexandria.

The Catechists Doct. and their order of teaching in the Primative Church.

In the olde time (saith Hyperius) they deliuered the Catechisme to the rude. They did it, whosoeuer were endued with sufficient doctrine. There is no doubt, but Peter the Apostle expounded the whole doctrine Catechisticall (or teaching by voyce the principles of Faith) in the house of Cornelius the Centurion, before that hee baptized anye. Act 10.

Hyperius de Catechesi cap. 2. fol. 445.

Likewise, Philip in the citie of Samaria: and declared forth-with in the waye before the Eunuche, the principall head pointes of Christian Religion. Which the Scripture signifieth brieflie, saying: That hee preached Iesus vnto him. Act. 8. Heere is Peter the Apostle a Doctor, and Phillip the Deacon a Doctor, and their Catechising is preaching.

But (saith Hyperius) in successe of time, euen as the Apostles reiectd from them-selues the office of baptizing, being drawne away with greater, and more difficult matters, so was it expedient to commit vnto others the businesse of expounding the Catechisme.

When the Church began to encrease, it was necessary for the variety and waight of businesses, whiche a few were not able to sustayne: that offices should be distinguished, and the same to be enioyned to diuerse persons: euen as Ambrose expounding that place of Ephesians the 4. doth well teach: And hee gaue some to bee Apostles, some Prophetes, and some Pastors, and Teachers, to the renewing of the saintes, &c. Graue men therefore, notable for the sincerity of their life, and such as besides had a grace of teaching, and a prudence ioyned thereunto, were chosen to the office of Catechising: for to instruct those that were aliens from our religion. Verily, it behoued suche to be chosen, who, not so-much in their speeche, as in the actions of their life, should euen bowe down their myndes to loue the Gospell of Iesus Christe, and his sincere Religion. Certes, to perswade one in speeche and wordes to embrace Christe, to inuite him to godlinesse, to open the waye to faith: but in doings to driue him from Christe, to giue an example of doing wickedlie, to bring forth no fruites of faith: is no other thing, then, as much as the daie before thou buildest vpp, so muche the daye following to pull downe: and with Penelope, to vntwiste the webbe againe, whiche thou wast minded to haue gone thorough.

More-ouer, before them whose condition is of very diuerse sorts, & wittes are not al alike; to temper the manner of teaching, to the profit of ech one of them, is neede of singuler prudence. Heere-unto therefore appertayneth that whiche Clement writeth in his firste epistle to the brother of the Lorde: They that Catechise, that is to say, they that instruct beginners with the worde, it behoueth that they them-selues bee instructed. For, it is a matter of the soule. And it behoueth him that teacheth and enstructeth rude soules, to be such an one, that he may bee able euen to proportion or fitte himselfe, and directe the order of his worde, according to the capacity of the hearer.

He therefore himselfe, must especially be verie well learned and skilfull, blamelesse, ripe, vnfearefull. And S. Augustine at large teacheth, how a Catechist, or Teacher, ought to rouse vp oftentimes his mynde to diligence and labour, to breake of all irkesomnesse in the difficulties that hee meeteth with. How furthermore it should be his speciall endeuour, to frame his speeches, according to the diuersitie of the persons. And to deale otherwise with those that are of the Gentiles: Otherwise with those that come to the Church, from among the Iewes: Otherwise also, with those that are of the citie, and politike men: Otherwise with those that are husbandmen, and altogether vntayned vp: Otherwise with those that are Gramarians, Orators, or Philosophers: Otherwise, with those that are vnlearned: otherwise, with those that haue beene before accustomed to foule offences: and to treat on all things otherwise, with them that are thought to liue vn-reprouable.

Besides this, there are many that feignedlie and not from the heart, come to heare the doctrine; some desire diuerse places of Scripture, and obscure questions to be expounded vnto them. From whose mindes, except the scruple be in time remooued: it is to be feared, least at some time, they leape back againe from their holy purpose. Therefore, these men which were called to the office of catechizing or teaching, had not onely neede of learning, but also of no meane wisdom. Of which things Augustine teacheth in his booke of Catechizing the rude, in the third, the fift, and in eleuen chapters following. And against Faustus the Manichean, the thirtieth booke, the seauenth chapter: and so forth vnto the ending. And out of doubt such an other was Panthenus, the first Doctor of the Ecclesiasticall schoole after the Apostles, & Maister of the Catechismes, (or of these manner of Teachings) in Alexandria. Whome Clemens in his firste booke Stromata (of his scatterings or strawings) witnesseth that he learned all of the Apostles. Of whome S. Hierome writeth, that he laboured muche in the Charches with his liuely voice. Such an other was Clemens of Alexandria the successor of Panthenus in either function. As also besides Hierome, Eusebius witnesseth, in the first booke, the tenth and eleuenth chapters of the Ecclesiasticall Historie. Such an other was Origen there succeeding in the thirde place. Such an other was Heracles, vnto whom Origen deliuered vp the schoole. Such an other was Dionysius the Catechizer or teacher of the people of Alexandria. Of whome Eusebius, in his Ecclesiasticall Historie, the 6. booke, Chap. 16. 19. 22. speaketh. Moreover, such an other at Hierusalem was Cyrellus: of whome, mention is made before. To conclude, suche an other at Carthage, was that godly man Desgratias, whome S. Augustine greatly doth commend.

All this noteth Hyperius of these aunient Doctors, Teachers, or Catechists. Whereby we may perceauie these Doctors Teachings, and much moze by their owne woorkes and treatises, to be ful of exhortations & applications. Yea, some of their Catechistical bookes, are called by the name of exhortations, as that of Clemens Alexandrinus his oration exhortatory to the Gentiles. &c.

Neither herein did they innade the office of other men: for, it speciallye appertayned to their owne office, as Hyperius further noteth, 499. For those, which for the confession of the Christian truthe, were deteyned captiues, or ledde to punishment, hee was woonte (speaking of Origen, and likewise of Cyrell) with reasons brought forth out of the holie Scriptures, to comforte them, and to animate them vnto constancie, and to many the children of the heathen, (vnto whom with the rules of Grammer, hee had studiously beate vpon the points of religion) to them was he an author to embrace Christianity. &c. And in the 3. Chap. (what doctrine, and poyntes of Religion should be taught in a Catechisme) fol: 472. he saith.

Exhortatio
to newnesse of life, con-teyned in doctrine.

The 4. heade is of doctrine: but in the name of doctrine I take all those thinges, which were proposed to them that were newly baptized, and are exacted to be seuerely kept. That is to witte, of the newe life & innocency of the regenerate. For, it becometh him that is baptized, to become euen a newe man: and by all meanes to die to sinne,, to liue afterwards onely to righteounesse: and to shew himselfe to bee suche in all the actions of his life, that it may be vnderstoode, he vsed the mysteries trulie, and with fruit. Of the which newnesse of life after Baptisme Rom. 6. Knowe ye not that so many of vs, as are baptized, we are baptized into his death, wee are buried together with him, by baptisme into death: that euen as Christ was raysed from the deade, by the glory of the Father, euen so we should also walke in newnesse of life: For, if wee bee grafted with him, to the similitude of his death, euen so shall we be to the similitude of his resurrection. Knowing this, that our olde man is crucified with him, that the body of sinne might be destroyed, that hence-forth we should not serue sinne. &c. Also to the Eph. 4. Thus therefore I say and testifie by the Lord, that ye walke not heereafter, as the residue of the Gentiles walke, in the vanity of their mynde, &c. And a little after, of the doctrine succeeding baptisme. But you haue not thus learned Christe, if so be ye haue heard of him, and haue bene taught in him, euen as the trushe is in Iesu. To lay aside, according to the former conuersation the olde man, which corrupteth according to the luste of error. But be ye renewed in the spirite of your minde, and put on the new man, which is created according to God, by righteounesse and holinesse of trushe. The like thinges thou readest Col. 3. & 2. Pet. 2. In which the doctrine of new obedience, and of the fruites of faith, which ought chiefly to be regarded in the late baptized, is (as it were) in a painted table, set before our eyes.

Doctrine
stretcheth
not only to Faith, but also to charity & good workes.

And wee see the Apostle, in the moste of his Epistles, proceeding in that order, that in the former parte he treateth of the Faith of those that are to be iustified: where all things runne to this head, of faith in God, and of Baptisme the Sacrament of Faith: but in the later parte, of the faith, and charity, or workes of those that are iustified. To witte, where he handleth the offices of a Christian life, and all thinges that are there expounded, are rightly referred to that head of doctrine, that followeth Baptisme.

To conclude therefore, all the precepts, the exhortations, the rebukings, which are extant in the Apostolicall writings, concerning the charitie, iustice, innocency, purity of those, that are by faith Iustified & baptized, were comprehended: and such (teaching) as in times past, was in

in the fowrth place expounded before the learners. What is here left out for the Teaching of the Pastor, that is not common with him unto the Doctor?

And in the 4. Chapter of the manner of this Doctors Teaching. After he hath again at large declared, how, hauing his audience of all kindes of persons, he must apply him-selſe vnto them euery one: fol. 488. He ſaith: To conclude, if there were among the hearers, ſome learned, as Philoſophers, Rhethoricians: they were gently warned that they ſhould not diſpiſe, nor heare with lotheſomnelle, the doctrine of the goſpell. Which in ſhewe, and in the manner of the deliuey, ſeemeth baſe and ſomewhat ruſticall. Nor, that they attribute more then is right to mans wiſedome, and to the bookes of the Philoſophers, that they were before inured withall. But that they ſhould more attentiuely conſider the matters themſelues, and the reuerent largeneſſe of the myſteries. And that they ſhould religiously examine all their rules, by the ſquyre of the holie Scripture. And if they had redde ouer any good authours, they ſhould conſtantly cleaue faſt vnto them. But vnprofitable and ſtayned with euill opinions, they ſhould in time lay them out of their handes. And if any thinges were more at length and groſelye expounded, they ſhould not be grieved thereat: for that was not for them, who alreadie partlie by priuate reading, partly by conference with godly men, were pretily entred: but ought many times to be done, for the ruder ſorte: And if they ſeemed to require a more full explanation of any certaine Chapters: it was by the waye declared vnto them, the reading of what writers was able to ſatiſſie them.

Exhortations.

Which things, that they were wont thus to be done, ſ. Auguſtine in his booke of Catechizing the rude, in the 8. and 9. chapters, doeth declare. According to this manner therefore, did the Catechiſts or Teachers, when they did publiſely teach, applie them-ſelues wholly vnto all men. And as the Apoſtle ſaide, to become all vnto all, to the intent to winne the moſte part vnto Chriſte: and to giue no man occaſion of ſtarting backe, of erring, or ſo much as ſtaggering. And if moreouer, they perceaued it were expedient: oftentimes they asked the Biſhops themſelues; to the ende, that of ſome certaine more difficulte pointes, or more needefull to be expounded; they might alſo publiſely & more fully preach vnto the people. Whereunto no doubt theſe thinges are to be referred: bicauſe the fathers oftentimes, do intermingle in their Sermons, exhortations, &c. 497.

Againe, ſpeaking of their diuerſitie in teaching of children, and thoſe of riper yeares, he ſaith: For, children alſo, the ſame forme of ſounde wordes is well vſed; which in little bookes that are borne about, we ſee preſcribed. But with thoſe that are elder, there muſt be a freer courſe of speeches, and place, by yeelding to examples, similitudes, descriptions, amplifications, and to the mouings of the mindes. If at any tyme any vices are to be reckoned vp, and reprehended: (which muste needs bee done in the expounding the tenne commandementes) those things in children shall bee noted, and chastised with gentle woordes, which we know are famillier to that age. In young & old persons, verilie, it is meete that other vices bee cured with another medicine. And euen as these things fall out more and more in the eyes of men; so muste the reprehension be tempered: for they are able to susteine a sharper reprehension.

In Exhortations, the like moderation must bee vsed, and duties prudently prescribed, that are agreable to euery age, and perswasive argumentes aptly applied vnto them. What neede many wordes? Whatsoeuer shall be offered to tender mindes: that muste bee, as though it were milke or delicate pulse. Those things that shall bee distributed to them of full age, they must expresse (after a maner) the nature of strong meate. Generally, the Catechist or Teacher must often admonish all his hearers, that they often deeply in their mindes consider with him, what they once promised to God, & to the Church, in their baptisme. What confession of their faith they made. How haighnious a thing it is, for those that haue geuen their names, to fall from their Emperour Christe. What life Christe requireth of those that are his. Finallye, by what bayte, arte, prudence, and counsell so-euer hee can, he shall diligently studie to drawe them to the true feare of GOD, and lone of vertues, and hatred of vices. And thus muche of the manner of his teaching in publike.

All this at large, and much more writeth Hyperius of these Doctors and Teachers: which in the Primitive Church were called Catechistes, because of the sounding of their voice in their teaching. And other Ecclesiastical Doctors then these, from the Apostles times: (except the Deacons Priestes, Pastors or Bishops.) I haue readde of none in al the Church of Christe. But what Teachers soeuer haue bene, none haue bene debarred, (till now) of exhorting, and applying of their doctrine. No, not the best of the Doctors, Teachers, Readers, or Catechists, what name soeuer they shall be tearmed by, that God in these our laste dayes, hath raysed vp in his Church, to refozme the same: and to restore the true Teaching of the Gospell, which the enemies had suppressed: No, not one that I can yet reade or heare of, but that now and then hee exhorteth, rebuketh, or applyeth in his teaching: as appeareth in all the woordes of Luther, Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, Bucer, Musculus, Martyr, Bullinger, Simlerus, Gualter, Caluine, Danaus, Zanchius, Hyperius, Olevianus, Ursinus, Sadeelus, Beza, Tremelius, Iunius, or any other learned Doubtly the nearest that mee thinkes (I speake it vnder correction) doo vnto this imagined Doctor, that these our brethren and Learned discourfers would set vp: are the Scholasticall, Thomistickall, Scotistickall, Sorbonickall, Cherubinal, Seraphical, (or cal them what ye wil,) the Speculative and contemplative doctors. They of all other, vied a kinde of teaching and confuting, much like this manner, for the moste part, without applying their teaching, to any particuler state of time, of persons, or places. As for al other examples of the practise of Doctors, both before Christs time, and in Christs time, and in the time of the Apostles, and in the time next after them, and so continuing till these Schoole-men began, and from them, vntill God raysed vp better Doctors among vs: and among vs, of all these, and other godly learned Doctors, not so muche as one appeareth, that thus precise he was limited, onely to teache, but had liberty to exhorde and applie, and yet, exceeded not his office, But now, having considered the institution and practise of this Doctor thus far forth let vs returne to our Learned discourfers collection hereupon.

med Churches manner of teaching.

The new vreged Doct. are likest to the schoolemen.

Therefore, if we purpose to haue the Church to flourish in true knowledge, we must provide that this office be restored, both in the vniuersities, and in as many other places as may bee, as well for the better instruction of all men, which are desirous to learne, as especially for the information of those, which shoulde occupie the roomes of Pastors. Of whiche sorte there ought to be a great number alwayes in good towardnesse, to take charge of so many severall flockes, as must of necessitie be in so great a Church as this is.

The learned Disc. Pag. 18.

By this kinde of Doctors that is here vrged, the Church would sofly flourish: restored that can-not be, which neuer was. Notobest, to haue Doctors or Teachers more especiallie, though not onely to dedicate themselves to teach true doctrine, and to confute all heresies and false opinions by the woorde of God, concerning all articles of true Religion, both in the Vniuersities, and in as many other places as may be: As not thus farre said amisse. But this farre differeth, not in methode, but in matter, and that in one of the principall pointes thereof, from that which before was vrged: that hereunto God had provided that certaine men shoulde bee appointed in euery congregation. But here yee are well fallen, from euery congregation, to the vniuersities, and as many places as may be. This braueth nere indeede, to the English forme at Geneva, and to the Scottish. But the nearer to any of them: the further from your selfe.

Bridges.

Doctors in the Vniuersities and in as many places, as may be.

And as ye were too peremptorie in that point, whiche here yee mitigate: so there, where yee saide, they shoulde employe themselves whollie or principallie to the studie of holie scriptures, &c. Whiche woorde principally, beeing also a gentle lenitive of the woorde whollie, is cleane contrarie to it selfe, and to your laste assertion, that the office of Doctors, is onelie to teache true Doctrine, and to confute all heresies, &c. Which againe is an-other difference, not from your brethren, but from your selues; no; yet so much in methode, as in matter. Neyther can I see, howe this also doeth hang together, that the especiall ende of these Doctors is for the information of those, that should occupie the roome of Pastors; and the Pastors office is not onely teaching, but exhortation is the principall parte of their office: And shoulde the informers and Teachers of their offices, not deale at all with exhorting and applying, which principally pertayneth to Pastors, but teache onelie? So indeede, they might make them Learned Doctors, like them-selues, but sopp Pastors, with whose office, they haue not to meddle. Spee thinke it were better saide of the twaine, (these offices being thus distinguished) if Pastors did informe Pastors and Doctors too: since they may bothe Teache and exhorte: and Doctors maye not exhorte, but teache onely.

But of these thinges, I wil be gladde to be my selfe a learner, when I shall get a Doctor, that can moze learnedly discourse vppon them. In the meane season, let vs now leane both these imagined, and other Doctors, not to euery congregation, but rather to the Vniuersities, and other fitt places for them, as Cathedrall and Collegiat Churches, &c. Where (I truste) some good Teachers and Doctors bee. And now let vs come, to vieue the Pastors.

The Argument of the 3. booke concerning the 2. Tetrarke, called the Pastor.

Firste, for the titles and names of Pastor, Elder, Priest, Superintendent, Ouerseer, and of Bishop: Of the indifferent vsage of the names of Pastor, Elder, and Bishop: Of one or many Bishops in one Citie: Of their equalitie in dignitie, and authoritie: Of those Bishops, that S. Paule called together to Miletum: Whether the name were not made peculier to one in the Apostles times: Whether Timothie and Titus were not such Bishops: How the Apostle calleth them Bishops at Philippos. Of the Superioritie among the Apostles, and whether Iames were Bishop of Jerusalem. Of the name and office of Priestes, and Bishops in the Primitiue Church: and so continuing, till Aërius moued the first question heere-of: and of the Fathers, opposing them-selues against him. Of Ieromes reasons for the occasions and endes thereof. Of the auncient Fathers interpretation of the former places; and of the continuall practise heerof in all Churches. That this order was no way to Anti-Christes pride, and tyranny; but the stop there-of. And of the originall and state of the Church of Rome: and of the schisme made therein by Nouatus a Bishoppe of a new making, and of his Puritanisme.

Besides Doctors, there must bee Pastors ordayned in euery congregation, which haue diuerse appellations in the Scripture. As, Ephes. 4. they are called by the name of Pastors, bicause they ought to feede the seuerall flockes of Gods sheepe committed to their charge. As it appeareth Act. 20.28. 1. Pet. 5.2. They are called also Elders, not alwayes in respect of their age, but of their office and grauity. For, Timothie was but a young man, & yet had the office of an Elder. This name was receaued of an aunciet custome of the people of Israel, who vsed so to cal those that were rulers or officers among thē, as it appeareth by many places both of the olde and newe Testament, but chieflie in Num. 11.16. Where god ordained seuentie Auncientes, to assitt Moses in his gouernement, who were were also indued at the same time with the spirit of Prophecy, frō which time it became an ordinarie office and name of Gouvernours in Israell. Wherein we haue to note against the Papistes, that the Ministers of the Church, are neuer called in the newe Testament, by the name of sacrificing Priestes, which were vnder the Law: but often are called Elders of the similitude of those auncients, that gouerned the people of GOD. Whereas, if they had beene appointed of God to bee sacrificers: the similitude and name of sacrificing Priestes, would a great deale better haue agreed vnto them. But wher-as both these names, were vsuall amongst the Iewes, ἱερεὺς and ἐπὶ πρεσβυτέρου, the one signifying sacrificers, and the other Elders, the spirit of GOD dooth often call the Ministers Elders: but euer-more, yerye preciselye auoydeth to name them Sacrificers, or Priestes (as we vse the tearme:) yea, though they succede them in one principall parte of their office, that is to say, in teaching, as is written. The lippes of the Priest shoulde preserue knowledge, and men shall seeke the Law at his mouth. The cause where-of is euident, to be this, that the sacrificing Priesthoode of Aaron, is wholly translated vnto Christ: in whome onely it resteth, & passeth frō him to none other. But by the name of elders, the Pastors are called, Act. 14. 23. Where Paule and Barnabas ordayned Elders by election in euery congregation. And Act. 20. 17. Paul sent for the Elders of Ephesus to Miletū. Also he affirmeth those Elders especially which labour in preaching & doctrine, to be worthie of double honour. Which place also testifieth of an other kinde of Elders, of whom we shall haue occasion to speake more heere-after, whose office consisteth onely in gouernment and not in publike teaching. Moreouer, he sheweth that he appoynted Titus to ordeine Elders in euery Citie, and after-ward describeth what manner of men, he would haue to be chosen into the office. Also S. James cap. 5. 14. willeth, that if any be sicke, they should call for the Elders of the Church, who being indewed with the gift of healing at that time, should pray for the diseased, and anoint him with oyle, and he should bee restored to his health. Finally, S. Peter as a fellowe Elder exhorteth the Elders to imploy all their diligence to the feeding of the flocke of God.

Bridges.

His Discourse (as saith the marginall note in the beginning thereof) is of Pastors and their titles: as though this name Pastor were the chiefeſte, and more vsuall name, then any other of these Ecclesiasticall offices, and al other were but titles appendant to Pastors. Whereas, not onely (as I haue declared) Musculus saith, that the name of Pastor, is bnt a Metaphorical name; signifying feeder of feeding, and is in right English commonly called a Sheeplearde, not a Pastor.

Pastor. But also, these our Learned Brethren discourses themselves doe here confesse, that they are called by the name of Pastors, because they ought to feede the severall flocks of Gods sheepe committed to their charge. But, as the people of God are called flocks of sheepe improperly, and onely by similitude: So are the Ministers of Gods worde and Sacramentes; and none other wise called Pastors.

Now, this their pasturing or feeding, being their teaching: the Pastor (as Musculus saith) is the Teacher, or Doctor. And this word the Pastor albeit (as is aforesaid) improperly taken, though it be somewhat more used by some of the Prophetes in the olde testament: yet (in the new Testament) (saue, where it is ascribed only vnto Iesus Christe) it is rare or neuer to be founde, directly ascribed to the Ministers of Gods word and Sacramentes, as it is in this place here quoted. Ephes. 4. Upon which we haue already spoken. And as for the other quotations, Act. 20. & 1. Pet. 5. do rather insinuate them than call them by the name of Pastors.

This metaphorically name therefore of Pastor or shepheard, or feeder, is no more (if it be not much lesse) significant, for the office of the Minister of gods word and Sacramentes: then is the name of Doctor, or is any more proper name of this Ecclesiasticall office, then are the other which here be reckoned by. Whereof, as these our brethren the Learned discourses doe firste name the title of Elders: so in this example that they bring therof,

The name of Doctor or Teacher more proper and significant than the name of Pastor.

Numb. 11. 16. Where God ordained 70. auncients to assist Moses in his government, who were also endued at the same time with the spirit of Propheticke, from which time it became an ordinary office and name of gouernours in Israel. This is so hardly brought forth, for the applying of this name vnto the spiritual Pastor or Minister of Gods worde and Sacramentes, that their selues both here do rather applye it to the name of Gouernours, whiche name they giue vnto their Seniors, that are not Pastors: And also, pag. 83. saying: That Pastors seeme to haue borrowed this name of Elders, especially in respect of their Government. Whereas, it is apparant for those Elders (for all their prophesying) that their gouernement consisted not wholy in Ecclesiasticall, but in ciuil and temporall matters onely. So, that those Elders were nothing like either these Elders, which they call Pastors, nor like the Elders that they call Gouernours, which they would haue not only to gouerne (though, some ciuil and temporall, but chiefly) all Ecclesiasticall matters. but of these 70. Elders, we shal see more hereafter.

Nowe, concerning your note against the Papistes, that the Ministers of the Church are neuer called in the newe Testament, by the name of sacrificing Priestes, which were vnder the Law. Which, as it is true: so that which follo weth, but often are called Elders, of the similitude of those auncientes that gouerned the people of God, I take, not to bee so true.

true, or so necessarily proued to be true, that the name ancientes came of the similitude of those 70 auncientes, their manner of gouernement of the people of God; being so different and contrary.

True it is, that those auncientes are by the 70. interpreters called by that name, but so they cal also both Abraham and his wife, and his man, and Lot, and the Sodomites, and the Elders of Pharaohs house, and all the auncient men of the people of Israell, besides and before they so call those 70. auncientes. And of the office that they were called vnto, saith, Caluine, on the same place, Numb. 11, 16.

For, before the Lawe was set foorth, Moses was bidden to take 70. persons with him, who should conduct him into the mountaine, that they might be eie witnesses of the glory of God. In the meane season I denie not, that there were 2. more aboue the number of 70. But onelie I shewe why God determined this number, to witte, that hee mighte restraine the guides and heades of the people, to the familie of Iacob, which was the beginning of the nation, and the name. Yea, it seemed before, when as Moses to take the tables at the hande of God, ascended into mount Sinai, that he did leade with him threescore and tenne Gouernours.

Where-upon is gathered, that euen then were chosen in that number, such as did excell in honor, Albeit the prouince of gouerning whereof mention is now made, was not as yet enioyned vnto them. And it is likelie, that those selfe-same men whiche before were created Captaines, were called to this new and vnaccustomed office. Which also the wordes declare. Indeede, certaine it is, that where-as the Iewes returned from their exile in Babylon, because it has not lawfull for them to create a King, they imitated this example, in ordayning a Counsellor session of Senators. So great honor was giuen to the memory of Dauid and of the Kinges, that out of their stocke they choase their 70. Gouernours, vnto whome appertayned the chiefe power of all kynde of matters.

Thus saith Caluine of them. so that, the office of these 70. being more laye, and nothing like to the gouernment of the Ministers of Gods word and Sacramentes: and the name ancientes being indifferent to other as well as to them, and that, both before and after them: it hath no likelie-hood, that the ministers of Gods word, are called Elders of the similitude of those seuentie auncientes. True it is, that they are so called, and that often in the new Testament, and neuer, sacrificing Priestes. But what is this to the name priest? Can you say, The spirite of God neuer calleth them priestes? The spirite of God (say you) doth often cal the Ministers Elders, but euer-more precisely auoydeth to name them sacrificer, or priestes.

Pea, doth it so? Holwe doeth it then often call them Elders? When that which we name in English Elder, is in þ very terme of the spirit of God ^{Prieste and Elder al one} ~~apocallips~~? Of which very worde the English terme priest by contraction is deriued. Doe yee thinke this is a sufficient warrant, to come in with this Parenthesis (as we vse the terme)? And (I pray you) what an blage cal ye this? Besore, yee called them sacrificing priestes, and made your argument all on sacrificing priestes: And now yee come in with Sacrificers or priestes. Not making these sacrificers or priestes to be termes distinctiue, & distinguished offices: but as betokening al one office or thing, that to be a sacrificer, is to be a priest: and to be a priest, is to be a sacrificer. and that sacrificing priest is all one. As we vse the terme (say you) they are all one. As you vse the tearme (say I) you vse it greatly amisse, and berry farre from the vsage of the spirite of God, and from the vsage of all the wryters, both of the olde testament, and the new.

Priester and sacrificers not all one.

And if both these names (as you confesse, were vsual among the Iewes, ^{Reformers of names should mark not so much how thinges are used, as how they should be vsed.} ~~apocallips~~ the one signifying sacrificers, the other Elders: then to vse these wordes one for an-other, (as you heere doe) is a foule error and abuse. Especially, where we would, or shoulde of purpose speake properly, and distinctly of these thinges.

For we must not thinke, to scape heere with this saying, every thing as it is bled, or taken: but what it is it selfe, and how it should be taken. Namelie heere of you, going about to refozme thinges and tearmes, that (you say) haue beene abused, and to reduce them to their firste or originall vse, and institution.

Now, the terme ~~apocallips~~ holwsoener the spirit of G O D vsed it in the old Testament, and yet most commonly different from the sacrificer: but especially in the new Testament, neuer for sacrificer, but chieflie for the Minister of the word and Sacramentes: Our English worde prieste being deriued from the same grecke word, as also, the Latine, the French, the Italian, the Spanish, the high and lowe Dutche, do all deriue their names of this office, from this worde ~~apocallips~~: as Presbiter, Prestre, Presté, Prete, Priester, euen as we say, Priest: And many such wordes we haue as ~~in some~~ Episcopus, Euesqué, Vescone, Obispo, Wischoff, and we say, Bishop: and as the French, Eglise, &c. of the Greeke worde ~~Εκκλησία~~, and wee Ecclesiasticall on the same: and Church, which the Northren English calleth Kyrke of ~~Κυριακή~~: Deacon, of ~~Διακόνος~~, and a number of our English wordes are deriued.

But, if now the Papistes, haue after wards abused this terme Presbiter, which we commonly call prieste, for sacrificer: Is it not lawfull for vs, to reduce this worde, vnto the same vse, it was then, and long time after, in good sense bled? Since, when so-euer wee vse the same same for the Ministers of the Gospell, we protest to vse and vnderstand it in no other sense, than the new testament doth.

And if we wanting a fitt tearme for Sacrificers, the worde Priest hath beene ill applyed vnto Sacrificers, hath not the worde Bish. Deacon, Clerck, Church, Sacrament, Ceremony, Baptisme, Euchariste, Crosse, Image, Saint, Doctor, Gospell; and a number tearmes moe, beene moste shamefully, abused: and yet both not their abuse debarre our libertye of vsing these tearmes, vnderstanding them in the true senses of them.

Why the name of Elder though the more natural English, is not so fitt a tearme, as Priest for the minister of the worde.

And although I for my part do not mislike the name Elder, (being the true English of the worde Πασις, as likewise shepheard or feeder, is of the worde Pastor) if this worde Elder had beene in our English tongue more ordinarily vsed, and more properlie applyed to the Ministers of Gods word and Sacramentes, where-as the worde Priest, being deriued from the Greeke, and arriued hère, is at the most but a free denizen: yet, since this free borne Elder, is so freely used to so diuerse senses, that not only your selues vse it, for an-other kynde of Elders: and because also it is more vsually taken for those that be more Politike officers: & for all that are more auncient than others, and so, yee hère cal the 70. auncientes: and ordinarily, we vse it for Elders in yeres, and for those that haue liued & died long before our times: therefore (me thinkes) the tearme Elder, is not so fit a tearme (hauing so many, prophane senses) to be applyed to the Ministers of Gods word and Sacramentes, as is this our indeniued worde, Priest. And as also Pastor is an-other worde forreiner borne, and yet your selues had rather vse that tearme: yea; and make it your especiall proper tearme, then shepheard, or feeder: because the worde shepheard is, although the righter and playner English, yet properly betokening her persons, and feeder too generally applyed to prophane vses.

Howbeit Brethren, without too earnest strife for these tearmes, this is but my simple opinion, a little declining from your Learned discourse vpon this title of Priest. Notwithstanding, as far from all allowing, or liking the popish sacrificing Priesthoode, or any other of their errors, or superstitions, as (thanks be to God, you our Learned brethren, or any other reformed Churches are.

As for the Latine worde Sacerdos, as who would say, a giuer of holie thinges: albeit indeede Sacerdos is no more the true exposition of ἱερεὺς, then priest is of Sacerdos: Yet is not this worde so vtterlie left out of the new Testament, but that S. Paule saith Rom. 15. 16. ἵνα ἡμεῖς ἡμεῖς τοὺς ἑθνοὺς ἁγιάσωμεν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ τοῦ Θεοῦ. To this, that I might be the minister of Christ, among the Gentiles, sanctifying them to the Gospell of God. wherein he alludeth to the name ἱερεὺς, that Feguernekinus in his promptuary of Mar. saith in the title of Pastor, Pastores quo sensu sacer. dicuntur. In what sense Pa. are called sacerdotal priests. But for the vse therof, as either the penury of the tongues permitted, as the use prenapled: so the Grecians (though having otherwise a tongue most copious) retained still their olde name hups, and the Latines, Sacerdos. Wherefore (saith Kemnitius confuting the Councell of Trent about the Popishe sacrificing Priestthoode: Neither doe we strue for names. Paule by a generall name calleth the ministers, Doctors, Pastors. In the Scripture of the newe testament, the name Sacerdotum, of Sacerdotall Priestes, and Sacerdotij, of Sacerdotall Priestthoode, is no where ascribed to the ministerie of the newe Testament: but by the use of Ecclesiasticall writers, it is growen in custome, to call the ministerie priest-hoode, and the Ministers Priestes.

If therefore the Papistes minded onely this, that there should be in the newe Testament an externall sacerdotall Priestthoode: that is to wit, an externall ministerie of the woorde and Sacramentes, as wee have already declared: there should be no controuersie, nor troubles should be mooued, for the name of Sacerdotall priestthoode: so that the matters that be true and necessarie, may bee safe. And euen thus as Kemnitius saith hereon: so say we.

But although our Bretheren, and we agree heerein, against the aduersaries of the Gospell, that the Sacrificing Priest-hoode (vnderstanding it as Kemnitius here sayde for the externall function and action of reall sacrificing) be translated vnto Christe and resteth in him onely: For other-wise, spiritually hee so communicateth both his kingdome and priest-hoode, to his whole mysticall bodie, that all the whole is an holy priest-hoode, as Peter sayth 1. Pet. 2. and all the partes thereof, Kinges and Priests in him: Apocal. 5. yet can not our Bretheren here iustifie this, to be the cause, why the spirite of God auoydeth in the ministers of the newe Testament, the name of sacrificers or Priestes, because the sacrificing priest-hoode of Aaron, is wholly translated vnto Christe, in whome onely it resteth. For (as they heere confesse their selues) the ministers of the newe Testament succede the sacrificing priest-hoode of the olde Testament, in one principall part of their office, that is to saye, in teachinge: as it is written, the lippes of the Priestes shoulde preferue knowledge, and menne shall seeke the lawe at his mouthe.

If then, the sacrificing priest-hoode resteth wholly in Christe: we should haue no externall publique teaching of Gods Lawe. And therefore our Bretheren must correct their wordes in that point. Neither

sufficieth it to saye, they meane it onely in respects of their sacrificing: For, the sacrificing priest-hood consisted not onely in sacrificing, if teaching were a principall parte thereof. And was not prayer an-other principall parte thereof also: And both distinguished from the reall externall sacrificing parte: Yea, if our Bretheren separate exhorting from teaching: as they sayde before, page. 17. exhorting is a principall parte of a Pastors office: and those sacrificing Priestes were Pastors: and are oftner so called in the olde Testament, then in the Newe: if then, in so manie, and all principal partes of that priest-hood, the ministers succede them, although not in the sacrificing parte: then is neither this true, that the sacrificing priest-hood resteth wholly and onely in Christe: neither is this anie cause, that though the name of Sacrificer be auoyded in the ministerie of the Newe Testament, the name also of Priest (signifying Elder) shoulde bee, or is auoyded. Which indeede it is not. For they are often called presbyteri, Presbyters or Priestes, in the newe Testament.

As for the places here by our Bretheren cited, because they are afterward recited, vpon more materiall occasion of questions betwene vs, and be here onely referred to the vse of the name: I deferre them to their particular answeres of them.

The learned Dis. An-other name they haue in the Scripture, which is Superintendentes, or Ouerseers, because they ought to be vigilant and watchfull, to ouer-see the flocke, and euerie member thereof. Which name is neuer vsed in the Scripture, for such Bishops as claime and exercise dominion, and authoritie ouer whole Regions, & all the Pastors of the same, but onely for those that be Pastors of euerie seuerall congregation, hauing no superioritie ouer their fellowe Pastors, but be all of equall dignitie and authoritie. So are they named Act. 20. where Saint Luke in the 17. verse, calleth them Elders of the Church of Ephesus. S. Paule in the 28. verse, calleth the same Ouer-seers; saying: Take heed to your selues, and to the whole flocke, ouer which the holie-Ghost hath made you Ouer-seers, to feede or gouerne the Church of God, which hee hath purchased with his owne bloude. In this place all the three appellations concur: namely, of ouer-seers plainly, and Pastors inclusiuely in the woorde flocke, and in the word ποιμαίνω, which signifieth to feede, or gouerne as a Pastor doth his sheepe.

The name of Superintendent or Ouer-seer nothing so fit a name as Bishoppe.

We are now come to the name ἐπίσκοπος, which in our vulgar English we call Bishop, which name likewise by our Bretheren is almost as much shunned, as the name of Priest, and called rather by the names of Superintendent or Ouer-seer. And although these termes (where they are better known, and properly vsed for this office) are not to be misliked: yet because the word Superintendent, is not deriued of the word so often vsed by

by the spirite of God, but is onely a signification or exposition of the same; howbeit, so darke and strange to the Learned, that they are not so wel acquainted therewith, as with the vsuall name of Bishop: and the name of Ouerseer, though it be English plaine inough: yet, being vsed for manie meane and worldly offices, as the Ouerseers of woorkes, the Ouerseers of willes, &c. I take it therefore not to be so proper and apt a name, as the vsuall and peculier name of Bishoppe, being the verie Etimologie of the Greke name, that the spirite of God vseth in the scripture.

But say our Brethren, this name is neuer vsed in the scripture, for such Bishops as claime & exercise dominion and authority ouer whole Regions, and all the Pastors of the same: but only for those that be Pastors of euerie seuerall congregation, hauing no superiority ouer their fellow Pastors, but be all of equall dignitie and authoritie.

The vse of the name Bishop.

This is saide onely, and not proued, either out of any place, befoze, or here alleaged. As for this present, Act. 20. ver. 17. & 28. neither nameth, nor inferreth any such thing. But argueth rather of twaine the cleane contrarie. For, what meaneth this confused collection thereupon: That in this place the three appellations doe concurre, namely, of Ouerseers plainly, and Pastors inclusiuely in the worde flocke, and in the woorde ποιμαίνω, which signifieth to feede, or gouerne, as a pastor doth his sheepe. Where is here the concurrence of the three appellations? Here are two appellations by you named, Ouerseers plainly, and Pastors inclusiuely. Where is the thirde appellation that yee speake of? If yee meane in the Greke verbe following, when yee saye, and in the woorde ποιμαίνω, call yee that also an appellation, because yee saye it signifieth to feede or gouerne, as a Pastor doeth his sheepe? And howe chance then yee adde not the 3. appellation, and of gouerning also, call him a Gouvernour? We tpe adde onely, as a Pastor doth his sheepe. And whie not also as a Gouvernour doeth his people? For else, the terme of Pastor might haue sufficed.

What, doe yee thinke of purpose the appellation of Gouvernour here also included, and giue the appellation of Gouvernour to your other Elders, whome yee call (as it were) by their proper name Gouvernours; and pull it from Bishoppes: least you might seme (perhaps) to ouerthwarte your selfe, and inferre (by giuing them the name also of Gouvernours,) that they exercised Dominion and authoritie, yea, perhaps ouer whole Regions, and all the Pastors of the same? Which is y thing that of all other yee can-not bꝛoꝝke. But let the proofof that fall out after as it shall: out of this place, as yee proue nothing to the contrarie; so, if yee meane, by these three distincte appellations eyther plainly spoken or included, that Bishoppes are Ouer-seers, are Pastors, and are Gouvernours: then it followeth, that these three seuerall appellations, haue thre seuerall respectes. Ouer-sight or superiortie of beeing and examining the states and duties of them, whom they ouersee, as Ouerseers: feeding, by preaching the worde of G D D, and ministring the Sacramentes, the foode of the soule, as they are Pastors: and gouernement, which, what it implyeth, besides these two former, I referre to euerie indifferent concluders iudgement.

If nowe, ye would conteyne this thirde vnder the other two, ye should both confounde your selues, and these thre concurring appellations. So that, the exercise of dominion and authoritie, of iurisdiction and discipline in the Church of God, appertayning to the office of Bishops, is eyther plainely or inclusiuely to be inferred of this place: euen by our owne obseruation thereon. Which exercise of authoritie and dominion, howe farre it reached, whether ouer whole Regions, and all, or anie the Pastors of the same: shall moze and moze appeare by further discussing that which followeth.

Whether
there were many that properly were called Bishops in one Citie.

Where is to be noted, that Bishops or Ouer-seers of one Citie were manie: which plainely argueth that they were none such, as nowe-a-daies are commonly called Bishops, which can be but one in one whole Diocesse, much lesse manie in one Citie.

Although we neede not greatly stande on this, whether those Bishops, that were called together by Saint Paule, were at that time moe, than one there continually resiant, being so headde and famous a Church as Ephesus was, and so in that point were different from Bishoppes nowe-a-dayes: yet may they well be such, in manie other moze necessarie, materiall, and nearer pointes, to the point nowe in hande, though in this or some other point, they were not such. Would to G D D, all in Christendome, that haue the name and office of Bishoppes nowe-a-dayes, differed no moze but in this. The Popishe Bishoppes differ in manie more and farre greater. And yet all, in all the offices of a Bishops differ not, though they all abuse their office diuerse wayes. As may an euill Prince, and a good Prince, and yet both Princes. As Aaron and Caiaphas, both Bishoppes: as Peter and Iudas, both Apostles. And so may there be both Doctors, Pastors, Gouernours, and Deacons, so well as Bishops, good and badde.

And much lesse difference: being both good, and differing only in number of the persons, and not in the principall substance of their office. In which point is not so great difference, as these our Learned Bretheren wene. For diuerse times there haue bene two or moe Bishoppes at once in one see. Whereupon such were in the auncient time named Coepiscopi, as Clemens, Linus, and Cletus, by diuerse menues opinions, all Bishoppes of Rome together.

And as Hierome Catalogo scriptorum Ecclesiast. telleth of Alexander, Bishop

Bishophe of Capadocia comming to Hierusalem where Narcissus was Bishop: he was made Bishop ioyntly with him, and both of them together ruled the Church of Ierusalem.

Suffragane & Coadiutor Bishops.

Although this haue the seldomer happened, and orders since haue beene made to the contrarie, as at the Councell of Nice, &c. to auoyde emulation and contentions: and the imitation of suffraganes, yet to this day testifieth the same. Howe although this be plaine ynough, to be no such materiall matter. To conclude, that Bishoppes, be it, they be moze together in one Diocesse, or in one Citie, haue no authoritie ouer other Pastors, but that all Pastors are of equall dignitie and authoritie: yet if this were denied (I meane for this place here alleaged Act. 20.) can it be necessarilie inferred thereupon? The text it selfe (say you) plainelie argueth it. So are they named Ages, 20. where S. Luke in the 17. verse calleth them Elders of the Church of Ephesus.

The question is of the equalitie of all Pastors.

What say ye (my Pastors?) dare yee anouch these woordes, for the text it selfe in deede, and in distinguished letters? Reade the text better, and you shall finde these woordes: Wherefore, from Miletum he sent to Ephesus, and called the Elders of the Church. Doeth this of necessitie inferre, that they were the Elders of the Church of Ephesus? Meaning by Elders, only the Pastors or ministers of the worde and Sacraments, to the which purpose yee alleage it, and not the Elders that ye call Gouvernours (which, as ye after ward say, medled not with teaching) for the ye, shold alleage it cleane amisse for Pastors. And I pray you, do ye thinke there were then, (the Church there being so lately founded) manie Pastors or ministers of the word and Sacraments, abiding at that one Church of Ephesus? It is not likely, considering that time. For in the Chapter before saue one, Chap. 18. 19. is the firste mention made of Ephesus, howe Saint Paule comming thether, entered into the Synagogue and disputed with the Iewes, who desired him to carrie a longer time with them: but he would not consent, but bad them fare-well, &c. After whose departure came Apollos, as is aforesaide, verse, 25. The same was instructed in the way of the Lorde, and he spake feruently in the spirite, and taught diligently the thinges of the Lorde, and knewe but the baptisme of Iohn onely. And hee beganne to speake boldly in the Synagogue, &c. After whom Cap. 19. ver. 1. Paule returning came to Ephesus, and founde certaine Disciples, and saide to them: haue ye receaued the holy Ghost, since yee beleueed? And they sayde vnto him, we haue not so much as heard, whether there be a holy-Ghost, &c. And all the men were about twelue, ver. 7. So that, all this while there was yet no great number of sufficiently instructed Christians, much lesse of Pastors, (and all in the Synagogue of the Iewes) at Ephesus.

What likeli-

many Pasto-rall Elders in Ephesus
when S. Paul came to Mi-letum.

But it folloiweth in the text of their encrease. ver. 8. Moreover he went into the Synagogue and spake boldly for the space of three monethes, disputing and exhorting to the thinges that appertayne to the kingdome of God.

But when certaine were hardened and disobeyed, speaking euill of the way of God, before the multitude: he departed from them, and separated the Disciples, and disputed daylie in the schoole of one Tyrannus. And this was done by the space of two yeares. So that all they which dwelt in Asia, heard the words of the Lorde Iesum, both Iewes and Gracians.

So that although Saint Luke saye, on the occasion of the myzacles following: verse 20. So the worde of God grewe mightily and preuailed: yet all this while heere is no stoze of Pastors ordeyned in this Church of Ephesus that we reade of, during Saint Pauls aboade among them. Nowe (sayth Luke ver. 21.) when these thinges were accomplished: Paule purposed by the spirite, to passe through Macedonia, and Achaia and to goe to Ierusalem: saying: after I haue beene there, I must also see Rome. So he sent into Macedonia two of them that ministred to him, Timotheus and Erastus. But he remayned in Asia for a season. And the same time there arose no small trouble about that waye. For a certaine man named Demetrius a siluer Smith, &c. And so Luke entereth into the declaration of that sedition, which to haue pacified, ver. 30: When Paule would haue entered in vnto the people, the Disciples suffered him not. Certaine also of the chiefe of Asia, which were his friends, sent vnto him, desiring him, that he would not present himselfe in the common place.

Whereuppon it followeth in this 20. Chapter, verse 1. Nowe after the tumult was ceased, Paule called the Disciples to him, and embraced them, and departed to goe into Macedonia. So that, heere is described by Luke all the state of the Church of Ephesus, from the time that it first receaued the faith of Christe, till Saint Paule in his returne towarde Ierusalem, hauing passed by Ephesus, because hee would not spende the time in Asia, beeing come to Miletum, (sayeth Luke:) Wherefore, from Miletum hee sent to Ephesus, and called the Elders of the Church.

By all which conference it may appeare, that there were not at that time manie Pastors of the Church of Ephesus. And that (though the word of God grewe mightilie there and preuailed) yet wee may perceauie, that the most parte of the Citie remayned Idolatrous: so that the greatnesse of this Church, was but in comparison of other lesser Cities. And if it were as Caluine obserueth, on Act. 14. verse 23. And when they had ordeyned them Elders, by election in euerie Church, &c. I interprete Presbyters, (Priestes, or Elders) to be heere called those, vnto whome the office of teaching was enioyned; for that there were some, that onely were correctors of manners, appeareth out of Paule, 1. Tim. 5. 17. Nowe where Luke sayeth, that they were placed ouer euerie Church: hereupon is gathered the difference betwixt their office, and and the Apostles. For the Apostles had no certaine station; but oftentimes ranne about hether and thether, to fownde newe Churches. As for Pastors, (as placed in holdes) were addicted euerie one of them to their proper Churches.

If this now, were the Apostles disposing of these Pastors, euerie one of them to their proper Churches: that is, singuler men, in singuler Cities; (besides, that by the way, he maketh the office of the Pastors to be teaching:) is it likely, there were manie hauing pastorall cure, in this one Church of Ephesus? For, we finde not in all Paules aboade there, of diuerse congregations or Churches amonge them. Who may not therefore (if we conferre these thinges togeather) plainly ynough perceaue; that where the text sayth not, from Miletum hee sent to call the Elders of the Church of Ephesus: but, from Miletum he sent to Ephesus, and called the Elders of the Church: that it should rather seeme, hee meaneth the Elders both of the Church of Ephesus, and of other Cities of Asia, bordering there about. For, as Luke sayde before, Chapter, 19. ver. 10. All they which dwelt in Asia, heard the worde of the Lorde Iesus, both Iewes and Gracians. And againe, verse 3. Certaine also of the chiefe of Asia, which were his friendes, sent vnto him, desiring him that he would not present himselfe in the common place. So that, it might verie well be, that hearing of his approche, and (belike) thinking, he would haue come thether, or of some other occasion being there assembled, as to the chiefe Citie, and greatest Church of all those coastes, he sent thether for them. And yet the wordes dzine not so straightly neyther, that hee sent thether for them: but onely that, he sent to Ephesus, and called the Elders of the Church.

So that, they might be called as well from other places, as from thence. And the wordes of Paule vnto them apparantly stretch further than to Ephesus. Who when they were come to him, (sayeth Luke,) he sayde vnto them: Yee knowe from the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I haue bene with you at all seasons. These wordes being directly spoken to these persons whome he called for, and expressely saying, he had bene with them, from the first daye, hee had bene in Asia: and hee had bene long before in Asia, in his first peregrination: which these our Bretheren mentioned before, out of the 13. Chapter: that he and Barnabas were by the holie-Ghost seuered out to trauaile thether: wherein hee had bene at Perga, in Pamphilia: at Antioche in Pisidia; at Iconium, Derbe, Lystra in Lycaonia and Attalia, all Cities of this Asia the lesse, where Ephesus was the chiefeste of them all: Saint Paule with Barnabas, hauinge planted the Faith, and ordeyned Elders in euerie Church, as is afore-saide: in his seconde peregrination returning with the Apostles decrees, to confirme these forsaide and other places: and being againe in Asia, till he was (Actes. 16. ver. 9. and 10.) called by the Lorde to preach the Gospell in Macedonia: which done, departing from Corinth, he came first to this Citie of Ephesus, at what time he tarried not, Act. 18. 20. till in his returne from Ierusalem, Act. 19. ver. 1. he came againe to Ephesus, where he remained two yeares and a quarter. Howbeit, the most writers call it two yeare, including the three monethes that Luke speaketh of before, ver. 8. for the time he taught in the Synagogue, with the time that hee taught in Tyrannus his schole. And this (sayeth Luke) was done by the space of two yeares, ver. 10. but Saint Paule in this Oration sayth to them, verse, 31. By the space of three yeares, I ceased not to warne euerie one, both night and day with teares. So that he plainly includeth with them other Churches of Asia, where he had likewise trauielled. Which also hee had before as it were exprested, ver. 25. And now behold, I knowe that hence forth, ye all through whom I haue gone, preaching the kingdome of God, shall see my face no more.

S. Paule includeth other Churches besides Ephesus

By all which we may safely conclude, that these Elders, (were they Bishoppes or Pastors, or any other ministers of the Church, setwe, or manie,) were not onely of this one Citie of Ephesus, but of diuerse besides there-aboutes.

Neither is this my coniecture onely, although if it (were, I hope the indifferent marker not of men but matter, shall finde it carieth probability,) but Gualter also is herein of my opinion. For (saith he) he calleth out euen vnto Miletum (which is about thirtie or fourtie miles distant) the Elders or Bishoppes of the Ephesians, and of the Cities adiacent: and taketh order with them for waightie matters in a generall Synode.

Gualter on Act. 19.

But now, let vs presuppose that all these Pastors, Priestes, or Elders were onely of the Church at Ephesus; doeth it followe necessarily thereupon, that because Saint Paule calleth them all by the name of Bishoppes, they might not heare be Metaphorically called, or rather in some respect: then as the name might afterwarde, and euen in the Apostles times, be more properly restrayned, to some Pastors, that had some superiortie ouer their fellowe Pastors? So that, all were not of equall dignitie and auctorite, though these at that time were.

For as this name Επισκοπος came from the heathen, so when it was first borrowed of the sacred writers, and beganne to be vsed in the Church of God, it might be vsed more indifferentlie. As also the name ἐπισκοπος, ἐπισκοπος, ἐπισκοπος, &c. Which names are not alwaies understood in the Scripture, in like proper sense, as since they haue vsuallie bene and be accepted. And yet to this daye, we do not so restraine this name Bishop, but (in respect of that that the nature of the woꝛde impliyeth) we maye not onelie vse it still, for euerie Pastor or Minister of the woꝛde and sacraments, but also (as wee commonlie saye) euerie man is a Bishop ouer his owne familie: and families also are sometimes called Churches. As, Col. 4. 15. and euerie faithfull man is called euen a sacrificing Priest, as you translate it, and a King, Apoc. 5. But all this debarreth not, but that these woꝛdes maye in other places, be taken in other senses, and maye moze properlie bee applyed to some especiall offices. And so is the name of Bishop bothe wayes taken. And to shew this moze manifestlie, as we allowe not any of the errors or abuses of the Popish Bishops, or other their ecclesiasticall orders or offices, any moze then any of our most zealous Bretheren do: so, if we peruse euen their owne assertions, and the auncient Fathers, bothe for this title of Bishops, and other titles, orders, degrees, dignities, and differences of the state ecclesiasticall in the Primitiue Church; wee shall finde sufficient pꝛoofe and warrant hereof.

The writers of the Centuries, Cent. 1. lib. 2. cap. 7. pag. 507. in their title of the policie or gouernement of the Church, doe saye: Among the persons that gouerned the Church in this age, these differences doo occurre. For some are called Apostles, Eph. 4. 2. Cor. 12. And not onelie those twelue Disciples of Christe are noted by that name, but Paule euerie where in all his Epistles, calleth himselfe the Apostle of Christe: and Act. 14. Paule and Barnabas are called Apostles. Epaphroditus is named the Apostle of the Philippians. Philip. 2. Andronicus and Iunias, are notable among the Apostles, Rom. 16. Other: Prophets, Ephesians. 4. 1. Cor. 12. By this name, bothe they were called that were famous in the gifte of Prophecie, and also they that interpreted the Prophets, that is, the Scriptures, Act. 11. 26. Act. 13. Other: Euangelists, Eph. 4. Hee gaue other to bee Euangelists. By this name they not onelie appeare to be called, who wrote the historie of the Gospell, as were Matthew, Marke, Luke, John: but they also which euerie where did teache the Gospell. For Philip one of the seauen Deacons, ordeined in the beginning at Ierusalem, is called an Euangelist, Act. 21. And Paule bids Timothie doo the worke throughlie of an Euangelist. 2. Tim. 4. Other, Pastors, Ephes. 4. Other, Doctors, Ephes. 4. and 1. Corin. 12. Other, Elders, 1. Pet. 5. or Bishops, for Bishops and Elders are taken for the same, Act. 20. Paule saith to the Elders of Ephesus; the holy Ghost hath placed you Bishoppes to gouerne the Church of God, Tit. 1. I haue left thee in Creta that, thou shouldest in euerie towne ordaine Elders, &c. For a Bishop must be blameles, &c. 1st. 5.

Historia Magd. Centur. 1. li. 2. cap. 7. Pag. 507.

The titles of the Eccl. offices in the scriptures.

Here euen as you would haue it these Centuriographers, doe distinguish betweene the persons that were Pastors, and that were Doctors. And also they made Elders and Bishops to bee all one. But they make Elders call titles and offices. Elders or Bishops to be distinguished from Pastors. And how agreeth this with that you here auouche, that by the name of Elders the Pastors are called : and that Bishops be Pastors : and that the names of Pastors and Ouer-seers doo concurre ? Neither agreeth this with you, that they say, after they haue reckoned vp Deacons and waiting Ministers, or attendants on the Apostles : Meminerunt, &c. They remember onelye three degrees: Apostles, Presbyters or Bishops, and Deacons. All which three were founde in some Churches, while as the Apostles were yet aliue. For in the Church of Ierusalem, in the beginning, there were twelue Apostles, who exercised the ministerie of the Church. But the number of the Church increasing, and when necessitie required, a more diligent care of the things that were common, seauen Deacons are chosen and ordeined, Act. 6. There are also in the same Church, Prophets, Act. 11. There are Apostles and Elders, Act. 15. They were receaued of the Church and of the Apostles and Elders. When Paule came last of all vnto Hierusalem, hee founde there Iames and the Elders, whoe are sayd to haue come together, Act. 21. In the Church of Antiochia, for a time were Paule and Barnabas, who are called Apostles and Prophets, & Doctors, whome it is lawfull to call Elders.

Our Breth.

dissolued.

If now we, the sacred wryters of the New Testament, do remember but onelye three degrees : Apostles, Elders or Bishops, and Deacons : which all thre were founde in some Churches, while the Apostles were yet liuing, (which is the time that you prescribe, and which is the time whereof these men said in the beginning of this matter, that in this parte, no age is to be compared heerevnto,) where is then become the Ecclesiasticall gouernement of all these foure persons, Doctors, Pastors, Gouernours, and Deacons ? Where are here your Gouernours, if ye include them in the name Elders, they expresse what kinde of Elders they were: Elders or Bishops. As you here saye, and ye call them Pastors ; and they say, that those whome we may call Elders, were Apostles, Prophets, and Doctors. So that your other gouerning Elders, that were neither Apostles, Prophets, nor Doctors, are excluded, and your distinction also betwene Elders and Doctors, is removed. Neither doe even your owne examples, which immediatlie followe, any whitte helpe you. In the Church of Philippes are Bishops and Deacons, Phil. 1. Paule and Barnabas are saide to create onelye Elders, Act. 14. Paule biddeth Titus to make Elders or Bishops in euerie towne in Creta, Tit. 1. Hee prescribeth to Timothie what manner of Bishops and Deacons he should ordeine, 1. Tim. 1. Paule sendeth for Elders out of Ephesus, whome hee calleth Bishops, to come to Miletum vnto him, Act. 20. Thus do they diligentlie search the scriptures: and examine the churches state; and consider the word Bishop as you woulde haue it to, Elder, or Minister of the worde; and saye, that these were were the Elders of the Church of Ephesus, that Paule sent for: and yet all this will not helpe to finde out one place recorded in the Scripture, while the Apostles lived, where the gouernement Ecclesiasticall, was directed by all these foure kinde of persons ioyned together, and one distinguished in office frō another, as you (by the examples of the Apostles) would prescribe. But since they cannot do it: I beseech you do it, and set downe the place where all these foure concurred. And yet if ye so did, and no rule prescribed, for all to do the like: may not we pleade also to be the church of Christe, though we haue no such preests, Elders, Gouernours, nor such Doctors distinct from pastors, as these Churches had not in all the Apostles times? To conclude, say these writers of the Centuries. But howe manie persons exercised the ministerie in euery church, is not noted in the histories, nor is any where commaunded, that they should in euery place be a like many. But as the fewnesse or the multitude of the assemblie required: so were fewer or mo admitted to the Churches ministerie. They appointed Prophets, Euangelists, Pastors and Doctors, not to bee certeine degrees of persons. in the Ecclesiasticall regiment, but they seeme to be reckoned either among the Apostles and their fellowes, or else among the Elders or the Deacons. So that, as still these your Gouernours are not mencioned; so, still your quozible distinction of these persons and their offices, is ouerthrowne, and no number commaunded or prescribed. Thus do these letters smyth of this first Centurie (or hundreth yeares) of the Apostles time, and of the Primitiue Church, euē where they make for you, concerning the title of Bishops, make cleane againste you for your Doctors, for your Gouernours, & for your Deacons, whome they make to be Teachers also: saying of them Pag. 508. These mens office was to Minister to the table at Hierusalem, while the communitie of the goods was there. Act. 6. But notwithstanding that they taught also and wrought signes, appeareth by Stenen, Act. 6. and by Philip, Act. 8.23. And in other Churches euery where, it was the Deacons office to teache & minister. Mention is also made of womē Deacons: for, Ro. 16. Phabe is called the minister of the Church of Cenchrea. The author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, calleth them by a generall name, the Ministers of the Church, Heb. 13: obeye your Rulers. Thus write they of the office of Deacons: so that, they were Doctors or Teachers also of the woꝛde, and had the cure of soules, for so it followeth in the foresaid text. And submitte your selues: for they watche for your soules: all which is cleane contrarie to your prescription. Kemnitius also in his second Tome aforesaid, befoze hee come to the Treatise of the equalitie or superioritie of Bishops, confuting the decreē of Trident councell, for their seauen-degrees of orders, saith at large on this wise: as for the matter, thus it standes; bicause manye duties (or offices) doo apperteyne to the ministerie of the

the Church, which in a great assemblie of beleeuing people, cannot all and euerie one of them conuenientlie be dispatched of one man or of a fewe : that therefore all things should bee doone in order decentlie and to edification, the assemblie of the Church being multiplied: those duties or offices of the Ministerie, began to be distributed into certeine degrees of Ministers, the which they called after τελες, or τελεματα, ordinances or orders, that euerie man should haue as it were a certeine station, in the which he should serue the Church in certeine offices of the Ministerie. So the Apostles in the beginning, attended on the Ministerie of the worde and Sacraments, and also on the contribution and dispensation of the almes. But afterwarde the number of the Disciples increasing, they commended that parte of the ministerie which perteyned to almes vnto other, whome they called Deacons. And they allege the reason that they so doo, to witte, that they might trauell in the ministerie of the worde and praier more diligentlie, without any withdrawings of them from the same. Act. 6. And this firste beginning of degrees or of orders of the ministerie of the Apostlicall Church, declareth what ought to be the cause, what the reason, what the ende of suche either degrees or orders : to witte, that according to the consideration of the Ecclesiasticall assemblie, all offices which apperteine to the Ministerie, may be executed more commodioullie, rightlier, more diligentlie, and in order, with some grauitie to edification.

And bicause the Apostles out of those Deacons, did assume them, which were tried afterwards into the Ministerie of teaching, as Steuens, and Philip: it is gathered, this also to be the vse of these, either degrees or orders, that they should be prepared before, and prooued in the les- ser, that afterward the more waightie offices of the Ministerie, mighte the safelier and with profite be commended vnto them. And this is that that Paule saith, 1. Tim. 3. Let them firste bee tried, and so let them minister. Again: They that haue in the Deaconship ministered well, shall get to themselves a good degree. So in the Liturgie of the Church of Antiochia, Act. 13. There were Prophets, and Doctors: of whom, those did either foretell things to come, or expound the more difficult places of the Scripture, 1. Cor. 14. These did set forth vnto the people the principles of Christi- an religion, Heb. 5. Paule and Barnabas doo assume Marke to be a Minister, Act. 13. Not onelie that hee should Minister corporall things vnto them: but that they might commend to him certeine partes of the Ministerie of the worde, as Paule expresselie saith, Act. 15. How contrarie this is to your doctrine, both for the generall considerations of making degrees in the ministerie on these aforesaid causes: and namelie, how flat against your assertions for Deacons, Bag. 108: I referre to the conference of the Reader, till we shall come to your Learned Discourse thereon. So we to proceed proceede on with Kemnitius.

In the Church of Corinthe, there were Apostles, Prophets, Doctors, certaine that spake with languages, certaine that interpreted: some had Psalmes, some praier, blessings, and thanksgiuings; not in private exercises, but in the publike conuenticles of the Church, 1. Cor. 12. & 14. Certaine degrees of the Ministerie, Ephes. 4. are reckoned vp. First, Apostles, which were not called to anye certaine Church: neither by men but immediatlie of Christe. And had commaundement to teache euerie where. And were adorned with the witnesse of the spirite, and of miracles, that they erred not in doctrine, but that their doctrine was diuine and Caelestiall: to the which all other Doctors should bee bounde. Secondlie, Prophets: who either had reuelations of things to come; either who interpreted languages, and the Scriptures: for those that were more growne: for these things are attributed, 1. Cor. 14. to the Prophets of the new Testament. Thirdlie, Euangelists, who were not Apostles, and yet they were not assigned to one certaine Church, but were sent to diuerse Churches: that there they might teache the Gospell, but cheefelie that they might laye the first foundations. Suche an Euangelist was Philip, Act. 21, Timothie, 2. Tim. 4., Tichicus Syluanus, &c. That also there were suche Euangelists after the Apostles times: Eusebius testifieth, lib. 3. cap. 37. &c. Fourthlie, Pastors: who were placed ouer a certaine flocke of the Church, as Peter sheweth, 1. Peter. 5. and did not onlie teache, but also ministred the Sacraments, and had the viewe of the hearers, as Ezechiel. 34. describeth the office of the Pastorship. Fiftlie, Doctors, vnto whome the cheefe gouernement, and view of the church was not commended, but onelie to set foorth doctrine simplie to the people, such as afterward were Catechists. So, Rom. 2. Paule calleth him διδασκαλος, παις, A Teacher of Infants: and so, in this signification is the word διδασκαλος, to Teache, expresselie vsed, Heb. 5.

Where Kemnitius seemeth to make greatlie for your distinguished Doctors, and that they might not exhort. And yet marke that place better, where S. Paule saith, Hebr. 5. 12. For whereas concerning the time, ye ought to be Teachers: yet haue we neede againe, that wee teach you the first principles of the worde of God, and are become suche, as haue need of Milke, and not of strong meate, &c. And ye shall see, that S. Paule euen in those wordes, verie oportunityonellie doth moue them. Besides, that the Epistle hath many and singular exhortations and applications, &c. And if ye further marke, ye shall finde all contrarie to you: euen where your Eldership and Bishoprike is also made all one. For it followeth; but all these degrees the Apostles comprehend in the name of Eldership or Bishoprike. So that your Elders that are Bishops, are not onely Pastors (as you would haue them) but your Doctors also are Elders, that are Bishops: cleane contrarie to your distinction.

distinguishing of them. Now and then also by a generall name they call them Deacons, vnto whom the ministerie of the worde and Sacraments is committed. Col. 1., 1. Thes. 3., 2. Cor. 3. & 11., Ephes. 3. Paule himselfe also, did sometimes so regard the Ministerie of the worde, that hee commended the administration of the Sacraments vnto others, 1. Corinth. 1. Christe sent not me to Baptize, but to preach the Gospell. And 1. Tim. 1., he mencioneth two kindes of Elders (or Priests) of whom some laboured in the worde and doctrine, some were set ouer the ecclesiasticall Censures: of which kinde of Priesthood (or Eldership) Tertullian also recordeth, in Apologes. ca. 39. These are almost the degrees, into which the offices of the Ecclesiasticall ministerie in the time of the Apostles are read to be distributed. And that distribution hath the examples also of the olde Testament. For Dauid 1. Par. 23., and in the chapter following, distributeth the Ministerie of the Temple into certeine degrees and orders. There were also in the Synagog, Readers, which onelye read the text of the Scripture. But besides, there were Doctors which interpreted the Scripture, and applyed the texte to exhortations, Luke. 2., Act. 15. And this was the difference betweene the Scribes and Phariseis.

by we see also, that these Doctors that were interpreters of the Scriptures, bothe before the time of Christe, and his Apostles, here in earth, and after in all their time, were not so to teache and interpret the principles of religion, but that with-all they applyed the same to exhortations. Now vpon all these degrees and orders, Kemnitius gathereth these generall rules. But for this present disputation, this admonition is to be added. Firste, that it is not in the worde of God commanded, which, or how manie, or that suche orders ought to bee. And here I beseech you good Learned Bretheren, note this admonition well, and I thinke, this one admonition maye suffice, to answer all your Learned Discourse.

The principall
questi on between vs, how manie Ecclesiasticall orders are commanded.

For, the principall question betwene vs, is not, what orders and degrees were in the Apostles times, of the Ecclesiasticall Ministerie; but whether those orders and degrees, or suche orders or degrees, and how manye of them are commanded; and so of necessitie ought to be reteined, yea or no. Secondlie, that in the time of the Apostles, there were not in all churches, and alwayes, the selfe-same, and so manie degrees or orders. The which thing is manifestlie gathered out of the Epistles of Paule, written to diuerse Churches.

Not all places alike for Ecclesi. orders, nor al times
in the Primitive Church.

And this is also another notable admonition, to be well pondered, yea all the peyle of our principall question, lyes againe hereon. For as before, if there were no commaundement or prescribed rule to all ages; so here, if there were no vniuersall practise in all Churches, in the Apostles times; or where there was a practise of these orders and degrees, it continued not then alwaies, but changed: howe are we now bounde to an vniuersall and perpetuall practise of those degrees and orders? Preis call titles ther doe we finde in Paules Epistles this diuersitie of practise, for other or- and offices.

 ders or degrees onelye; but euen of Pastors, whome yee call Bishops, not mentioned 1. Cor. 12, where so manye are reckoned vp, and among other, Gouvernours, whose office (yee say) consisteth onely in gouernement, and not in publike teaching. And S. Paule, Ephes. 4. where hee mentioneth Pastors, omitteth these Gouvernours: and yet in bothe places of purpose he handleth the orders of Ecclesiasticall ministerie. And in the latter, where he omitteth these Gouvernours, that you bzge, hee setteth downe without any mention of them, the end of these orders to be, for the gathering together of the Saints, for the worke of the ministerie, and for the edification of the bodie of Christe: till we all meete together in the vnitie of faith, and knowledge of the Sonne of God, vnto a perfect man, and vnto the measure of the age, of the fulnesse of Christe. And woulde wee haue a moze fulnesse then this? And yet are your Gouvernours cleane left out. This (I say) would be substantiallie noted for these orders. And albeit, Kemnitius here doe with-all gather, that in the Church of Ephesus, there were also Elder-Gouvernours, some-what like such, as you prescribe: yet by this Epistle to the Ephesians, and by Kemnitius admonition, it appeareth, they were not there alwaies. For the words to Timothie doe necessarilie inferre, that there were there, and then, anye such kinde of Elders. But whatsoeuer they were, all Churches were not alike in these orders.

Thirdlie (saith Kemnitius) there was not in the time of the Apostles, suche a distribution of those degrees; but that more often one and the same man did susteine, and execute all those offices that apperteyned to the Ministerie. The which thing is manifest by the Apostolicall History.
 This third note againe, cleane ouerthroweth all your Learned Discourse, and fullie answereth all the bitter out-cries of our Bzethorens Fruitefull Sermon (as they terme it) on the 1. Cor. 12. for encroching, confounding, foolish & pernicious shuffling together, of diuerse duties. Which termes (saue) of moze zeale (to say the best thereof) then of charitie or knowledge.
 Now, saith Kemnitius vpon these three admonitions: These ordinances therefore, in the Apostles times were free (consideration being had of order, comlineesse, & edification) saue that at that time, certeine peculiar giftes, as of toongs, of prophesie, of Apostles, and of miracles, were giue of God to certeine persons. As for these degrees wherof we haue hether-to spoken, were not any thing besides and without the ministerie of the word and Sacraments, but the same and the verie offices of the ministry were distributed into those degrees, for the causes now declared So that all this that is befoze spoken, is not so much to be noted for the extraor-dinarie offices, as for these that you make ordinarie.

Nowe, vpon this libertie of the Apostles times, howe the Primitiue Church next succeeding them, did followe or alter anye of these orders: Kemnitius still proceedeth saying: That example of the Apostles, the Primitiue Church with the same reason, and the like libertie did imitate. For the degrees of the offices of the Ministerie, were distributed. Howbeit, not altogether by the same reason, as in the Church of Corinth, or in the Church of Ephesus: but according to the reason of the circumstances of euerie Church. Wherevpon is gathered what a libertie there was, in the distribution of those degrees. And this requireth, no lesse to be marked, then all the other three admonitions. For, if there were such a libertie in the Primitiue Church, immediatlie after the Apostles times; and that on the imitation of the Apostles, and that in these two and so famous Churches, Corinthus and Ephesus; and yet different in these degrees and orders, of the Ecclesiasticall Ministerie, one from an other, and other from them, according (not to any commaundement prescribed) but to the reason of the circumstances of euerie Church: haue not wee as muche libertie now, in the distribution of the degrees and orders of the Ecclesiasticall Ministerie? Well, let vs procede with Kemnitius, to his perticuler examples of these orders.

Dionisius, cap. 5. of hys Hierarchie, expresselie numbrell onelie three orders. Firste, ιερευσ, of the principall diuine Minister, to whome hee giueth the cheefe and moste perfect office of teaching, in the declaration of all the mysteries of Christe, and administration of the Sacraments. Secondlie, ποιμενικον, Sacerdotum, of the sacred Ministers or the giuers of holie giftes, (as we vsuallie, for penurie of proper words, impropertie saie, Priests, which is deriued properlie of ιερευσ, as is aforesaide, and you call Elders; whereas ιερευσ signifieth a sacred person, dedicate to the Temple, and the diuine offerings or ministerie) which doo more fullie instructe him in the Catechisme, and bring him to the Bishop, and helpe in those things, that pertain to the administration of the Sacraments. Thirddie, της λειτουργιας, Ministrorum, of the (publike) Ministers: to whome he giueth the office of cleansing, and preparing those, that are to be entred, that is to saie, of Catechising. And cap. 3. he saith, by the office of the Ministers, the reading of the holie Scripture, in the order thereof, is recited. Againe, of the Ministers: some stand to shut the dores of the Temple, while they which are learners of the Catechisme, which are penitents, which are possessed or vexed with a spirite, are thruste out. Other, haue an other office, to strippe him that it to be Baptised, &c. Thou seest, that he reckoneth manye offices of the Ministerie: and yet he dooth not giue to euerie one of them peculiar orders: but reckoneth vp onelie three orders. The Canons of the Apostles, namelye, Bishoppe, Priest, or Elder, and Deacon, Reader, and Singer. But there is no mention made of

of doore-keeper, exorcists, and acolyte. Ambrose on the 4. chapter to the Ephesians, describing the degrees of the offices of the Ministerie of his time, rehearseth Bishops, Priests, or Elders, Deacons, Readers, exorcists. In the booke, which is ascribed to Hierome, of the seauen degrees of the Church, Exorcists and Acolytes are not reckoned: therefore the opinion of those seauen orders is not Catholike, But some of the auncients, number mo orders aboue those seauen: the Epistle of Ignatius reckoneth the romaine, Labourers: whome Epiphanius calleth romaine, the little booke of Hierome, calleth them Fossors, diggers; to witte, which attended on the corsses of the dead, and buried them. The Gracians haue a peculiar office of those that are syngeli, (or rather, as I take it) sygeli, silensaries, or keepers of silence, or bidders of the congregation to holde their peace. Ignatius reckoneth vnto the orders, Confessors: Clement, Catechists: the Canonists reckon nine orders, for they reckon in Psalmists, and Bishops. But the multiplication of Ecclesiasticall orders, from thenceforth, arose afterward. For Cyprian in the 3. booke, Epistle 22, sheweth, that nothing that was to be doone in the Church, and in matters of the Church (although they properlie pertained not to the Ministerie of the word) should be doone by any other, than by clearkes. And so it behoued the waiting & houshold seruants of the Bishops, and of the Priests or Elders, to be Clearkes. From thence afterwards Stewards, Defenders, Vidoms, those of the houses which were the greater (or Bowrgraues) were taken from the Clearkes. Clearkes therefore were those, which by a peculiar and more streight discipline, were framed and prepared to the Churches Ministerie. And they were first appointed to certeine lesier offices: that the studie, diligence, faith, and grauitie of them, might be tried, whether they would become fit for greater and more waightie offices. And in the Churches more frequented, when as especiallie out of the fields, villages, and little townes, cheefelic in the more solemne feasts, they must come from all partes to the Metropolitane Church, (as many auncient canons or rules doo commaund this) one or a few were not able to execute all and euerie of the offices of the Ministerie. Therefore, degrees and orders were distinct: not in idle titles, but in certeine offices apperteyning to the ministerie of the Church. The Bishop was treating of the word of GOD, and caring for the discipline of the Church: the Priests, were teaching and ministring the Sacraments. And here note this difference betwixt the Bishops & the Priests: not meaning your Priests that ye call Gouvernours onelic, but Priests that taught and ministred the Sacraments; that is to saye, were bothe Doctors and Pastors, & with all, note the superioritie (ouer the Priests) of these auncient Bishops in the Primitiue Church next the Apostles times. The Deacons were the Gouvernours of the Churches treasures: that they might therevpon provide for the maintenance of the poore, and cheefelie of the ministers of the Church. The Deacons also after wards began to be assigned to ease some parte of the Ministerie of the Bishop, and of the Priests, or Elders, as also Hierom ad Rusticum dooth testifie: as before to read something out of the Scripture, to teache, to exhort, &c: to admonish the people to be attentue, to haue their heartes to the Lorde, to pronounce the peace, to make readie those things that pertain to the administration of the Sacraments, to distribute the Sacraments to the people, to present those that are to be ordeined to the Bishop, to warne the Bishop of those things that pertain to discipline, &c. But Hierome complaineth to Rusticum of Narbona, that manie suche things especiallie in the Church of Rome, were imposed vpon the Deacons, besides the Apostolicall tradition, and besides the custome of other churches, inso- muche that the firste and true office of the Deacons, was in Deacons almost blotted out. For sithe that Deacons were occupied with those new offices, Subdeacons were substituted vnto them, which gathered the oblations of the faithfull, that were giuen for the sustentation of the poore, and of the Ministers. Besides these, there were readers, which out of the Scripture, especiallie out of the Old Testament, read publikelie before the people. For the reading of the New Testament, was afterwarde giuen vnto the Deacons.

Inferior
orders.

There were Psalmists or singers, which did fore-sing (or set the note) to those things that all the people are woont to sing. There were doore keepers or Porters, which in the time of the mysteries, after the denouncing of the Deacon, thrust out of the Temple the Heathen, the learners of the Catechisme, the penitents, the possessed with spirits, the hereticks, and those that were excommunicate. For so dooth Dionysius describe this office. The Bishops, the Priests, and the Deacons, had their seruants, ministers, companions, or followers of them, whose labour as necessitie required they did vse. As Paule vsed the labour of Onesimus. Those they called Acolyths. From whence afterwards ignorance made them taper-bearers. There were besides Exorcists, that had the gifte of casting out or repressing diuels.

Where and how these distributions of degrees were obserued.

This distribution of degrees in the more frequented Churches, by reason of the offices that pertained to the ministerie, was profitable, for bicause of order, to comlineffe and to edification. But in smaller and seldomer frequented Churches, suche distribution of degrees was not iudged necessarie. And in the more frequented also, was not euerye where the like and the same distribution of those degrees. But by this reason, to this vse, and in the same libertie, the moste parte of those degrees of the olde Church, are also kept of vs. These things haue I rehearsed, that it might the more commodiouse be shewed; what in this chapter is put in controuersie, of the degrees or orders Ecclesiasticall, for neither doo we simplie reiect or condemne the distribution of those degrees, as it was in the Apostolicall and in the old church: but according to the reason of necessitie and edification, wee vse the same in our Churches, after the same sorte as is declared.

Thus doe we see, all the state of the Ecclesiasticall ministerie in the Apostles and in the auncient time, in what sort and what varietie they were vsed, and on what occasions, and to what purposes they were ordeined, and howe farre-forth they or we are bound vnto them, or at libertie from them. All which, in howe manie and howe forcible points, it ouersproues all your platfoyme of Ecclesiasticall gouernement: I referre to any indifferent readers iudgement. But bicause my cheefe occasion, to set this downe so far at large, was here especiallie to consider among these orders, what he noteth, concerning the office and degree of a Bishop: I minde therefore, yet further to procede with him, where of purpose and directlie he confuteth also the decree of Trident counsell, that Bishops and priests are not equall.

But as wee haue seene all this in him at large, for all the orders and degrees of the Ecclesiasticall Ministerie: so by the same aforesaid, and in generall, haue wee to leuel all that, which in particular he setteth downe after concerning Bishops, of whome, and as before in speaking of these orders he alloweth none of the popish abuses in them: neither any of vs (I hope,) doe fauour, or would goe about by any meanes to mainteyne anye errors, usurpation, pride, and tyrannie of the popish Bishops; so doth not Kemnitius any more then we condemne, in true and godlie Bishops, simplie all superioritie ouer priests or pastorall Elders, neither would these our Brethren, on the better consideration of the proues thereof, both in the Apostles, and in the auncient Fathers, and by the graue and modest iudgement, euen of the very best, and moste learned late writers of their side.

And firste, as we are not, (at least-wise should not be) desirous of contention, especiallie to contend about questions of names onelie, and mere titles, but rather to searche and followe the truth of the matter: so I gladly graunt for the name Bishop, and for the name prieste or pastorall Elder, though they differre in sense, (as Hierome in his Epistle to Oceanus saith) the one being a name of dignitie, the other of age: yet in the olde time, and namelie when these names were firste in the New Testament, applyed to the Ministers of GODS worde, and Sacraments, they were (I graunt indifferentlye vsed, Priest for Bishop, Bishop for priest, and both for one. The reason was, bicause suche commonlie as were chosen and ordeyned herevnto, were in ripenesse of yeares auncient men. Or if in yeares not so auncient, (which was the seldomer,) yet yet auncient in iudgement and gravitie of manners. Whereupon they had the name of presbyter, Priest, or Elder: and with-all in their office, having an oversight; the name Episcopus, that we call Bishop, was likewise given unto them. But the question lyeth not in this, whether at that time, untill these names were growne into more peculiar uses, they were thus indifferentlie taken one from another; or, whether they might not be reduced to that indifferent acceptation againe: but, whether those that were so called then indifferentlie, had likewise no kinde of difference in oversight, authoritie, and gouvernement among them, but were meerelie in suche sorte all equall alike (being equallie of like and of one order and degree of Ministerie) that no one or other among them, to whom the name and office of Bishop was competible, had, or might have anye superior oversight, gouvernement, and authoritie, ouer anye other in the same order, of Priesthood or Eldership, that himselfe was of: whereupon this name Bishop (or some other name equivalent) began to be more restrained unto that Priest, or Pastorall Elder, than unto the residue: albeit, they were still indeed (and so were called) in the office of the Ministerie and Eldership, his fellow Elders. And how auncient the originall of this superior authoritie was. For this I take, to be the ground and principall substance of this controuersie.

The originall
of the

Concerning the etimologie of the name of Bishop, bicause I haue so largelie begone with him, I will onlie set downe Kemnitius, tom. 2. pag. 1181. But that those things which in this place concerning Bishops may the rightlier be vnderstood, certeine thinges before hande out of the Scriptures, and out of the true testimonies of antiquities, are in brieft to be repeated. The names therefore ἐπισκοπος, ἐπίσκοπος, of Bishop, and Bishoplie office, are in the Apostlicall writing read, to be vsed for the Ecclesiasticall ministerie, Act. 1. & 20. Phil. 1. Tit. 1. 1. Tim. 5. 1. Pet. 5. But those names are taken from the vse of the vulgar tooing, and are applied to the Ministerie of the Church, for the care of administration and of viewing. Suidas saith, that in the common-weale of Athens there, were Bishops and φυλακες Keepers or watchmen, that were sent to the cities subiect vnto them: not to gouerne them with an absolute gouernement, as Lindanus dooth interpret it: But, ἐπισκοπῆσαι τὰ τῶν ὑποκειμένων, that is, as Budens out of Linie translateth it, to viewe their fellowes matters. Plutarch in the life of Pericles, saith: Phidias was ἐπισκοπος, 'the Bishop of all the workes: that is the viewer of them, &c. And so noting out of Homer, Plutarch, Tullie, and the Pandecks: The Apostle (saith hee) did the more gladly applye those names to the Ecclesiasticall Ministerie, bicause they were knowne and common, by reason of the Greeke translation of the Olde Testament. For the worde פקדן Pakad Pekudah, and פקודים Pekudim, which signifieth a visitation, a viewing, an office, a care, an administration committed, a dutie given in charge. The Græcians translated it ἐπισκοπος, to oversee, an oversight, and overseers, or surueiours, Num. 31. the overseers of the armie, Iudic. 9. Abimelech hath Zebul his Bishop or overseer, 4. Reg. 11. The Bishops or overseers that are ouer the armie. Ibid. the custodies placed ouer the house of the Lord, are thus expounded of the Græcians he hath placed Bishops ouer the house of the Lord, 2. Par. 34. The viewers of the workers, are called Bishops, Num. 4. The office or dutie of ἐπισκοπος in the Tabernacle of the Lord is called ἐπισκοπία, a Bishoprike. So, Psal. 109. The function of Iudges is called ἐπισκοπία, a Bishoprike. I haue rehearsed these examples that I haue obserued, that it might be considered from whence the Apostles tooke that name. The force whereof also may be gathered and vnderstood of those places. Hierome translateth it a super-attendant, Ambrose, a Super-inspector. Thus farre Kemnitius on the name. Nowe in this sense, euerie one to whome an Ecclesiasticall charge was committed, at the firste might well be called a Bishop. In which sense, the name Bishop stretcheth especiallie to the Apostles, Act. 1. as likewise all the Apostles were Deacons. Yea the name Deacons contains all the Ecclesiasticall Ministerie. But when these offices began more seperatlie to be deuided: then the name of Deacon began to growe peculier vnto those, that attended especiallie on the tables, the name Bishop remaining as it did, vnto the Apostles. And when the Apostles planted the faith of Christe in any Churches, and ordeined in the same Pastoral elders, (in respect of this their overseeing the people, and god orders among them) they indifferentlie communicated this name of Bishop vnto them. And so the name continued taken indifferentlie, and was well bled by S. Pape to these Pastors, mentioned Act. 20. (admitting they were all of Ephesus onelie,) untill factions rising among the people, as they were affected to some Elders, more then to other: so the name of Bishop which was befoze indifferent, became more appropriate vnto one, who (as haueing the overseeing not onelie of the people, but also of his fellow Pastors,) began by their consentes, more especiallie to bee called Bishops, than the residue.

The general scale of the name Bishop.

The appropriating of the name B. vnto some one among the Pastors.

Which title, of being the Over-seer of them, as it could not but carrie with all a iurisdiction and authoritie ouer them; nor could be long from them without all their consentes, that were befoze invested with this title and authoritie: so, who were the first that began the appropriating of this title Bishop, vnto one aboue his fellowe Pastors; and when, and where it first began; though it bee not purposed expressed in the Scriptures: yet that the occasion and introduction of it, had his entrie euen in the Apostles times; manie reasons (and those I hope of substance) may induce us thereunto.

This appropriating of the name B. began in the Apostles times.

unto. And that not onelie of the testimonies of the auncient Fathers, and practise of the Church of Christe, in all the ages nexte succeeding the Apostles; (which should some-what moue vs) but euen by the conference and examining the Scripture it selfe, we shall finde more then probabilitie of the same.

For, if wee shoulde goe no further, then this Church of Ephesus, of which ye make all these to be Pastors: & all these Pastors, Bishops: and all these Bishops equall, hauing iointlie an ouer-sight ouer the people, or parted into parishes, which we call parishes: yet notwithstanding for all these Bishops, it doth plainelie appeare, they had after wards in S. Pauls time, one Bishop that had an ouersight, ouer all these Bishops & ouerscers.

And what (I praye you) importeth that, (if it bee proued) but that either he was an Archbishop or cheefe Bishop ouer them, if they were Bishops: or if they were not, and did but for the time portake the name of Bishop, that was but late taken vp among them: yet at the last he had a superior episcopall iurisdiction ouer them? And first, what meaneth, (in the end of the later Epistle of S. Paule to Timothie,) this subscription?

The subscription of the later Epistle to Timoth.

The second Epistle written from Rome vnto Timothie the first Bishop, ordeined of the Church of Ephesus. True it is, the former parte of this subscription, is omitted in the common Latine translation: But since it is in the Greeke, and not omitted either by Erasmus, or by our Geneue translation, though Beza (likewise translating the same) do adde his censure, saying:

This member is not extant in some old bookes, and indeed, I thinke it is put in vnderhand: yet since he shewes no reason at all, wherefore he should so thinke: it is free for other, not to thinke so sightlie of it: Timothie being of so manie learned and auncient Fathers and interpreters, so reported and called Bishop of Ephesus. So to, if Timothie were the first ordeined Bishop of Ephesus; what? Was he first in time, and befoze all thes or was he any of these, whome S. Paule Act. 20. calleth Bishops? the text is manifest to the contrarie. For as Paule toke him to goe with him, Act. 16. 3. so he travelled with him till he came to Berea. Acts. 17. verse 14. and 15, & there abiding, when Paule went to Athens, he came at his commaundement vnto him to Corinthe. Act. 18. 5. And so went with Paule, & abode with him at Ephesus, Acts. 19. untill (verse 22.) he sent him and Erastus into Macedonia. Whither, when Saint Paule came, Acts. 20, and travelled from thence to Greece: he sent againe Timothie, with diuers other to Troas, where while Timothie abode: Saint Paule (as it is likelie) wrote his First Epistle to the Corinthians, in his returne to Macedonia at at Phillippos, Act. 20. verse. 3. and 6. Determining to send Timothie with that Epistle backe againe to Corinthe, which of likelihoode hee did, when he came to Troas, where Timothie with other abode his coming. Who, when he came thither, sent Timothie, accompanied with Stephanus, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, with that Epistle, as in the ende thereof, 1. Corinthians. 19. verse. 8. appeareth. I will tarrie at Ephesus vntill Pentecost, for a great doore and effectuall is opened vnto me; but there are manie aduersaries. Nowe, if Timothie come, see that hee bee without feare of you. For he worketh the worke of the Lord, euen as I doo.

And euen so saith Luke, Act. 20. verse. 16. Paule had determined to saile by Ephesus, because he would not spend the time in Asia, for hee hastid if he could possible be at Ierusalem, at the daye of Pentecost. Whereas before he had minded to tarrie at Ephesus, till the drawing nere of that feast. So that (if I coniecture not amisse, which if I do, I will be readie in all humilitie, to refozme my computation) it appeareth that Timothie was at that time, none of these Bishops, nor among them, towhome Saint Paule called from Ephesus to Miletum. Howe then was Timothie the firste Bishop ordeined of Ephesus? Not, firste in time: for if anye at all in time; then muste hee needes haue bene ordeyned Bishoppe after them. Neyther yet, that all the other Bishoppes were not at all ordeined, or were now all dead; but that in dignitie hee was the firste, that is to saie, the cheefe or Archbishop among and ouer them all. And to confirme this, let vs see the iurisdiction and authoritie by S. Paule given him, ouer all the Ecclesiasticall Ministerie, in this Citie. For, whensoever Saint Paule wrote his firste Epistle to him, which some take to be during the time that hee taried for the assemblie of these Bishops aforesaid, in the meane while, stepping ouer to Laodicia, which is about the same distace from Miletum, that Ephesus was, (as appeareth by the charte or mappe therof) and there at Laodicea he wrote that Epistle.

Timoth not first Bishop there in time, but in dignitie.

Other suppose (and it is farre moze likelie) that it was after he had bene at Rome, and was by Nero set at libertie, in which time of 10 yeares space, as he visited againe, (which the Centuriographers note) the Churches of Syria, Asia, and Greece: so hauing a great care of this Church of Ephesus, and keeping his former course of visitation, as hee did, Act. 20. from Ephesus to Macedonia, and so backe againe, as before hee had done: he writeth from Laodicea vnto Timothie, whom he had before ordeined Bishop there, giuing him this charge, 1. Tim. 1. verse.

3. As I besought thee to abide still in Ephesus, when I departed into Macedonia: so doo, that thou maiest commaund some, that they teach none other doctrine, neither that they giue heede to fables and genealogies. Whereby it appeareth, that hee had authoritie giuen him by the Apostle, to ouer-see, controll, and commaund such Bishops, Pastors, and Doctors, as were at Ephesus, both for the matter, and the manner of their teaching. Upon which sentence saith Caluine: The worde of denouncing signifieth power, for Paule would furnish him with power to restraine others. And this power he giueth him; not onelie that they shoulde teache no other doctrine, but also not the same Doctrine, otherwise. So that the manner of setting forth doctrine, as well as the doctrine it selfe, appertained to his charge and ouer-sight. In the 2. chapter he shewes him some orders, that he would haue obserued in the Church, concerning prayers, and the publike Ministerie of the worde. In the 3. chapter he describes the office and duties of Bishops, and their wiues: of Deacons and their wiues, so that, although the name of Bishop, bee there taken indifferently, for the Pastors of the worde and Sacraments: yet still hath Timothie, an authoritie giuen him ouer them, bothe to make such Bishops, as should be qualified; and to ouer-see, that they being made, should behaue themselves accordingly.

Caluine.

Timothie, a Pastorall elder in Ephesus.

Whereupon, after hee hath described them, hee saith to Timothie, verse. 14. These things write I vnto thee, trusting to come shortly vnto thee: but if I tarrie long, that thou maiste haue knowledge how to behaue thy selfe in the house of God, which is the Church of the liuing God, the pillar and grounde of truthe. In which wordes, he plainelie giueth him an authoritie and iurisdiction of ordering and gouerning these offices, in the policie and regiment of the Church. In this speech (saith Caluine) he commendeth the weight and dignitie of the office, bicause Pastors are as it were Stewards vnto whom God hath committed his house. So that, Caluine here maketh Timothie a Pastor, whome ye call a Bishop, and he giueth him authoritie ouer other Pastors or Bishops there. And how doth not this plainelie inferre, that though all in the pastorall office may be a like, and equall: yet in dignitie, one may haue charge and gouernement ouer another. In the 4 chapter, verse. 11. and 12. he saith, Commend and teach these things. Let no man dispise thy youth, but be vnto them that beleeue an example, &c. As though he woulde haue him become a myrror and patterne, not onelie to the people, but to the Pastors. Whereupon (saith Caluine) we also acknowledge, that Timothie was a yoong man, whose notwithstanding farre surmounted manie Pastors. And on the 15. verse, he saith: Grace was giuen him by prophesie. How? To witte, for bicause (as we haue said) the Holie-ghoste by oracle had appointed Timothie, that he should be chosen into the order of pastors. Yea, your selues haue clearelie confessed, pag. 19. that, Timothie was but a yoong man, and yet had the office of an Elder.

If then, a Pastor, & an Elder, & a Bishop, be all one, then must Timothie needs be a Bishop: & if a pastor, must haue a charge & focke assigned him: then then must Ephesus be his pastorall or Episcopall charge and flocke.

Bishop.

Which charge that it stretch above his other fellow Pastors or Bishops: is most apparant in the 5. Chapter, where, (besides his authoritie in chusing and ouerseeing the widdowes,) for his authoritie ouer these Pastorall Elders or Bishops: rebuke not an Elder rigorously (saith the Apostle, to Tim. v. 1.) but exhort him as a Father. And ver. 17. the Elders that rule well are worthie of double honour, especially they that labour in the woorde and doctrine, &c. Against an Elder receaue no accusation, but vnder two or three witnesses. Them that sinne rebuke openly, that the rest also may feare. And here our Geneva Bible noteth, On them that sinne, chiefly the ministers, and so all others. I charge thee (saith Paule) before God and the Lorde Iesus Christ, that thou obserue these thinges without preferring one before another. And do nothing partially, Lay hands suddenly on no man. And here againe saith the Geneva note, in admitting none without tryall.

Timothies
authoritie
aboue other Pastors
there.

Here Timothie being himselfe a Pastor of Ephesus, (& so with you a Bishop of Ephesus,) hath a verie precise and speciall charge, aboue all other in the Church of Ephesus, concerning all degrees of persons that shoulde haue anie office in the Church, especially these Pastorall Elders, whome ye call Bishops, to admit them into this ministerie: to rebuke: to see that they haue maintenance of living: and to see them that rule well, and take paines in preaching the word of God to haue a double honour in comparison of other: and that the preferring of men to this function pertayned to him, and that he must take heede he preferre none of partialitie, and to admitte no accuser of the Pastor, but such and such, &c. Doth not all this inferre that he had a superiour authoritie ouer them, (vsing it rightly, and not wrongfully) to doe these thinges? For, if they being Bishops and Pastors, were all equall, by such a flatte and perpetuall rule, as is pretended; then were euerie one of the equall herein to him. And though Paule would haue writtten to him so loue and acquaintance, rather than to them: yet, if all the Pastors then were Bishops in all dignitie and iurisdiction alike: S. Paule could no moze haue attributed these thinges ouer them vnto him, then vnto all or euerie one of the ouer him. Yea, enen Beza himselfe on the 16. verse confesseth, that as he speaketh of such Elders as were Doctors, so (saith he) we must moreouer note out of this place, Timothie to haue bin in the Presbyterie of Ephesus; both presbiter, id est, anristerem, that is, the Prelate, or chiefe Bishop, or one that ruled and guided the other, as In fine calles him. Not as one that should doe all thinges after his owne fancie, but one that according to his godlinesse and prudence, should moderate all thinges that in the assemblie should be done rightly and in order. Whereby it appeareth plainly, that as by Caluine, he is called their Pastor, which ye call Bishop: and by Beza, a chiefe Bishop in their Presbyterie.

Presbyterie or consistorie of Elders. Which accordeth to the foresaid subscription of the later Epistle to Timothie, where he is called the first or chiefest Bishop. It sufficiently (I hope) doth argue, that not all Pastors nor Bishops, were alwayes euen then in the Apostles time, of equall dignitie and authoritie, no, not in the verie Church of Ephesus that is here alleaged

Neither can all the shifts in the worlde, that hee was bidden also to doe the woorke of an Euangelist, that he was a Prophet, that he was a man indewed with so manie, and so great giftes, that by the Apostles authoritie he was appointed there for a time, that he did nothing by his own selfe alone, but by the consent of his fellow Bishops or Pastors, and a number of such euasions, be able to elude this plaine example of Timothy, but that either he was an Arch-bishop ouer Bishops, or at least wise, a Bishop ouer Pastorall Elders.

The learned Dis.

The same thing is to be obserued, in the name of Bishops, vsed by S. Paul, Phil. 1.1. where he and Timothie sende salutations vnto the Bishops and Deacons of the Church, which was in the Citie of Philippi: which

Whether there were mo Bishops at Philippos

This example tendeth to the confirmation of the former, that in the name of Bishops, was signified Pastors, and that there were moe such Pastors called Bishops, than one in a Citie. All this wee haue sufficiently sene in the former example, Act. 20. But will this inferre anie moze then did the other, that all Bishops euer after must be, or there and then were, a-like, and equall in dignitie and authoritie? Or is this argument that is annexed here to strengthen this example, of force sufficient to conclude this equalitie?

Our Breth. argument.

He that saluteth in speciall wordes, those which are in inferiour office, will not omitte them which are of more excellent calling. But S. Paule saluted the Deacons which were in inferiour office in speciall wordes: Ergo, hee would not omitte the Elders which were of more excellent calling.

Pauls salutations.

If this be the argument of this our Brethrens Learned discourse (for it is the best argument y my simple learning can bring it vnto) it standeth (God wotte) on two feeble supporters of probabilitie, to beare the peise of anie firme and necessarie consequence. Paule saluteth in speciall woordes, and proper names, in this Epistle to the Philippians, diuers women: and yet in speciall woordes and proper names hee saluteth not one man among them. But because the argument, (though weak) carrieth a likelihoode, that although there be no speciall woordes of Elders, so well as of Bishops and Deacons: yet that they be not omitted but but included: I will gladly graunt them, that Pastorall Elders are not Bishop. here omitted, but included in the name of Bishoppes. What now are they the nearer to this equalitie? For this reason, that they seeme here to encroche thereon a sufficient reason: In the name of Bishoppes Paule comprehendeth, Pastors, Ergo, Bishoppes, and Pastors are all one, and all alike equall? If this argument be good: then, In the name of Bishoppes Actes. 1. Peter comprehendeth Apostles: Ergo, Bishops, and Apostles are all one and alike equall. Pea, Beza him selfe Beza in and that on this selfe same place, Phil. 1. doth say: Hee vnderstandeth Phil. 1.1.

 those to be Bishops, whosoever are set ouer the worde and the government. As Pastors, Doctors, and Elders, in vniuersis, on the woorde to ouer-see, because they must as watch-men, inquire on the doctrine and the manners of the flocke committed to them, as Act. 20. verse place, verse, 17. And 1. Tim. 5. 17. And the like doeth Beza, 1. Tim.

3. 1. Upon the worde Bishoprike: So he calleth the office both of teaching, and of governing in the Church, as we haue sayde Phil. 1. 1. And the quotation of the Geneva Bible followes Beza in both places. On the Phil. 1. By Bishops, he meaneth them that had charge of the woorde and governing, as Pastors, Doctors, and Elders. And againe, on the worde, the office of a Bishop, 1. Tim. 3. whether he be Pastor or Elder, saith the quotation of our Geneva Testament. So we then, by your argument and their interpretation, we must reason thus: by the name of Bishoppe he meaneth not onely a Pastor, but a Doctor: and not onely a Doctor, but also a Priest or Elder, whose office (ye say) consisteth one-ly in gouernement, and not in publike teaching: Ergo, a Doctor, and a Pastor, and a gouernour (so) so ye call your not teaching Priest or Elder) are all one and equall. Which is the cleane ouerthrowe of all this your Learned discourse of Ecclesiast. Gouernment.

Likewise, as on this former worde Bishop, Beza, and the Geneva Testament comprehend Doctors, Pastors, and Elders, not teaching, but only gouerning: so also on the other worde, Deacons: But (saith Beza) he vn-derstandeth Deacons to be the stewards of the Eccles. treasure, and the college of the widdowes. And 1. Tim. 3: Deacons: These are they that haue the care of the poore, &c. And the Geneva note: By Deacons, such as had the charge of the distribution, and of the poore and sicke.

Beza

Pea, Beza here proceedeth further, and saith: when otherwise, this name is sometime vniuersall, in so much that it comprehendeth euen the Apostles themselves also. So then, we must againe conclude, that the name Deacon comprehendeth the treasurers, the widdowes, the Apostles, yea, and all the Ecclesiasticall ministers, and so, Doctors and Pastors too: Ergo, all together are but all one office, and all alike equall in the same.

Who saith not the euill sequence of this conclusion: And surely, though your argument faile, and your selues also are not comparable to the excellent Learned Master Beza: yet of twaine, (in my iudgement) ye holde the truer opinion, in not understanding here by the name of Bishops, Elders, those that are onely Gouvernours and not Teachers: but understanding thereby, Pastorall Elders, contrarie to Beza, and to the Geneva Testament. And as we will all ioyne with you thus farre-forth herein, that by the name of Bishops he comprehendeth Pastors, and not those that were not Pastors: so shall wee haue Caluine on our side, yea, and Daneus too, who is also of Geneua, and a most earnest fauorer of your opiniõ, and one that hath written best (in my fancie) of all our side, for the maintenance of it. And yet where he goeth about of set purpose to 1. Tim. 3. 1. to proue Bishops and Pastors to be all one: and maketh your last example Act. 20 his seconde argument, and this your present example, Phil. 1. to be a part of his fourth argument: and where he distinguisheth of Elders as you doe even there (saith he) of these Elders therefore that haue here their name of dignitie, not of age: there are two sortes in the Scripture. The one of the that watch on manners onely, the other of them that attende both on doctrine and on manners, and labour in both. The which may be easily gathered out of this Epistle, cap. 5. ver. 17. Concerning therefore the first sorte, as it is distinguished from the second, so it is to be seuered from the Bishops and Doctors. And so he entrencheth into his proceffe, the whole beginning whereof was this, which I should haue set before. But Paule in all this chap. treateth of Bishops and Deacons. Howbeit, there are other Ecclesiasticall and necessarie dignities besides Deacons & Bishops, as are Elders, of whom some thinke that Paule spake nothing at all in this place. But reioicing their opinion, & distinguishing of these two sortes of Elders, he encludeth only Pastorall Elders, (as you doe) in the name of Bishops.

The like doeth Caluine in this place, Phil. 1. vppon the twoorde Bishops: He nameth the Pastors by themselves for honours sake. Moreover, it is lawfull to gather hereon, the name Bishop to be common to all the ministers of the worde, when he attributeth manie Bishoppes to one Church. Therefore the name of Bishoppe and Pastor are Synonyms (or diuerse wordes meaning one thing, &c.) And on the name Deacon, he saith also in the saide place. This name may be taken two wayes, eyther for the ministers and carers for the poore, or for the Elders that were appointed to gouerne the manners. But because it is more commonly taken of Paule in the former sense, I rather vnderstande it for the stewardest, that had the ouer-sight of distributing the almes. Thus you and we herein haue these two most famous men of our side, against Beza and the quoters of the Geneva Testament. And to say the truth, (all respect respect of persons set aside, your opinion is the better, hauing the manifest not example onely, but rule of Gods woordes, in both places: that the Bishops there mentioned, 1st. 20. 28. must feede which (ye say) inclusiuely, is as much as Pastor. And 1. Tim. 3. 2. he must be apt to teach, which appertayneth not vnto an onely Gouvernour.

So we, although ye doe well herein, to dissent from Beza, and from the notes of the Geneva translation, vnto whom if ye would haue agreed, you might easilier perhaps, haue founde manie Bishops, both there in one Citie, and here in another: (but then must you eyther amende this your argument, or else ye should confound all offices in one, and make all equall) yet still your argument (euen as theirs also) is not of sufficient force, that, because Pastors are there named & included vnder the name of Bishop, therefore simplie Bishop and Pastor are all one, and yet, I will gladlie graunt both you and them also, moze than the argument can make good. That in the nature of the Pastorall Eldership and Episcopall ouer-sight, though, ratione, they differ in this, or that consideration, one from the other: yet, re, and indeede, they are so ioyned together in one office, that the one might then verie well, till the name Bishop grewe to a moze proper signification: yea, & may yet well inough interchangeablie be spoken the one of the other: a Pastor is a Bishop, & a Bishop is a Pastor: notwithstanding it doth not followe hereupon, that in all respectes they are now, or were then, simplie and absolutely all one and the same offices, and especially that in dignitie, they were all a like and equall. For that is the chiefe point that should herein be proued. Must al, that be of one order or office, of necessitie be of one equall dignitie in the same? What degree or calling haue you, of Gentlemen, Esquiers, Knights, Barons, Lordes, Charles, Dukes, Princes, or Kinges, but that, being in any one of these estates, orders, degrees, or offices, as they may be equall, so, one may haue dignitie, authoritie, gouernement, and superioritie well-inough ouer another euen of the same estate, order, degree, or office, that themselves be?

If ye say, we must not bring examples of offices in the ciuill policie, and applie them to Ecclesiasticall: though your selues brought in such examples a little before, out of Numb. 11. 16. how God ordeyned 70. auncients to assist Moses in his gouernment, which were ciuill Seniors, and applie them to these Ecclesiasticall and Pastorall Elders: yet, will not you graunt this, that when it shall come to ante assemblies of Synodes, or Councils, one of these equalles may notwithstanding for the time, haue a superioritie ouer all the residue of the same function, that hee him selfe is of? Yes, but say you, this is done but for the time. Well then, if this may be doone with a safe conscience, and without iniurie to other of the same function, for the time of such an assemblie of Synode or Councell, (which

of Pastors. howe shoote or long it may holde, is uncertaine: can it not then bee longer? Yea, can it not then become ordinarie and standing? If it be iniurious and contrarie to the nature of the office, it is not time long or short, that marres or makes it. Continuance may make it a continuall iniurie, and the longer time the longer iniurie, (if of it selfe it be an iniurie) so then at no time, or by any meanes of man it can bee lawefull, being not compatible at all, with the nature and substance of the office. But if it be compatible, and may well inough agree therewith: then, as upon occasion the office may receaue accessle of further dignitie and superioritie for a time: so the occasion longer or still continuing, why may not the accessorie dignitie and superioritie, longer also, and as neede requireth, still continue, without any prejudice of the equalitie, in the essence and substance of the office? Substantia non dicitur secundum magis & minus.

If superioritie among Pastors be simple nought, it can admitte no shortnes of time. If it can be admitted for a time, it is not simple euill.

Superioritie of dignitie in the equalitie of the Apostleship Gal. 2.

Peter, Iames, and Iohn, were in the verie function of the Apostleship (which was all one in euerie one of them) all but equall, fellowe and fellowe like, with all the residue of the Apostles. And yet these wordes of Paule Galat. 2. verse, 6. 7. 8. and 9. are not so lightlie to be shaken off, where hee saith: And of them which seemed to be greater, what they were in times past, it makes no matter to mee. God accepteth no mans person. Neuerthelesse, they that are the chiefe, did communicate nothing with mee. But contrariwise, when they sawe that the Gospell of the vncircumcision was committed vnto me, as the Gospell ouer the circumcision was vnto Peter (for hee that was mightie by Peter in the Apostleship ouer the circumcision, was mightie by me towards the Gentiles) and when Iames, and Cephas, and Iohn knewe of the grace that was giuen vnto me (which are counted to be the pillars) they gaue to me and Barnabas the right hande of fellowship, that we should preach vnto the Gentiles and they vnto the circumcision.

Here is fellowship which carieth some equalitie with it, and that in the Apostleship. But is there no superioritie at all in this fellowship and equalitie of Apostleship? What meane these wordes, Great and chiefe among them? Did they so in times past, and did they not so continue? And what meane these wordes, that Iames, and Cephas, & Iohn seemed pillars, more than the residue? Did they but seeme so, and were not so indeede? And what meaneth this, that the Gospell ouer the circumcision, (that is to say) ouer the Iewes, was committed to Peter, and that God was mightie by Peter in the Apostleship ouer them? Was it not committed as well to the residue of his fellowe Apostles? Did hee no superioritie ouer the Iewes in this Apostleship, more then his fellowes had? Was hee, or any of his fellowe Apostles, equall to Paule in the authorite of the like Apostleship ouer the Gentiles? Did this superiority of both their Apostleships, the one ouer the Iewes, the other ouer the Gentiles, more than their fellowes, come and go by starts and fittes, of times and actions, and was not still re-stant in them, after it was committed to them?

Well, what concludeth Caluine hereupon? Now (saith he, on the 9. ver.) I haue before declared that this (Iames) was the sonne of Alpheus. For, he could not be the brother of Iohn, whome a little before Herode had killed. And to haue beene one of the Disciples, which so much excelled aboue the Apostles, were (in my iudgement) verie absurde. But that he was the chiefe among the Apostles, Luke also sheweth, who attribu-teth the peroration vnto him, and the defining of the cause in the coun-cell. Act. 15. c. 13. and 21. c. 18. Hee telleth that all the Elders of the Church of Ierusalem, were gathered together vnto him. As for that they seemed pillars, he speaketh it not by contempt, but citeth the common opinion, because that followeth there-vpon which could not rashly bee refused. Here where as the question is of dignitie, it is maruel that Iames is preferred before. Peraduenture it was doone, Quod Hierosolymitana Ecclesia erat presbiter, For because he was set ouer the Church of Ierusalem, or he was prefect, or to speake plaine (as the nuncient Ecclesiasticall writers doe) the Bishop of Ierusalem. And yet were the Apostles then resiant there, besides other Pastorall Elders. As for that, that appertay-neth to the name of pillar, we know, that so fareth the nature of things, that those which in witte or prudence, or in other giftes doe surmount other men, they also are made superiors in authoritie. Euen thus goeth the matter in the Church of God, that howe much more each one excelleth in grace: so much the more honour ought to bee giuen vnto him. For it is an vnthankfulnesse, yea rather, a wickednesse, not to worshippe the spirite of God, wheresoeuer he appeareth in his giftes.
Furthermore, as the people can-not want a Pastor, so euerie assemblie of Pastors require a certaine moderator. Howbeit, let that alwaies holde, that he which is the chiefe or first of all, must be as it were the minister.

In which wordes, Caluine plainly alloweth, not onely one Pastor to be superiour, aboue his Brethren and fellowe Pastors, for a small time or present action: but for a standing continuance. For, this assemblie of the Apostles, and of the 70. Disciples, that were preachers likewise of the word, and so, Pastorall Elders, beganne euen from Christes assention and so continued till the Apostles were dispersed. If therefore, (as Caluine sayth) no assemblie of Pastors can be without a Superior: and the Apostles and Disciples assemblie at Ierusalem was then standing of Iames his superioritie ouer them? especially, siue that, when manie of them were afterwarde dispersed, yet this standing assemblie of them uing in Ierusalem.

Ierusalem. who continued still in this Superiour dignitie, both Act. 15. and Act. 21. and Galat. 2. both ouer the Apostles, and all other Pastorall Elders, at Ierusalem.

Caluines citing Eusebius, that James was B. of Ierusalem.

And to proue this further, euen by Caluine himselfe, that James had this standing and continuing superiority of dignitie among the Apostles and Pastorall Elders at Ierusalem; yea, so farre, that he disalloweth not of the testimonie of Eusebius, that he was Bishop of Ierusalem: Caluine on the 15. of the Actes verse 13. writeth thus: They are greatly deceaied in that they denie him to be one of the twelue Apostles. For they are compelled to graunt him to be the same, whom Paul so honorably doth celebrate, that hee giueth him the first place among the pillars of the Church. Gal. 2.9. verely, neuer any of an inferiour order, should haue so excelled aboue the Apostles. For Paul adorneth him with the title of an Apostle. Neither is it worth the hearing, that Ierome alleageth, that the name is there generall: when of purpose the dignitie of the order is treated vpon, howe farre forth Christe preferred the Apostles, before the other Doctors of the Church. Moreouer, out of this place is easie to gather, that he was esteemed of no common price, sithe that with his sentence, he so confirmeth the wordes of Peter: that all yeelde vnto his sentence. And afterwarde vpon the 21. chap. ver. 18. we shall see againe, of how much valew his authoritie was. The Auncients thinke that to be done, because he was Bishop of the place. How-beit, it is not probable, that the faithfull at their will, altered the order by Christ set downe, Wherefore I doubt not, but that hee was the sonne of Alphew, and of Christes consanguinitie, in which sense, he is called his brother. Whether he were Bishop of Ierusalem or no, I leaue it indifferent. Neither makes it much to purpose; saue that clearely hereupon the impudencie of the Papistes is refelled. Sithe that the decree of the Councell is established, rather by the authoritie of James then of Peter. And truelie Eusebius in the beginning of the seconde booke, doubteth not to call James (whosoeuer he were,) the Bishop of the Apostles. Let the Romanistes go now, and vaunt, their Pope is the head of the vniuersall Church, because he is the successor of Peter, who suffered another to rule him; if Eusebius be beleued.

And as James at Ierusalem, so Peter and Iohn were also pillars indeed, as they were counted, among their fellowe Apostles. And Peter and Paul had a higher authoritie and dignitie of Apostleship, (the one ouer the dispersed Iewes, the other ouer the conuerted Gentiles) than the residue of the Apostles had, though in the verie function of the Apostleship, all were equally alike Apostles. And Paul might and did preache vnto the Iewes also, and Peter to the Gentiles, and all the residue, to either Iewe or Gentile. But these two, had a moze speciall and higher dignitie, and was wrought more mightily by thys 2 than by any of thys 1.

their company. Which example of the Apostles, and Caluines iudgemēt thereon, if we shall well consider: we shall not onely finde, that Caluine answereth himselfe sufficiently, in that place, albeit he write very moderately on the matter: but, that we and all our brethren may be fully satisfied, not onely it may well bee, that many in one Ecclesiasticall office, and in that respect all equals one to an other, may safely notwithstanding haue some superiour in dignity and authority of gouernment amongst them, without any p̄iudice at all to one iote of the equality, in the nature and substance of their office, but withall, that it was so euen among the Apostles them selues: yea, euen from Christs ascension, and so continued, and that not onele as a specialtie sprung among them, and dying with them, but deliuered by them to the ordinary office of Pastorall Eldershipp in the Church, as we shewed before in the example of Timothie, whom Caluine confesseth to be the Pastor of Ephesus, and Beza, to be the Pronost, (the principall, the Prelate, or chiefe gouernour) of the Ephesine Pastors. And that not onely it was, and may be, but (as Caluine saith) it must be, and ought not, nor can be well otherwise: which (me thinks,) fully and clearely satisfieth al this question.

Neither doe I see, but as we safely dissented from Beza before, not suffering him here to apply the name of Bishops, to his newe Priestes or Elders that are not Teachers: so, I see not how we should approue him in y^e which he concludes thereon, neither with anye necessarye consequence to proue his sayings, nor according to the verity of the auncient Records, & Fathers, nor agreeing with many the best learned of his owne side, nor yet correspondent to his owne assertions.

For, Beza proceeding in his obseruation on this place: This therefore (saith he) was the appellation of Bishops, vntill that he, which for policies sake, was placed in the company ouer the residue of his brethren, whome Iustine calleth ἡγεμόν, a principall ruler, or one beeing in chiefe authority, began peculierly to be called Bishop.

Bezas confession of appropriating the name of Bi. vnto one

All this hetherto, I gladly accorde vnto: if Beza agree on the time whē it was done, and shew the reason of it, and allow there-of. Or else, shew some sufficient reason to the contrary. For, here he confesseth, that before the name Bishop became peculier vnto one, the matter that the name importeth to be an ouer-seer: yea, and a greater matter too, and a name that is farre higher than the name Bishop is, was before the name Bishop became peculier. And what maketh it matter for the name, if the matter bee graunted? Let them yelde in the matter here with Beza, that one should bee aboue his brethren, and we should see end the strife for the name. Yet some name or other he must haue, and if we fynde no peculier name then recorded of this Superiority, and yet finde the matter then practised, might not the Church make a name, so it bee a modest name, as the church hath done in other things, where names wanted & matter appeared. And may it not muche more take the reuerent and modest name it selfe, that the Scripture bleseth, and by all their consentes, that had interest before (and yet haue) in the same, yeeld it vnto that man peculiarlye, that before was their gouernour: but that this must bee made so great a matter, beeing but the very expresse title that the Scripture bleseth, and nothing so great indeed and significant in matter, as is ~~regist~~ a Prefecte or Primate, a gouernour ouer them.

But this name and office (say they) was not continuing in him, but for the assemblye. What meane they: did it cease, when the Assemblye ceased? and did they chose a newe Prefect at euery newe Assemblye? and so euery day, when they came together, a newe was chosen? or did they continue the old still? But neyther Pastor, nor euery Bishop did or could feede or ouersee continuallie without intermission: and yet they continued still those Officers, though the exercise of the offices nowe and then ceased. And (as we haue shewed) the Apostles assemblye was daylie, which we call continuall. And therefore (which Caluine also confesseth) their Prefecte Iames, was their continuall Prefecte. And as Caluine rendereth a reason here-of: so Beza saith, it was for Policie. But what policie was it, good or bad: in hauing such a Prefect ouer them, befoze they gaue him the name of Bishop? No doubt, if Iames among the Apostles, (as Caluine saith) and Timothie (as Beza saith) were suche ~~regist~~ athen, in Paules time, then? and how long (I praye you) held that then? Forsoothe: while Timothie taried at Ephesus. And can you tel, how long, or shorthe that was? Well, he abode not there, no did: S. Paule requested him earnestly to abide there. 1. Tim. 1. 3. And did he neglect S. Paules request? no, but Paule sent for him after ward, and where finde yee that? If this Epistle be doubtfull (with Beza) where it was written: in my opinion, it is more doubtfull, when. And if, as is likelie, after his libertie from prison, as is afore-said: then will it hardlye bee proued, that Paule, after this Epistle written, sent for Timothie, to come to him from

from them, whom so earnestly he desired to tary with them? Well, yet at the most, in th's abode with them, hee was but ^{Παῖς} Παῖς. And carieth not this woord as great a force of superiour dignitie, or rather of a certain Primacie or principalitie: as the woorde ^{Επισκοπος} Επισκοπος doothe: whe her yee call it Super-attendent or Ouerseer?

But (I praie you) who expoundes this woord in the same place, and saithe ^{αντιστευς} αντιστευς, (id est Antistitem,) vt vocat Iustinus? The interpretation of Gelenius calls him, praecipuum fratrem: and Præsulem, and præpositum.

Beza his owne confession that Timot. was B. of Ephes.

Which woord praesul, and especiall ye Beza his owne woord Antistes, is in Latin (as I take it) the verbe selfe-same. that wee commonly call in Englishe a Bishop: so that the Office at the least, and superiour dignitie of a Bishop beganne to bee peculiar vnto one among his felowe bretheren, and pastorall Elders, euen in S. Paules time, by this reckoning. Though this one that thus had the matter befoze, beganne a little after, that is to wit, about Iustines time, to be peculiarlye called Bishop.

Nowe, if the matter were peculiar to one befoze: what neede so great adoo, though the name folowed to be peculiar after: this name ^{μεγιστος} μεγιστος, beeing indeede a greater and a bigger title. Insomuche, that it is applyed vnto Magistrates, and princes, as well as to these superior Bish. As where Plato, epist. 7. saithe: ^{μεγαλης αρετης πολιτης} μεγαλης αρετης πολιτης, the Praefecte, Prince, or Magistrate of the great City, &c. Now if this appellation were giuen to one ouer the Pastorall Elders, (as Beza saithe) in the Apostles time; which appellation notwithstanding is often vsed in the Scriptures, and applyed to Elders and to Bishoppes: as, 1. Tim. 5, ver. 17. euen but 2. verses before this note of Beza: ^{οι αρχαις αρετης προσβιτασις} οι αρχαις αρετης προσβιτασις, Those Elders (or Priestes) well Rulers, or that behaue them-selnes well, in their praefectshippe (or principalitie:) let them be counted worthie of double honour: chieflie they that labour in the word and doctrine. Out of which wordes you gathered befoze pag. 21. saying: Which place also testifieth of an other kinde of Elders, of whom we shall haue occasion to speake more heare after: whose office consisteth onelie in gouernment and not in publicke teaching. (the reuerence reserued of all those famous men, from whom ye take this obseruation) me thinks, the wordes there, inferre no such distinction, but seeme rather to be referred to those ^{αρετης} αρετης, such principall or praefect Elders, as, for al their godly paines & travell in this Gouernmēt of other Elders, and rule of the Chur. discipline intermit not ^{αρετης} αρετης labor of the word and doctrine, any moze then do their fellow brethren Elders, that are not such ^{Παῖς} Παῖς, where all generally are to bee honored: they, both for their dignity and good behaviour in the same, be- sides that, for their labour in the worde and doctrine, (as the others do) more than any other, as they haue a double & greater care, deserue a double or a greater honour. And this rather seemeth to my simple iudgement, (howbeit vnder all correction, and without all contention) to be a good exposition of that place.

And of this Superiour gouernement in the vse of this word, (which is vsed also, I graunt, in many meaner matters,) he gaue before an example to be a Bishop in the gouernment of the Bishops owne children and familie, by comparison to the gouernment of Gods Church, 1. Timoth. 3. 4. ὁ κύριος οὗτοῦ οἴκου ὡς ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ which gouerneth wel his owne house, hauing children or seruants in subiection with all honesty. For if he cannot rule (or stand as chiefe, or be principall) of his owne house, howe wil hee care for the Church of God? But in euery house there may not be many Soueraignes, and chiefe Rulers, but one principall ouer all the other, nor yet many stewards, &c. And therefore, by the force of this worde and similitude, the Church being compared a little after, ver. 15. to the house of God, though we be all fellowe seruants in respect of Christ, and all Pastors fellowe stewards of Gods mysteries: yet in respecte of particuler Churches, and the externall Ecclesiasticall pollicy and Gouernement thereof, as it is also aptly compared to particuler families, though there be diuers Pastors in the same: Yet must one be a κύριος, a Prouost, a principall, a chiefe bayliffe vnder Christ, that must there gouerne all his fellowe seruants and all the children, within the Region, Diocese, or city limited vnto him: and keepe them all in an orderly subiection, euen as a Father doeth his children; or else the Ecclesiasticall pollicy is disturbed. And the same that here is attributed to him ouer his children and house is attributed also vnto him, for this his principall rule, ouer the particuler Church of God, 1. Theß. 5. 12. ὑμεῖς ἀλλήλους ὡς κύριος ἐκκλησίας We beseech ye brethren, that yee acknowledge them that labour among you, as κύριος ἐκκλησίας &c. And them that are chiefe ouer you in the Lord, and admonish you.

The good change of the name κύριος to ἐπίσκοπος, & the iniquity thereof.

Now if this were the name whereby he was called, that had the Superiority not onely ouer the people, but ouer his fellowe and brethren Pastors in any assemblies, while the name Bishop was yet indifferent to them all and that the name Bishop began to become peculier to one, (as Beza saith) while there was such a κύριος among them, the as the name was very well changed from κύριος to ἐπίσκοπος from one that had a principall being or standing office ouer them, to a Superintendent or overseer of them, which was a lower title of superiour dignitie, and therefore not given or taken of any ill purpose: so withal, it argueth the antiquity both of the matter, and of the appropriating of the name Episcopus more peculiarly vnto one, then before it had bene, to be either in or immediatly following the Apost. times, euen by Bezacs owne testimony, out of Iustine and by examining of this worde and title in the Scripture.

And

And, as Caluine and Beza here confesse the matter, so Gellius Snecanus also de Disciplina Ecclesiastica, pag. 440. speaking of the ministration of the worde, concludeth out of 1. Tim. 5. uer. 19 20. Whereupon it manifestly appeareth, that euen then a certaine order was ordayned at Ephesus, Cui Praefectus erat Timotheus, ouer the which Timothie was the Praefect. Whome Iustine calleth episcopus, and Beza translateth Antistite, whome we call Bishop. All this being considered, with the subscription aforesaid vnto Timothie, argueth that this name Bishop, (to become peculiar vnto one aboue his brethren and fellow Pastors), was neither so late, (as diuerse take it,) nor was meere and altogether mans inuen-tion; and yet, if it had beene ordayned of man, being not other-wise prescribed of God: it may well be called also euen Gods ordinance, as we shall see after (God-willing) upon Peter.

The Centuriographers writing of the gouernment of the Church, The Ecclein the time next succeeding the Apostles, do say: Cent. 2. ca. 7. pag. 125. and siasticall or-126. But as there was no certaine and prescribed number of Minist. ders and deof the Church, commaunded in the holie Scriptures: so according as the grees in the necessitie of the Churches required, they had moe or fewer. And as a Church. mong them, (to the intent that there should be some order, and that the Ecclesiasticall offices shoulde bee better administred among many, by a certaine reason or consideration, and that the succession of Ministers might be made in order): necessity compelled them to ordayn and to keepe certain degrees of persons. But in that matter, and also in this age, the most part of the Churches, kept a small number, and a simpli-citie. For, moe orders than these 3. that is to witte, Bishoprick, Priest-hoode, and Deaconrie, are not found with approued Authors. And, the offices which afterwards were distributed to dore-keepers, to Readers, to Exorcists, and to Acolyts, were al names ioyned to the office of Deacon and Subdeacon. So in the French Church, (as appeareth by the Epist. of the that were of Lions vnto the East churches), are reckoned vp more Ministers of the Church, then Bishop, Priests, and Deacons: the other are called brethren. Euseb. lib. 4. cap. 1. Clemens of Alexandria, in the booke of him, that are at this day extant: maketh no where mention of moe, then of Bishop, of Priestes, and of Deacons: except that in some places hee adioyne Widdowes. Neyther yet doeth hee in playne wordes, ascribe vnto them a Ministry in the Church, muche lesse a degree. Also Hierome in his Epist. to Euagrius doth testifie, that in the Church of Alexandria, there were no moe degrees, from Marke vnto Dionise, then bishopricke, Priest-hoode, and Deaconship. And so proceeding to other Churches, and to Antioche, and Rome, where out of Iustine they note, unum perfectum super fratribus, and certaine Deacons & the other brethren. Nicophorus, li. 3. cap. 29. declareth that Eleutherius, which

-call orders. which was taught the holy Scriptures of Anicetus, (or rather of Anacle- cletus) was enrolled in the sacred number of the Cleargy. And in the 15. yeere of his age, tooke the degree of Deacon, and three yeare after was made Priest, and in the 10 yeere of his age, was chosen Bishop. Whereup-pon may be gathered, what degrees were in Rome, vnder the raigne of Hadrian, &c. It is woorthy memory, that of euery one Church, is onely found a Bishop; in the Priestthoode, and in the Deaconship, are alwayes found many, according to the necessity of euery place or Church. Hie- rome testifieth in his epistle to Euagrius, that in the time of the Apostles, the degrees of Bishops and Priestes were not distinct. but afterward for remedie of schisme, one was chosen out of the Priestes, and placed in a higher degree, and called bishop. Which onely in the office of ordeyning should differ from the Priestes. Whereuppon it appeareth, that about these times, this chaunge began in the Church, and the office of a bishop higher then the degree of Priesthood, not so much by the institution of God, as by humane authority, for bicause of good order, ædification, and succession. Heereupon it is that Irenæus calleth Soter, Anicetus, Hy- ginus, Pius, Telesphorus, Priestes: Euseb. lib. 5. cap. 24. And this indifferent vsurpation of this worde bishop and Prieste, is also found with others.
Vnder Traiane as yet liued Iohn the Apostle, which was the chiefest founder of the Churches that were in Asia, and which also was woont to goe out of Ephesus, to the places neere adioyning, both partly to ordayne bishops, partly to chose the Cleargie by lotte, as Clement telleth in Euse- bius lib. 3. ca. 23. but he being dead: the Apostleship ceased in the Church, bicause that vnto their doctrine and writings, God would haue the Church at all times to be bounde. But the Apostles gaue Churches to Bishops in euerye one place: as Irenæus lib. 4. cap. 63. doeth testifie. But bicause the doctrine of the Gospel was to be published throughout many nations, therefore the Churches were wonte to choose famous and constant men, prest to trauell, and ready to teach and to suffer for the Gospell, and to impose on them this office, that according to the imitation of the Apostles, forsaking their goods, or disposing them: they should trauel through many and farre places of the Gentiles, & preach the Gospell. These were called Euangelists or Apostolicall men: and Euse- bius testifieth lib. 5. cap. 9. that very many of them were yet vnder Com- modus. In the number of whome is Pantenus reckoned, who was sent of Demetrius Bishop of Alexandria into India, &c.

Out of these obseruations of these Centuriographers vppon the auncient fathers, concerning the gouernment of the Churches in this age, which was partlie in the tyme and life of some of the Apostles, we also may note these thinges appertayning vnto our controuersie. First, that there were ordinarily but three degrees of the Ecclesiasticall Ministry: Bishoppes, Priest

The obser-uations of the Magde-
-burgenses.

Priestes or Elders, and Deacons, by which Priests or Elders, they meane such Priestes or Elders, as were ministers of the worde: For they speak of those Priests or Elders, whose office at the first was not distinct from Bishops. So that, in the ordinary regiment of the most famous Churches in that age, and while some of the Apostles lived, and immediatly after their death, these vnpreaching Prelates, Preefts, or Elders that medled not with teaching, but were al in gouerning: were not accounted any offices or degrees of the Ecclesiasticall ministry. But they had onely three: as we haue, Bishops, Priestes, or Elders, that were teachers of the worde, & Deacons.

Secondly, and that which they call worthie memorie, that alwayes there was but one Bish. of one Church, and that the placing of Bishops one in euery Church, was the doing of the Apostles, while they lived. But alwaies in euery Church (meaning al the faithful of one Citie) there were moe Priestes or pastorall Elders, and moe Deacons: Ergo: These Bishops and these Priests or pastorall Elders were not all one.

Thirdly, that albeit at the first, in the Apostles times, Ierome testifie, they were not distinct degrees, & some other fathers take the name indifferently, of Bish. and Priest, as Irenaus that calleth so many Bish. of Roome, Priestes: yet this alteration of the name, and this setting of him to whom they gaue it in a higher degree, was done at þ furdest (if not in Pauls time) yet in the time of Iohn the Euangelist, & so continued. And therfore though these Bish. of Rome are by Irenaus called priestes, as Eusebius reporteth. (although indeede the words of Irenaus are not priestes, but bish. as is manifest in Irenaus him-self: in the translation that we haue extant, Lib. 3. cap. 3.

Although, in the Chapter before, hee generally calleth the Apostles successors. priests: and in Li. 4. cap. 44. &c.) yet it followeth not, that eyther Eusebius or Irenaus, tooke a bishop and a priest to be al one and of æqual dignity, though now and then, they vse the name indifferently, after this appropriating of the name: because the persons which they speak of, were both priests and Bishops. For though euery priest or pastorall Elder, (after the name Bishop was made peculier to one,) was not properly a bishop: yet euery Bishop was properlie a priest or pastorall Elder, and therefore might be well called by that name. And because they are now and then vñed one for an other: it rather argueth, we should not marke so muche, the interchaungeable vsing of the name, as whether the parties be all alike equall in degree of dignity, that many times communicate in like name. And then shall we finde, that these Bishops were not onely Superiours, in Dignitie, aboue pastorall Elders, but aboue all the Euangelistes remaining after the Apostles times. And that Bishoppe Alexander (as we shall afterward see) sent the Euangeliste Pantenus into India to preach the Gospel.

One Bishop in one Church.
How Irenaus vseth the name Bish. and Prieste indifferently.

Gods ordinauance.

The appropriating the name Bish.
to one in some parte
the ordināce of God, though in some part the ordinauance of man.

So worthly, that this application of this name Bishop, to this one, placed in higher authority among the Pastorall Elders, though it were not so much done by any diuine institution, or ordinaunce of God, as by the authority of man: (as Ierome saith) yet these words debarre not, but it might be (though not so much) yet in some part so done: or, not cleane reiected from Gods ordinaunce. For although no such ordinance appropriating the name Bishop, be expressed in the manifest word of God: yet the ordinaunce of the matter is plainly expressed: as we haue shewed out of Timothie, Caluines, and Bezaes plaine confession of the same. And the name also applyed to Timothie in the subscription of the 2. epist. if that may go for Scripture. But, let the application of the name, be not so much the expresse ordinaunce of God, as of godly men, and those in the Apost. times. And now, the Apostles alius, being not unwilling thereunto, was this ordinaunce of man, good, or ill? First, that it was done to good purposes, here are plaine words, that it was done, for good order, & edification, and succession. yea, that very necessity did compell them so to do. Could there be any necessitie, good order, & edification, against the institution of Christ? It is then apparant not that it is not lawfull, because Christ gaue to or fro no institution of it: but because hee gaue none, and that there is no institutio of Christ against it, (which had it bene material to saluation, or had it beene of doctrine, no doubt had bene expressed and commaunded) but being none, this ordinaunce of man was a thing, that man might do. And, being done for so good and necessary purposes: it was requisite also that man should do. And so, though it be not expresse, so much the ordinaunce of God as of man: yet because it is not forbidden but allowed of God, it is in a sorte euen the ordinaunce of God also, and to be conteyned vnder Peters sentence, 1. Pet. 2. 13. 14. For, though hee apply it in particuler to Kings, and those that are sent of him: yet the words are generall omni et singulis utitur vnto all or euery humane creature, or ordinance: so that whatsoeuer good law is made by lawfull authoritie of man, not contrary to Gods worde, we are here bidden to submit our selues vnto it.

the superiority of Bish.

And therefore, either proue this law and ordinaunce of man (to make the name Bishop, more peculier to one, then to all the other, among a number of Pastorall Elders) to be contrary to Gods lawe: or else, except this law be as lawfully remoued, as it was made, I see not how we may lawfully disobey or contemne the same. Well may we now and than vse the word indifferentlie, as did the fathers: but to denie them, both the title and the dignity also: that none of the fathers (that I read of) did, until Aërius came. Who, holding other more perilous points than this and perceauing him-selfe ouer-matched with a Bish. as ill as himself: when he could not haue his owne will, began as a mal-content, misliking with the Superioritye of Bishoppes, to call this selfe-same matter into question. About the

about the p^{er} of our Lozde 340. And went about, vnder p^{re}tence of the first acceptation of these names Bishop, and Priest, v^{se}d at the first, indifferently in the Apostles times, to reduce them altogether there-unto, and in all respects to make them alike, and equall, euen for all the wo^{or}lde, as now our B^{re}thren would do. And although A^{er}ius opinion, (had it bene maintayned no furder of him, then that in the Apostles times they were sometimes v^{se}d for all one. and had bene, or still were, in the substance and nature of the office equall and all one:) had bene no matter wo^{or}thy such great contention. Yet, when he did simply condemne this anncient order of superioritie, instituted in the Primitiue Church, and in the Apostles times, for good order-sake among the Pastors: & stiffly with all contention maintayned his opinion: the question grew from b^{re}atvling to schisme: and not so resting A^{er}ius opinion was at length reiected and condemned for an herisie. And so stands, for any thing I know to the contrarye. Neither was it thus iudged of the Bishops onely them-selues, that might be thought partiall to their owne part, albeit we may not so iudge of all the holy Fathers that were Bish. in those dayes, which vniuersally condemned this opinion, that they did it for ambition, or partiality, or pride, or ignorance, which were too harde a iudgement of Epiphanius, Chrysost. Ambr. August. &c. Whose learning, as it was able to reache the depth of this question, or else (God wot) it had bene small: so they seeing the truth, would neuer be caried away against their consciences, for wo^{or}ldly superiority, in the which many of them were most humble.

But not only (I say) those holy learned fathers, that were theirselues Bishops, but those also that were no Bishops. yea Ierome that was much offended with some Bishops, and was a man also very passionate, where he tooke offence, when he saw this controuersie hote in his dayes, by reason of the insolencie of some Bishops, did he euer like and allow of this opinion, that Bishops and Pastorall Priestes should stil be counted as names indifferent, and their authoritie be alike equall in all things. And but all one? No, but alter and differ by tow^{er}nes, and on occasion of some p^{re}sent actiō, this Priest chosen to be Bish. or be Superiour to day, or at this assembly: and to morrow, or at the next assembly, another Superiour chosen, and no Superior standing: Did Ierome euer like of this? No, read al his wo^{or}ks ouer, and whersoener he writeth: as he often toucheth this matter & many times is very belement against bishops, and fauouring Priestes, himselfe being one: so he alwayes acknowledgeth, this difference of bish. and Priest, that though in substance of the Ministry they be both all one: yet in degree of dignitie, the bishop is superiour, and the Priest is inferiour to the bishop. Yea, where of purpose, most fauorably he setteth forth the Priestes authority, as in his epistle ad Euagriū, where he alleageth euen these examples here alleaged, 1. Phil. 2. & Act. 20. concluding thus: observatio. Wherein most manifestly it is proued, that a Bishop and a priest are the same: &c. Pet. euen there also hee determineth the matter, saying: But that afterwarde, one was chosen which should be placed before the residue, it was done for the remedie of schisme, leaste euerye one drawing the Church of Christ after him, should breake it. For, also at Alexandria, euen from Marke the Euangeliste, vnto Heraclas and Dionisius Bishops, the priests did alwayes name the Bishop, one chosen from out themselues, whom they placed in a higher degree, euen as if an army should choose a Chestaine. Or that Deacons shoulde choose from out of them, him whom they knew to be industrious & call him Arch-Deacon. For, what doth a Bishop, that a priest doeth not, except it bee the giuing of Orders?

The obser-
uation of Ieromes
sentence of Bishops originall.

By which it appeareth, that howsoeuer the names were taken indifferently, and as all one, at the first originall of them, for a while in the Apostles time: though there were no institutio of the Lord, for the change hereof: yet, as it was done for a most excellent and necessary cause, so it was done in the time of the most of the Apostles, euen S. Paule and S. Peter and many other of the Disciples, as yet lyuing: Marke deceasing (as the same Hierome noteth) in the 8. yeere of Nero: Pea, if we shal consider Ieromes wordes further: we shall fynde this change both before, and also fully confirmed, and begunne vniuersally to bee practised in the Apostles times. And euen there also, where hee alleageth all these selfe-same examples and testimonies out of the Scripture, to the contrary of ϕ, which these our brethren and all on the other side, at this day alleage therein. As Phil. 1. Act. 20. Heb. 13. 1. Pet. 5. euen as though S. Hierome had led them to these places. And his wordes are their owne conclusion. Therefore a priest is the same that is a bishop, and before that by the instinct of the Diuell, studies (or factious pertakings) were made in Religion, & that it was saide among the people, I am of Paule, I am of Apollo, but I of Cephas: the Churches were gouerned by the common counsell of priestes, or pastorall Elders, (for so Ierome taketh the name Presbyter, and not for such Priestes, as onely gouerned and were not Teachers,) but after that euery one did thinke, those whom he had baptized to be his, not Christs, it was decreed in all the worlde, that one of the priestes beeing chosen, should be set about the reste, vnto whome all the care of the Church should appertaine, and the seedes of schismes shoulde bee taken awaye. And when he hath alleaged (for p^{ro}se, that Bishops and priests were first all one,) al our brethrens exam^{pl}es afo^{re}-said: he concludeth againe, saying: These, to this purpose, that we might shewe, that among the ancients, priestes were the same, which all were bishops. But by little and little, that the plants of dissensions might be plucked vp: all the careful provision was giuen vnto one,

As therefore priestes know, that they by the custome of the Church seruation, are subiect vnto him that is placed ouer them: so let Bishops know, that rather by custome, than by the verity of the Lords disposing, they are greater than priestes. And that they ought to gouerne the Church in common, following Moses, who when he had in his power to rule the people of Israell alone, he chose 70. with whome he would iudge the people. There is your former example also, Numb. 11. but not as you alleage it, that the office of the Eldership in the one, is an imitation of the Eldership of the other, meaning there the Ministers of the word and Sacramentes. For, these offices are nothing like: the one being mere tem-porall, the other mere Ecclesiasticall. Neither like your other, not Tea- ching Elders, as we shall after see. And yet, if they were alike, it would cleane beat down your equality of dignity. For, though Moses took these to be assistants in Government to him, yet were they not equall to him, but his inferiours. And thus the Bishop should haue his assistant priests & Minister of the word and Sacramentes, in preaching and ministring the Sacramentes, in ordeyning Ministers, and in making any Ecclesiasticall constitutions, and so, rule in common: but not that euery Minister, or those that were chosen to be assistants, should be hayle fellow wel mette, equall and all one in dignity with him: or else there is no imitation, but manifest breach of the example of Moses, and the 70. Elders, his coadiutors in the burthen of the government.

The Bishop
among the Pastors, compared to Moses among the Elders.

Thus equally in this controuersie then, did Ierome beare him selfe, both to the Bishops and to the priestes, being himselfe a priest, and fauouring their cause, and pleading for them, so farre as possibly he could. Nei- ther would these testimonies (being not taken by the way, but of set purpose thus set downe) be sleightly considered. For, (if we list not to be contentious) it may bee a notable paterne vnto vs. Like wee see this contro- uersie so hote, in these auncient and holye Fathers dayes, that were nearer the time of the originall of this change then we are, what was their opinion (that were the best learned, and holiest Fathers) thereon: & what reasons and resolutions moued them thereunto, to be the more perswaded to follow their iudgement: or at least, to be ware, how far we stirre & moue factions and scismes for the same, as then Aërius and his sectaries did, to the disturbance of the Churches quiet in those dayes. For our Brethren do still alleage this sentence of Ierome against Bishops; but they still passe ouer all those thinges that should open the grounds, the causes, the meaning and all the necessary obseruations thercof.

Now, out of this sentence of Ierome, first we may plainly see, that although he say Bishops and priestes were at the first all one: yet they were not so all one, that they had any lawe or institution of God, so to remaine all one, for then could they neuer haue beene changed.

Five things to be obserued out of Ieromes
sentences.

seruation.

And therefore, being chaunged by these so holy and so auncient fathers, it is apparant, that they al iudged it, not to be any whitte of the substance of the order and office, that they were all one: but a mere accessory and changeable thing, to be made different, as the Church should see most expedient.

Secondly that this change was made, not onely while the Apostles were aliue, but that it dyed faste vpon the time, after that those factions, mencioned by S.P. 1. Cor. 1, & 3. began to disturbe the Church of Corinth. wher it is said Silas was p Bish. & it may wel be: for it is said of Silas, A&. 15. 22. that he was one of those, that the Apostles appointed to send to Antioch. Καὶ οὗτοι ἐπορεύοντο εἰς τὴν ἀντιόχειν, Men that were principall Rulers among the Brethren. Whome, being left at Bercea, A&. 17, 14. Paule being at Athes sent for, ver. 15. Who came vnto him at Corinth, where after these factions hapned, it is little inough he was made Bishop, being commended in the Scripture for such an able man, to be a chiefe gouernour among his brethren. Neyther is it vnlikelie, that he or some such other was ordained there, where Ierome saith the occasion thereof did spring. But whosoener was there, or in other places, the first Bishoppe so ordained: this change was not very late, ere it began in the Apostles times.

Thirdly, the occasion arising by reason of these factions, that sprang in the time while the name Bishoppe was yet indifferent to euery Priest or Pastorall Elder, and while al among them were alike and equal in dignity, if that such and so many factions arose so soone at that time, while the Apostles liued: what would it haue done, if this equality had continued longer? What would it haue done, if it had continued after the Apostles dayes? If it had continued in all the ages following? especially in these our factious and licentious times? When the very beginning to renue this equality by Aërius, in the time of these so reuerend fathers, did breed such troubles in the Church of God, as scarce Theodoret, Epiphanius, S. Augustine, S. Ambrose, Chrysostome, Hierome, and other holy and learned men, could expresse. And it is likelie, if it were nowe admitted, and that all were reduced to that first equality of name and dignity, that we should nowe be cumbered with no factions? When as the very motion of it brings withall in question, so many points of question, and it is so eagerly begged, and so peremptorily cried vpon, as though all discipline were losse, all doctrine professed in vaine, yea, we are no true Church of Christ, without it? If the beginning to reduce it, make vs thus to leane the battaile of the Lord against the open enimie, and fall to byting and be-facing thus one another, that are brethren: verily (I feare) were it set vp againe, we should finde farre more perillous factions in these dayes, then euer those fathers either felt or feared, when they first made this ordinance.

And

And as of the occasion, so, of the ende wherefore, I (specially) note on these words of Ierome, that the cause why they did it was good, and necessary. It was not directed to any tyrannie, to any pride, to any ambition, or to any ill purpose, but cleane contrary. Especially, to pull vp those factions that were byed: and to pzeuent, that other shoulde not so easilyspring, and spread in the Church of Christ. To which good purposes, nothing in very deepe is better, than to haue one in moderate order, without oppression and vsurpation, to be ouer and vnder another. As wee see how it was enen at that time in Ierusalem, when factions and questions began to arise, and that they could not decide them at Antioche, and other places, where this equallity yet remayned, when they came or sent vnto Ierusalem to the Apostles, those that were the pillars and chiefe among their fellowe Apostles, did call them and all the Elders of the Church together. Which they could not haue done, had they had before no superiour authority ouer them. Neither read we of any giuen them, at any time after they were assembled. And therefore, it plainly argueth (though it be not plainely set downe) that their superiour authority was standing and continuing in them. By the orderly direction and determination wherof, all their controuersies and affaires were the speedilier dispatched, and the easilier composed, and they after ward continued the freer from all suche factions. But who did that among them, and in what manner, we shall see after wards.

4. The good and necessary ende and effect thereof.

Lastly, I note vpon these words of Ierome, that these considerations and causes didde so moue them, that it was liked generally on all sides. Neither any Pastor did refuse (in respect of the publike benefite offered to the Church) to become an inferiour, to leaue their equallity, and surrender their title of Bishop vnto one, that should be chosen among them, and submit them-selues to his superior dignity. Yea, that it was so well liked that by little and little, it was approued and decreed in all the worlde. Which, if it were so: (as, why should we not credite these learned fathers affirmation, so many hundred yeres neuer to the doing of it, then wee are?) then (no doubt) but as it was in the Apostles times, which by many proues (I hope) I haue clearely euited: it must needs be done by the assent and approbation also of the Apostles: and may safely be accounted among those things, whereof S. Augustine saith Lib. 4. cap. 24. de Baptismo contra Donatistas. That which the vniuersall Church doth holde, neither is instituted in the Councils, but hath bene holden alwayes; is moste rightly beleueed, not to haue bene deliuered, but by the authority of the Apostles.

5. The approbation of it.

Augustines rule of generall observations.

And more at large in his Epistle ad Iannarium: Epist. 118. Which Iannarius, had moued a question vnto Augustine, concerning the obseruation of Customes, Rites, and Ceremonies. To whome Augustine answered swereth

Swereth, saying: to those things that thou hast demanded of me, &c. First therefore, I will that thou hold, that which is the heade of this disputation: that our Lord Iesus Christe, even as he speaketh in the Gospel, hath sette vs vnder a gentle yoke, and a light burthen. Whereupon hee hath bounde together the society of the new people, with Sacramentes in number moſte few, in obseruation moſt easie, in signification moſte excellent. As is baptisme consecrated in the name of the Trinity, the communicating of his body and bloud: and if there bee anye other thing that is commended in the Canonical Scriptures. Those things excepted which burdened the seruitude of the old people, according to the congruence of their hart, and of the propheticall time, and which are redde in the fīue bookes of Moyſes. But those things that are not written, but that being deliuered we keepe, which are indeede obserued throughout the whole worlde: are giuen to be vnderſtoode, that they are to bee retayned, as either of the Apostles themſelues, or of plenary (or general) Counſels (whose authority is moſte holeſome in the Church,) they are commended or decreed vpon. As, that the paſſion of the Lord, and the reſurrection, and the aſcenſion into heauen, and the comming of the holy Ghoſt from heauen, are celebrated. And if any ſuche other thing ſhall occurre, which is kept of the vniuerſall Church, whither ſoeuer it ſpreade abroad it ſelf. As for other things, which are varied by Coaſtes of Countries, and by regions; as is that, that other faſt on the Satterday and other not: other euery day communicate the body and bloude of the Lord, other doo receaue but certaine daies: ſomewhere no daye is left of, in which there is not an offering made, ſomewhere on the Satterday onele, and the Lordes daie; ſomewhere onely on the Lordes day. And if any ſuch other like thinge may bee noted, this whole kynde of things, hath free obseruations. Neither any diſcipline in theſe thinges is better to a graue and prudent Chriſtian, then to do after that ſort, after which he ſhall ſee the Church doe, unto the which he ſhall happen to come. For that, which is enioyned, neyther againſte the Faythe, nor yet againſte good manners; is to bee holden indifferentlye: and to be kept according to the company of them, among whom men liue.

By this cō-cel of Aug.
this ſuperi-
ority is allowable.

So that, according to this fatherly aduice and ſounde iudgement of S. Augustine conferred with theſe and other circumſtances, for the uniting of this name Biſhop vnto one more peculiarly, then to other his fellowe brethren, it being neither againſt the faith, nor againſt good manners: though there had bene no mention at all thereof, or of that whiche might inferre it, in the Scripture: and though diuerſe Countries had one cuſtom of Gouvernement and we another: yet were not ours to be diſobeyed, but ſtraungers comming to vs, are to conforme themſelues (as occaſion requir-eth) to ours, and muche more our ſelues not to deſpiſe the ſame. But now nowe, it beeing suche an vniuersall order, that it hath alwaies continued ^{clulsion a-} euen from the Apostles times, and all ouer the Church in euery place, ^{gainst Bi.} without alteration: nor any age or people haue beene knowen, or can bee named in al Christendome; where this pretended equality, since the Apostles times hath beene maintayned: but that there haue bene Bishoppes, good or bad, that haue beene superio^{rs}, thonghe not in the office of their Order, yet in the office of their Dignitye: albeit wee could not shewe in the expresse scripture, the time, the place, the manner of the institution, & beginning thereof: yet maye we safely with S. Augustine conclude, that it was not nor could be done, without the Apostles. Especiallye, when wee can shew, (as we haue showed, euen in the plain words of the Scripture,) the verie matter it selfe, not among Priestes in the old Lawe, among whom they had an highe Priest, ouer them, and all the Leuites, Princes, and Rulers of the Leuites; as our Bretheren reason, from the Prophecie of Esay: that God would take of the Gentiles, to be Priestes and Leuites, to fulfill this Prophecie, by proportions of our Pastors and Doctors: but wee stande (for the originall practise of it) on the manifest examples in the newe Testament.

The Apostles, (and that not in respect they were Apostles; for so they were sent abroad, and not resiant in a place, but as they were resiant, & so Pastors,) had some higher then the residue; some that were Pillers and chiefe among them. And like-wise had the other brethren ^{Some supe-} that were guides and Rulers among them. And Timothie the Pastor of ^{riority a-} the Church at Ephesus, (as Caluine saith,) was the chiefe Ruler (saith ^{mong the} Beza) of all the Pastors there. Yea, the verie plaine subscription ^{Apostles} of the Epistle it selfe, calleth him plat and plaine, The firste Bishop of E- phesus. Sithe therefore, both the gift of this superior dignity, and the application of the name: had such auncient originall in the Apostles times when it began; had such vrgent occasions where it sprang: had such godly purposes where-to it tended: had such plausible allowance and authority of all the worlds decreeing to confirme it: (among whome, I hope at least were some good men,) And lastly, sithe it hath had such vniuersall and continuall practise of it, among whom also, such a multitude of holy & learned fathers, haue taken them this peculier title and superiority: shall we now yeld to Beza his proceeding on this example, Phil. 1. What this was the ^{Beza in Phil.} chiefe occasion of all the mischief following? Here-upon (saith Beza) began the Diuel to lay the first foundation of his tirannie in Gods church ^{1.} as though all the administration of the Church, were together with the ^{Bezaes} name translated vnto one. Al this, and that which followeth in Beza, hereupon (be it spokē with al dutifull reuerence to so woorthy a man, & vnwoorthy ^{wrong con-} affection with in these matters, to be so caried away) is unnecessary collected on the sequels here-of, howbeit directly, indeed, no sequel at all. ^{clulsion a-} it is. ^{gainst Bish.}

Bezaes coelusion a-

Sequels of direct and indirect occasions.

it is, that of any neuer so good a thing, the Diuell indirectly may pick occasion to worke mischief. But that can not be properly abolved, that it commeth from thence. For (as S. James saith) doth a fountaine send out at one place sweete water and bitter and directly (as Christ saith) a good tree bringeth forth good fruits. If therfore, so good an act, done for so good purposes, haue not had so good a sequell: it is not to be imputed to the matter, but to other ill occasions afterwarde. When the good householder had sowed wheate: the enuious man, (on occasion of the seruants sleeping) sowed Darnel.
When God had sent Christe into the worlde, to be the corner stone of the building, by the occasion of mans malice, he was called, and was indeede to many, the stone of offence and stumbling. But what of that, shall we take offence also? or, conclude, that Christe is not the God of peace and loue, because warre and discorde followes, while Sathan stirres occasions to make sects and diuisions, where the Gospell is preached and receaued? if that were proued to be the very necessary and proper occasion, and those euils following, to be the direct & natural sequels: it were a good argumēt ab effectu. otherwise, on euery accident, you may condemne all things.

Bezaes mis-
pre supposal

But all this runnes on this supposal, that the whole administration of the Church, together with the name, is heereby translated vnto one. If this sequel did consequently followe: then indeed we might wel conclude, that hereupon the Diuell laid his first foundation of his tyrannie in the Church of God. But when Beza comes in with a bytwise presupposall, as though it were so: who seeth not, hee dareth not, nor indeede can saye, it did or doeth so: may not euery one still so; all this order, reteyne all the administration of his office, both in preaching Gods worde, and administring his Sacraments? neither is all gouernment taken away from al, though a moderate superiour gouernment be giuen of all to some: and not yet of al in al the Church to one; but to one ouer some in severall particular Churches. And this orderly superiority, beneficial vnto al & church, iniurious and tirannous vnto none, as on the fore-said originals it sprang euen from the Apostles: so, howsoeuer the wicked abused the same, yet ver-ry many most godly, excellent, & holy fathers, being lawfully called ther-unto, did accept it, & acknowledge the state & challenge to be both lawfull, and to be a high calling, not so much of Superior dignity, as of Superiour charge in gouerning of Gods Church. And they trauelled painfully, and faithfully & fruitfully in the function thereof, God blessing and prospering their good labours. And so, we that reape the benefite of these Bish. travels looke with an awke eie, rather on the hurt which we surmise may come, or hath come by sinister occasion, or by euil possessors of this good dignity. And I like not (which we rather should) with a single eie on the meruelous good it may do, yea, it hath done, & euer will do, if they & enjoy this superiority, do not abuse it, but vse it according to this first institution of it.

We must ra-

But

But note that we haue seen Beza his censure on this example, Phil. 1. till he proceeds from Bishops to Archbishops, &c. let us see what these auncient holy fathers Bishops themselves, write also, otherwise then Beza hereupon. And from them, come to the iudgement of the best learned, of our owne late or yet liuing Bishops, concerning Bishops, & their exposition of this place.

And first Ierome that before (as we haue heard) cited among other this testimonie, Phil. 1. to shew that Bishops and Priestes were sometimes all one: when he commenteth of purpose thereupon, doeth say: Here we vnderstande Bishops for Priestes. For there could not be manie Bishops of one Citie. But this is had also in the Actes of the Apostles. So that Ierome in both these places, vnderstandeth the worde Bishoppe, to be not properly, but improperly spoken. And hee rendereth the reason aforesaide: because that Paule writing this Epistle, when he was prisoner at Rome, and so be-like after this order was begunne: There could not be manie in one Citie, to whome this name properly could be giuen.

Ieronimus in Phil. 1.

And to shewe, that it was but spoken in a generall and vnproper vnderstanding, our Bishops also will perhaps at length confesse it. For whereas they distribute all into foure offices, and heere are but onelie two reckoned vp: and Beza sayth, that Paule here setteth downe the most beautifull distribution of the Church: It eyther followeth, that then there must be but two offices, Pastors, and Deacons, taking Bishops and Pastors but for one: or else, if as Beza deuises it, he vnderstande by Bishops, who-so-euer are ouer the worde and gouernement, as Pastors, Doctors, and Priestes or Elders (vnderstanding them for Priests Gouernours onelie) of the worde to ouer-see, because they must be as watchmen to enquire of the doctrine and manners of the flocke committed to them. Act. 20. 28. whome nowe and then by a generall name he calleth Priestes or Elders, as there verse, 17. and 1. Tim. 5. 17. And so including both these Lay Priestes whom you call Gouernours, and including Doctors, whom you distinguish likewise, from your Gouernours, and from your Pastors: it followeth, that the worde Bishop heere, and also in other places, Act. 20. is not taken properly, but in a generall sense. And if this worde Bishop heere, bee so properly taken, that it comprehendeth neyther these Lay Priestes (whom ye call Gouernours, nor yet your Doctors (which yee make the first and chiefest officers) but onely Pastors, vpon whom here ye treat distinctlie from the other: howe is this the most beautifull description of the parts of the Church, when neyther of these are mentioned: but belike there was no such most beautifull distribution of the Churches offices, in the Church of the Philippians, in those dayes, as Beza and our Geneva

The name Bishop Phil. 1. 1. vnderstood vnproperly.

tion.

quaters did imagine. And you do well to relect this so generall vnderstand-ing of the worde, that Bishop and Pastorall Elder or Priest, were here taken, and so still must be, for all one office.

Chrysost. in
Phil. 1.

Chrysostome writing on this place, Philip. 1. with the Bishops and Deacons: what (sayeth hee) is this? Were there manie Bishops of one Citie? No. But so he called the Priestes. For at that time they did nowe and then communicate (or parttake) in names, and a Deacon was called a Bishop. Wherefore writing to Timothie hee sayth fulfill thy Deaconship. When as he was a Bishop, for he saith vnto him, because he was Bishop: lay handes hastely on no bodie, and that, which was giuen to thee with the laying on of the handes of the priesthood or Eldership.
But Priestes or Elders layde not their handes on a bishop. And againe, writing to Timo, he sayth: For this cause I left thee in Creta, that thou shouldest ordayne Priestes (or Elders) in euerie Citie, as I appoynted thee, if anie be blamelesse the husbando of one wife, hee speaketh of a Bishop, and when he had sayd these thinges, he straight waies this setteth vnder it: for a Bishop must be blamelesse as the steward of God.
Not froward. Therefore, euen as I haue said, Priestes in the old time were both called the Bishops and the Deacons of Christ. Whereupon now also the most parte of Bishops doe write: To his consenior (or fellowe Elder) to his Commminister (or fellowe minister): Howbeit, for all that, euerie one hath his owne name seuerally by himselfe, giuen vnto him, be he either Bishop, eyther Priest. What can be plainer spoken than this:
that here, & in the other places by our Brethren quoted, to proue, by the indifferent taking nowe & then of the names & the offices that they were equal & all one, it is not so ment, but y these names were there taken improperly: whereas properly they are separate, and neither all one, nor equall. And that also is here proued by good reasons alleaged for the difference of the offices in the matter.

Theoderet
in Phil. 1.

Theoderet likewise vpon this place, writeth thus: Hee sendeth to all at once, as well to those that had receaued the Sacerdotal priest-hoode, as to those that were fedde of them. For hee calleth them that were vouchsafed in baptisme, Saintes. But the Priestes or Elders he calleth Bishops. For at that time they had bothe names. And that also the storie of the Actes declareth. For when S. Luke had sayde, that the diuine Apostle had called to Maiores the Elders of the Ephesians, he telleth also the thinges that were spoken to them, for sayth faith he, looke to your selues, and to the whole stocke, in which the holie-Ghost hath placed you Bishops, to feede the Church of Christe. He named the same men both Priestes & Bishops. So also in the Epistle to blessed Timo therefore haue I left thee at Creta, that thou shouldest by the Citie ordaine Priestes or Elders, as I haue disposed vnto thee. And when he had tolde

tolde what manner of men they ought to be, that are ordayned: he addeth vnder it, for a B. must be without crime, euē as the steward of God, Moreouer, he sheweth this here also: for he ioyneth Deacons vnto Bish. whē as he had made mention of Priestes. Otherwise it could not be, that manie Bishops should be the Pastors of one Citie. Whereupon it comes to passe, to wit, that they were Priestes, whō he called Bishops. But he called in his Epistle the blessed Epaphroditus their Apostle. For your Apostle (saith he) and the helper of my necessitie. Therefore he plainly taught, that the Episcopall dispensation was committed vnto him, when as he had the appellation of Apostle. Thus also plainly saith Theodoret, that although the other Pastorall Elders were called by the name of Bishops, yet the matter which he calleth the Episcopall dispensation, was committed ouer all the other but to one.

And with these accordeth Theophylactus, saying: Hee calleth the Priestes Fellow-bishops, for there were not manie Bishops in one Ci-tie, for as yet the names were not distincte, but that also Bishoppes were called Deacons and Priestes. For writing to Timothie beeing a Bishop, fulfill (sayth hee) thy Deaconship, that is, thy Ministerie. And again, that which was giuen thee by the laying on of the hande of the Eldership, that is, of the Bishops: for priestes or Elders did not ordaine a Bishop. Again, Priestes were also called Bishops, as those that looke also vpon the people, and bore a care of them, to cleanse, and to lighten those whom it was needefull. Thus doth Theophylact with all the other agrē, that it was but a partaking of the name improperly, as the name of Deacon was vsed, till they were more properly distinguished. But all that while, the matter and office was not so confounded, as one or equal, but distincte and one Superiour and infe-riour to another.

And howsoeuer Ambroses iudgement on these wordes, is lightlie cast off by some of our Wethzen, because he taketh these wordes, with the Bishops and Deacons, not for such Bishops and Deacons, as were among the Pphilippians to whom he wrote, but for him-selfe and Timorhic and other with them: yet is hee plaine also of this opinion with the residue.
For (saith he) he wrote to the people: for if he had writtē to Bishops and Deacons, he would haue writtē to their persons, & he should haue writtē to the Bishop of that place, not to 2. or 3. euē as also he wrote to Titus and to Timothie. So that he verely thought, there was but one Bishop of that place, to whō when he wrote, he expounded these wordes of S. Pauls salutation: with the Bishops, &c. to be vnderstande of ioyning him-selfe and Timothie, &c. in the participation of the grace and peace that he wished to them. Thus do the auncient, holy, and most learned Fathers agrē, & all other (that I reade of) before these, from the Apostles times, not only such he onely ascribe vnto James, the Episcopall office, but he calleth eyther

Hieron. in ca-

simorum,

Eusebius reckoneth by diuerse Bishops of Ierusalem, succeeding James, till he come to Narcissus and Alexander, who were both at once Bishops there, and it is noted for a rare example, and fell out when this Clement came thether. Of whom, and of this Alexander, saith Hieron. in Catalog. illustr. virorum.

There is extant an Epistle of Alexander Bishop of Ierusalem, who together with Narcissus ruled the Church, &c. In the ende of which Epistle he setteth downe these writings. My Lordes and Brethren, I haue sent

sent vnto you, by Clement the blessed Priest (or Elder) a man renowned and approved, whom ye also knowe, and now ye shall more fully reacknowledge. Who when he came thither according to the providence and visitation of God, he confirmed and encreased Gods Church. Which sheweth, that this Clement being Presbyter, as also Ierome calleth him a Priest or Pastorall Elder of the Church of Alexandria, and yet with all (sayth he) καταξιος διδασκαλος, the Doctor of the teaching or Catechising, in the Ecclesiasticall schoole of Alexandria: it appeareth, that those offices, which our Brethren make to be distinguished, were not distinguished. And these offices that they make not distinguished but all one, were distinguished. For, Clement was a Doctor or teacher, and yet withall, a Presbyter, a Priest, or Pastorall Elder. And though he were a Pastorall Elder, yet was hee no Bishop. Neither was his Pastorall Eldership so tyed to one place or folde, but that he travelled abroade, to instruct and confirme other Churches. Nevertheless, both in other and in his owne, though other wise for learning, he was one of greatest authoritie in his age: yet liued he in all Ecclesiasticall obedience vnder his Bishop Demetrius, who made him Priest or Elder in that Church, and also Doctor or publique teacher in that schoole; and before him the famous Pantenus, Clementes Master; and after him, Origene, Clementes Scholler, were all vnder Demetrius this Bishoppe of Alexandria. And to proue that this Clement flourished vnder Commodus within 80. yeares after the Apostle Saint Iohn: not onely Eusebius testifieth Libr. 6. cap. 11: but Clement him-selfe inferreth it. Strom. lib. 1. saying: This booke is not for ostentation, with scripture gathered together artificially: but monumentes, (the helpe of forgetfulnesse) are gathered vnto me, for mine olde age. Verely, an image and shadowe of those manifest and liuely speeches, which I was vouchsafed to heare, of those blessed men, that indeede were of highest price and estimation. The one of them was in Greece an Ionian, the other in Greece the great (or Apulia.) The one was from Calesyria, the other from Aegypt. And other there were from the Easte, and one of those an Assyrian, the other an Hebrue in Palesine, of high pedegree. But when I light vpon this last, albeit in power he was the first, I staid in Aegypt, hunting after those thinges that were hidden from me, euen as a verie Bee of Sycilia, sucking the flowers of the Propheticall and Apostolicall meadowe. He ingendreth a certaine syncere and incorrupt knowledge, in the mindes of them that hearde him; but hee was such an other, as indeede kept the true deliuerie of the blessed doctrine, euen streight from Peter, and Iames, and Iohn, and Paule, and the holy Apostles, the sonne receauing them of the Father, (howbeit, fewe sonnes are like their Fathers) these haue by the will of God come also to vs, who will lay vp those Apostolicall seedes, that wee haue receaued

nie of Pantanus D.

Wherein, as this auncient father declareth his sinceritie and diligence, in following the Apostles: so withall, howe neare he was to the Apostles times, and so notable a scholler picked out such notable Maisters, but the Maister, whom in the Doctorship hee succeeded was Pantanus.

Of which Pantanus, Eusebius saith, Lib. 5. cap. 10. (to whom also accoꝝdeth Ierome) when at that time Pantanus the most Noble man in all learning, had the rule of the Ecclesiasticall Schoole, and of the office of a Doctor, from whence the custome with them from the old time was deliuered (as Ierome also sayth, according to an auncient custome in Alexandria, were Doctors alwayes from Marke the Euangelist) it remaineth yet vntill this day that in the Ecclesiast. Schoole, there are to be had Doctors of diuine Scriptures, (as we call them, Doctors of diuinitie) most choise men in science and learning. Of this office therefore, the man of whom before wee spake, was counted a certaine author, and a chieftaine verie famous: as one that also among those Philosophers, which are called the Stoicks, had before that time noble flourish. Whose studie towards God worde and great loue is reported to be so muche, that of the seruencie of faith and deuotion, he went to preach the Gospell to all the Nations that are hidden in the vttermost corners of the East, & that he came to the hether India, preaching the woorde of God. For there were yet in those dayes manie Euangelists, who according to the imitation of the holy Apostles, traueling in diuerse partes of the worlde, by the grace of God, and the vertue of their minde, brought the worde of God, and the faith of Christe, to euerie of those Nations that knewe it not.

Euangelists.

Whereupon say the Centuriographers, It hapned that the Indians moued with the renowne of the Church of Alexandria, & perhaps with the fame of the same Pantanus, did by certain their legates, request of Demetrius the Bishop of that Church, that he would sende a Doctor fitte and founde, which might more fully instruct them, in the true doctrine of the Gospell, and winne other vnto Christe, that as yet were rude and ignorant of the Gospell. What is doone? Pantanus the moderator of the holy schoole in his Church, is before all chosen of Demetrius, and appointed vnto that vocation. Pantanus heere dooth not drawe backe, nor is terrified with the labours and perilles: but forth-with obeyeth this vocation, as it were Gods vocation, and setteth on the iourney, although it were long and sharp. To become after the Apostles, the Euangelist of the Indians.

Thus are these Doctors, and Pastorall Elders, chosen, ordeyned, and appointed by their Bishop, which in authoritie of learning, was farre inferiour to them, but in authoritie and dignitie of place, farre their superiour.

superiour: yea, although they were Euangelistes, yet were they subiect to perioritie.
the Bishops.

And as this Bishop Demetrios, had this superiour gouernement ouer all the Doctors and Preachers in his time, which was the 11. Bishop of Alexandria: euen so had all before him. Who are all sayde to rule and gouerne the Church, notwithstanding there were diuerse notable Doctors and Pastors, besides the Bishops in Alexandria, and had so continued euen from the very Apostles times, yea, from S. Marke himselfe, which was the first planter of the faith of Christe among them, both Paule and Peter being yet liuing. Hierome calleth Marke, the Doctor of Alexandria, and saith, that Philo Indæus had friendship with Peter and for this cause did also set forth with prayses, the Church of Marke, the disciple of Peter, and his followers at Alexandria. Among which prayses of Philo Eusebins saith thus: He describeth diligently the degrees of them that exercised the ecclesiast. functions, which excelled the one the other, also the ministers of the Deacons. And finally the chiefe and principall honour of the Bishops office.

Euseb. lib. 2. cap. 16.

And as it was thus, euen from the Apostles times, in the Church of Alexandria: so likewise was it in manie other places. Polycarpus (saith Hierome, in Catalogo scriptorum Eccl.) the disciple of Iohn the Apostle, being of him ordayned Bishop of Smyrna, Titone m. Antiochensis 312m, was Princeps (which is Ieromes stune word) the Prince, that is, the chiefe Prelate, or as we more moderately call it, the primate of all Asia. For he had many of the Apostles and them that had seene the Lord to be his Maisters, and had seene them.

Eusebins Lib. 3. cap. 36. sayth of Ignatius: Moreouer Ignatius notorious in the renowe of fame, euen to our times, obtayned the Bishoprike of Antiochia, by the seconde succession after Peter; not that Peter was Bishop there; but that Peter beeing there, made Euodim the first Bishoppe of Antioche; after whome succeeded this Ignatius, that calleth him-selfe the Scholler or Disciple of Saint Iohn. Which Ignatius going to his parturdom writeth thus in his Epistle to the Antiochians:

Ignatius;

Remember the rightye moste blessed Euodim your Pastor, which was the first Bishop ordayned vnto you, euen of the Apostles? And anon after, speaking to the Priestes or Pastorall Elders, that he left at Antiochia behinde him, hee sayth: Ye Priestes or Elders feede the flocke that is committed among you, vntill God declare who hee shall be, that shall be the Gouernour among you. As for me, I nowe make haste that I may gayne Christe. Let the Deacons acknowledge of what dignitie they be, and studie to be vnreproueable, that they may be the followers of Christ. Let the people be subiect to the Priestes or Elders, &c.

And after he hath saluted manie, and doone salutations from manie, both Bishops, Pastors, and Deacons, &c. that accompanied him: for, he was of highe estimation ouer all Asia: I salute him (sayth he) which in my place shall be-come your Prince, (Primate, or chiefe Prelate) whome I haue also begotten in Christe. Which hee meant of Heron that did succede him in the Bishoprike, who was a Deacon in the Church of Antioche.

These Epistles, (of what credite euerie thing conteyned in them is,) I will not pleade for them. But thinks verillie, that there are some Popish foystringes crept into them, as also is founde out, in the woordes of other famous men. But, that the whole Epistles should bee utterlie denied, or suspected, especially those that are not onely mentioned, but parts of them also worde for worde set downe, according to their manner, by other Ecclesiasticall writers, both by Ierome, that was verie curious in finding out forgeries, and also by Eusebius, that was within two hundred yeares of Ignatius: yea, Irenæus that was Polycarpus Scholler, to whome Ignatius writeth one of these Epistles, and diuerse other ancient fathers of greate credite, make mention of some of the woordes contayned in them: it can not bee that they should all be forged, especially this point, for the distinction of the Bishops from Priestes, or Pastorall Elders, and the superioritie of the Bishoppe ouer them, being concordant with all the other writers. And especially, to bee obserued almost in euerie one of these Epistles. In the Epistle ad Trallianus, hee sayeth: I knowe yee haue an vndefiled minde, and without deceite in perseuerance, not on doubtfulnessse, but on the possession of sayth, as Polybius your Bishop hath signified to mee, who came to Smyrna by the will of God the Father, and of Iesus Christe his sonne, by the working togeather of the holie-Ghoste, and did so congratulate vnto mee, beeing bounde in Christe Iesu, that in him I might see all fulnesse. Receauing therefore him according vnto GOD, I haue by him acknowledged your beneuolence, finding you to bee the followers of Iesus Christe our Sauour. Bee yee subiecte to the Bishoppe as to the Lorde, for he watcheth for your soules, as he that shall giue account to GOD. For which thing yee shall seeme vnto mee, not to liue according to the fleshe, but to liue according to Iesus Christe, who dyed for vs, that wee beleeuing in his deathe, might (by baptisme) bee made partakers of his resurrection. For it is necessarie that you shoulde doe nothing nor take ought in hande (he meaneth concerning Ecclesiasticall causes) without the Bishoppe. But submitte your selues to the Priestes (or Elders) as to the Apostles of Iesu Christe our hope, in whome abiding, wee shall be founde in him.

You

you must also therefore by all meanes please the Deacons, which are for Bishops su- the Ministerie of Iesus Christe. For they are not ministers in meate and perioritye. drinke (he alludeth to the Tables whereon they attended) (but they are the Ministers of the Church of God. Yee must therefore obserue that which they commaund you, euen as if it were fire burning. As for them, let them be suche. And as for you, reuerence ye them, euen as the Lord Iesus Christe. For they are the keepers of his place. Euen as the Bishop is the The Bishop again, after he hath warned them to take hede of Scismes, of Seducers, and those that are puffed vp with pride: and exhorted them to humilitie, he saith, and yet reuerence your Bishop, euen as Christe, according to which, the blessed Apostles haue commaunded you. For hee that is placed betwene the altare (which word altare, is often used of the auncient Fathers for the Lords Table, and is here meant, for the participation of the holye Communion,) he is cleane. For the which, obey your Bishop, and Priests or Elders. For he that is placed without the altare, is dooing somewhat without the Bishop, the Priests, and the Deacons. Hee that shall be suche an one (that is, excludeth him-selfe from the participation of the diuine misteries, deliuered by the Bishop, the Priests, and Deacons) is polluted in his conscience, and is woorse then an Infidell. For what is the Bishop, but one holding a principallitie and power ouer them all, thus farre forth, as becommeth a man to holde, that is made the follower of God according to vertue? What is Priesthood or the Eldership, but a holie institution of a counsellor and confessor of the Bishop?

What also are the Deacons, but the followers of Christe, ministring to to the Bishop, as Christ to the Father, and working vnto him that cleane and vndefiled worke, as S. Stephan to the most blessed Iames, and Timothee and Linus vnto Paule, and Anacleus and Clemens vnto Peter. Therefore he that shall be disobedient to these, shall be altogether without God, and wicked, and contemning Christe, and an abaser of his ordinance. And in the next Epistle of Ignatius, to the Magnesians: Howbeit, Ad Magn- I deserued to haue seene you by the worthie in God your Bishop Damas, for and the worthie in God, your Priests or Elders, to witte Bassus and Ap- ~~pollonius~~, and my ghest Socius, whome I haue nourished, bicause he is subiect to the Bishop, and to the Priests, in the grace of G O D, and in the lawe of Iesus Christe, and it behooueth you also not to contemne the age of the Bishop, and according to God the Father, to giue him all re-uerence: according to which I haue also knowne the holye Priests to haue yeelded it him. Not thinking him to be contemned for the age that appeareth in him, but in the wisdom of God to obeye him. Sithe that, prudence, but the spirite which is in men, &c. And in the next Epistle ad Tharsenses: Yee Priestes or Elders, be subiect to the Bishop. Yee Deacons, to the Priests, yee people to the Deacons. And in the Epistle to the Philadelphians: Yee Princes be subiect to Caesar, or to the King. Yee Souldiors, to the Princes, Deacons, and to the Priests or Elders, as to the administrators of the holye things. But let the priests and the Deacons, and all the cleargie, together with all the people, and with the souldiours, and with the princes, yea, and with Caesar also, obeye the Bishop, and the Bishop Christe, as Christe the Father, and so is an vnitie kept by all. What can be plainer spoken, bothe for the difference, and for the superioritie of these ecclesiasticall offices? I vage not these Epistles, as approving all things in them, nor avouching the credit of them, and therefore passe over the rest, serving also to this purpose. Neither yet dare I discredit them in all points, namelie in this, for the distinction of these three offices, Bishop, priests and Deacons: and for the superioritie of the Bishop, in any citle over all the cleargie there. Because these things accord with all the other writers, and state of that age, immediatlie following the Apostles.

In Asia also about the same time, was Papias, of whom Ieremie saith: Papias the hearer of Iohn, the Bishop of Hieropolis in Asia, and diuerse other famous Bishops of that age, of whome saith the Euseb. lib. 4. cap. 20, &c. At Antiochia about the same time, Theophilus helde the Bishoprike of the Church, being the sixt from the Apostles, where Cornelius was the fourth after Heron (Ignatius successor) whome in the 5. degree Heron succeeded.
At the same time also was Egesippus holden famous, of whome wee haue spoken before. And Dionysius Bishop of Corinthe, & Pimitus was the most noble among the Bishops of Creta. Phillip also, and Apollinaris, and Me-lito, Musanus and Modestus. And the cheefest of all, Irenaeus, of which men, most excellent monuments of the Apostolicall faith, and sounde doctrine, are come euen vnto our age. Egesippus in the firste booke of his Commentaries (where hee sets downe the sentence of his beleefe, with most full prooffe) declareth also this: that when he trauelled to Rome, hauing conferred in speech and amitie, with the Bishops in all places, he founde them all Preachers and Teachers of one faith, and also in the Epistle of Clement, written to the Corinthians, he mencioneth somthings that I thought necessarie to insert into this worke. He saith therefore:
And the Church (saith he) of Corinthe, euen vntill Primus the Bishoppe, whome (saying to Rome) I sawe, and abode with him at Corinthe manie daies, being delighted with the sinceritie of his faith: but when I came to Rome, I abode there, vntill Soter succeeded Anicetus, and Eleutherius succeeded Soter. But in all these their ordeinings, or in other things that I sawe in other cities, all things were in such sorte, euen as the law from of olde had deliuered, and the Prophets had iudged, and the Lorde had appoin-

appointed. Moreouer, the saide partie recordeth certaine such sayings, perioritie. also of the Heretikes, that arose in his time. And after (saith hee) that James called the Iuste, was martyred, euen as the Lorde also himselfe, bare witness to the truthe: simon the sonne of cleopas, the vnckle of Christe, was by the diuine election ordeined Bishop, chosen of all, in re- garde that he was the cousine of the Lorde, the Church then was called The Bish. a virgine, bicause that as yet shee was not defiled with the vndermining superioritie of the adulterous worde. But one Theobatus, for that he deserued the re- pulse of a Bishoprike, began euen in the beginning to disturbe and cor- rupte all things, &c. no defiling of the church.

Where we see againe by Egesippus, that liued in Iustines time, (not by the suspected Egesippus, that we haue, but by the fragments of the true Egesippus, taken out of Eusebius,) another firme testimonie, that James was Bishop of Ierusalem, and Simeon after him. See Eusebius Reckoneth bp. lib. 4. cap. 5. 25. Bishops of Ierusalem, one succeeding another, from the Apostles times, vntill that destruction of Ierusalem, vnder the Empe- ror Adrian; besides all the other Bishops in other places; and yet, that the Church continued still vndefiled. So that, this superioritie, was no defi- ling of the Churches discipline, but the godlie gouernment of it, and (as Egesippus noteth) euen the appointment of the Lord, being practised and approued by the Apostles. And that all the disturbance and corruption entred indeed (as Beza and our Bethzen note) on occasion of striving for this superioritie: but yet, this superioritie was not the cause, but their diuillish ambition and pride, as in this Theobatus, and Simon Magus, and Diotrephes, &c. who could abide no rulers ouer them, but would them- selues be rulers ouer others: and when they had repulses, then (as the for dispaisted the grapes) they brake out into schismes and heresies. So that, this rather confirmeth this superioritie, then makes against it. And these godlie fathers, that gaue not this offence, though other take it, con- tinued this order of superioritie in Bishops, and were the greatest defen- ders of Gods truths and Church, against these sectinathikes, Heretikes, and disturbers of it.

ruption and disturbance, entred about this superioritie.

But nowe at length (saith Euseb. proceeding ca. 23.) we must come to the mencioning of the blessed Dionysius Bishop of the Church of Corinth, whose learning and grace that he had in Gods worde, not onelie those people enioied, when he tooke vpon him for to gouerne: but those also that were farre off, to who he gaue his presence by his Epistles. There is extant an epistle of his, concerning the Catholike faith, written to the Za- eodemanians, in the which most flourishingly, he treateth of peace & concord. And an other to the Athenians, wherein he mooueth the to beleeve of the Gospel, & stirreth vp the sluggish, & withall reprooueth certaine, as al- most false fro the faith, whe as their B. Publim had suffered martyrdom.

Publius and Athens.

And also he mencioneth Quadratus, that in the Sacerdotall Priesthood succeeded Publius. And he telleth, how that by his labour and industrie, a certeine reuiuing or quickning warmth of faith was renewed in them. Here this Quadratus is said by this Dionysius, to succeed Publius in Sacerdotio, in the Sacerdotall Priesthood, not that the Priesthood and the Bishoprike, was equall and all one, for then hee had not succeeded him, being a Priest or pastorall Elder in Publius time. But that which Ruffinus translateth, in Sacerdotio, Eusebius himselfe calleth Monitus. And Publius that was Bishop befoze him, he calleth episcopus. This Quadratus was also a Prophet, as saith Euseb. lib. 3. cap. 37. For hauing reckoned vp Ignatius and Heron, that gouerned the Church of Antiochia, he saith: Among them flourished Quadratus, who togithee with the daughters of Philip, was most famous in the grace of prophesieng, and also manie other Disciples of the Apostles were aliue at that time. Who vpon the foundations of the Church laide by them, did build vp moste worthie buildings, increasing in all things the preaching of the worde of God, and scattering more abroade through all the earth, the wholesome seeds of the kingdome of Heauen. To conclude, manie of them (kindeled with more feruent desire of the diuine Philosophie) did consecrate their soules to the worde of God, filling vp the wholesome precept of perfection, that distributing their goods to those that had moste neede, they might be made readye to preache the Gospell, if that perhaps they should preache in anye prouinces, where the name of the faith was not knowne. And laying among them the firste foundation of the Gospell, and committing the Churches that they had founded, to some certeine chosen of them to the office of gouerning the Church, that they themselves hastened to other nations, and to other prouinces, and exercised the office of Euangelists, so long as likewise the effect of diuine tokens, and the grace of the Holie-ghoste, did followe, as it did the Apostles in the beginning. Insomuch, that at one preaching, whole peoples were brought to the worship of the diuine religion, and the hearers faith was not more slowe, then were the Preachers wordes. But bicause it is impossible to reckon vp euerye one of them, whose were after the firste successions of the Apostles, in the Churches that are through-out the worlde; either the princes, (he meaneth the Bishops that were the cheefe Ecclesiasticall Gouernours, or primates of the Church) or the Euangelists, or the pastors: let it suffice to haue onelie remembred those; the monuments of whose faith and preaching, set downe in bookes, haue come euen to vs, as of Clement, and Ignatius, and of other, of whome we haue before made mention.

Thus (as Ruffinus translates him) saith Eusebius there, on occasion of this notable Bishop Quadratus, whereby (noting withall the distinction of of all these Bishops, to be the cheefe rulers, ouer the Pastors, euen from the firste planting of the faithe, and founding of the Churches throughout the worlde : it plainelie appeareth, that this Quadratus was long before he was Bishop, a pastor of the worde, bothe at Athens, and at Corinthe, as the Centuriographers note, saying : It is out of controuersie, that hee was at Athens, and there with singuler faithe and dexteritie, deliuered the Euangelicall doctrine . But whether hee were also an Athenian by countrie, or in what place, speciallie in the beginning, whether he taught in the Church, or in the Schoole, it is verie obscure . That he was furnished with learning, with faithe, with an excellent libertie of reprehension, and with all giftes that becom a successor of the Apostles, is cleere, bothe by the testimonie of Eusebius, and by the things themselves that he did . Yea, he was famous in the gifte of prophesie, as also at the same time were Philips daughters, It appeareth : that before he entred into the function of a Bishop (although we may not auouch that for certaintie) he had offered his writing for the Christians vnto Hadrian, and therevpon gotten himselfe an excellent fame . By this (also) it is most manifest, that Publius was aline Quadratus continued vnder him, and was not Bishop although he were so famous a Priest or pastorall Elder, yet so long as this there no2 his equall . So that, although a Bishop was a Priest or pastorall Elder, yet was not euerie such Priest, a Bishop, though other wise he were neuer so famous a Priest or Pastor .

But to returne to Dionysius of Corinthe, in Eusebius lib. 4. cap. 2. And this he noteth in that Epistle, that Dionysius the Areopagite, which being instructed of the Apostle Paul, beleueed in Christe, according to those things that are noted in the Acts of the Apostles, was of the said Apostle ordeined Bishop at Athens . And so reckoning vpon other Epistles of this Dionysius, and in them commending Philip, Bishop of the Gortinians in Creta, and Palmas a Bishop of Pontus : vnto these (saith he) is ioyned another Epistle to the Gnosians, in the which hee warneth and beseecheth Pinus their Bishop, that hee should not laye vpon the neckes of the Disciples, heauye burdens, nor impose a necessitie of a forced chastitie vpon his bretheren, in the which the weakenesse of manie should be endangered . Wherby it appeareth, that he would haue enforced the Priests vnder him, to haue abstained from mariage (for it cannot be vnderstood, that he went about to haue so enforced all the people) but as the papists after ward did enforce the Priests, or pastorall Elders, whome he calleth his Disciples and his bretheren . Which plainelie argueth (though he abused the same) his superioritie ouer them : for had they bene his equals he could not haue done it . Pertie to whome, Eusebius reckoneth, Theophilus Bishop of Antioche, an excellent writer . Whome Maximinus succeeded, the 7 (saith Eusebius) after the Apostles, in the Sacerdotall Priesthood of the Church of Antiochia. By which tearme againe he meaneth the Bishoprike, and not the Pastorall Eldership or Priesthood. As shall yet more plainelie appeare, euen in the next example of Irenaus, which was the moste singular instrument of God in all that age, a scholler of Polycarpus, Bishop of Smyrna, who after comming to Lions in France, where liuing with Photinus their reuerend Bishop, hee was made Presbyter, a Priest, or pastorall Elder of that Church. And when troubles grew in the East parts, about Montanus, Alcibiades, and Theodorus, troubling the Church with a new kinde of prophesying: which Montanus (as noteth Euseb. li. 5. cap. 16, was inflamed with too great a desire of primacie: the Church of Lions sent Irenaus to them, to pacifie the same. And by the waye, sent him also (saith Eusebius, lib. 5. cap. 3.) to Eleutherius Bishop of the citie of Rome, warning him of the Churches peace. Who also commended (to the foresaid Bishop of the citie of Rome) Irenaus, being then as yet a priest or Elder of the Church of Lions. Yeelding a testimonie of his life, which the wordes vnder written doe declare: we wish you (O Father Eleutherius) in all things, and alwaies in the Lord, well to fare. We haue requested our brother and fellow Irenaus, to beare these writings vnto you, whome we beseech that you will haue recommended, as one that is zealous of the Testament of Christe. For if wee knew, that any mans degree would get and purchase righteousness, as in that hee is a Priest or Elder of the Church, which also this man is; certeinlie we would haue commended this cheefelie in him. By which testimonie, it appeareth (especiallie being sent in such waightie affaires) that hee was a great and famous Preacher at that time, and yet was no Bishop in that Church.

Irenaus was Priest before he was Bishop.*

Yea, it should seme, that hee had bene a Pastorall Elder, or Priest, a good while before he was Bishop. For Eusebius in his Chronicle, maketh the persecution in France to be in the seauenth yeare of Marcus Antonius, which belike lasted long, and Photinus Bishop of Lions, being yet aliuie: and the prophesying of Montanus & his fellowes, being in the eleuenth yeare: he is not reckoned there as Bish. till the 3. yeare of Commodus. So that he was Priest before he was Bishop, about a dozen yeares by this reckoning, if not more. Yea the Magdeburgenses, that say, there are which affirme, that in the 13. yeare of Marcus Antonius, hee came to his Bishoprike, about the yeare of our Lorde 176. But vnder Commodus hee flourished most of all. The contention for Easter when it was hoattest, Eusebius in his Chronicle placeth, in the fourthe yeare of Severus, that is the yeare of our Lorde 199: other referre it to the fifte yeare of Severus.

Therefore, he should haue beene in the ministerie, especiallie in his Bishopshoprike, about 23. yeares. To the which, if wee adde the yeares of his Priesthood or Eldership, perhaps it will runne to 30. yeares. And so at the least, by their computation, he was seauen yeares a Priest, before hee was Bishop.

And this also did these Centuriographers confesse before, saying: Pho- sinus being cruellie murdered in the persecution, for the confession of the truthe of the Gospell: Irenaeus hetherto being but a Priest or Elder in the same Church, was substituted in his place. Whereby it is mooste euident, that Presbyter and Episcopus, a Priest or Pastorall Elder, or minister of the worde, and a Bishop, were not all one and equall, in this holie and singuler learned Fathers dayes, so neere vnto the Apostles, that hee was scholler to Polycarpus, which liued in the Apostles times.

And euen in Irenaeus time, he telleth, that neither the giftes of healings, nor of speaking with strange toongs, were yet ceased. Although (I graunte) we shall not see and then finde, where (when he speaketh of Bishops) he calles them Priests or Elders: as lib. 4. cap. 43: wherefore wee must hearken to those priests or Elders that are in the Church, those that haue their succession from the Apostles, as wee haue shewed; who with the succession of the Bishoprike, haue receined the certeine gifte of the truthe, according to the good will of the Father. And in the nexte chapter:

But those that are indeede of manie beleueed to bee Priests or Elders, and serue their pleasures, and preferre not the feare of God in their heartes, but vexe the residue with reproches, and are lifted vp with the puffed of sitting highest, and secretlye doo euill, and saye, none shall see vs: shall be reprooued of the worde, that iudgeth not according to glorie, nor lookes on the countenance, but on the heart, &c. From all suche therefore we must absteyne, but cleaue vnto those, that (as wee haue saide) keepe bothe the doctrine of the Apostles, and the sounde worde, with the order of their Priesthood or Eldership, and expresse a conuersation without offence, to the information and correction of the residue, &c.

Suche priestes or Elders the Church nourisheth, of whome the prophet saith: And I will giue thee princes in peace, and thy Bishoppes in righteousness. Although in these and suche like places of Irenaeus, the worde bothe Priest and Bishop, maye be taken, the one for the other indifferentlie: yet dooth not this debarre, but that as Irenaeus him-selfe was a Priest, for a while, before he were a Bishop: so lib. 3. cap. 3. hee there speaketh, all of the succession, vntill his time, of the Bishops of the Church of Rome, that cannot bee vnderstood of euery Priest there.

The name of Priest & Bishop, now and then taken indifferently.

And

The Bish. of Rome.The succession of the Bishop of Rome, till Irenæus
time.*Irenæus lib. 3.

And indeed among all other that were Bishops, I haue chéerlie forborne the naming of these, not so muche for any corruption in this point, that at that time was in them, more than in other Bishops, (for I take them rather to haue bene as sincere as any of all the other) but that their successours since those times, vpon the hono^r for their vertue and sinceritie giuen to them, of this first age, and for the dignitie of the place, and for the number of them that then were martyrs there, and with-all, for the memorie of Paule and Peter, supposed there also, to haue suffered martyrdom, and to haue established the Church there, and to haue ordeined a Bishop also ouer them: bicause (I say) their successours waring insolent, and abusing all these good occasions, haue also abused the memorie and names of those good auncient Bishops of Rome, with a number of forgeries fathered falslie on them: I haue therefore mencioned none of them. But bicause Irenæus (as they were then the mirro^rs of other Churches, and Bishops excellling in synceritie of doctrine, in good order of discipline, and integritie of life) bringeth in all the Bishops of that se, vntill his time, to confute the new deuises of the heretikes errors, by their constant continuance in the truthe: I will therefore also set downe, some parte of Irenæus words, for our further confirmation of this matter.

The tradition (saith he) therefore of the Apostles, is made manifest in all the worlde. It is present to beholde in the Church, for all that will heere the truthe. And wee haue to reckon vp them, which haue bene ordeined Bishops in the Churches from the Apostles, and the successours of them, vntill our daies. Who haue taught no such thing, neither haue knowne how these men doate. For if the Apostles had knowne any such hidden mysteries, which they taught those that were perfect by themselves and priuile: they would most especially haue taught them vnto those, to whome they committed the Churches themselves. For they would haue them to be verie perfect and vnreproouable in all things, whome they would also haue to be their successours. Deliuering to them euen their owne places of maisterhip that they had, who behauing themselves without faulte; great profite might come thereon; but offending, great calamitie. Howbeit, bicause it is verie long in such a volume as this, to reckon vp the successions of all Churches: therefore of that Church which is the greatest, and most auncient, and knowne to all to be founded and ordeyned, of the two most glorious Apostles, Peter and Paule, declaring that tradition that it hath of the Apostles, and faithe published vnto men, comming euen vnto vs by the succession of the Bishops, we confound all those, which by any maner of meane, or by their owne euill selfe liking, or by vaine glorie, or by blindness and euill opinion, doo gather otherwise than they ought to doo. For vnto this Church, bicause of the more mightie principalitie, it is necessarie that

uerie Church agree. That is, they that are faithfull euerie where, in the which alwaies of those that are euerie where, the tradition that is from the Apostles, is kept. The blessed Apostles therefore, founding and instructing the Church, deliuered vnto Linus the Bishoprike of administering the Church. Of this Linus, Paule mentioneth in those Epistles that are to Timothie: but vnto him succeeded Anacletus, after whome in the third place from the Apostles, Clemens obtained the Bishoprike. Who also sawe the Apostles them-selues, and conferred with them, while as yet he had the preaching of the Apostles sounding in his eares, and their tradition before his eyes. For (not hee alone) manie at that time were yet alieue, that were taught of the Apostles. Vnder this Clemens therefore, no small dissention falling out among the brethren that were at Corinth, the Church which is at Rome, wrote most forcible letters to the Corinthians, gathering them together vnto peace, and repaying their faith, and declaring the tradition that they had euen of fresh received from the Apostles. Which tradition declared, that there was one God Almighty, the maker of Heauen & Earth, the former of man, who brought on the world the generall flood, who called Abraham, who brought the people out of the lande of Egypt, who spake vnto Moses, who disposed the lawe, and sente the Prophets, who hath prepared fire for the diuell and his angels. That this GOD should be declared of the Churches, to be the Father of our Lord Iesus Christe, they that list maye learne, euen out of the Scripture it selfe, and vnderstand it to be the Apostolicall tradition of the Church: sithe that it is a more auncient Epistle then these are, which nowe teach falselie and feigne, that there is another God aboue: the Demiurgus (or speaker to the people,) & the maker of all these things that are. But to this Clement succeeded Euaristus, & to Euaristus, Alexander, and then Sixtus, the sixte, ordeined from the Apostles, and from him Telesphorus, who moste gloriously suffered martyrdom. And then Higinus, after him Pius, after whome Anicetus: but when Soter had succeeded Anicetus: nowe in the twelue place from the Apostles, Eleutherius hath the bishoprike. By this ordeining and succession, hath the tradition and publication of the truth, which is from the Apostles, come vnto vs.

Thus saith this auncient father Irenaeus, of the Bishops of Rome, from the Apostles times, vntill his daies. Which sentence, howsoeuer the Papists snatch thereat, to abuse the simple with the name of tradition, of succession, of agreement with the Church of Rome, of Peter and Paule as the first Bishops there, and as the head and principall Church of all other: as it maketh nothing for them in any of all these things; so notwithstanding for this point, that all Priests or pastorall Elders are not equall, but that one more peculiarie then the residue, called the B. of that church, had had a superior and especiall gouernment of the same. though not absolute and tyrannicall, yet, in iurisdiction aboue the rest of his brethren, & fellow priests or pastorall elders there: & that this was so ordeined of the Apostles, and so continued from them till Irenæus time: is by this testimony of Irenæus, as clere as any thing can be: that it maketh no whit for any popish tradition, either of doctrine or of discipline necessary to saluation, besides the manifest published and written word of God: if a man would wish he cannot finde a better place then this in all the fathers: for all the papistes vrging and wishing of the same. And therefore this argueth, that this episcopall superiority was then accounted, to be no such vnwritten and necessarie doctrine, but a matter of wel ordered gouernment, practised vsually in the Apostles times, and ordeined by the Apostles in many places, and sufficiently apparant in the scriptures.

And as for the succession that Irenæus speaketh of: true it is, that he fetcheth it from the Apostles, and in a playne line without interruption till his time. but he neither maketh a general and perpetuall rule thereof, nor stretcheth it any further then he did reckon it, nor did, nor could make promise of further continuance, nor standes on that time neither for the time sake, nor for the persons sake that did succede: but onely and altogether for the doctrine, which is the tradition that he speaketh of, and in respect that they succeeded one after another, not so much, in the place as in the doctrine, without alteration or interruption of the same, for which cause he mencioneth the succession of them. But now, whereas the Bishops of Rome proceede further then these here reckoned vp, to those that after ward added any other doctrine, besides that which the Apostles in the scripture did deliuer, or any other tradition superstitious and hurtful, or any other discipline, as necessary to saluation: this place of Irenæus doth nothing in the world help them: and they alleadging this place in such a generall sort, do manifestly wrest it, and abuse Irenæus, and all those that beleene them, on the credite of this auncient Father. Yea, this place of Irenæus, if it were to be measured no further then the personall succession of the B. doth not only ouerthrow that succession, which they pretende from Peter to Clement, but also the workes that go in Clements name to be mere counterfeit. Yea, this succession hath had sauing about the reckoning of it, even in Ieroms days, who saith in his catalogue, that Clemens was the fourth B. of Rome after Peter, for the 2. was Linus, the 3. Anacletus. Although the moste of the latine writers thinke Clement was the 2. after Peter, and Hierome take this opinion from Eusebius, and Eusebius (as him self confesseth) from Irenæus. But none of them reckoned Cletus in this number, which Dammasus, Pletina, Onuphrius, and others doe. So intricate and doubtfull is also the verie personall succession of these Bishoppes: and yet all these 3. later writers, agreeing with these three aunciente Fathers, that Clements did not thrust vpon vs in Clements name: it is a manifest argument that the Bishops of Rome that now are, and long haue bin, haue altered the tradition that their predecesso: Clement here alleadged, and haue thrust out the true Clement, and brought in a false and counterfeit Clement, and so, though they could agree vpon the persons to be successors, yet haue they agayne broken the plea of this succession, that is here urged by Irenaeus.

The corruption of the

Irenaeus
plea of succession broken off.

Neither doth Irenaeus in pleading on this succession of these 12. Bishops (whome our aduersaries make 13.) reckon Peter or Paul themselves to haue bin in the number of the Bishops, as all our aduersaries doe, and the Popes make their chiefeest crake thereon, that Peter and Paule were the first Byshop; there: but onely saith Irenaeus: The Church of Rome was founded and constituted of them: as in the end of the same chap. he saith the Church of Ephesus was founded by S. Paul. And yet these words also, cannot be simple vnderstood. For, albeit Paul was more among them, euen by the manifest tradition of the scripture (which both Clement & Irenaeus here do pleade vpon) then can stand with any trueth, that Peter had such continuance there, as Paul had: yet was the church founded and constituted at Rome, before not only Paul did come among them, but before he wrote his Epistle to them. Nevertheless, it may in some sense, be safely sayde, that when as S. Paul came to Rome, and founde the Church there, neither such in multitude, neither such in ripenesse of knowledge, as the same went of them, and as he hoped of them, when he wrote vnto them Rom. 1. ver. 8. Your faith is published throughout all the world, and yet at S. Pauls first comming to them, they were such a slender, and especially so raue a company, as appeareth Act, 18. Yet, with the text testifieth, ver. 30 & 31. And Paule dwelt two yeeres full in his own hired house, & recei-ued all that came in vnto him, preaching the kingdome of God, & teaching those things that concerne the Lord Iesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him: all which was before his first arraignment at Rome, & he had much more leysure and freedome after his deliuerance and before his second arraignment & condemnation: he might wel deserue this commendation of Ire-naeus, to be the founder, constituter & instructor of that Church.

And as for Peter it might be wel also, if he came thither after ward. for there is no likelihood of his being there before, when the Iewes & were so willing to hear Paul said vnto him, Act, 28. ver. 21. 22. we neuer receiued letters out of Iury concerning thee, neither any of the brethren that came shewed or that Peter also travelled to Rome after wards, desirous to see the faithfull there, and to doe some good among them, as Saint Paule also confesseth of himselfe, that he likewise was desirous, saying, Romans. 1. verse, 10, &c. Praying alwaies in my prayers, that by some meane, at the last, I might take a prosperous journey, one time or another, to come vnto you: for I long to see you, that I might bestowe among you some spirituall gifts, that yee might bee established. I would yee should knowe (brethren) that I haue oftentimes purposed to come vnto you (and haue bene let hether to) that I might haue some fruite also among you, as among other of the Gentiles. And no lesse cause had Peter of the like good desire, for those that were of the circumcision, of whome there were manie at Rome, & desirous to heare (as they called it, vnto S. Paule) of that Sect. And many godly men came to Rome, on such good desires, as Origen, &c. yea euen Irenæus himselfe, that ioineth Peter with Paule in these actions: or else, if Peter had no wil, (as Paul had) of travelling thither: yet it might be, that Peter being of so great fame among the Christians, and accounted one of the cheefe pillars of the Church, was vpon some occasion, carried thither, (as Christ said) whither he would not haue gone, and brought prisoner to Rome (as S. Paule was) & many other were, though not recorde.

Christs prophetic of Peters death fulfilled.

And most likeli it is, that he suffered there also, from whence Neroes persecution sprang. Which though it be not mentioned in the Scripture, yet the Scripture mentioneth these wordes that our Saviour Christe said to Peter, Iohn. 21. verse. 28. & 29. Verelie, verelie, I say vnto thee, when thou wast younger, thou girdedst thy self, and walkedst whether thou wouldest: but when thou shalt be elde, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall girde thee, and carie thee whither thou wouldest not. This spake hee, signifying by what death he should glorifie God. And therefore, since this was Christes owne prophesie of Peters death: this is most certeine, that he died not a naturall death, but suffered martyrdom for Gods glorie. And whye should we denie, without any profe, that which all the annient Fathers, so neere Peters time, on so great likelihood, haue with one full consent, so vniuer sallie affirmed, that Peter suffered at Rome? If it be saide, that this maye confirme their opinion, that saie, Peter was Bishop there: although that followeth not of any consequence; yet lithe that opinion arose not all of nothing, it is the more likeli, that he glorified God by his death there: at least-wile, that there he had bene, and not bene idle nor vnfruitfull, in that Church: when they grew so farre, as to say, that he was there also the first Bishop. For my part, (vpon the deeper consideration of these things, being matters whereof the dissent is no preiudice to our faith), I am not of their opinion, that saie Peter was neuer at Rome at all. I suppose rather, that bothe he was there, and that for some time of abode, he taught there also: and that as Saint Paule suffered there, which his wordes there written, 2. Timothy. 4. 6, doe in a manner plaineli declare, where he prophesied of his owne death, death saying: for I am now readie to be offered, and the time of my dissolution is at hande: and as Ignatius and other famous men, were fetched thether to suffer death; that euen so, was Peter caried thether; (to vse of Rome. Christs owne wordes) and that being at Rome prisoner, before he dyed, Irenæus (who flourished about the distance of fourescore yeares after Peters death, which is no great time, and little more than manie a mans age, and therefore it is verie likelie, that Irenæus could tell somewhat of it) did know, that Peter and Paule had bothe bene there, and done bothe of them so much good there, that he thought, he might worthilie bestowe these titles vpon them, that they were founders, constituters, and instructors of that Church.

This testi-monie of Irenæus, was yeares after Peters deah.

For although they were not bothe of them, yea neither of them, the Bishops of Rome their selues: yet the Church there growing great, they had not onelie instructed them: but set downe suche Ecclesiasticall orders among them, as whereby their Church was then gouerned. And as Irenæus saith, Lino Episcopatum administranda Ecclesia tradiderunt, they deliuered the Bishoprike (or office of the Bishop) for the administering of the Church vnto Linus: not deliuering the same to Clemens, as that puppet which counterfeits him selfe to be Clement, mosse impudentlie vaunteth in a forged letter to Iames Bishop of Ierusalem: that Peter made him Bishop of Rome: but this place of Irenæus being autentike, doth notabllye conuince that shamelesse forgerie, and shameth all the Popes and Papists, that build their successio, & manie other risse-rasses ther vpon. Neither doth Irenæus ascribe the action of making Linus the B. of Rome, to Peter alone: but to both the Apostles. And although this be a good record of Irenæus, being almost of the same age, & living not farre from Rome, yea, hauing bene himselfe at Rome, and so, searched out the matter more exactly, or euer he durst put it in writing, and make argument thereon to confute the aduersaries: which, had it not bene so, would quicklie haue taken him tardie, and triumphed on the aduantage: yet is not his testimonie alone, for he also might else (as he was in some greater points) be by others de- ceined: but Euseb. likewise citeth other as auncient as Irenæus, to the same purpose. For saith he, lib. 2. Eccl. hist. cap. 25. Nero therefore, as he professed him selfe an openemie of the Godhead, and of godlinesse, so before other things, hee thirsted for the death of the Apostles themselues, because they were the Capteines and stander bearers among the people of God. And verelye he beheaded Paule in the citie of Rome it selfe. As for Peter, he condemned him to the gybbet of the crosse. I thinke it superfluous to seeke abroad other-where, the testimonie of these things: sith that, notable and most cleere monuments of them, remaining euen vntill this daye, doo testifie the thing to haue bene doone. Notwithstanding a certeine auncient writer Cass. writeth of these matters,

(This Zephyrinus succeeded Victor whome Irenæus reprobued as we shall see afterwarde. I (saith he) haue the tokens of the Apostles, which I will shewe. For, if yee goe in the Kings high way, that leadeth to Faticanum: or in the way that leadeth to Ostia, you shall see the tokens pight, which being sette on either part, the Church of Rome is established. But that they suffered at one time, Dionisius Bishop of Corinthus, when he was placed in the Citie, and disputed of the Scripture (or in writing) saith thus: But you also hauing had warning of Peter and Paule, haue ioyned together the planting of the Romain, & of the Corinthian church for both of them comming together, did teach also in our Church of Corinthus, & throughout all Italy, & teaching together in this Church were together at one and the same time crowned with Martyrdome, These thinges haue we rehearsed, that the storie which is in the opinion of all men, might be more confirmed.

This Dionisius here mentioned, liued also in the time of this Irenæus and wrote (saith Ierome) an Epistle to the Romaines, which he wrote to Soter Bishop there, next before Eleutherius, to whome Irenæus being but Priest, was sent, and of whome he saith here, which now hath the Bishopricke in the 12. place from the Apostles. Of this Caius also Ierome mencioneth, and of his famous disputation. And Eusebius also lib. 6. cap. 16. although his words here, should rather make Caius to bee himselfe the Bishop of Rome, next to Victor. But I follow here Ruffinus his translation, bicause he was so neare to Eusebius owne time. Of which Bishops of Rome, Irenæus himselfe, that reckoneth by the succession of them, and flourished in the time of Eleutherius, and had sene the face of some of them, and had himselfe in his youth, bene a scholler vnder Polycarpus, the Disciple of S. Iohn, as Eusebius lib. 5. cap. 20. noteth out of Irenæus owne wordes, in an Epistle that he wrote to Florinus, howe hee did freshly remember, where Polycarpus satte, his gesture, his words that he spake of Iohn, how he wrote them not in paper, but in his hart, and layed them vpp, &c. And how that, if Polycarpus had liued till then to haue heard Valentinus heresies: hee would haue cryed out, O good G O D vnto what times, haste thou reserued mee, that I should heare suche things?

Is it now likelie, Irenæus writing thus in a matter so notorious, and reckoning by twelue Bishops, neither sparing Victor the 13. that succeeded Eleutherius, when Victor abused his authority, but reprobued him: that if this superiority of one ouer his fellowes, and this peculiaritie of the name Bishop to that one, had bene a new and strange thing, and not so ordained in the Apostles times, and by the very Apostles themselves: that that Policarpus would not also haue cryed out against it : Q2 that Irenæus would haue commended all these Bishoppes : or durst haue fathered the ordayning of them on the Apostles ? Q2 could haue made any argument at all thereof : when in Rome, so great a Church, in all these Bishoppes times, there were other besides them, that were Pastoral Elders, as well as they ? And how then goeth the argument of the succession of one, and none of all the rest mentioned: if al of them were all one, and equall with that one Bishop, in the Episcopall dignitie and authority ? So, he could not do this with any reason: except this succession which he deriueth from the Apostles, be of this peculiar title and authoritie of Bishop vnto one, and that in superiour dignity of the Churches Government, ouer and aboue the residue of his brethren Pastors in that Church.

Bishop of Rome.

How Irenæus argues to proue the superiority of one Bishop ouer all the other Pastors in that Church.

I knowe that both Eusebius in his Chronicle, and Ierome with others, in not thoroughlie considering these wordes of Irenæus, gather further, and vnnecessarily, that Peter also him-selſe was Bishop there. For so go Ieromes wordes, that Clemens was the fourth Bishop of Rome after Peter, for the second was Linus, and the third, Anacletus. But the very wordes of Irenæus, are otherwise.

Eusebius & Ieromes escape in misunderstanding Irenæus.

The blessed Apostles therefore, founding and instructing the Church, deliuered to Linus the Bishopricke of the Church to be administered. Of this Linus Paule mencioneth in these Epistles that are to Timothy. But vnto him succeeded Anacletus.

Post eum tertio loco ab Apostolis Episcopatum sortitur Clemens, qui, & vidit ipsos Apostolos, & contulit cum eis, &c. After him in the thirde place from the Apostles, Clement enioyeth the Bishopricke, who also sawe the Apostles, and conferred with them.

In which wordes he both not include as Ierome gathereth, Peter to haue beene the first Bishop : but maketh the reckoning, beginning firste with Linus, and so to Anacletus, and the thirde to be Clemens, proceeding till he come to the Bishop in his owne time, saying.

Nunc duodecimo loco Episcopatum ab Apostolis habet Eleutherius. Nowe in the twelfth place, Eleutherius hath the Bishopricke from the Apostles. So that, will bee excludeth the Apostles, from being in the number of these Bishops them-selues, but onely maketh them to be the Founders, Constitutors, and Instructors of that Church.

And this (he saith) was knowne to all men. So that except we wil vtterly cast of Irenæus for a notable lyar herein, or, that notoriously he erred, and all other Bishops : And also his spaiſter Polycarpus : I see not but howe it manifestly falleth out, that this name of Bishoppe, to bee made peculiar and proper to one, more then to all the residue of the pastors, and the same one Bishop, to haue a superior gouernement and authoritie in that Church, aboue all the other Pastors in the same: is not onelie the practise of the Primitiue Church, nexte after the Apostles: but the verie founding and ordeining of the Apostles themselues. Neither is there any point of poperie, or of the popes pretended claime, from succeeding Peter, here established. And many Churches had Bishops in them befoze Rome had any.

Irenæus own acquittance
for our disagreement.

And although here be mentioned, that all Churches ought to agree with the Church of Rome: yet he noteth, that this agreement must be in this doctrine, that is here set downe. Let the Church of Rome that now is, agree in that: and then let them call for our agreement with the Church of Rome. But, since the Church of Rome, that now is, differeth so notoziously, and in so manie great points from that, yea, is cleane contrarie thereto: we must needs differ from the Church of Rome, that is now, that we maye agree with the Church of Rome, that was then. And for this our disagreement now, we haue our placarde also, even from this selfe-same father Irenæus. For, when Victor (which followed this Eleutherius) did contrarie, or went beyond his bounds: Irenæus that so highlie commended his good predecessours, did as sharpelie reprove him their euill successor. And he that said befoze, all Churches must agree with the Church of Rome; euen he, and his Church, and manie moe Churches, did by and by, dissent therein, from the Church of Rome, and from the Bishop thereof. Whereupon Erasmus, or Grineus, maketh a good caution in the margine, on these wordes, All Churches ought to agree with the Church of Rome. What and howe muche is to be giuen to the Church of Rome, if so be, it hold the doctrine of the Apostles. Neither yet doth Irenæus mention, in this agreeing with the Church of Rome (whatsoever superioritie the Bishop had there, among his owne cleargie and people) any obedience of all Churches, or of any other churches thereto. So, although he alleage a mightie reason, that All Churches should agree with the Church of Rome, for the more mightie principalitie of it, then other Churches had. For euen at that time, it was a mightie Church, and one of the principall churches in the world. And yet the might consisted not in worldly might, nor in anye claime of principalitie ouer all churches; nor Peter, nor Paule, were then pretended to that purpose, but it was mightie, in constant defence and maintenance of the sincere faith of Christe, and lesse defiled with Schismes and heresies, then other Churches at that time were. And therefore, as it was more in light so was it more looked upon, honoured, and renowned in the world, then other lesser, or more distracted Churches were.

Wherin the might and principalitie
of the Church of Rome consisted.

Neither was this more mightie principalitie giuen to the Bishop, but to the church; for although he had a principalitie in some respects ouer all the Clergie

Clergie in his Church: yet had his whole Church, in other respects, a mightier principallitie about him, yea, enerie Pastorall Elder in some respects, was his equall and all one with him. But the most mightie letters that were written by the true Clement to the Church of Corinthe, are not by Irenæus called Clements: but, vnder this Clement, the church that is at Rome wrote most mightie (or effectually) letters to the Corinthians, &c. And therefore sayth both Eusebius, and Ierome: he wrote, as of the person of the Romaine Church. So that here was a superioritie, but no Tyrannie. The Bishop did it, by the obedient consent, and readie approbation of the Church. For although these Bishops by Irenæus are afterwarde called also, Sacerdotes or Presbyteri, sacerdotall or Elderly Priestes, as were the other ministers of Gods woorde: as appeareth in his Epistle, cited by Eusebius, lib. 5. cap. 24. which he wrote to Victor Bishop of Rome after Eleutherius, for his rash excommunicating of the Easterne Bishops dissenting from him in the controuersie of celebrating Easterday: yet giueth he not the gouernement of the Church of Rome, to all the Pastorall Elders there alike, but to one only ouer them all, euen where hee calleth him also by the name of Priest or Elder. Which still, moze confirmeth this our question.

I will not reckon out of Damasus, or other after him (though auncient records) howe manie Bishops and howe many Priestes or ministring Elders, and howe manie Deacons, such and such a Bishop of Rome made in those dayes: but, when Eusebius (whome I dare better credite therein) setteth it downe, then dare I make an argument on it. And euen about the same time Eusebius noteth, lib. 5. cap. 15. that in the Citie of Rome, one Florinus a certaine Priest in degree, fell from the Church. Shall we say now, that this Florinus was a Priest at Rome, or pastoral Elder: therefore he was Bishop of Rome also? It is plaine therefore, that though in degree of Priest-hood, they were equall and all one; yet in dignitie and gouernement of the Church there was great difference. Which appeareth better by that Eusebius noteth, for the pacifying of this controuersie of Easterday. For Eusebius hauing reckoned vp (lib. 5. cap. 22.) Victor succeeding Eleutherius in the Sacerdotall Priest-hood (or Bishoprike): and Demetrius, succeeding Julianus at Alexandria; and Serapion, ordained the eight Bishop from the Apostles at Antioche; Theophilus at Cesarea of Palestine; and Narcissus in Ierusalem: Bacchus at Corinthus: and Polycrates at Ephesus, being counted Noble among the Bishops: and manie other excellent Sacerdotall Priestes at that time in other places: hee proceedeth, saying: cap. 23. While these gouerned the Churches in that time there arose no small question in the prouinces of Asia, arising as it were of their auncient custome, because they thought that in any case, the Feast of Easter must be kept the 14. day of the monethe, to witte, when nour of all

When the Iewes were bydden to offer the Lambe. Auouching it as necessarie, that whensoever the 14. daie of the moneth did come: they should leaue off to fast: when as altogether in no other churches suche a custome was euer wont to be obserued. For which cause, Assemblies of Bishops & Councilles, through all the Prouinces are called together. And sending forth their Epistles, one to another: they all of them, out of e-uerye their seuerall places, confirme one Ecclesiasticall decree. That it should not bee lawfull at any time to celebrate the Lords mysterie of Easter, except on the Lords day, in the which the Lorde arose from the deade, and on that onely day, the fasting should be broken vp. To conclude, there remayneth euen to this day the decree of the Councell holden at Casarea of Palestine, in the which Theophilus B. of the same Casarea was the chiefe, and Narcissus the Sacerdotal Priest (or Bish.) of Ierusalem.
Another like decree, is also had in the Councell of the City of Roome, ouer the which Bishop Victor is said to be the Gouvernour, and Palmeas of the Prouince of Pontus. There was likewise an assembly of the Priests of the French, assigning Irenaeus to bee their guide. And Eacchilus Bishop of Corinth for Achaia. Who, all of them out of diuers places, set forth one and the same sentence of their iudgement.

All which as it confutes apparantly the Bishop of Rome, that hee was not the onely head and chiefe ruler ouer all: but euerye prouince had at that time, a Metropolitane Bishop, to bee President, or chiefe Ruler, among them, concerning the Gouvernement of this present action, and sessions in these seuerall Councels: so, while all these assemblies were made, did the Bishops leaue their owne Churches and Cities, in all these great Prouinces, destitute of Pastorall Elders, to teach the word, and minister the Sacramentes? It is not likelie.

The Churches not destitute of Pastors in the Bi. absence.

And yet, notwithstanding, though all and euery of these Bishops assembled, are indifferently called Elders or Priestes; yet are not the other (whome no doubt they left behinde them, being Priestes also) any of them called Bishop of those Seas, or in any one of those places, sauing only Ie-rusalem, that had then 2. Bishops together in one Citie. Which fell out vpon a strange occasion. & is noted as a rare accident. And yet, in euery of those famous places, they had many, (at least moe than one) that were Pastorall Elders, that preached, & ministred the Sacraments in the Bishops absence: which againe plainly convinceth, that there was a great difference, in the ordinary Gouvernement of the Churches, besides the extraordinarie government of the Councels, betwene a Bishop, and a Prieste or Elder: In the one, the Bishop, being alwaies the Superiour, in his particuler Diocese: In the other, some Bishop being chosen the Superiour or President, ouer the other Bishoppes, in that prouinciall assembly.

And

And to shew this yet more playne, and not only this, but to measure about East.
 this matter, being but a matter of government, (if it had beene diuersely vsed in diuerse Churches, and not vniuersally alike in all) to declare by this matter, here in question, how far forth we ought, and no further, (at the furdell) to strue against it, without making schisme or diuision of the Churches peace, and vnitie: Let vs see the collections of Eusebius, and Ie-rôme, about the trouble and pacification of this question; for it fitlye serueth to our purpose. But the Bishops of the coastes of Asia (saith Eusebius lib. 5. cap. 24.) did rather confirm the custom deliuered them from their auncientes, Amongst whome, Polycrates, (which seemed to beare the Polycrates Primacie, among them, writing to Vicfor Bishop of the church of Rome, letter to the
B. of Rome. noteth in these wordes, the manner of the auncient tradition, continued euen to his owne time. We therefore, (saith hee) do celebrate the inuiolable day of Easter, neyther adding nor diminishing any thing.
 For, the great lightes in Asia, the chiefe and choise men are fallen asleepe: whome the Lorde in his comming shall raise, when hee shall come from heauen in glory, when he shal call for all his Saintes. Among whome, is Philip the Euangelist, which fell a-sleepe at Hierapolis, and also his 2. daughters, which waxed olde beeing virgines, and another daughter of his, replenished with the holy Ghoste, which fell a-sleepe at Ephesus.

And Iohn also, which leaned on the Lords brest, who was the chiefe Sacerdotall Priest, and wore the pontificall (or golden) plate: (he alludeth (as I take it) vnto the High-Priest among the Iewes, signifying the chiefe dignity and estimation he had in Asia,) which was a Martyr & a Doctor of the Church, who also is fallen a-sleep, or died at Ephesus.
Polycarpus also at Smirna, both Bishop and Martyr, and likewise Thra- seas Bishop at Eumenia, but by martyrdome he died at Smirna. What shall I name Sagaren, beeing no lesse a Priest and Martyr, which resteth in peace at Laodicea. More-ouer, Papirius and Macarius (or rather) Pa- prius the blessed, and Melito, but an Eunuche for the kingdome of God, and filled with the holye Ghoste, who lieth in the Citie of Sardenias, expecting the comming of the Lorde from heauen, to rayse againe the dead. Al these therefore, obserued the Easterday on the 14. day of the Moneth, according to the Gospell. Dooing nothing at all otherwise without it, but by all thinges and in all thinges following the rule of faith.

Yea, and I Polycrates also, the leaste amongst you all, doe ob-serue it according to the tradition of my Fathers, these onely whome I have followed euen from the beginning. For, seuen of my Parentes haue beene Bishoppes by order, and I the eight, who haue also thus obserued this daie, that it mighte agree with that daye, wherein

ſie of Eaſter wherein the people of the Iewes remooued the leauen . Wherefore (moſt deere brethren) I am now (in the name of the Lorde) three ſcore and five yeares olde, hauing alſo moſt full vnderſtanding of manie Biſhops through-out the worlde, and intentiueſly marking the Scriptures, I will not be mooued by thoſe thinges, which are ſet out to make men afraid: ſithe that mine-elders haue alſo ſayde , wee muſt obey G O D more than men . And after a fewe wordes , he ſetteth theſe vnder it, concerning thoſe Biſhops that were preſent with him : But I could alſo make mention of thoſe Biſhops, that your ſelues deſired I ſhoulde call forth, as alſo I haue doone. Whoſe names if I ſhould write, it is too great a multitude . Who all knowing my buſineſſe, haue confirmed thoſe thinges that we write with their conſent, being perſwaded that we haue not carried graye hayres to no purpoſe, but haue bene alwayes conuerſant in Chriſtes diſcipline.

The Biſhop
of Romes
authoritie
ſtretched no

his owne
prouince.

Thus wrote this reuerende Biſhop of Ephesus againſt (ſaith Ierome) the Biſhop of Rome about this matter: but I followe Eusebius as he is tranſlated by Rufinus. In the which Epistle, we may againe perceane, that the Biſhop of Rome had no ſuch ſuperioritie ouer theſe Biſhops, as he nowe pretendeth. Onely he in the name of his Church, or of thoſe Biſhops that were likewiſe at Rome, aſſembled, ouer whome Victor was the Preſident, had requested this Biſhop of Ephesus, (it being ſo great and famous a ſea, aboue all the Biſhoprikes of thoſe partes of Asia the leſſe) to aſſemble and call for the Biſhops of that prouince, to debate and giue their iudgements on this queſtion . And yet this argueth, that not onely this Polycrates called ſuch a great multitude, from ſeueral places, of ſuch onely as were Biſhops in the ſame: but alſo, that as theſe Biſhops were called from their owne Cities, for the deciſion of this controuerſie: not onely there appeareth a difference, betwene a Biſhop and the Priests or Paſtorall Elders left at home, to miniſter the worde and Sacraments: but alſo an ordinarie ſuperioritie of this Biſhop of Ephesus, ouer the other Biſhops of that Prouince, to call and aſſemble them together to a certaine place, and to propounde this petition of the Italian Biſhops vnto them: or elſe, that he vſurped it and encroched vpon them; or elſe, that the Biſhop of Rome had ſome authoritie ouer him and all them, to will him ſo to doe. But ſithe it is apparant, that the Biſhop of Romes authoritie was neuer (no not when it was greateſt) there acknowledged: it followeth, that not onely Biſhops were then Superiors vnto the ordinarie ſort of Paſtorall Elders; but that euen at that time, there was an ordinarie ſuperioritie, in that and ſuch other principall places, ouer the ordinarie ſort of Biſhops alſo.

How neere
Polycrates
was to Saint

And no doubt, he being the right Biſhop there, and by the count of his age, hauing liued within 40. yeares after Iohn the Euangelist, and in the time time of Policarpus, whom he also mentioneth, and all of them beeing so precise, that they would not go one iote, neither in adding to, nor taking from the scripture; no, not in so much as the alteration of a day, nor would varie in anye thing from their forefathers, nor anye of their forefathers from the Scripture: howe is it likely, but that they take this order, both for one Pastorall Elder in a Citie, to be superior in dignitie to his fellow Elders, to whom this name Bishop should moze properly belong: yea, and in that Citie, the Bishop to haue a superioritie also ouer other Bishops: to be the verie order of the Apostles, and to be sufficiently testified by Saint Pauls Epistle to Timothie, the first Bishop there: or else, Polycrates would neuer haue taken these thinges vpon him, nor he could euer (euen for shame of all the worlde, and the testimonie of his owne conscience) haue anouched such precisenesse in his Epistle.

John, & how precise in a nic thing not allowed by the Apostle.

But (sayth Eusebius) Victor the Bishop of the Church of Rome, behauing himselfe more frowardly for these thinges, goeth about to cutte off from the fellowship of the communion, the Churches euerie where of all Asia, and of the prouinces adioyning, as though they declyned into Heresie, and sendeth out letters, wherein he separateth all without discretion, from the Ecclesiasticall bonde of peace. But all the Bishops liked not this, but rather on the contrarie, writing vnto him, they commaunded him, that he should doe those things that pertayned to peace, and that he should studie for concorde and vnanimitie. To conclude, their letters also are extant, in the which they rebuke Victor more sharplie, as one that doth vnprofitablie regarde the benefite of the Church. For Irenaeus also with other Bishops of Fraunce, (ouer whome hee was chiefe) doth in writing indeed confirme, that the mysterie of the Lords resurrection should be celebrated on the Lordes day: notwithstanding he reprooueth Victor that he had not doone well, to cut off from the vnitie of the bodie, so many and so great Churches of God, who kept the custome deliuered to them of olde. Neither onely (sayth hee) the controuersie is handled of the day of Easter, but also of the forme of fasting. For some thinke, that the faste must be kept one day only; some two dayes; but other, moe daies: many also 40. dayes, so that they make the day, by reckoning the houres of the daye and of the night. Which varietie of keeping the faste, beganne not first nowe, nor in our times, but long before vs, of those (as I thinke) who not holding simplie that which was deliuered in the beginning: did fall afterwarde into an-other custome, eyther by negligence, or by lacke of knowledge. And yet notwithstanding for all that, all these, yea, though they differed amonge themselves in their obseruation, haue alwayes beene and are at peace with vs. Neither hath the discorde of the faste, broken the concorde of the Faith.

The Bishop of Romes frowardnes.

Eusebius lib. 5. cap. 24.

Irenaeus reprehension of the B. of Rome.

And

prehension
of Victor.

And after this, he inserteth a certaine storie, that for the fitnes thereof ought not to be omitted. To conclude (saith he) and all those priestes or Elders before Soter, which helde the sacerdotall (or sacred) priesthood of the Church, which you now gouerne, I meane, Anicetus, & Pius, and Higinus, and Telesphorus, & Sixtus, neither did they theselues hold it thus, neither they that were about them. And yet notwithstanding while they obserued it not, they had peace alwaies with those Churches, which kept this manner of obseruance, yea, euen when it seemed contrarie vnto them, that other did not keepe it also in such like manner as they did. Yet were they neuer repulsed from the societie of the Church, or such as came from those coastes not receaued. Yea rather, all the Priests or Elders also that haue beene before you, haue solemnely sent the Eucharist (which vnder correction, I take not here in this age, as manie do, to be the mysteries of the holie communion it selfe; but rather of an auncient custome of honour and courtesie, to sende the bread and the wine (as they say) vnto them at their comming to the towne, and the worde Eucharist may well beare it, Comitas, gratitudo, or as Ierome calleth it, gratiositas, which we call thankfulness or courtesie) to all the Priestes or Elders of other Churches, not obseruing it as they did. When the blessed Polycarpus came to the Citie of Rome vnder Anicetus, when as they had some little iarre betweene them in manie other thinges, and neuerthelesse ioyned themselues streightwaies togeather in peace: they so handled the matter for this question, that neither of them defended his opinion, with anie obstinate contending for it. For neither Anicetus could perswade Polycarpus, that hee should not obserue those thinges, which he had knowen that Iohn the Disciple of our Lord, and the other Apostle (with whome hee alwaies had beene) did obserue: neyther againe Polycarpus perswaded Anicetus, to forsake those thinges which he sayde he had kept after the manner of his auncestors. And while these thinges were thus betweene them, they did communicate together. Insomuch that Anicetus graunted to Polycarpus, at the onelie contemplation of doing him honour, to exercise the function of the sacerdotall ministerie. And so in full faith, and entire peace, and stedfast charitie, they parted a-sunder, that all Churches whether they keepe the Easterday so, or not so, notwithstanding shoulde keepe concorde among them. These thinges writeth Irenaeus, performing the woorke that his name importeth, to wit, procuring peace to the Churches of God. Neither onelie vnto Victor, but also in like manner vnto diuerse Gouernours of Churches, by his Epistles hee affirmeth, that no dissention ought to arise in the Churches of God for this question.

Thus farre collected by Eusebius, out of this auncient father Irenaeus neus. All which verie little serueth also vnto our question. For if our question of the manner of the Churches gouernement, be of necessitie, we see then, howe wee should condemne all these holie Fathers manner of Ecclesiasticall Gouernement, which was of one Priest or Pastorall Elder, to haue an ordinarie superior gouernement and Iurisdiction ouer his fellowe ministers, and the name Bishop to bee moze peculier vnto him, then to them. For, we manifestlie heereby doe see, that thus had they, not onelie Victor, Irenæus, Polycrates, and the Bishoppes of that age: but they also that were before them, both Anicetus Bishoppe of Rome, with his predecessours, euen vnto the Apostles times and also Polycarpus Bishop of Smyrna that knewe Saint Iohn, and some of the rest of the Apostles, was conuersant with them, marked their orders, as here Irenæus noteth of this Polycrates, that he would not obserue anie other thing, then that hee had marked to be approoued of them. And therefore howe soeuer they differed in other things, as in the obseruation of these Feastes and fasts: yet neither of them differed, in the superioritie of Eccl. gouernment, from the orders, which they had both of them receaued from the Apostles. Some that Victor began to abuse his authoritie to rigorously, which not only Polycrates with the Easterne Bishops being of contrarie opinion; but Irenæus and the Bishops of France also, that were of Victors owne opinion, doe vtterlie mislike, and thus sharply reprove in him, & disallow his censure. For, this superioritie of Victors clergie at Rome, stretched not then either Eastward or westward, ouer them. They mislike therefore, not his lawfull & auncient superioritie; but his new insolent over-reaching the same. So that, if we make our question for the forme of Eccl. gouernment, to be a matter of necessitie: either wee must of necessitie condemne it in them, which were next vnto, yea, and in the Apostles daies: or else, they vsing such an ordinarie superioritie, that so narrowly marked the Apostles, and the Apostles againe, (as we may well suppose) no lesse narrowly marking them: How can it be, but that of necessitie, we must needs allowe it, that one among the pastorall Elders, should haue a superior dignitie and gouernment, to whom the name of Bishop should be more proper and peculier than to the residue, as Anicetus, Sixtus, Telesphorus, Higinus, Pius, Irenæus, Polycrates, Polycarpus, and other mentioned had.

If now, on the other side, this be not a matter of necessitie, but such as may be varied, being but a forme and manner of Ecclesiasticall gouernment, as the obseruation of this Feast and these Fastes, were of accustomed order, not of necessitie: then, so long as it is vsed in moderate sorte without tyrannie or pride, nor any thing contrary to the proportion, of Faith and Goodnesse of lyfe, necessariely maintayned thereby: (to) otherwise, if those Fastes, or this Feast had ben vsed to be kept superstitiously of necessity

or of no necessity.

Howsoever
this B. differed in other orders, yet in this of B. superioritie receiued from the Apostles they all agreed.

What they mislike, and what they mislike not in Victor.

This question of gouernment whether of necessity or no.

If of necessity we must needs haue it as these fathers had.

superstitiously, it had been so farre-forth to be condemned) there is no reason, why we should breake the bonde of peace, and make such trouble in the Church of God, to reiect the Government, that in the nature thereof, is as much indifferent, as the solemnizing this or that day, the memorizall of the Lordes resurrection. And yet, we celebrate the same on the Sunday onely, as those Bishops of Rome, at that time did. Which I hope we doe, without all offence, though we haue no precept in Scripture for it. And therefore, as Polycarpus and Anicetus, differing in that point, notwithstanding, did not violate the peace and vnitie of the Church: so according to Irenæus rule, while no such excessive superiortie is maintayned of vs, as the Pope since that time hath vsurped, but such as we finde practised in the primitive Church, and in the verie Apostles age: wee ought neither to condemne, or speake, or thinke euill, of other good Churches, that vse an other Eccl. gouernement, than we doe: neyther ought they to doe the like of ours. For, that euerie person in one and the same Church, should vse this libertie of difference, without controlement and restraint of the superior in that Church, wherein he liueth. For, though it were lawfull for one Church, to differ from an other, being not so tyed to vniiformitie, as to vnitie: yet, is it not meete, for one Church to differ from it selfe: but to be both in vnitie, and be ruled also by vniiformitie. Especially, where Law bindes them to obedience. Which argueth, that the Bishop of Rome, had not the Government and direction of all other Churches: for then, he would haue brought them vnto his bent. But he in his iurisdiction, & they likewise in theirs, had such seuerall superiorities: that those which would not obey their orders, being thus disposed, continued, and established, before their times, might woorthily be punished for their contempt, & should well deserue as sharpe, if not sharper reprehension, of euerie good Poly-crates and Irenæus, than did Victor.

Now, as this was the state of Bishops then, euen from the Apostles times (till Victor beganne to disturbe the same) as we haue seene alreadie, in Pantenus and Clemens of Alexandria, that were Doctors or Teachers in the schooles, and withall, Priestes or Elders pastorall in the Church, and yet, not Bishops: so likewise, in Origene, Heraclas, and Tertullian, &c. it is no lesse, if not a great deale more apparant. For, when Origene for his singuler reading and preaching, beganne to growe so famous, that he was of many desired to come to their Churches: and that a Prince of Arabia had sent to his Bishop Demetrius, to haue him come and preach there: of this briefly saith Eusebius lib. 6. cap. 15. being intrea-ted, he went thether; he taught them, they beleueed; he returned. Howbeit, before he went, he left Heraclas in his place, of whom he himselfe testifieth, as Eusebius noteth: Heraclas that now beautifieth the chayre of Priest-hood or Eldership at Alexandria: and yet at that time Heraclas was

was not Bishop, but chosen after Demetrius. But after a small time, ciuill warre arising at Alexandria,, while other went to other places, he (to wit Origen) withdrew himselfe to the parts of Palestine, and taried at Cæsarea, where the office of disputing in the Church, and expounding the diuine Scriptures was enioyned vnto him of the Bishop, even while as yet the order of Priest or Elder was not bestowed vppon him, as we fynde recorded in the epistle of Alexander writing againe vnto Demetrius, reprobuing these things long after. But he writeth in this manner: As for that yee added in your letters, that it was neuer heard of or done at anie time, that lay men should dispute, where Bishops were present. I know not why ye would auouche so manifest an vntrueth. Since that the custome is this, that if anie where such men bee founde in the Church, that can enstruete the brethren, and comfort the people: they should alwaies be inuited or bidden thereunto of the holy Bishops, as Euelpius was of our brother Neon at Larandos, & Paulinus of Celsus at Iconium, & Theodorus of Atticus at Synnada. Neither also it is doubted, but that very many likewise in other places, if there be any that competently can fulfill the worke of God in the word and doctrine, they shoulde bee inuited of the Bishops, Nowe, Origen thus travelling in preaching, before he was ordeyned a Priest or Elder, and being requested (saith Eusebius lib. 5. cap. 18.) of the Churches that are at Achaia, to come thether, and conuince the heretikes, that in those places were growne vp more at liberty: while he was travelling thither, and of necessity must passe by Palestine, hee was ordeyned a Priest or Elder at Cæsarea, of the Bishops of that Prouince. The Bishops that made him Priest were (saith Ierome) Theodotus B. of Cæsarea, and Alexander B. of Ierusalem (who had (say the Centuriographers) the cheefest authority in those parts. Which dignity, (meaning of Priesthoode and Eldershippe) when it brought great admiration vnto Origen, and that he was euery where in great authority and reuerence with all men for his learning and wisdom: Demetrius enuying his glory & fame, did grieuously and bitterly accuse those Bishops that had promoted Origen vnto priesthoode. &c. Being certified therfore in his absence of the enuie and euill will of Demetrius against him, he abode at Cæsarea, and there taught, leauing Heraclas his successor at Alexandria. At what time (saith Eusebius lib. 6. cap. 19.) among the bishops of the nation of Cappadocia, Firmilianus, of the city of Cæsarea was bountifull, he bore such reuerence for wisdom and Learning, still towards Origen, that he was euer constraining him to stay with him. And he also, forsaking his Church, made speede to come to him. And he vsed a certaine religious recourse, while now and then he called him thither, for the instruction of his Church, now e and then, he to edifie himselfe, would Tertullian goe to him, and day and night sitte by him while he taught. Yea, and Alexander also, whom we shewed before to gouerne the Church of Ierusalem, and Theoctistus which gouerned the Church of Cæsarea (of Palestine) did euen captiuate almost all the time of their life to heare him, and yeelded vnto him alone, the soueraignty of Maisterhip or Doctorship in the diuine Scriptures, and Ecclesiasticall doctrine. Whereby it appeareth, that the office of a Priest or Elder being a Minister of the word and Sacramentes, howsoeuer the party excelled, and were in admiration for his learning: yet in dignitie, he was distinguished from, and was farre inferiour vnto him, that was the Bishop of the Church. And that (as appeareth also in many places of Origen's woorkes), bishops, Priestes and Deacons, were 3. degrees superiour and inferiour one to an other.

The succession of the B. of Antioche.

And euen at the same time or befoze it Zebeus being hishop of Antioche, (as Ierome noteth) Gemnius, or, (as Eusebius calleth him Gemianus) a Priest of Antioche flourished. Which againe argueth, that a bishop and a Priest is not all one. Which bishop being dead, Babilas (saith Eusebius lib. 6. cap. 16) receaued the principall gouernment of the church. These bishops so continuing (as the Magdeburgenses note them), succeeding one after another, from the Apostles, vntill Paulus Samosatenus the Heretike was chosen bishop, against whome, Malchion a Priest of the same Church of Antioche disputed befoze all the bishops there assembled so singulerly, that the disputation was written and published with great admiration of the same, and after ward vnder Cyrillus bishop there, the Magdeburgenses reckon Dorotheus, a learned Priest of Antioche, who after Cyrillus was made bishop. So that still Bishop & Priest was not all one. Befoze which time, vnder Zephirinus next bishop of Rome after Victor, Tertullian a Priest or Elder of Rome did flourish.

Tertullian.

Who in his booke de Baptismo saith: Supereſt ad concludendum. &c. It remayneth to conclude the matter, to giue warning of the obseruation, both of giuing baptisme & of receiuing. The right of giuing hath Summus Sacerdos, the sacerdotall Priest that is the chief (or highest) which is the bishop. and then the Priestes (or Elders) and the Deacons: howbeit not without the authority of the bishop, for the honor of the Church. Whiche remayning intier, the peace is safe. For otherwise, there is a righte vnto lay men. It may be giuen equally, except now the bishop. or the Priestes or the Deacons be called, saying: the word of the Lorde ought not to bee hid from any. I defend not Tertullians opinion, that lay persons may baptize: but I note that which he setteth downe for the order in his time of the degrees of the Clergie: that the bishop was superiour to the Priestes, as well as to the Deacons: which also appeareth in his booke De Monogamia. Wherein, though he slipt into the error of Montanus, yet in this distinction of a Bishop, of a Priest, and of Deacon: he swarued not from the continually approued custome of the Church. And in his booke, De fuga in persequutione. But when the very authors themselves, that is, the very Deacons, and the Priests, and the bish. do flee; how shall the lay people vnderstand in what sense it is said, Flee from Citie to Citie? By which & other places in Tertullian you may see the difference of these degrees in his time.

Which more manifestly appeareth in a matter, that fell out a little after, though before the foresaid condemnation of Samosatenus, as appeareth by Eusebius lib. 6, cap. 33. At what time Nouatus a Priest of the Church of Roome, puffed vp with a certaine pride, vtterly bereft the that fel of al hope of saluation, although they worthely repented. Whereupon also he became the chiefe of the Nouatians heresie: who being separated from the Church by a proude name, called themselves καθαρῶν, that is to say, puritans. For the which matter a most famous sacerdotal Councell was called, to the number of threescore B. and as many priests with a great many Deacons. Besides this also, through euery seuerall prouince, with great deliberation had vpon this matter, it is by decrees signified what was needfull to be done. It is therefore decreed that Nouatus being puffed vp with a proude minde, with all those that followed him, & whosoever should fall into that cruel opinion, keeping no whitte of brotherly loue, should be excommunicated out of the Church. But those that in the conflict had fallé should be healed with brotherly mercy, and be helped with the fomentations of repentaunce. Vpon this matter also, Cornelius the bishop of Rome, writeth to the Church of Antioche: declaring to Fabian the B. thereof, what the councell assembled in the city of Rome had decreed, What also the Italians, the Africans, & other Western churches thought, &c. And an other epistle of Cornelius written to Fabian bish. of Antioche is extant, shewing a l things concerning Nouatus, who he was, of what manner life and conuersation, & how he fell from the church of God. In which epistle he declareth, that hee fell into all these things, euen for the desire of a bishopricke. which secretly he nourished in himself. But chiefly he was puffed vp in that, that he had taken vnto him certaine excellent men, of those that were confessors, to be in the beginning his companions, among whome was Maximus a certaine priest of the church of Rome, & Urbanus, which remained among them that were confessors (of faith in persecution). Yea & Sidonius & Celerinus which were very famous among those, that were holden for confessors because they had overcome all kinde of torments. but these (saith he) when more diligently they had perceaued that he delt al by deceites, by lies & periuries, and that he counterfained holines to this onely purpose, that hee might bleare the ignorant, they forsaking him, or rather cursing him to the church, with great satisfaction returned. And confessed to the bishoppes, (being present,) and also to the laye men first their error, and then his fraudes and deceauings.

Moreouer, in this epistle he addeth these thinges, that whereas he was alwaies wonte to sweare to his brethren, that he desired not at all to bee a bishop: vpon a sudden and vnitwittingly, (as though hee had beene a thing newly formed) he started forth a bishop. Euen he forsooth, that challenged the discipline and the decrees Ecclesiasticall: hee also tooke before hand, a bishoprike vpon him, but such as of God hee had not receaued, For, hauing gotten from an out part of Italy, 3. bishops, moſte simple mē, & altogether ignorāt: or rather, they being deceaued of him with subtile circūuention, he wringeth frō them an imagined rather thē lawful imposition of hands vpon him. Of whom notwithstanding, one forthwith returned to the Church, confessed his sinne, and was receaued into the communion or fellowship of the Laitye. Yea, the people making intercession for thus much But into the place of the other twain, that laid their handes vpon Nouatus, were other bishoppes ordeyned and sent. He therefore that claimed to himselfe the Gospell, knew not that in the Catholike Church, in the which he saw there were 46. priests, and seauen Deacons, and seuen subdeacons. (or inferior Deacons) 42. acolytes (or wayting seruants,) Exorcistes and Readers, with Dore-keepers 52. How manie Priests in Rome besides the B.

What can be playner to shewe the difference and superiortie betwene priest or pastorall Elder, and bishop, then this story? I stand not vpon their diuersitie in the offices then, whereof I haue spoken befoze out of Reminitus against Trident Councell: But to the present purpose, of these 2. degrees now in question, bishop and priest in that age, while the bishop of Rome tooke not vpon him, any such supreme authoritie, as now he claimeth: but onely, as bishop of Rome, or as chiefe bishop in those parts of Italy about Rome: what a number of priestes or Elders he had vnder him, how he called them and other bishops and priestes or Elders, when this controuersie fell, to consult with them vpon the matter: how he in the name of his Church, and of this Prouinciall Councell, sent about to other chiefe Bishoppes in other Prouinces, to shewe what they had done, not prescribing nor commaunding, but brotherly requesting them to do the like in their Prouinces. Which sheweth, that as he at Rome, so all other chiefe or inferiour bishops, had likewise authoritie ouer their priestes or Elders. And so long as this order was thus maintained, their was neyther tyrannie in this superiortie, but verie good & necessary order: nor such schismes, errors and heresies, nor such Hypocrites as were the bzoachers of them, coulde peepe out, but streight they were founde, examined, and (so much as could be) were suppressed.

I graunt

I graunte, they could not utterly suppress them in those dayes, whē theyr selues were yet suppressed by Heathen Princes. And among these bishoppes also, that had this superiour dignitie, in some places some simple & ignorant bishops did creepe in. As, what age was ever free? no, not the Apostles times. And this Superioritie did tickle some also, that had not the feare of God, by suche ill practises as heere Nouatus vsed, to attaine by newe deuises to this dignitie, vnder pretence of reformation of Ecclesiasticall discipline, of the puritie and sincere profession of the Gospell, and all this geare: and that there shoulde bee moe Bishoppes, than one, in one church. Yea, as Nouatus did: of whom saith the former Epistle: that in the time of persecution, when hee hidde him-selfe in a litle cell, & was by the Deacons, according to the māner, requested, to come and helpe at their departure, those that were learners of the faith: hee, fearing to come forth, denied him-selfe to bee a Priest. And that, when hee deuised the Sacramentes vnto the people, hee would holde faste the handes of the receauers, nor suffer them to take it; before that euerye one of them had sworne by those thinges, that they held in their hands: that they should neuer (forsaking him) returne to Cornelius. Though counterfeite Puritanes were then, and some suche might euen nowe also, disturbe the peace of the church of Christe, and good order of gouerning the same: and by these practises deceaue many, euen such as haue beene moste earnest Confessors of the Gospell in the time of persecution, and are most zealous of Gods truth and glory; Yet, if good Bishops followe Cornelius his steps, that at that time was bishop of Rome, and was also a most constant Martyr, when the time of trial came, suffering death for the Gospell, and yet retaining with good conscience, (as nothing against the Gospel,) his right of his calling, in Superiour dignity and iurisdiction ouer all his people, and his Cleargie: he shall finde out these imagined Bishops, (made in corners, pretending puritie), well enough. And al the godly zealous, that haue beene, or bee deceaued by the, wil (I hope) on better aduising of them, and of the matter, forsake them, & acknowledge their fault, as Maximus, Vrbanius, Sidonius, & Celerius here did: yea, although they had bowed, and sworne, and receaued the sacrament of the holy Communion thereupon, to the contrarie: and returne to the due obedience and acknowledgement of their lawefull Bishoppe. Although (this by the way) I must confesse, that the Bishops then of Rome were worthely punished in this man: for hee was made Priest, all of affection, and beyond all order. For Nouatus, hauing beene vexed in his yout hewith an vncleane spirite when hee had consumed sometime with Exorcists fell into so grieuous a sickenes that his health was past hope: and euen for necessity lying in his bed, he was baptized, he had so long deferred the time of Baptisme. But afterwarde recouering, when hee was of priuate fauor so loued of the Bishop, that hee would make him Priest: albeit all the Cleargie, and verie manye of the Laitye stopped it, saying: it is not lawfull for him to bee a Clerke, which in extremity receaued grace lying in his bed. Yet the bishop besought them of a speciall fauour, that this might be graunted vnto him for this man onely. So that he whome the Bishop so extraordinarily aduanced and made so much of, he of all other revolted from him, and caused the people also to disobey him. And though he differed not from his bishop Cornelius, and other true beleeners, in matter and substance of faith and religion: yet vnder pretence of reforming discipline, and reducing all thinges to the Purity of the Gospell, he bredde this faction and schisme in the Church, that afterward brake out into foule heresies. And therefore, let all Magistrates Bishops, and all the people that feare God, take heede to this matter. Wee must not onely abstaine from that which is euill, but from all shewe of euill, so neere as God shall geue vs grace thereto.

The very God that is the authour of peace, sanctifie you throughout, that your whole spirit, and soule and body, may be kept blamelesse vntill the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ.

1 Thess. 5.

Thus haue I runne through the most part of this Primitiue age, from the very Apostles times, ere ever the bishop of Rome vsurped any such supremacie, as he now most falsely challengeth: saue, one ouer rashe communicating, which Victor pronounced, not, for that he claymed any iurisdiction, gouernment or authority ouer those bishops, whom he excommunicated: but because they dissented from his opinion in those matters.

Wherein we haue seene, how all this while, in all partes of Christendome, at least, wise. in the most famous parts at that time, this peculier applying of the name, and this superiority of bishopps in dignity & authority, ouer such Presbyters Priestes or Elders, as were Ministers of the word and Sacramentes, (whom our brethren cal Pastors,) was with one consent, allowed and practised, without any interruption, reclaimeing, or misliking of any person, either of the Cleargie, or of the people, by a continuall succession from & in the very Apostles dayes. To the which purpose, I haue not bzged such authours, as are suspected to be forged, in those holy and ancient fathers names: but such as euen our brethren themselves do acknowledge, to be the true authours of those booke and stoxies, whence I cite them.

As for the holy fathers following, Cyprian, Athanasius, Cyril, Basil, &c. doe not onely all of them agree heereto, and for the most part were such bishops themselves: but also vpon anie occasion offered in their times, to defende and maintaine by the authoritie of the worde of God, this superior dignity and authority that they had and exercised, as shall yet further (God willing) appear in that which followeth.

But here, because our brethren may seeme already to haue answered al that can be alleaged, out of the ancient fathers: I am now to craue licence of the reader, to set a-lyde for a while our brethrens Learned discourse, that we may heare and marke for our further satisfaction, what our other Learned brethren answered hereunto. And firste they answered to all this, by distinction of the order of bishoppes, in a little booke late come forth, called: The iudgement of a most reuerend and Learned man from beyonde the Seas, concerning a threefold order of bishops, &c. Which answered beeing so briefly and plainely perused, as may satisfie: and conferred with the resolutions of our other brethren from beyonde the Seas also: we shal the readier returne to this Learned discourse of these our brethren at home, for the titles and equalitye of the Pastors.

VVith this most reuerend and learned man should be, sith his name (for what purpose I knowe not) is not discovered by our Brethren: I minde not to pull off his visour, but with all due reuerence both to his person and learning, I may take the aduantage (with lesse enuie, in a namelesse person) the better to consider the reasons of his iudgement. Howbeit, bicause the reuerende and learned Danæus professing openly his name, doth vse also this selfesame distinction, from whence this namelesse moste reuerende man, might seeme to haue borrowed it: I would therefore a little higher beginne with him, that began befoze with this distinction, and so one answere serueth both.

Danæus in his Christian introduction 3. parte, cap. 8. (after he hath brieflie referred vs for the dignity and office of Pastors to Bernards sermons on the Canticles, 41. & 77.) saith on this wise: Hæc breuissime, de- rum iam latin. Episcopi, &c. These things briefly, but now more at large. bishops and Pastors are one, in the holie Scripture. 1. Pet. 2. 7. 25. 5. 2. Wee at this daye, name them Ministers of Gods worde, because men haue now long since abused both the name and dignity of bishops. And at this day, the name Episcopatus, of a bishoprike or bishops office, is esteemed to be the name of honor onely and of gaine, but not of burthen and of labour. Albeit, contrariwise, Augustine in the 9. booke of the Citie of God, chap. 19. saith: The name of bishop is of worke, not of honor. For, of the office of a Bishop, or bishoprike, which in Paules time was one and Euangelicall, was afterwarde made a threefolde bishoprike, that is to wit, a Bishopricke Euangelicall, Humaine, and Sathanicall. Euangelicall, where is greatest equalitie among all the pastors of the Church of God, Humaine, when vnto some one of the Pastors a power and prelatie (or preferment) not indeeda the greatest, howbeit some power, is giuen ouer the other men of the same order: that is to say, ouer other pastors and Elders. Sathanicall, when vnto one pastor is giuen vppon other Churches, an Emperors or Dictators power, as, in popery are bishops, Archbishops, the Pope.

honorable.

We it spoken with protestation of all duefull reuerence I wonder at so renowned and learned a man. How zeale (against the corruptions of Popery) maketh now and then such a notable man also, and yet but a man (Homines sumus, labi possumus: We are all but men, and may ouerslippe) to confounde and carrie things awaie in presupposals, cleane from their right course and places, euen where they woulde moste preciselye distinguish and dispose them. Howe bishops and Pastors are all one in the Scripture; wee haue seene alreadye at large, though not yet out of that place of S. Peter here quoted, which (because our brethren Discourers) doo afterwards mention: we shall (God-willing) in order come thereto.

For the name of Minister of Gods word, vnderstand both for Pastor & bishop: it is a good name, and a good reason. But, that we should so call B. and Pastors, ministers of Gods word, that wee should cleane exclude either the dignity or the name of bishop: it is no reason at all. The Doctor both is, and may as well be called a minister of Gods worde. And yet will you (brethren) distinguish a Doctor from a Pastor, whome you call a Minister, as we do. Yea, the Deacons name in the naturall signification thereof, signifieth a Minister: and yet, wee commonlye call not the Deacon, a Minister.

The name
of Bishop
not to be abolished though it
haue beene abused.

But, that the name bishop should not be shunned, and turned to Minister, because the name and dignity hath beene long time abused: If this reason were good, we may take awaie the name and dignity of Doctor too, and the name of pastor would not be farre behinde. Yea, the name both of Church and Gospell. Yea, the name of Iesus: and the names of many things else, haue beene both as long, and as much abused, as euer the name and dignity of bishop hath bene. But since Danæus, hath here graunted, that there is a name and a dignity of it in the Scripture: we thinke, it were good reason, that we should rather seeke, to retayne both the dignity and the name, in such order as is not contrary to the Scripture, and so (without the abuse growne since) to vse both the dignity and the name of the Euangelicall bishop, that is of God: than thus cleane to cast off, both dignity and name of bishop, for the abuse of them. But what now is this so long and great abuse.

A bishops office is counted at this daie, for a name of honor onely & of gaine, but not of burthen and of labour.

The name
of Bish. as well of honor as of burthen.

That it is of honor, I aske no better witnesse, then Danæus himselfe vpon 1. Tim. 3. ver. 1. Who after he hath saide that priestes, or Elders & bishops are all one: he saith: Deacons are heere distinguished and plainly seuered from bishops. The name of priest is in Greeke ἱερεύς, and therefore it is a Greeke word. But this word ἱερεύς and ἐπίσκοπος, differ as in Latine do verum and senex.

For honor is a name of age, and honor also of dignity, as may be gathered out of Plutarke in Nicea. If now honor and honor bee all one, how is not the name of Bishop, a name betokening an office of honour? yea, the very Etymologie of the name, signifying an Overseer: who saith not it conteyneth an honor and preferment? yea Hierome also to whom Danæus alleageth, in his Epistle ad Euagrium saith: A Priest and a bishop, the name of the one is of age, the name of the other is of dignity.

But to say as Danæus heere doth, that the office of a Bishop is counted at this day, a name of honour onely and of gaine, but not of burden, & of labour, or paine: I know no Papistes, much lesse Protestants) so carried away with honor and gaine, that ever said it, or (mee thinkes) can thinke it. S. Augustine saith (I graunt) it is a name of worke not of honor: yea God saith I will haue mercy, not Sacrifice. Such negatiues are not simple, but comparatiue. God requireth both, howbeit, the one more than the other. As he saide of iustice and of tithing, Hac oportet facere, illa non omittere. And if Elders & bishops be al one: doth not S. Paule say, 1. Tim. 5. The Elders that rule wel are worthy of double honor, chiefly that labor in the word doctrine? But what saith he? (saith Chrysost vpon 1 Tim. 3.) If any (saith hee) desire a bishoprike: I reprove it not, I disallowe it not: for it is a worke of gouernment. If any therefore desire this, not with the pompe of principallitye and lordlines, but with the care of gouernment, and affection of Charitie: I improoue it not, for hee desireth a good worke. For Moses also coueted that matter: howbeit he sought not such power and ambition of gouerning: but he sought the matter so, that it was saide vnto him: Propheta made thee a Prince and a Iudge ouer vs. If anie therefore desireth it so he desireth it well. For thereupon is it named a bishoprike, because hee looketh vpon all men, and vieweth all thinges. But of what bishop did S. Augustine speak, when he said A bishops name is of worke not of honor? spake he it not of such a bishop, as had a superior dignity and gouernment ouer pastorall Elders, as all the holy bishops long before his time had, and himselfe also? No, did he condemne the all, and himselfe, and his calling, when he so said I marvel much (bee it spoken still with meete reuerence of so Learned a man) what Danæus and our brethren meane, so often to alleage the Fathers, Ambrose, Augustine, Hierome, Theodoret, Cyprian, Bernarde? For, all these Danæus alleageth in this chapter, and approueth their sayings, for the name and office of bishops. And yet all such of these as were bish. yea, Archbishops, blessed theirselues, this superior dignity and authority ouer pastors.

This sentence of Augustine (heere also alleaged) Epistola ad Valerianum. 143. There is nothing in this life, especially at this time more comfortable and acceptable vnto man, than is the office of a bishoppe of a priest, and of a Deacon, if the matter bee handled sleightely, and and flatteringly: but then, before God, nothing is more miserable: and also in this life and chieflie at this time, nothing is more hard and dangerous, than the office of a bishop. But with God, nothing is more blessed, if we go to warre, as our Emperour, that is Christe, would haue vs. Is not here by the way, a plaine distinction of al these 3. offices, bishops priests and Deacons. Again, Ambrose (saith Danzus) doth say, that in a bishop is the power of all the Ordinations. And (as saith Cyprian) a bishop is sette to bee a watchman ouer all. Did they meane hereby that they had no more authoritie than all other Ministers of the worde had? No; not rather, that they had a greater, then they all. But now to come to our triple distinction, that must aunswere al that is alleaged in all the fathers.

In the Gospell they are all one.

The Bishop
Euangelical or bishop of God.

I denie that. In the Gospell, is mention of Bishop for Apostle, and in that kinde of Bishoprick, all the Apostles were Bishoppes. But in the Gospell (I meane in the recordes and state of the newe Testament) some were Bishops that were not Apostles: And therefore all were not all one. And doth not Beza, and the Gencua translation, take the name of Bishoppe (euen in the places cited by our Learned discoursing Brethren) for those vnpreaching Prelates, or Elders not teaching, whome they call Gouvernours? And if it bee so: then againe, all the Euangelicall Bishops are not all one. And if the difference laye onely, in the pride and vitious life: were all Bishops good, that are mentioned in the Gospell, and by S. Iohn in the Reuelation?

But the Euangelicall bishoppe is, where there is moste greate equality among all the Pastors of Gods Church.

Neither can that be. For, if it shoulde: either there must neuer assemblies and Councils, such as were at Ierusalem among the Apostles, : for then, their selues confesse, there can not bee equalitye.

The equality among al
the Pastors, maketh not the Magist.
Bishops.

Wee confesse (say the Learned discourfers pag. 114.) that in euerye assemblie or company, some one of necessitie must haue this prerogatiue, to order and dispose the same with reason. So that, if one muste haue preeminence aboue the residue: then is there not so much equality, as befoze, and after. And so, for that time. wherein of all other they shoulde bee moste Euangelicall, by this moste greate equality among them, beeing left off: they should not bee Euangelicall at all. And therefore, they may be Euangelicall well inough, both in suche assemblies, and without them, hauing not suche most greate equality, as is here imagined.

Neither can I see how this summa equalitas, this most greate equalitye can at anie time, consist among the Pastors, For, if Caluines reason bee good good, vpon Galath. 2. ver. 'as we haue heard (that greater honor (spea- of Man. king there of the honor of dignity) should be geuen to those Pastors that haue greater gifts: and all the Pastors in one Citie haue not giftes alike: then not onely this, inequality of dignity must bee of the Pastor, to the pe ople; but also of the in equality of the Pastors, ariseth an inequality of the honor in dignity among the Pastors.

The reasons that our little English booke of the iudgement of a most The humane reuerend and Learned man, &c. alleageth for the Bishop of God to bee B. or B. of all one with Pastor, are the places cited already by our owne Learned dis- man, and coursers alleaged, as Ephes. 4. 11. 1. Tim. 3. & Phil. 1. 1. and therefore, I his definitio passe them ouer to the places, where they are answered, & come to the 2. kinde of Bishop, the Bishop of man; for, on him lyeth now all the controuerse.

The humain (saith Danzus) is when vnto some one out of the pastors, there is giuen vpon the residue of the men which are also of the same or der, that is, vpon other pastors and priestes of the Church, a power or prelacy, which is not indeede the chiefe; but some it is.

If the bishoprick of man, be no worse than this definition maketh it: I see not, but that it is a good bishoprick: yea, why may it not be counted all one with the Euangelicall bishopricke? Shall I say, as much? nay, more then that, which is most equall with all the pastors? For, this wee haue shewed by manifest p^{ro}oues, out of the word of God it self, even in the example of Tim. & by the example of Iames, Act. 15. & 21. & Gal. 2. & euē out of Caluine & Beza: and by the exposition of manie the auncient and best approued Fathers, & by the track of the vniuersal practise from & in the Apostles times: & by the testimonies of more than 2. 02. 3. most auncient & credible witnesses: that the bishop of man (as he is here defined) is the very bishop of God also. As for the 3. bishop of the Diuell, let him go to the Diuel from whence he came. We haue (God be praised) nought to do with him. And howsoeuer our B^y. might warble at the bishop, if any were so euil a man, that he might be called the Diuel himself, as Christ called Iudas: yet was his bishoprike of God. We haue none to whome is giuen y^e summa potestas. We acknowledge it to be only in Iesus Christ, which is the only high bishop of our soules. If he be the bishop of the Diuel, to whom alone is giuen ouer other churches imperatoria & dictatorial potestas, an imperiall & dictatorial power: then be our bishops in England, no bishops of the Diuel; which haue no such most high imperial or dictatorial power Who soeuer should so say of them, should most manifestly slander them, &

Christ the highest Priest, and of the Apostles, but also by the expresse words of Paule, 1. Tim. 2, & Luke 12. 13. and such (God be praised) bee our bishoppes, and such were all these holy and auncient bishops that I haue mentioned. Howbeit, though the Pope may go in this crewe, whether this definition suffice for all Popish Arch-bishops, and Popish Bishops I doubt mee of it. For they haue no such highest power, though they would. But they are rather his slaues that hath it: & so it comes all to one reckoning for them, so long as they like it and maintaine it in him, and serue vnder him, and as nere as they can or dare, aspire to some part of his tyrannicall pride, and diuelish usurpation. But, (God forbid) that we shoulde so thinke (when we cannot so say, except we say amisse) of any of our Reuerend Fathers, bishops ouer vs, that haue renounced him, nor taken anie such power on them, ouer either prince, pastor, or people, in their gouernments. But to answer Danæus with the iudgement of as reuerend and learned a man as is himselfe: Let Danæus his selfe answer himselfe, what manner of superiority he alloweth in Bishops. For writing vnto the 5. chapter of the 1. Tim. ver. 22. Vnto whome the election of a pastor doth belong: After hee hath taken it from prince, from patrone, from prelate, neither yet that it pertaineth to all the Church alike, (whiche were to disturbe all thinges) neither to anie one, because none in the Church saue only Christe, is the gouernour by himselfe alone, (but of his arguments of election, we shall see God willing afterwarde:) at the length he saith: Neque etiam obstat. &c. Neither also doth this let it, that the Bishop is of of the fathers called episcopus, President, as though hee onely might order the whole Church after his fancy: and therein aduance whome he pleased: for that worde episcopus, a President, declareth onely an order, that he which was called the Bishop, ought to sitte among his colleagues and fellow Priestes or Elders: but it giueth not vnto him a kingly or a chiefe and Pretor-like power, vpon the Church. Ambrose in lib. de dignitate Sacerdotum cap. 6. doth confirme that which we saye. If thine eye shal be simple: thy whole bodie shal be cleare. that is, If that the B. which deued to rule the bodie, be bewitched with holy simplicitie and innocencie: all the Church shineth with the brightnes of the light. But if thy eye be euil, &c. That is, if the B. which seemed to giue light to the body subiect to him, be shadowed with the blindness of wicked behaviour: what shal the other members do, that are bereft the light of the eyes? That is to say, what shall the secular multitude do, when with vnlawfull actions forbidde, the B. shal prouoke the multitude to the like gulf of mischiefs. For what other thing should a B. be interpreted to be, but an Ouerseer: chiefly, when he siateth in a higher seate in the Ch. and so looketh vpon al, that the eyes of all may looke on him.

So that here at least, the bishop is made a President, that sitteth, though among them, yet higher then all his fellowes. And is this sitting higher, only onely to looke on them? or this beholding and looking on them, so ^{of mans} no governing of them? But let Ambrose tell his whole meaning: who, after ^{power.} he had highly commended the honor and dignity of the high calling both of Bishop and Priest, both about the prince and people, in his spiritual function, cap. 2. and shewed the daunger if their life were not answerable thereunto, cap. 3. Therefore brethren (saith he unto the Bishops & Priests under him,) as the Roab setteth forth the Senator, as the tillage the Husbandman, as the Barbarian his armour, as the skill of sayling the shipman: and the qualite of euery Artificers worke declarereth the Authors: So nothing betokeneth a Bishop, but a bishoplie worke. That he might be knowne rather by his good woorke, than by his profession: and more to be a Bishop by his wel deseruings, than by the name whereby he is so called. For, (as wee haue saide) there is nothing more excellent then a Bishopp: so nothing is more wretched if the Bishop be in hazard of his holy life. And as it is lightner to runne on the plaine, so is it more heauye, when one falleth from highe dignitie. For the ruine that is from an high, is frushed with the more waigh-ty fall. Indeed, the bishoply honor before men, is renowned, but if it sustaine a fall, it is a great grieve. For how much the degree of a bishoppe is higher than others, so much the more greuous is the fall, if that by negligence he should slippe. A great height, muste haue great heede. The greater honor, must be enuironed with the greater circumspection. To whome more is of trust committed, of him (as it is written) is more demaunded. For, the thinges that are mingled, are with the worste. And in an other place, The mightie shall suffer more mighty tormentes. And to him that knoweth the Lawe and doeth it not, the sinne is heighnow. And the seruaunt that knoweth the will of the Lorde, if he shall not doo it, shall bee muche beaten. For, it is another thing that God requireth of a bish. and another, that of a prieste, and another that of a Deacon: and another, that of a Clerke, and another that of a laie man, either else, of euery singuler man. And albeit GOD shall examine in his iudgement the workes of all men, yet shall more bee required for of him, to whome more is committed. For he shall suffer greater punishmentes, to whome a cure hauing greater multitude of people to bee gouerned, shalbee committed. Thus muche saith Ambrose in that Chap. of this matter, not onely for the honor and charge of a bishoppe, moze than other; but also of the seuerall and distinct degrees, of bishoppe, of priest, of Deacon, of Clerke, and of the Laye people. In the Chapter following, he describeth the properties of a bishoppe, out of S. Paule to Timothy. And in the 1. Chap. he inueigheth most against the Arch-bi. in his time, that made bishops for money, and the bishops also for money, made priests & Deacons. All which as it sheweth their abuses: so it necessarilie inferreth, both their degrees, and also their dignities, to bee different:

and

and euen confuteth that, that Danæus in the same place principally defendeth.

Last of all S. Ambrose commeth to this sentence by Danæus cited: For thou art called of all men a Bishop without doubting. Especially, when thou art esteemed by the very name, if so be that the action agree to the name, and the name associate it selfe vnto the action. For what other thing doth he interpret Bishop, but an ouer-looker vpon? chiefly, whē he sitteth in a higher seate, and so looketh upon all men, that the eyes of all men also do looke on him. This is in very dede, both the sentence and meaning of S. Ambrose, that he is set in a higher seate, than other in the Church, because of his higher dignity in the Church. And that his action should so aunswere to his name, that as he ouerlooketh (whereon he hath his name,) so should he ouer-rule them in the discipline of the church. And therefore he is called presbiter a president, or one that sitteth highest. as Hierome confesseth in his epistle ad Euagrium. For also at Alexandria, from Marke the Euangeliste, vnto Heracius and Dionysius Bishops: the Priestes doe alwaies take one chosen among them-selues, whome, being placed in a higher degree they called the Bishop. Whereby withall, it manifestly appeareth, that this Bishop of man (as they tearme him) is of good antiquitie, euen from Marke the Euangelist, and so an Ecclesiasticall Bishop: so that, if he could pleade for his higher chayre, no better title, but onely so faire a prescription from S. Marke: mee thinketh he should be delt too hardly withall, to be turned out now.

The chaire
of S. Iames
at Ierusalem.

Neither was this first begunne at Alexandria from S. Marke. There is yet a moze auncient recoorde than Ieromes testimonie. For (saith Eusebius lib 7, cap. 15.) To conclude also, the Chayre of Iames, (who was euen of our Sauour himselfe and of the Apostles in Ierusalem, elected the first Bishop in the earth, & whom bookes do note to be the brother of the Lord) is yet to this day there kept. And in the same chayre do all they sitte, which vntill this present time, do enioy the sacred Priesthood of that Seate. It is kept therefore with great diligence, as a memory of holinesse deliuered from the auncestors, and is had in due reuerence, either in pretence of the antiquity, or of the first sanctification of the sacred Priesthoode.

Neither doth Eusebius write this, of the common estimation of the people, and his owne assertion; whereof he also spake before, libro secundo, cap. 23: That vnto Iames an Episcopall seate in Ierusalem was geuen of the Apostles: but also cited out of Clemens, which likewise he had done moze at large before, lib. 2. cap. 1. and hee addeth, for further confirmation hereof, saying: But Egesippus which was straightwayes after the very first successions of the Apostles, with more assured searche, rehearseth of him in the fift booke of his commentaries, after these wordes:

Iames

James (sayth hee) the brother of the Lorde, who of all men was called the Iuste, receaued with the Apostles, the Church, who endured from the verie times of the Lorde vntill our dayes. (And so at large Egesippus declareth the maner of his Martyrdome, and in conclusion sayth) These thinges more at large, but agreeable vnto Clement, hath Egesippus recorded: that James was so meruelous a man and among all men, so highlie thought of in the obseruing of all righteousnesse, that all that were wise among the Iewes beleueed, that this was the cause of the siege of Ierusalem foorth-with following, that they had againe on him layde their wicked handes. And that Iosephus did thinke euen so, hee euidentlie declareth by these woordes: all which thinges (sayth hee) hapned to the Iewes for the reuenge of James the Iuste, which was the brother of Iesus, that is called Christe, whome they killed, beeing by the cofession of all men, the most righteous and most holy man.

So that this Bishop which Danzus calleth the Bishoppe of man, and his Episcopall chayre wherein he sate among his fellowe Brethren, and thereupon was called episcopus, the president of them, is of man indeede, but of such men, euen of the holie Apostles of Iesus Christe: that we must needs confesse, it is of God also. Except wee will disaboue the Apostles doinges of the same, or call in question the credite of these Historiographers, that were so nere, and as it were euen in their times, which doe auowne it of them.

But nowe that we haue hearde Danzus iudgement, let vs heare also the iudgement of this most reuerende and learned man from beyonde the seas, that is nowe arriued in Englande. For we Englishmen loue manie times to heare of newes beyond-sea, where (in soth) are manie most reuerend and learned men, and it is good to heare the iudgments of them, to see if they agree with these mens iudgements. For, if he be neuer so much most reuerende and learned a man: yet, (I perceauie heereby) hee is but a man; and so is the Bishop of man, as well as he. And wee haue heard, for this one mans iudgement, the iudgement already of a great manie moe, and that as reuerende and as learned men, as this one most reuerend and learned man, who so euer he be. But is he not some Archbishop himselfe: For this stile most Reuerend sauioreth much that waies, if the stile of Archbishops be not by you misliked, for that hee is called a most reuerende Father, and your stile is to be well allowed of, that calleth him but a most reuerende and learned man. But, as we haue heard other most reuerende and learned men from beyonde the seas also, and from the most famous partes of all the worlde, and all of so manie hundred yeares before our times, yea, and before the vsurpation of the Pope: so let vs now heare also the iudgement of this most reuerende and learned man, and conferre it with the other, and with the best learned euen of

most re-

The Bishop that is of man, (saith this most reuerend & learned man) that is to say, brought into the Church by the alone wisdom of man, besides the expresse word of God, is a certaine power given to one certaine Pastor, aboue his other fellowes; yet limited with certaine orders or rules provided against tyrannie.

defined) I see as yet (in my simple & vnlearned iudgement) no great matter to be misliked in him, or cause that he should mislike in the B. of man.

Haue that here (me thinkes) he defines an other B. of man, then we defend or know of, to be among vs. And this is principally to be marked, that definitum & definitio doe so agree, that whatsoever is spoken of the partie defined, be answerable to the definition of him: and whatsoever is put in the definition, be in all pointes answerable, and neither more nor lesse, than is proper to the partie that is defined: or else, it is no good definition of y^e partie. For here concerning the B. of man, are adioyned these words, that is to say, brought into the Church by the alone wisdom of man, besides the expresse word of God. Where here this most reuerend and learned man, taketh on him to define such a B.: we take not vpon vs to defende or maintaine, such a Bishop, as is brought into the Church by the alone wisdom of man. For, the alone wisdom of man, is more foo-lishnes before God. Yea, (saith S. Paule 1. Cor. 8.) The wisdom of the flesh, is death, but the wisdom of the spirite is life and peace, because the wisdom of the flesh is enmitie against God. For it is not subiect to the law of God, neither indeede can be. But, it is such wisdom as S. James speaketh of, earthly, sensually, and diuinish. Iac. 3. while therefore, this most reuerend and learned man, speaketh here distinctly of the B. of man, from the Bishop of God: he confoundeth him with the B. of the Diuell. For what is the alone wisdom of man without the wisdom of God, but the very wisdom of the diuell?

For when man would be wise without God, he became a foole, & lost the Image of God, and was deformed with the image of the diuell, till by the liuely character of Gods expresse Image Iesus Christ, the Image of God was renewed in him. And if he do any thing of himselfe without the wis-dome of God, which is Iesus Christ, though in some respect it may be said his owne: yet, it is the Devils, from who all sinne first came. So that, here this triple distinction is confounded, neither indeede can it well be maintained, that he saith: we must needes make 3. Bishops. Where is neither need nor truth in this distinction, and (sauing the reuerence of euerie reuerend and learned man) it is but a captious distinction. Where with, seeing they dare not so; very shame; nor indeede can condemne all these holy fathers that maintained it, as maintaining a B. of the devill: they turne that cunningly to the Papistes, that are the open aduersaries: and devise a incane betwixt Gods Bishops, & the diuels, and that (so: soth) is the B. of man. ^{ent Bishops were of God.}

Wherein, good simple men, or rather well wanning soles, brought in a B. of their only or alone wisdom, & that (so: soth) is not the diuels B. but ^{There is no B. of man, but either he is the B. of God, or of the devill.}

whose is he then? Is there halting here betwixt God & Baal, and a meane betwixt Christ and Beliall? Was not Saules alone wisdom, without God, witchcraft? And is not witchcraft of the diuel? Doth not Christ say, he that gathereth not with me, is against me? And is not he y is against Christ, with the devill? Why then do ye seeke out these figges leaues, & not plainly say (if ye can so say, if ye dare so say) that this Bishop, which all these ho-lie fathers did acknowledge, was the diuels B? if ye say it was the diuels in into the Church. And marke whether they looke not like Gods childre, yea the notable & excellent, most reuerend & most learned saints of God, manie of them. And would all these set vp such an Idoll puppet as the diuels B. to be gouernour, & ouer-seer of Gods Church and many of them be such their selues? If ye say it was not the diuels Bishop. For he was not yet come, but that (as Beza and Danzeus say) hee made notwithstanding a way for the diuels Bishop to followe after. The reuerence still reserued of so learned and reuerende men, I dare not thinke so hardelie of them. For what is that, but to be the diuels Bishops gentle-men vsuers, preparers, and soze-runners of his Antichriste? And so all comes to one, they were all the diuels Bishops, saue that the lesse hurtfull diuels went before, and the moze perillous diuels came after. But all of them diuels incarnate, and no better then the diuels Bishops. But, God forbid, that euer we should so say, or thinke of them. It is no charitable iudgement of any (be he neuer so reuerende and learned man) vpon so manie holie, auncient, as god, and perhaps better Bishops of God, then is himselfe.

But if (to mollifie all this) he will defende this part of his distinction, they are of man, but not of the diuell: the let him put out these words brought in by the alone wisdom of man: yea, then let him confesse, (so: in the end he shall be driuen vnto it) that this B. of man, is euen the very B. of God also. If he say, it can not be, the B. of God, because it is besides the expresse worde of God: that which is included, can not well bee called besides, but within. And then who seeth not, that if it were so, besides, yet, that is no barre, if it be not debarred by the expresse worde of God, but be eyther of necessarie consequence included, or a matter left at liber-tie, and not expresse? Neither is this any whit enclining to the errors of the Popish Bishops of the diuell, that would bring in anie doctrines of diuels, or diuelish traditions of man into the Church of God, besides, that is, without and against the Scripture.

For if the Papists can proue any of those thinges though not expresse, yet of necessarie consequence included in the scripture, & we refuse them: then had they matter indeede to be iustly offended with vs. But where their doctrines and traditions (which we refuse) are such, as are neither expresse nor included in Gods word: what are they but in effect against it? Proue this Bishop that ye call, of man, to be of that stampe, and then indeede: Out on him, yea and out with him. He is then of man (I graunt) but he is of the Diuell also: and we will (God willing) with you renounce and desie him. But as for those holie auncient Fathers, they brought in no other Bishop but such as had good warrant, both incluse and also expresse in Gods word. And we haue none (I hope) nor defende anie, but that accordeth with these holie Fathers, and is not onely of man, but of God also.

And as we say thus, for the partie defined; so, for the definition, that this Bishop of man is a certaine power, giuen to one certaine Pastor above his other fellowes, yet limited with certaine orders or rules prouided against tyrannie. That the partie to whom power is giuen, may be called figuratiuely the power it selfe, is indeede in the expresse worde of God: Rom. 13. Let euerie soule be subiect to the higher powers. Now be it, for such a learned man, in a definition to set down, in the front of anie treatise, to expresse the nature of a thing, vpon the light and truth whereof all the treatise dependeth; he should (me thinkes) auoide such figures, & speake plaine, and not say a Bishop is a power giuen to a Pastor, for this is rather a definition of the Bishops office, then of the Bishop that enioyes it. But because they be so nêrely conioyned, and haue relation one to the other: let that goe. And although this difference heere set downe, that applieth this definition to the partie defined, bee so large that it stretcheth to other persons, as well as to a Pastor, and so conteyneth more than doth a Bishop: yet let that goe too. But doe ye thinke that a power limited with orders or rules prouided against tyrannie, is not a good and lawefull power? Or is such a power of the Diuell? If all power (that is indeede power) be of God: is not this much more of God, and acceptable to him? Yea, but (say you) be it neuer so good, yet the same to be giuen to one certaine Pastor above his fellowes, that is the point this learned man denyeth.

The most re-uerend con-futes him-

nition.

Yea: is that the matter? And what if he himsele, or euer he turne the leafe, in expresse wordes do say: all thinges ought to be done orderly in the Lordes house, and therefore, that some one shoulde be president in euerie assemblie? And can this bee doone, without a certaine power bee giuen to one Pastor above his other fellowes? Yea, but that (will hee saye) is not giuen him to continue, but for the continuance of the assemblie. But, this was lefte out of the definition, and

and he was called simple the Bishop of man, that had a certaine power giuen to one certaine Pastor, aboue his other fellowes, yet limited with certaine orders or rules provided against tyrannie. So that, hee that hath this power giuen him for a time of an assemblie, is by this reckoning the Bishoppe of God. And he that hath giuen him for longer time than an assemblie, is the Bishop of man. But I praye you, haue me reuerentlie commended to this most reuerende and learned man, and desire him to shewe mee this, in the expresse worde of God. For, I feare not, but that where-soeuer he shall finde the one, I will hazarde to finde the consequence of the other. And if this power may be giuen of man for a time: it is not then, (I take it) the difference of the power it selfe so much, nor of the competencie of it to the persons as the difference of the time, howe longer the person shall enioy this power that we contend for. We agree, that such a power as is limited, with certaine orders or rules provided against tyranie, is god, and lawefull, and of G O D. We agree also, that it may be giuen of man to a Pastor, aboue his fellowe Pastors for a time, and hee still remaine a Pastor, and they still remaine therein his fellowes; but in respect of this his limited power giuen him, he is aboue them for the time. As nowe the limitation of time, of the substance to make such difference, and that before God: But (I doubt not) if there bee no worse matter in the power it selfe, wee shall easilie obtaine a little longer time, than of a short assemblie, that our Bishop of man, being the man of God, may be Bishop of G O D also, and not so soone made a quondam, and another placed in his Bishopricke. Since, (be it shorte or long) there is no daunger at all of anie tyrannie in it. But as hee limiteth him for the time, so he addeth after this definition, a limitation also, or rather, a specification of the power, saying:

The most reuerend confesseth superiority of the power, but he differeth for the time.

They which did beare this office of Bishops, are called Bishops in regarde of their fellowe-Elders, and the whole Clergie, as watchmen set ouer the Clergie.

The most reuerend, Bridges.

True it is, that they are so called, though not onelie in regarde of their fellowe Elders, and the whole Clergie; but in regarde also of the whole people vnder them. And the regarde that is towarde their fellow-Elders and the whole Clergie, since it taketh not away the felowship of their brethren Elders, nor is anie absolute power, but a certaine power limited with certaine orders of rules provided against tyrannie: is a good regard and neither iniurious vnto their fellow-Elders, or to any man, and euen therefore acceptable vnto God.

But, saith this most reuerend and learned man: that this calling was not brought in by the worde, it is manifest, by that, that there is not to be founde in the newe Testament, so much as one syllable, whereby there may be the least surmise of any such thing.

Whether there be not to be found in the new Test. so much as one syllable, wherby there may be the least surmise of any such thing. I referre it to the consideration of that, which is already alleaged, not only concerning Timothy & Titus: but also out of the testimony of those historiographers & fathers cited, that lived either in the Apostles times, or followed next the. Yea, I referre it to Caluine & Beza themselves in the places before noted. And that is more, I referre it to the verie iudgement of this most Reuerend and learned man from beyond the seas, even in the very next sentence, immediately following this over-bolde, & too peremptory assertion.

For (saith he) although we doubt not, but all things ought to be done orderly in the Lordes house, and therefore that some one should be president in euery assemblie, whom Iohn in the Revelation seemeth to call the Angell of the Churches.

Bridges.

If some one should be president in euery assemblie, because all things ought to be doone orderly in the Lordes house: and the assemblie be of Priestes or Elders: then should one of the Priests or Elders be president ouer the residue. And if the assemblie continue not onely for actions done at one time, but continue still; then this presidentship ouer the Priestes or Elders should still continue, by the testimonie of this most Reuerend and Learned man; or else, all things should not be orderly done in the Lords house. But now, whether the assemblie of the Clergie & Pastoral Elders, did not continue at or about Ierusalem, and that there be not so much as one syllable, whereby there may bee the least surmise of any such thing: Ioke Act. 1. ver. 4. 13. and 14. Act. 2. ver. 1. & 42. 43. & 44. Act. 4. ver. 32. Act. 5. ver. 11. 12. and 13. Act. 6. ver. 2. & 5. Act. 8. v. 14. & 25. Act. 9. ver. 27. Act. 11. ver. 1. 2. 3. 4. and 22. Act. 12. ver. 12. Act. 15. ver. 2. 4. 6. 12. 22. 23. 24. 25. &c. Act. 21. ver. 18. By the conference of all these and other places, it is most apparant, that the assemblie of the Clergie at Ierusalem was still continuing. And therefore it followeth, that one should be stil a continuing president ouer them: or else, all things should not haue beene doone orderly in the Lordes house. And what differeth this continuing president (that is to say, one that sitteth higher than al the residue,) frō the Bishop, whom Egesippus, Clem. Euseb. Ierome, & Ambr. (as is aforesaid) described to be placed in the higher seate to ouer-see his Brethren, whereupon this name Episcopus Bishop, is deriued?

Marloratus
cap. 2.

Neither do I refuse the example, that this most Reuerend & learned man alleageth, saying: whom Iohn in the Revelation seemeth to call the Angel of the Churches. And what gathereth Marlorate, that S. Iohn meaneth, by this Angell? Angell and sent are all one. Whereupon we learne, that none can minister the worde of the Lorde purely, and with profit except, he be sent of the L. Rom. 10. c. 15. Iohn foretolde that he would write

write to the 7. Churches, as is aboue-said, 1. 4. 4. which thing he now be- gels of the ginneth to put in practise, while hee writeth to the Pastoures of those Churches.

Churches. For the Pastors ought not to be estranged frō the Churches, of whom is made one bodie. Of Ephesus wee spake 1. c. 11. From this Church of Ephesus, Iohn beginneth, because for the multitude of the be- lieuers, and the celebrite of the place, it was esteemed for the chiefest Church. And profitable was it to make the beginning from the same: that it being corrected, it might more easily be provided, for the corre- ction & health of other Churches. And although certaine things were to be corrected, as well in the people, as in the Clergie, (as they call the) not- withstanding he setteth not on the people, but on the Clergie. Neither calleth he vpon euery one of the Clergie by name, but on the Prince of the Clergie, that is to say, the Bishop. And that not without a reason. For the Pastor is to render accompt not only for his own sinnes, but also for the sinnes of those that are subiect to him, if it chance anie perish by his negligence or slouthfulnesse, as is containd Ezech. 3. c. 20. Moreover, euen as, so long as the stomake is sicke, health is provided to the other mēbers to no purpose, but the chiefest regard is to be had therof: euen so, ought the medicine of correction, to be ministred to the Pastors be- fore the people. For, as the ill stomacke infectes the nourishment with the which all the mēbers are encreased: so by the euill and noysome life of the Pastors, the life of the people is corrupted. Albeit, it is likely, that not any one of the gouernours of the Church, is in this and in the places following, noted: but with all, the whole succession of the B. and Elders of that Church, is by order to be taken. Although the minister of the place ought to be accounted alwaies amōg these to hold the chiefest.

By which collection of Marlorate it appeareth, that although S. Iohn by name of Angel, may comprehend generally the Clergie, to wit, chiefly the Pastors; yet here in writing especially to one, and calling that one the Angell of this or that Church; it is apparant, that some one or other, had a superioritie ouer the other of the Clergie in those Churches. Which one, is here peculiarly called the Bishop and Prince, or chiefe of the Clergie or Pastors. Among which Churches, Ephesus being reckoned one & the first, wherein (as we haue seene Bezaes testimonie) were manie Pastors: it is euident, that although after Timothie, yet in S. Iohns time, the Church of Ephesus, of whose Elders (if they were Elders of that Church only) cal- led by S. Paule to Miletum, wee had heard so much debated, how soeuer they might there be termed by the names of Bishops improperly: yet not- withstanding they had but one Prince or chiefe of all the Clergie there, which was indeede the Bishop or ouer-seer of them all, whom Christ here calleth, the Angell of the Church of Ephesus. And so likewise, we haue also to thinke of all the other Churches there named.

What office they had that are cal- led in the Reuelation, the Angels of the Chur- ches.

Loe, holwe this most reuerende and learned man, hath him- selfe against him- selfe, found out in the new Testament, a great deale more than one syllable, not of gathering the least surmise, but manifest evidence, that some one, yea, diuerse some such ones, bare this office of Bishoppes as Princes or chiefe in regarde of their fellowe Pastorall Elders, and of the whole Clergie, as principall watchmen, set ouer the other inferiour watchmen, in their seuerall, greater or lesser Cities and congregations. And therefore this Bishop that here is called the Bishop of man, is manifestlie brought in by Gods worde, cleane contrarie to this ouerbolde assertion, of this most reuerent and learned out-landish man, who-so-euer (sauiug his reuerence) he be. Neither can this shift following, elude this p^{ro}pos, wherein he saith:

And Austen calleth the moderator Proessôta, yet this moderator of actions of the Church, sauiug this one thing, that he was the first in order in the companie, had no authoritie ouer his fellowes, neither did he exercise anie higher office.

A Moderator.

I would faine the place had ben quoted where S. Augustine calleth the moderator Proessôta. What we might turne vnto it and peruse it, whether it be appliable to this question, yea or no. I feare me greatly, S. Augustine hath no such saying, especially meaning it, of a Bishop, that hee was such a Moderator of actions of the Church, sauiug this one thing that he was the first in order in the cōpanie: but, had no authority ouer his fellowes, neither did he exercise anie higher office. And what a Moderator call ye that which doth not exercise anie higher office? Is his moderatorship no office? And how can it be a moderatorship, and not higher? And how can he moderate his felowes, except he haue some authority ouer his felowes? Is this no more but this one thing, to be the first in order in the companie? Or rather, is it not to be the last in order, and the first in authoritie of higher office? For in order, the moderator speaketh the last, and in all deliberations, determineth, that is, endeth and knitteth by the matter. And the first in order, is rather in dignitie and authoritie the lowest, and commonly the punie (as they terme him) to all the companie. Whereas, if he be the moderator, to moderate the sentences of the all, his last voice strikes the stroke, and hath the first and highest authoritie in the company. Yea, but he is the moderator of actions of the Church. And doth that abridge his authoritie? What should he moderate, being a man of the church, but actions of the church? Graunt this, & there an end. For, whether ye meane by the Church, all the people of God, or onely the Clergie, as vsually, we take the name; if he must moderate all their actions, how hath he not in this moderation an authoritie ouer them, and an higher office? If ye meane by the actions of the Church, the actions of the Clergie assembled in a Synode: And is this no action of the Church to

to call and assemble the synode together, and appoint the time and place, and propound matter to them, as causes of the said assembly: or shall not the moderator (the Christian Princes supreme authoritie alwayes preserved) moderate these actions of the Church: if not; name who shall. if he shall; by what authority: and howe then are these actions of the Church to bee understood onely, of moderating the actions of those that are assembled in the synode? But if this party whome S. Iohn in the Revelation seemeth to call the Angell of the Church be this Proestor, & this moderator of the Churches actions; was there then in every one of those 7. Churches when S. Ioh. wrote to their Angels, that is, to their Proestores and moderators, a synode holden at that instant: for if there were not; the, these angels, Proestores, & moderators, were not so called in that respect; but in respect of those actions, that were vsual, & continuing among them, And indeede, such are the matters that Christ there, both commend or discommend them for: and not for moderating actions of any Synode then holden, or for being president in any such assemblies. It followeth therefore, that if they be of Christ himselfe called Angelles in the Revelation: and (as heere is sayde of Austen) Moderators and Proestores, that is, Monestes, or, such as had a principall being or cheefe standing among and ouer the Cleargy; that the termes were giuen them, rather for a continual office of higher authority, wherby they should be the presidents & moderators of euery assembly, when any such should by them be summoned; rather than they should be called by these names onely, for being presidentes and moderators of them, when they were assembled, when as there were no such assemblies there at that time to moderate, nor Synodes whereof they should be Presidents.

But, saith this most reuerend and learned man: Therfore the author of the Epistle to the Hebrues, as Hierome noteth, doth call the whole companie of the Elders, gouernours, not any one certain man.

Where Hierome noteth this, is not here noted, and therefore I can not note, what Hierome noteth thereon. But, that the author of the Epistle to the Hebrues calleth the whole company of the Elders, Gouernours; what hindreth this but that they also might haue a gouernour ouer them, and yet their selues be gouernours ouer others: and both S. Paule speake there, of any such companie of these gouernours assembled in a Synode, as this learned man speaketh of: else: wherfore is this here alleaged: and yet, if he spake of such an assemblie of these gouernours; if his speech should not admit any, some one certaine man to be gouernor also of them: how should then one be president in euerie assembly (likethat all things ought to be done orderlie in the Lordes house) if they be all alike and equall gouernours: neither is the example of Peter next alleaged, any whit against it, but rather for it.

How Peter,
Iames and Iohn were greater.

Caluine in
Act. 8. 14.

Peters gi-uing accout debarreth
not his su-perioritie.

Caluine, in
Act. 11. 2.

Such a one (saith this learned man) was Peter manie times in the very assembly of Apostles, of a great authority surely amongst the Apostles, who were all otherwise equal, and yet he himselfe one of the company of the apostles sent by his companions to Samaria with Iohn, Act. 8. 14. and in the assembly giuing an account of his ministry, to those which were of the circumcision, Act. 11. 2.

If Peter many times were such an one, that is to say, a President, Proestors and moderator of the assemblies of the Apostles: This is not onely to be of a great authoritie among them, but also, if of any authority at all, then this great, was greater among the Apostles, then the authoritie of others at that time was. But did this great or greater authority by and by cease from among them, vpon the ceasing of euery particular assembly? Doth not S. Paul acknowledge Peter to remayne still great among the Apostles, even when hee mencioneth no assembly of them? and what meaneth he by this great, but by way of comparison, that the other Apostles were lesse? and so Iames, and Peter and Iohn to bee greater then the residue. True it is, that here is sayde, they were all otherwise equall. But what doe these wordes also import, otherwise equall: ergo, this otherwise, being set aside: they were not equall. So that I perceiue in some respect, they that are not equalles, may otherwise be superiors or inferiors one to another, without pzeiudice of their equalitie well enough. Yea, Caluine, on this very example of Peter here alleaged, Act. 8. 14. doth say: In that Luke declareth that Peter was sent of the residue, hereon may be gathered that he exercised not an empire ouer his colleagues, but did so excel among them, that yet, he was vnder & obeyed the body. As who say, his superiority among the, was rather in respect of their particular persons, than of the whole Church or corporation. So that, this confutes the immoderate pze of the Pope, but denieth not a moderate superiority in the ministerie, wherewith it may very well agree. And this accordeth with Christes saying, Luke. 21. He that is greatest among you, let him be as the least. Neither doth this debarre Peters superiority, that in the assembly he gaue an account of his ministry to those which were of the circumcision, Act. 11. 2. For, if wee better regarde those persons, to whome he gaue this account: I doubt not, but all our brethren, yea, even this most reuerend and learned man will confesse, that he was farre superior vnto them. And if Apostleship haue any high authority: S. Paule Galat. 2. calleth him the Apostl: of the circumcision, so that, this his fact, debarreth not his superiority ouer them. And on those persons to whome Peter gaue this account, saith Caluine, But note, that when as before, Luke had sayd that the Apostles and the brethren heard this same: hee spake not a worde of offence. But now to bring in as it were a newe sect of men, that attempted strife with Peter: The brethren thren (saith he) hard it, he addeth nothing afterwards: it followeth, when Peter came to Ierusalem, they which were of the Circumcision chod with him, Who (verilye it must needs bee) were diuerse from the former. The particle of the Circumcision, doth not simply note the Iewes, but those that were too much addicted to the ceremonies of the Lawe. For there were no people of Ierusalem then in the flocke of Christe, but suche as were circumcised: from whome then shoulde they discern these? Last of all, it seemeth not likely that the Apostles, and those more moderate, which were of the number of the faythfull, did attempt this strife. For although they had beene offended, yet might they haue come to Peter priuately, and required a reason of the fact. By these reasons I am mooued, that I thinke them to be called of the circumcision, whome suche a religion of circumcision helde, that they woulde permitte no man to haue place in the kingdome of God, but him that receiued the profession of the Lawe, and beeing initiated by this holy ceremony, did put off vncleannesse. Men hauing Circumcision: This was not forbidden by the law of God, but it was an obseruation deliuered of the Fathers by handes. Neither yet doth Peter except, that in this behalfe he is handled too preciselie, that by the necessitie of the lawe of man he is not bound: hee omitte all this defense, but aunswereth onely, that they came to him before, and were offered to him as it were by the hande of God. Howbeit we here see the rare modestie of Peter, that whereas trusting on the goodnesse of his cause, hee might haue dispised the vnskillfull men, that vniustly were troublesome vnto him: notwithstanding, (as is decent to bee done among brethren) he doth gently excuse him selfe vnto them. Indeed this was no light tentation, that hee was vnworthily accused, seeing that hee had faithfully obeyed God. But because hee knewe, that a Lawe was giuen to the whole Church, that enery one shoulde be ready to render an account of his doctrine and life, so often as the matter so requireth: and he remembered that hee was one of the flocke: he not onely suffereth him selfe to bee brought into order: but of his owne voluntary, hee submitteth him selfe to the Churches iudgement. Verily the Doctrine if it bee of God, is placed aboue the dice of mans iudgement, but because God would haue prophecy to be iudged. 1. Cor. 14. 29. & 32: this condition must not be refused of his seruants, to proue themselues to be, such as they would be counted for to be. But how farre the defence as well of doctrine, as of facts, ought to proceede: wee shall see anon. This (for the present) must be holden, that Peter willingly descended to pleade his cause, when his fact was improoued. But if the Pope of Rome bee the successor of Peter, why shall not he be holden by the same Lawe. Howsoeuer we graunt this this kinde of submission was voluntarie, notwithstanding, why doth not the successor imitate suche an example of modestie shewed vnto him? albeit, heere need nothing circuite: for if it be true, that the popes vomit vp in their sacrilegious decrees, Peter falsely forsooke the priuileges of his sea, & so was the betrayer of the Romane Sea. For, after that they haue made the Pope, the iudge of the whole worlde, who may not be subiect to the iudgement of man: after that they extolled him aboue the Cloudes, that beeing free from all reason to bee rendred, hee might account his owne will and lust for Lawe: streight they ordeine (him) Patrone of the Sea Apostolicall, which stoutlie should maintaine the priuiledges thereof, Of what slouthfulnesse therefore shall Peter be condemned, if by yeelding so easily, hee cast off the right by God collated to him? Why did not hee at the leaste obiect, that he was free from Lawes and exempted from the common number? but hee alleageth before hande no such thing, but straight entereth into the cause. But let vs remember, that nothing letteth whereby wee may not falsely despise that idoll, sith that vsurping to himselfe such vnbrideled tyranny, hee hath put him selfe out of the number of the Byshops.

How Peter submitted himselfe.

Thus we see it at large by Caluin, though it be rightly alleaged against the insolency of the Pope: yet maketh it nothing against the lawefull superiority of Byshops, but rather for it: shewing, howe they shoulde vse it with such humility, that not onely they shoulde subiect themselues to the whole Church, but now and then, to base and vnskilful men beeing their accusers. (Such, as Beza also calleth these vntwo; thy accusers of S Peter) and of humblenesse of mind, and of their owne good will. render reasons to them of their doings, and yet, may well be, and (for al that) are, superior in all ecclesiasticall authoritie to those persons. But (saith this most reuerend and learned man) if any such Byshoplike authoritie of any one about the rest, as there was afterwarde, had bene then: surely the Apostles would haue set downe their names euen at that time, in their letters which they sent from one to another, especially, seeing Paule in his Epistle to the Philippians, doth name Byshops in their plurall number, and Deacons: or there should haue bene at least, some peculier mention made of them. Which seeing it is not done: it appeareth that amongst those gouernours, there was none in degree aboue their companion and fellow Byshops: but as occasion serued, the Churches were gouerned by a fellowlike and equall authority, among the fellow elders in their elderships, hee onely going before the rest, whose godlinesse & authority the company did most allow of.

This argument, if any such Byshoplike authority &c. had bene then: surely, the apostles would haue set downe their names, &c. which seeing it is not done, it appeareth &c. is gathered of probability, not brged of of necessity. And therefore with as easie probability, may be reiected. ^{ming of} If not: why is not this as good an argument: If any such doctors as might ^{the supe-} not exhort, and if any such elders as might not minister the word and sacraments, had bene then: surely, the Apostles would haue set down their names, in their letters which they sent from one to another. &c.

Which seeing it is not done; it appeareth, that among the ministers of the Church in the time of the Apostles, there were no such doctors nor

Elders. If now this moste reuerend and learned man shall say, what though the Apostles set not downe their names, which they were not bound to do, nor needed: yet if the matter bee prooued playn inough, that there were then such offices; it makes no matter, though we want the names, to know who were then such officers. So we, although this for the matter of those offices be not yet shewed; yet, were it shewed, if the names of the officers be not shewed also; where is the vertue of our most reuerend and learned mans argument then become? and yet (God be praised) the assumption of this argument is not so true. For wee can shewe, and doe shewe, both apparant matter, and names also, that there was some one amonst the gouernours euen at that time, that was in degree aboue his companions and fellow Byshops. As, besides Peter, Iames and Iohn, who (as is aforesayde) are expressely in the text it selfe, by

S. Paule, named greater than the rest of the Apostles, not onely the subscriptions of the Epistles to Timothy and Titus, declare: but also a great part of the matter contained in them, both not of probability but of necessity inferre it. But what neede further proofes or playner testimony, than this most reuerend and learned mans owne mouth against himselfe, and that in this selfe same sentence; for, what exception is this that followeth here? There was none aboue their companions and fellowe Byshops, but as occasion serued, the Churches were gouerned by a fellowlike & equall authoritie, among the fellow elders in their Elderships, hee onely going before the rest, whose godlinesse and authority the company did most allow of: For if he onely were going before the rest: how then was their authority equall? yea, but he had none authoritie, but by their allowance. What is that to the purpose: had he authority by their allowance? So much the better, when so good men did allow such authority, for one amongst them to go before the rest: and the worse for all those that will not now allow the like. Yea, but (saith he) he onely going before the rest, whose godlinesse and authoritie the company did most allow of.

So that here is not onely his authority allowed of, but also his godlines.

And well woorthy. Thinke ye that we defend, that any should be allowed this authority without godlinesse? allowe the authoritie to the godly; and then, disallowe and proue the party to be vngodly that is allowed it, and I hope, if it bee done in good order, all that allow of godlinesse will allow your dissallowing. Yea, but what was this authority here allowed? but of one onely going before the rest? What meaneth this learned man, by only going before the rest? Doth he meane of going only, as the gentlemen vschers or other officers prepare the way for Princes, and more honourable personages than themselves, to follow: or as, when those that are companions in the respect, fellowe and fellowlike, hauing equall authority, and yet they can not goe altogether cheeke by cheeke: some one of necessity must goe before his fellowes in a narrowe passage, notwithstanding all they that came after him, are in all points of of equall authority and fellowlike vnto him? What a going before is this: or how is this sayd, to be a going before by authority: for if one amongst them went before the rest of the Pastors or B. with authority, what else is this, but that one was in degree aboue his companions and fellow pastors or bishops? yea, but this saith he, was as occasion serued. And I thinke so, for occasion serued very well. But howsoeuer it then serued, then it was. And so by this learned mans owne confessions, hee answereth and confuteth himselfe, til inferring that this Bishop of man, had his beginning euen in the Apostles times.

Bridges
Epiphanius against the Aerians.

But first, in that he saith, Epiphanius against the Arians defending the contrary opinion.

True it is, Epiphanius did mightely oppugne also the Arians, as the Capitall enemies of our faith, and Aerius that begarne this schisme in the churche about this equalitie, was likewise an Arian. Howbeit this is not here so properly sayde, Epiphanius against the Arians, defending the contrarie opinion, namely, the Byshop ordeyned by man, &c. As to haue sayde, Epiphanius against the Aerians. &c. for although Aerius were also an Arian, and denied the diuinity of Iesus Christe: yet was not Arius an Aerian, nor (that I reade of) made any Question about this matter. Which that it may appeare, and who this Aerius was,
and

and what in these poyntes (besides other) he oppugned: let vs heare Epiphanius himselfe declare it.

And likewise (sayth Epiphanius) there arose one Acrius, a greate hurt vnto the Worlde, beeing of a boystrous minde and list vp in his owne opinion. For, whether it were by reason of vaine-glory, or of haughty pride, hee effected all their haresie, that by rashnesse hath beene wroughte, euen from the beginning to the ending. Verely, eyther lust or enuy agaynst his neyghbours, or greefe of mynde, or frowardnesse, wrought these thinges. In conclusion, blindenesse is of the Deuill, not that the Deuill can doe any thing agaynst a mans will, but that euery one is the authour to him selfe of the worke of sinne. Whereby (as hee sayth) those that bee good and sounde, may bee made manifest. This Acrius liueth in the flesh, and is yet aliue euen at this day. Verily altogether an Arian, for hee thinketh not otherwise than euen as Arius doth; yea, and stretcheth further beyonde the poyntes that are of Arius. Quicke of speeche, and in this part hauing his lippes armed, that hee might drawe to him selfe, euen an armye of suche as are beguiled, and a multitude of suche as haue itching eares, and a loose mynde. For he also hath deuised vnto the world, a certaine fabulous and vayne opinion, which is ridiculous to those that are prudent, and yet hath he deceiued and allured many by the same.

Epiphanius contra heres. lib. 3. 10. 1. Her. 75. The originall from whence Acrius conceived this error against bishops.

Whome Acrius beguiled,

This manne was Schoole-fellowe with Eustathius the Sebastian, of the region so called of Sebastea, of Pontus or little Armenia. For they were both trayned vp together, the foresayde Eustathius and Acrius: but when Eustathius came to a Byshopricke, hee (Acrius) did the more lust after it, but hee obteyned is not. Heerevpon arose enuye, but Eustathius seemed to flatter Acrius. For streyght wayes after, hee made him priest, and committed an Hospitall vnto him, which in Pontus is called Ptochotropheum, of nourishing the poore.

Emulation & enuy the ground, on repulse of promotion.

For the prelates of the Churches doe builde suche places for the loue of hospitalitie. Causing the maymed and impotent persons to lodge there, and according to their abilitie, provide victualles and necessities for them. When as therefore his wrath was not yet appeased, speeches daylye encreased, and their emulation brake forth abroade, and talke not very good, yea, slaunders were giuen forth of Acrius agaynst Eustathius. But the Byshoppe Eustathius calling Acrius vnto him, flattered him, exhorted him, threatened him, chased with him, comforted him, and yet wrought nothing with him. For that platforme that was layde downe in the beginninge, draue him into this greate euill vvoorke:

Acrius promoted to be master of an hospitall of the poore.

B. Eustathius flattering & sawning on Acrius.

and so, at the length forsaking the hospitall, Aerius went away. Heere-vpon purposing to finde a pretence against his enemy, or searching to hurl a dart at his aduersarie, and from that time forth slaundering Eustathius before all men, he sayde, he is nowe no more such a person, but he is false to gathering of mony, and to the possession of all sortes of thinges by all manner of meanes. And this verily deuised he of mere slaunder. Howbeit in very deede, whereas Eustathius had in his handes the necessities ecclesiastical, he coulde not otherwise do, and the things that were spoken by Aerius seemed probable. But if any shall thus think with himselfe, sith that (speaking against Aerius) wee haue by the way brought in Eustathius, doe we therefore with prayers extoll Eustathius? verily, not a few men haue his life and policy in admiration. But would to God he had also thought a right in the fayth. For euen he also helde the opinion of Arius, from the beginning to the ending. Neyther did the troubles of persecution amend him, for hee suffered persecution with Basilus, with Bleusus and with others. Yea, hee was seene also to travell in legacie with many other Byshoppes to Liberius the happie bishop of Rome, (or rather unhappy for he him selfe also fell from the faith & became an Arian) And to subscribe to the confession of the right faith made by setting forth of the Nicene councel, but afterward as bethinking himselfe, & as one awaked out of sleep, he left not of to consider again his former poynts, of the wicked opinion of the Arians, but we haue to speak of Aerius & therefore we must again direct our speech to him. He (for the forsaide reasons) doth in the beginning crake of his renouncing.
And hauing forsaken the hospitall, he toulled vnto him a great multitude of men and women, But hee with his company was driuen from the Churches, the fildes the villages, and other cities, and often with his great company they liued watching and sober in the fieldes, and continued all night abroad vnder the open skye, and vnder the rock, and fled to the woodes. But his speech was rather furious, then according to the condition of man. And he sayde, what is a Byshop to a Pastor, the one differeth nothing from the other. For, it is one order. Yea (sayth he) it is one honour, and one dignity. A Byshoppe vseth imposition of handes, so doth a priest. A Byshop baptizeth, so doth a Priest. A Byshop maketh the dispensation of the worship of God, and a Priest likewise.
A Bysh. sitteth in his throne, a Priest sitteth also. Heerein hee deceiued many, and they had him for their guide.

Thus farre Epiphanius vpon the occasion and description of this error. Whereby we see, that this most reuerend and learned man is outshot in this, that he saith Epiphanius heere wrote against the Arians: for although by the way he mention them, with whose heresse Aerius and Eustathius were both infected: yet hauing written against the Arians before, foze, Lib. 2. to 2. hares. 69. Were Lib. 3. to. 1 hares. 75. He wrote against Acrius: And maketh this his proper and his first error. And withall Epiphanius telleth, on what occasion of emulation and enuie this error sprang and with what obvious slaunders and denises it was set out, and with what reasons and arguments it was defended, and what multitudes of men and womē were allured by it, and how they behaued themselves, &c. Al which thinges drawe so nere (the heresie of Arius, and other errors of this Acrius set aside) to the foze shadowing of these controuersies, that we may all now (with grēse and teares) see the very cause, why the malicious and slaunderous aduersaries of the Gospel, object falsely vnto vs to be Acrians because these our bzethzen (which we do not) do seeme so nere to folloiw the error, the occasion, the dealings and the argumentes of Acrius: in this matter. Now to Epiphanius confutations of them.

But let vs come (sayth hee) to the oppositions against him, reciting but a fewe thinges, and so passing ouer them, and that indeede because the whole matter is full of folly, and manifest vnto those that are wise.

For, to say that a Byshop and a priest are equall, how is it possible? fithe that the order of byshops is the begetter of the Fathers. For that order begetteth the fathers to the Church, but the order of Priestes is not of ability to beget the fathers, but begetteth sonnes to the Church, by the regeneration of baptisme, but not the fathers or Doctors. And howe was it possible to ordeine a priest, not hauing imposition of handes, for to elect, or to say, he is equall vnto, a byshop? But his trifling and his enuy, deceiued the foresayde Acrius. But he alleageth for his error, and the error of them that harken to him: that the Apostle writeth to the Priests and Deacons, and writeth not to the Byshops, and saith to the bishop, despise not the gift that is in thee, which thou haste receiued by the handes of the priesthoode (or elderhip,) and againe in another place, he writeth to the Byshops and Deacons. Therefore (sayth hee) a byshop and a priest is all one, and he vnderstandeth not, (beeing ignoraunt of the consequence of the trueth) and hath not read the mozte profounde hystories, that while as the preaching was new, the holy Apostle wrote according to the occasion of the matter, euen as it was. For whereas byshops were ordeyned, there he wrote to byshops and Deacons? For the Apostles coule not ordayne all thinges foorthwith: for it was needeful to haue priests and deacons. For, by these two, the ecclesiasticall thinges may be filled vp. But whereas there was not founde any worthy of a byshoprike: the place abode without a byshop, but where as neede was, and there were that were worthy of a byshoprick, ther byshops were ordeyned. But when as there was no multitude, and there were not founde among them that should be ordeyned priests or elders: there were they content with a bishop only, ordeyned in that place alone. But it is impossible for the Byshop to be without a deacon. And the Apostle provided that Deacons should be made vnto the Byshop, for the ministry. Thus did the Church receiue the filling vp of the dispensation, thus were the places furnished at this time: for euery thing had not all thinges at the first beginning: but in the processe of time, those thinges were provided for, that are requisite to the perfection of thinges necessary. Indeepe Moses was sent into Aegypt, (as hath the olde Testament) onely with a rodde. but beeing sent of God, when he should goe forth into Aegypt, his brother Aaron was added to bee an helper vnto him: and then after he had giuen his commission to his brother, a senate was gathered to him, and the princes of the people of that time. And after these thinges, the worke being corroborated, and a company to followe him being gathered together, hee passed through the sea: and as yet thinges were not according to the Lawe, till the Lorde called him into the mount: and then he gaue him the foldinges (or tables) of the commaundementes, and shewed vnto him howe he should build the tabernacle, and promote Princes and Captaynes of tenne, of fiftie of hundreth, and tribunes of the souldiers: And thou seest howe thinges are enlarged. Thou shalt doe all thinges (sayth hee) according to the forme shewed thee in the mount Sinai. And thou seest how the cansticke, hauing seuen lightes is added, the vestiments reaching downe to the feete, the preestely garments, the belles, the cloakes, the little coats, the cappes, the miters, the setting of the precious stones, the Cuppes, the morters, the censers, the Basons, the Alters, the dishes, Masmaroth, which are colanders: Midicoth, which are called gobbettes, Mechoth, which are steps, and whatsoeuer the Lawe reherseth, Cherubins and other thinges. The Arke of the Testament, the stauces, the rings, the tent, the collars, the skinned red, the pottes and other thinges, porters, Trumpets cast and crooked, golden and of siluer, brasen and of horne, and other thinges that the Lawe nameth: diuers sacrifices and doctrines. For whereas these thinges were not at the beginning, did not these thinges therefore after the order was made put men to businesse: and euen so those thinges that are written by the apostle, vntill such time as the Church was enlarged, vntill she came to her proper measure, vntill she was most rightly gouerned with the ornature of vnderstanding, by the Father, the Sonne, and the holy ghost. And downe fell the saying of Aerius. And that it cannot be all one, the diuine saying of the Apostle teacheth, who is a Byshoppe, and who is a priest or elder: When as hee sayth to Timothy, that was a Byshoppe, Rebuke not a Priest or an Elder; but exhort him as a Father. What shoulde a Byshoppe haue to doe not to reprove a priest or elder, if he hadde no power ouer a Priest or elder? euen as hee sayth agayne, Admitte no accusation lightlie against gainst a preeſte or elder, except before two or three witneſſes, and hee Epiph. ſayde not to anie Prieſte, admitte no accusation againſte a Byſhoppe: argument. Neyther wrote hee to any Preeſte, that hee ſhoulde not chide a Byſhop. And thou ſeeſt, that all the ruine of him that is ſhaken of the deuill, is no ſmall ruine.

These are the argumentes of Epiphanius agaynſte Acrius on this matter. Nowe let vs ſee howe This moſt reuerende and learned man, doth aunſwere the argumentes of Epiphanius.

Epiphanius (ſayth hee) againſt the Arians, defending the contrary opinion, namelye, the byſhoppe ordeyned by man, as ordeyned by God, doth bring foorth three reaſons to the contrary: Two as it were out of the worde of God, the thirde out of the hiſtorye of, thoſe times: the firſt place is, 1. Timothy 5. 1. Rebuke not an elder. &c. The moſt reuerend.

It is ſtraunge to ſee, howe theſe our Baſethen vnder countenaunces and Titles, ſo ſetſtalling the credite of moſte reuerend and learned men, would carry away the matter, againſt theſe reuerend and learned ancient Fathers: Yea, and that againſt the manifeſt worde of God: And firſt, concerning this Father Epiphanius, hath hee beere brought forth but three reaſons: If this moſte reuerend and learned man him ſelfe, in proſecuting Epiphanius reaſons, doe alleage more then three: then blame him ſelfe, for this ſo manifeſt an vntrueth. Except hee will peraduenture ſalue it thus: What though hee brought foorth threescore yet we may ſay, hee brought foorth three, And thinke yee wee may thus dally with theſe Fathers: But as hee handleth the number of the Reaſons: ſo likewiſe hee proceedeth in the order of them. Hee ſayth the firſt place is 1. Timothy 5. 1. If by the firſt place, hee meaneth the firſt reaſonne that Epiphanius bringeth foorth: Epiphanius is moſte playne to the contrarye, and hee manifeſtlye inuerteth Epiphanius Order. But lette vs take his aunſweres, as it pleaſeth him to aunſwere them. Bridges

The firſt place is 1. Timothy 5. 1. Rebuke not an Elder. &c. Whereby hee gathereth that Timothy had ſome authoritie ouer the Elders, that is, the paſtors of the Church of Ephesus: but (be it ſpoken with the fauor of ſo worthy a man) he ſhould haue marked, that here an elder is called, he that is ſuch by age, not hee that is a paſtour, which is declared by the oppoſition next following of yong men. The moſt reuerend,

I deny not, but that the worde episkopos in that place is aptlye, and moſte commonly vnderſtoode, in the naturall ſenſe, for Elders in reſpect of age. But to denye that Epiphanius or any other, maye not alſo apply it to Elder in office, which on the Græke, by contraction, is called Prieſt: is too hard a challenge of ſo worthy a man: eſpecially ſince he makes the key of his reaſon on the word presbyteros ſaying, what ſhould a Bridges. byshop haue to do, not to reprocue a priest (or elder) if hee had no power ouer a priest (or elder)? And vnderstanding elder in his natural sence for elder in age, as also yonger in age, that Timothy shoulde not rebuke them: both not this p^resuppose, that he had some power ouer them so to dorif then Saint Paul anone after in the same chapter, would haue Timothy openly reprocue them that sinne: and there (without all exception) hee specially speaketh of the elders in office and pastors: and this inferreth an authority, that Timothy had ouer the pastorall elders, whereby hee might or might not so rebuke or reprocue them: howe then, is not this reason that Epiphanius maketh a good reason? That, being forbidden to abuse it: he had authority for to vse it, and so therein, had some power ouer them. And that this may be applied, not onely to the elder in age: but also to the elder in office: as Epiphanius sets downe the whole sentence, rebuke not an elder but magistri exhort him as a father: See Peter, 1 Pet. 5. 1. for this latter part, vseth the same word magistri (to the Elders, to whome notwithstanding he was Superior) that Paule p^rescribeth hereto Timothy. To conclude, as the Caluine and Beza both confesse, that the 10. verse of this chapter is vnderstande of those that are Elders in pastorall office, what differeth it in effect from this sentence? and howe holdeth not Epiphanius reason? He might reprocue pastors: Ergo he had some authority ouer them, and so one pastor had at that time a superior authority ouer other his fellow pastors.

The most reuerend.

Another place (saith this learned man) is out of the same Epistle, receyue not an accusation against an elder. 1. Tim. 5. 19. Whereby hee gathereth, that the elders were subiect to the byshops and tribunall seate: but who will graunte him that Timothy was bishoppe of Ephesus?

The most reuerend answering Epiphanius argument.

Epiphanius heere both mention no tribunall seate at all, nor gathereth his argument in this loose manner, and me thinks (by good reason and law of Logike) if this learned man would deny Epiphanius reason: he shoulde set downe his wordes and make some argument of them: and deny, or graunt, or distinguish some part of the argument. For yet at the least, he did so before. But now he letteth the argument go cleane away, & onely denyeth another assertion: that Epiphanius had set downe, before hee made the former argument: where onely speaking of Timothy, that was (saith he) a byshop. These wordes, this learned man catcheth up for halting. And as for the argument, that Epiphanius gathereth on Saint Pauls wordes to Timothy: he medleth nothing with it. Wherein (me thinks) he goeth wiselie (though not so learnedly) to worke to sinke away from the wordes of the argument, and make as though he sawe them not. For if hee had but looked on them, hee shoulde playne-ly haue seene, howe fully they proue the matter now in question. Epiph those Pastors that haue authority giuen them to admit or not admit accusations made against other pastors, are superior pastors or Byshops vnto them. And on the contrary, they that haue no such authority giuen them, are not superior pastors. But Timothy a pastor in Ephesus hath authority giuen him. 1. Tim. 5. ver. 19. to admit or not admit accusations made against other pastors: and contrariwise, the other pastors in Ephesus haue no such authority giuen them ouer him: Ergo, Timothy was a superior pastor in Ephesus ouer the other pastors, What is to say, their Byshop. This being the effect of the argument, this learned man denieth onely this, that Timothy was Byshop of Ephesus. But goe to, let vs see how hee denies the same, or proues his deniall.

Who will graunt (sayth hee) that Timothy was Bishop of Ephesus?

Forsothe, that will I, for any thing I see yet. Nay rather, not who will; but, who can rightly deny, or slide the force of this, and other arguments that inferre it? But sayth this most reuerend and learned man.

For the history will easily refell that which the fathers doe report as certayne.

And doe the Fathers then report it, and that, as certayne and both this most reuerend and learned man, so confidently as he, who will grant it: when he himselfe confesseth, that the fathers graunt it, and that, as certayne? Doe they report it as certayne, and yet denie it? or is the report that the reuerend and learned fathers make, as certayne: of so light regard with him? this (me thinkes) be he neuer so much his selfe, a most reuerend and learned man, is a little too much liking of his owne, and too little esteeming of the learned fathers iudgements. But what reason hath he, why we should thus discredit the fathers report, and, credite his? For the history (sayth he) will easily refute it. And what histories the history of the Actes by S. Luke recorded? And did not the fathers know, or did they reject the credite of this history? but let vs see how the history will easily refell them.

For no man (sayth he) can deny, that Timothy was one that accompanied Paule, and therefore no Bishop assigned to any certayne place, who was sent one while to this place, another to that, for the establishing of the Churches: and finally, that he was an Euangelist, and not a byshop of any one certayne flocke. I haue desired thee (sayth hee) to abide at Ephesus, whilest I went into Macedonia. And why? namely to looke to the Church which he had begun to establish, vntill hee were called for agayne, which he doth in the other epistle. What? and did the Apostle robbe the Ephesians of their Byshop, without asking their Church at the least? Surely, when hee went last to Hierusalem, neuer minding to returne to Ephesus: eyther he woulde haue restored at hand? or if another were to be put in his roome, hee woulde haue made expresse mention in that his diuine Sermon: but hee is sayde to

Bridges. To al this (saue y^e which is inserted of his being euangelist) I answere with the old rule, distingue tempora, concilia loca, Distinguish the times, & thou reconcilest the places. For, if this epistle were witten after Saint Pauls first beeing prisoner at Rome, as I haue already proued it likely inough so to haue haue beene: then is all this descant lost, and the fathers report, may be as certayn, as they report it, for any thing in the history to the contrary, well ynough. Yea, if it had beene witten before: why might not Timothy (after he was by the Apostle settled, and commanded to stay at Ephesus as byshoppe) haue come from his Byshopricke, at Saint Pauls sending for him, to doe further good at his returne, and another supply his absence at such a time? Neither did Paule robbe herein the Ephesians, sending to them another faithfull minister to supply his place, or (if hee came no more agayne vnto them) to succede him. And though this chaunge might at the first bee somewhat greenous to the Ephesians, yet knowing the Apostles minde and authority herein, no doubt they yelded their willing assent thereto. Of his returne the historie of Luke mencioneth not, no: any other part of the Scripture: The historie of the Magdeburgenses, Cent. 1. lib. 2. cap. 10. pag. 614. lin. 35. write thus of him: When he was requested of Paule to abyde at Ephesus, and there instruēt the Church, of the which matter Paul prescribeth to him cer-tayne preceptes, throughout the whole former epistle to Timothy: he stayed at Ephesus. Vpon which occasion Eusebius, li. 1. Cap. 14. sayth Sophronius and verie many other haue deliuered foorth, that hee was made the first byshop of the Ephesians, but that hee was sent before to the Corinthians, for because also of the ministerie, it appeareth out of the former epistle, Chapter 16. and that in ioynt labour with Paule he wrote the later epistle to the Corinthians 2. Cor. 1. because it is also coniectured out of the Epistle to the Philippians, Chap. 2 that he was with Paule at Rome vnder Nero: but howe, and howe long, he ruled Doctour and gouernour of the Church of Ephesus, nothing plaine and certayne is deliuered foorth, of any approoued writer. Where-uppon, neyther canne wee affirme for certayne, that at Ephesus, (because, hee comming neere to the Porche of the Temple of Diana, reprooued the Idolatry of the Ephesians) hee suffered martyr dome, being ouerwhelmed with stakes and stones, which very manie haue de-liuered foorth, as Antoninus, and Vincentius, Lib. 38. Chap. 10. out of Poly-

Polycrates the Preeft or elder. Henricus de Erephordia; that sayd Timothy suffered vnder Nerua: but Nicephorus, Lib. 3. chap. 71. vnder Domitian. As for the Ephesians requiring him agayn, (when Paul Act. 20. was at Miletum, and sozetoled the bihoppes there collected of the great daunger at hande) ariseth onely on this learned mans surmise, that Timothies being among the Ephesians, and his calling away from them, was before Paules comming to Miletum. Which both wee haue sufficiently improued, neyther can it agree eyther with the forner, or especiallye with the later Epistle of Paule to Timothy. For how coude they require him againe of Saint Paul, or that he woulde restore Timothy vnto them: when in the forner Epistle Paule requireth him, that as hee left him there, so he woulde tary there: and in the later Epistle hee writeth for him being there, to come from thence to Rome to Paule, where hee was then prisoner and ready to bee offered vp to death: so that, all that while, hee was not from them, and this was long after Paules being at Miletum: and so with all, this vnnecessarie coniecture depending hereon, is cleane cut off: that if another had bene put in his roome, Paul would haue made expresse mention thereof: or of the others name, in that his diuine sermon. For, neither is it likely, that of all thinges then and there done or spoken, in that his diuine sermon, expresse mention is made, but onely of that, that was sufficient for Luke to haue expresse, to that purpose, for the which hee sets downe that his diuine sermon, neyther coude this sending for of Timothy bee mentioned then, which was done in another place, and long after, in the other Epistle, Chapter 5. as this learned man him selfe confesseth: and yet euen there, Paul plainly, expresseth also, whom hee sent to Ephesus, euen by name, Tychicus, when he sent for Timothy to come from them. But leasse none of all these shiftes should serue the turne: This learned man also hath learned the olde refuge, that hee was an Euangelist: and then sozoth, what authority soeuer he had:

Bishop of Ephesus.

Tychicus sent in supply of Timothy.

Yet it neede not seeme straunge to any, that the Euangelist Timothy, a man indued with so many, and so great giftes remaining at Ephesus, did gouerne all thinges by his direction, as one in degree aboue the Elders, and by the Apostles authoritye appoynted there for a time.

The most reuerend.

This seemeth somewhat straunge, at leasse to mee, that this moste reuerende and learned man, shoulde deale in this matter in so strange a fashion. For that after these arguments of Epiphanius, enforcing a superiour authority in Timothy, are by him flatly denied, and with these shiftes eluded: heere in the end it is now granted, that bothe he hadde a superior authoritie ouer the Pastors of Ephesus, and that hee remayned there, and that he gouerned all thinges by his direction.

Which withall, implieth an higher authority then either Epiphanius bragged, or is in question, Howbeit, here is yet another stale shift. This is not graunted him as Byshop, but as Euangelist, and as a man endued with so manie and great giftes. For his giftes, they are no hindrance why hee might be no Byshop, nor any debarre to any other Bishop, but rather the contrary: both he was the better byshop, and the better example to all other Bishops. The gifts of S. Steuen bebarre not, but another which hath not so many and so great gifts may be Deacon, as well as hee. As for Timothies being an Euangelist, because Paul bids him, doe the worke of an Euangelist. If this be ynough to proue he was an Euangelist: then whereas the words in the same sentence, 2. Tim. 4. ver. 5. Immediately followe, fulfill thy Deaconshep or ministry, it should followe he was a Deacon or a Minister iointly with his Euangelistship, and so was Titus, and those that were ioyned with him, as appeareth, 2. Co. 7. ver. 6, 7. 6. that Titus fulfilled this worke of a Deacon, and gathered the almes and beneuolence of the Corinthians, and Paul requested Titus, ver. 6. that as he & 13. c. 8. i. had begun, so he would fulfill this beneuolence. And ver. 16. he giveth God thanks, that he put such carefulnesse for them in Titus his hart, and commendeth his promptnesse to trauaile heerein. And verse 18. hee sayth: But wee haue sent together with him, that brother whose prayse is in the Gospell, through all the Churches &c. On which wordes sayth Caluine; that three are sent: it is an argument, that a great great expectation was conceiued of the Corinthians, whereupon it behooued them to bee more heede-full vnto their duety, leaste they shoulde deceiue the hope of the Churches. Moreouer, who this seconde was, it is vncertayne, saue that some coniecture it was Luke, other that it was Barnabas. Chrysostome rather thinketh it was Barnabas, to whome I assent, because it is certayne hee was by the voices of the Churches, ioyned a companion with Paule. Howbeit because it is receiued by the common consent almoste of all, that Luke was one of those that caried his Epistle, I mislike not to haue him assigned to the thirde place. As for the seconde, whosoeuer in conclusion it was, he adorneth him with a notable testimony, that he was exercised in the gospell with commendation, that is, hee deserued prayse in promoting the Gospell. Gwalter (and much better in my opinion) thinketh rather that it was Saynt Luke, and coulde not bee Barnabas, si the Paule and Barnabas fell at strife about Marke, and parted asunder, Actes 15. verse 39. before the Corinthians were as yet conuerted to the sayth. But were it the one or the other: si the both here, with Titus, he did so diligentlie exercise and fulfil the work of a Deacon: and Barnabas was a Doctour: and Luke an Euangelist: and Titus also is called of Caluine an Euangeliste: if these offices then (without confusion of them) might bee thus iointly combined in one person, person, why might not Timothie bee as well a Bishoppe as a Deacon, of Timoth. though he were also an Euangelist? He could not (saith he) be a Bishop. Euangelist For And why for? For, a Bishop is one that is assigned to a certaine place: ship.

 but, no man can denie that Timothie was one, that accompanied Paul; and therefore no Bishop assigned to any certaine place, who was sent one while to this place, another to that, for the establishing of the Churches.
 And hadde not a Deacon a certaine place to, although on occasion he might be sent to another? But a Bishop must be Bishop of a certaine flocke. Timothie was not a Bishop of any certaine flocke: This is a mere flocke and not true. Did Timothie accompanie Paul from place to place, after hee was assigned of Paule to settle himselfe at Ephesus?
 Had he not then a certaine flocke, and was assigned to a certaine place?
 And did he not there remain (even by this learned mans own confession) till in the later Epistle. S. Paule againe sent for him, and appointed another to supplie his absence? And therefore, although an Euangelist, yet a Bishop. And why not an Euangelist and a Bishop: as well as an Apostle and a Bishop, as S. James was? Yea, if an Euangelist, then a Bishoppe.
 Zuinglius in his booke of a preachers office, saith on this wise, upon the chiefe place Ephes. 4. so earnestly urged by all our Brethren. Paule in this his distribution of offices, mentioneth Euangelistes in the thirde place, whome he saith to be no lesse ordeyned of Christe, than are those other. But the office of an Euangelist differeth no whit at all, from that office that is committed to a prophet, if so be that we take a Prophet (as right nowe was sayde) for a watch man, which rooteth vp that which is euill, and planteth that which is good. Neither is also an Euangeliste any other than a Bishop, or than he is whom he call a Pastor, as we may certainly gather out of S. Pauls words, (in which calling vpon his Ti-mothie) he saith: But watch thou in all things, harden thy selfe in afflictions, doe throughlie the worke of an Euangelist, make thy ministerie approved to the full. 2. Tim. 4. But Timothie at that time when Paule wrote these things to him, performed the office of a Bishop: where-upon it is evident, that according to the opinion of Paule the office of a Bishop and of an Euan-gelist is all one. Which thing euery man may easily gather by the words also of Paule going before. About the beginning of the same Chapter, he writeth thus: Preach the word, vge it in season and out of season. Reproue, rebuke, exhort with all lenitie and doctrine. What shal we call this anie thing else, than to be the office of a Bishop of a Prophet & of a Pastor? What can bee plainer than these wordes of Zuinglius? Neither are these (as Megander in his commentarie on the Ephesians saith) vaine & frivolous reasons, but waightie reasons.
 But had we no other reason than out of Caluine, with the assertion of this our Learned brethrens discourse, saying: a Pastor is all one and the same

same that is a Bishop: yet (saye they) Timothie had the office of an Elder. And Timothie (sayth Caluine on, 1. Tim. 4. verse, 14.) was a Pastor, yea, the holie Ghost (sayth hee) had destinated by Oracle Timothie to be chosen into the order of Pastors: Ergo, Timothie euen by the appointment of the holy Ghost was a Bishop.

Nowe if Timothie were a Bishop: then also by Epiphanius reason out of S. Paule (which holdeth for any thing by this most Reuerende and learned man alleaged against his reason) he was a Superiour also of other Pastors. Yea, as Caluine sayth vpon these wordes to Timothie: Let no man despise thy youth, but be an example of the faithfull in wordes, &c. as though he sayde, see that in grauitie of manners thou gettest to thy selfe so much reuerence, that thy youthfull age, which otherwise is woont to be subiect to contempt, diminishe no whitte of thy authoritie. Where-vpon we acknowledge that Timothie was yet a young man, who notwithstanding did farre excell manie Pastors.

Which excellencie beeing not onely of grauitie in vertue, but also of authoritie; which both S. Paules wordes giue, as Epiphanius reasoneth, and this most Reuerende and learned man, himselfe liberally confesseth, that Timothie being a man indued with so manie, and so great giftes, remayning at Ephesus, did gouerne all thinges by his direction: Nowe both not this necessarilie followe hereupon, that one Pastor and the same a Bishop had a superiour authoritie in the Apostles time; and by the Apostles authoritie, appointed there for a time, ouer other Pastors, and euen of the same degree that they were of in respect, (as Caluine saith) of Pastorship, which is the point in question, and yet in dignitie and authoritie aboue them? Neither here sufficeth this poore shift, to say he was so appointed there for a time; like this time is not of anie present assemble, but of a long continuance, and whether anie assemble were holden, yea or no.

Now that this most reuerend and learned man hath held Epiphanius thus short, as though he would yelde some what more vnto him of his free courtesie, he saith:

The
most re-
uerend.

But let vs graunt Epiphanius more than this, that Timothie had the authoritis of the laying on of hands out of these wordes of the Apostle, Lay not handes suddenly vpon anie. Let vs graunt this too, that these duties belonged to the gouernours: yet wee denie, that Timothie could haue had anie authoritie therefore, ouer the Elders of Ephesus, except he had beene an Euangelist.

These grauntes come in so freshly, one on anothers necke, as though greater & greater matters were graunted, then was of fine force before confessed. Whereas indeede, either lesse and lesse is graunted then was before, and much of that pulled backe: or else in conclusion, commeth all to the former stoppe, wiping all away as befoze, with the name and title of Euangelist. Befoze at length, he confessed: that Timothie gouerned all thinges by his direction; as one in degree aboue the Elders. And is this now more, that he had the authoritie of laying on of handes? This is but one thing, and befoze we had all thinges gouerned by his direction. And how then commeth in this graunt vpon the other: But let vs graunt Epiphanius more than this, that he did gouerne all thinges by his direction? Or rather, might he not much better haue saide, Let vs denie that which wee haue graunted him, or, in all thinges graunt him lesse? But more, or lesse: howe come in these thinges as graunts, from this most Reuerende and learned man? As though it laye in his free choise and liberall graunt: when it commeth out of these woordes of the Apostle, Laye not handes suddenly vpon anie. For, if it come not out of these wordes; howe dare he graunt it out of them? Will he graunt an vntruthe? And if the wordes enforce it, then graunte Pauls woordes, and not his graunt: for he graunteth nothing more, then he is taken vnto. But there is here yet another grant, that perhaps is more free & worthy the taking at his handes, where he saith, Let vs graunt this too, that these duties belonged to the Gouvernours. What duties (trowe we) are those he spebeth of? For he named but one ceremony, of the laying on of handes. And who are these gouernours that (he saith) this belonged vnto? For if he meane by gouernours (as doe our Brethren the Learned discourfers) for the signiozie of Elders, being not Pastors: then haue we spanne a faire threade, and gotten a goodly catch of all these graunts. But if he meane by the Gouvernours, the Pastors that had a superioritie in gouerning their sellowe Brethren Pastors, that the imposition of handes pertayneth onely or chiefly vnto them, as he graunteth here, it did to Timothie: then I graunte indeede it is a further graunt, then was his lastt graunt, and I take it thankfully at his handes. And, though it bee not so much, as was the lastt graunt before graunted, that all thinges were gouerned by his direction: yet will it be ynough, even by that one thing, at least to inferre a superioritie of a Pastor, to haue bene then in use among the Pastors.

Imposition of handes.

Timothies Superioritie in imposition of handes.

But nowe vpon both these liberall grauntes, (least they should come to prodigall a gift,) commeth in a restraint.

Yet we denie that Timothie could haue had anie authoritie therfore, ouer the Elders of Ephesus, except he had bene an Euangelist.

Here is againe our olde exception. So that, if Timothie were not an Euangelist, our grauntes are reuoked and all is nash, then had hee no authoritie ouer the Elders of Ephesus. Nay, that is more harde againste him, hee could not haue had anie ouer them, except he had bene an Euangelist. But, hee had it; Ergo, hee was an Euangelist.

Still the old shift of Euangelist helpes all.

Q^d, he was an Euangelist, Ergo, he had it. But, if not we all lie vpon this point: we haue saide somewhat vnto it already, and these wordes of Paul carie some probabilitie that Paule bids him fulfill the worke of an Euangelist. But that inferres not anie necessitie, that he was an Euangelist. We are bidden all of vs, in manie places to fulfill the worke of God. But euerie kinde of fulfilling the workes that God bids vs doe, argueth not that we be God. But, were he an Euangelist, or were he not; howe hanges this exception with these grauntes? No, if the laying on of handes belong to the Gouvernors: And Timothie had the authoritie of laying on of handes belonging to him, out of these wordes of the Apostle, lay not handes suddenly vpon anie: how then, had not Timothie authoritie of that, that belonged to the Gouvernours? And so, in that point, he had a superioritie ouer them. Except he shall yet replie, that they had this superioritie as well as he. And what neede had he then herein, to be an Euangelist, more than they? So that, it being graunted, that hee had so much as the residue had not; it followeth of necessitie, were he Euangelist, or were hee not, they must needs confesse by the vertue of these wordes of Saint Paule, laye not handes suddenlie vpon any, that he had a superior authoritie, and this shift of being Euangelist will not yet beare out the matter. But if this will not serue, well fare an other.

For Paule himselfe 1. Tim. 4. 14. doth shewe sufficiently, that the laying on of the handes, was done, in the name of the Eldership it selfe, not by the authoritie of any superiour.

True it is, that Paule vseth there the name of the Eldership it selfe. But both this impugne, that he which was the person that layd his hands on him which was ordeyned Pastor, had in that action no superior authoritie ouer him? Was not this action a solemne kinde of blessing, and the partie laying on his handes, not onely presenteth him to God, but representeth God, signifying that God receauieth him, both into his protection, and into that especiall function: And the minister thereof in so doing, pronounceth the blessing of God vpon him, and prayeth for him, and receiveth him, in the name of God and offereth him to God as a minister consecrated to him. Which reuerent ceremonie is yet vsed in the ordeyning of ministers. And doth not this rule of Paule holde herein, Hebr. 7. 7. out of doubt, that which is lesse is blessed of that which is greater? So that, if this action pertayned vnto one more than to the residue: no doubt it betokened in him a great authoritie in the same. But Beza denieth that it was one mans action, and saith that the handes were layde on him, by the Ephesine Elders. And on this worde and C^ones, that is, the order of the Elders: by the which name (saith he) it is probable, that the companie of all those are signified, which labored in the worde, in the Church of Ephesus. Act. 20. d. 17. f. 28. But, because Beza here makes this but probaprobable, & that there is no necessitie so to thinke: we may rather herein followe Caluine, Bezaes Maister, who sayth on the same place, 1. Tim. 4. 14. It was an vsuall and solemne thing to the Apostles, to ordaine ministers by laying on of handes. And indeede of this custome, and of the originall and signification thereof, I haue somewhat touched before, and the residue we may fetch out of my institution. Presbyterium, priest-hood (or Eldership). They that thinke this name to bee heere collectiue, put for the college of Priestes (or Elders) doe in my iudgement, thinke well. Howbeit, all thinges considered, I confesse, that the other sense doth not fitte it amisse, that it should be the name of the office. He put the ceremonie for the act it selfe of the ordeyning. So then, the sense is, that Timothie, when as he was called into the ministerie, by the voice of the Prophets, and then ordeyned by the solemne custome: was withall furnished with the grace of the holie Ghost, to execute his function, &c. But, because this is spoken so darkely, that we see not yet, on which sense he resolueth; and that he referreth vs to his Institutions: let vs see there, what he determines on it. In his Institutions, cap. 8. sect. 50. The rite of ordaying doth remaine, to the which in the calling we haue giuen the last place. It is certaine the Apostles vsed no other ceremonie, than the laying on of handes, when they admitted anie to the ministerie. I suppose this rite or ceremonie flowed, from the custome of the Hebrues, who by the laying on of handes, as it were represented to God, the thing that they would haue to be blessed and consecrated. So Iacob, when hee would blesse Ephraim and Manasse, layde his handes vpon their heads, which thing our Lorde followed, when he prayed vpon the infantes. In the same signification, (as I suppose) did the Iewes by the prescription of the lawe, lay their handes vpon their sacrifices. Wherefore, the Apostles by the laying on of handes, did signifie, that they presented him to God, whom they did enter into the ministerie. Albeit, they vsed it also vpon them, to whom they conferred the visible graces of the spirite. Howsoeuer it were, this was a solemne rite, so often as they called anie man into the Ecclesiasticall ministerie. Thus did they consecrate Pastors & Doctors: thus Deacons. And although there remaine no certaine commandement, concerning laying on of handes: yet because we see, it was in perpetuall vse with the Apostles, that, so precise obseruation of them, ought to bee vnto vs, in steede of a commandement. And verely, it is profitable that by such a signe, both the ministry should be commended to the people; and also that he which is ordeyned should be admonished, that nowe hee is not his owne man, but is addicted into a seruice vnto God, and to his Church. Moreouer, it shall not be a voide signe, if it shalbe restored into his right originall. For, if the spirite of God hath ordeyned in the Church nothing in vaine,

we shall perceauē that this ceremonie, ſithe that it came from him, is not vnprofitable, ſo it bee not turned into a ſuperſtitious abuſe. Laſt-vncertaine whether moe of them, did alwayes laye on their handes, Paule himſelfe mentioneth, that hee, and not other moe, layde his his wordes are theſe: There is no doubt, but Timothie was wiſhed for, with the common wiſhes of the Church, and not elected by the priuate will or choiſe of Paule alone. But it is not abuſurde, that Paule aſcribeth the election priuately to himſelfe, of the which he was the chiefeſt author. Although, heere he treateth rather of the ordey-ning, than of the election of him, that is to wit, of the ſolemne cuſtome of inſtituting of him. Furthermore, it is not clearely apparant, whether that, when anie was to be conſecrated a Miniſter, all were wont to lay their handes vppon his heade: or elſe, one onely, in the place and name of all: but the coniecture enclineth rather to this, that there was one onely that layde on his handes. Concerning that which appertayneth to the ceremonie, the Apoſtles borrowed it of the auncient cuſtome of their Nation, or rather retayned it while it was yet in uſe. For this is a parte of the comelineſſe, that Paule other where commendeth. Although it may be doubted, whether this preſent laying on of handes, may be referred to the ordeyning. Becauſe at that time the graces of the ſpirite, of which he diſcourſeth *Roman. 12. &

Thus thoroughly, we ſee Caluines iudgement, that this laying on of handes was a ſolemne kinde of ceremonie, uſed in the ordeyning of miniſters, to preſent them to God, and in the name of God, to bleſſe and conſe-

consecrate them. Which action was doone more commonlie by one man onely, being a more principall person than all the residue, (as was Paule and other the Apostles) than by the handes of all or manie Pastors, ioyned with him, al-bett, it were by their consentes and voyces, and in the name of all the Church or Elders. Not, that euerie minister had equall authoritie, in the action: For, although the whole may well bee sayde, to haue a greater authoritie, than anie peculiar parte: yet it followeth not, but that there may bee difference of authoritie, and some higher and some lower, in the comparison of the seuerall and particuler partes one with an-other, and one minister superiour in dignitie to another. As, Paule superiour in this action vnto Timothie, and Timothie vnto other Pastors. And although of Paule it might be sayde, hee was an Apostle: yet in Timothie, here is no other respect had, but that hee was a Priest or Pastorall Elder, as Caluine expoundes Paules wordes, when I created thee a Priest or Elder. And this office of Priest-hood or Eldership, and not the Colledge or Consistorie of the Elders, sheweth nearer to the Apostles meaning.

And thus much for this most reuerende and learned mans confutation of Epiphanius argumentes out of the Scripture.

Nowe (sayth he) the reasons of the same Epiphanius are these. Bishops (sayth he) begette the Fathers of the Church, but Elders the sonnes, in as much as Bishops and not Elders ordeyned Bishops. But what is this else, then to aske to haue that which is in question: For it may be and ought to be answered, that the Bishops tooke that authoritie vpon them, without warrant of the worde of God, and that the rule is false, which concerning this matter, doeth attribute it to the Apostles, which may be shewed by the ordeyning of Timothy by the Eldership.

It seemeth, that this Learned man, accounteth all the reasons which he hath already alleaged out of Epiphanius, to be no reasons. Else, how saith he here? Nowe, the reasons of the same Epiphanius are these, &c. But howe then saide he before, that Epiphanius doth bring forth three reasons: two as it were out of Gods worde, &c. and when he hath alleaged them in the order afoze sayde, (the first place is, 1. Tim. 5. 1. &c. another place is out of the same Epistle, &c.) and traueiled as wee haue heard to confute them; then (as though all this while, he had yet alleaged or confuted no reason) he commeth in saying: Nowe, the reasons of the same Epiphanius are these, &c. What reason is in this dealing, especially of such a most reuerend and learned man?

But if these following, are his onely reasons: good reason he should report them right, and not make them other than they be.

Bishops (sayth he) beget the Fathers of the Church, but Elders the sonnes, in as much as Bishops and not Elders ordayne Bishops.

Doth Epiphanius reason thus: Q, to this purpose: His wordes are these. To say that a Bishop and a Priest (or Elder) are equall, howe is it possible? For, the order of Bishops is the begetter of the Fathers, for, it begetteth the Fathers of the Church. But, the order of Priestes or Elders is not able to beget the Fathers: it begetteth the sonnes of the Church, by the regeneration of the washing, but not the Fathers or the Doctors. And howe was it possible for a Priest or Elder to obtaine, not hauing the laying on of handes to elect? Or, to say that he is equall with a Bishop? The plaine meaning here of Epiphanius is this: the Bishops beget, that is, ordayne Pastors and ministers of the worde and Sacramentes, which Pastors or Ministers, hee calleth Fathers or Doctors of the Church. But these Pastors or Ministers, whom he calleth Fathers or Doctors, being no Bishops, doe not againe beget, that is, ordaine, (or make) other Fathers or Doctors, but doe onely (sayth he) begette the sonnes of the Church, that is, the faithfull people, by preaching the word and baptizing of them: the Bishops therefore hauing a further authoritie, to wit, of making ministers, then haue the ministers whom they make: howe is the Bishops and the ministers authoritie equall? This is indeede the true meaning of Epiphanius his reason. He that can doe more: hath more power, than he which onely can doe lesse. But the Bishop can do more than the Priest or Elder can doe, for the Bishop can make Priests and Elders which the Priestes or Elders can not doe. Therefore the bishop hath more power than the Priest or Elder that is no Bishop. This being in effect the argument of Epiphanius: this Learned man tourned all to this, that Epiphanius should say: Bishops beget the Fathers of the Church, but Elders the sonnes, in as much as Bishops and not Elders ordayne Bishops. As though he spake onely of ordayning Bishops; or, by Fathers ment onely bishops; and by sonnes, Priestes or Elders of the Church. Whereas, Epiphanius confesseth: bishops, and Priestes or Elders, both of them to be Fathers and Doctors of the Church. But in this behalfe of ordayning anie of these Fathers, eyther Bishops or Priestes; the Bishops had a prerogatiue aboue the Priestes, and so, their authoritie is not equall. This is the verie argument and reason that Epiphanius maketh. Nowe, what saith our most Reuerende and learned man to this argument?

But what is this else, (saith he) then to aske to haue that which is in question?

And why so? Epiphanius here asketh nothing. The question heere is this. Whether Bishops and Priestes be in dignitie and authoritie equall and all one? Epiphanius proueth they be not, by this argument: They that be equall and all one in dignitie and authoritie: the one can doe in all thinges as much as the other, and not one more than the other. But the the Bishops can make Bishops & Priestes, which the Priestes theselues can not doe: therefore, Bishops & Priestes are not equall and all one. reuerendes answere. What the B. can, or the Priest can not do this, which is here auouched, this is not the question, but dependes vpon it, or else, he could make indeede no reason. If no we, this assertion be untrue, impute it, and neuer say, what is this else, than to aske to haue that which is in question. But, go to now. What reason hath this Learned man to impute it?

For it may be, and ought to be answered, that the Bishops tooke that authoritie vpon them, without warrant of the worde of God.

I thinke it may be indeede thus answered, of a man, that would vnreuerently sclander hee cares not to whom, and answer contrarie to all The most reuerends vnreuerend & vntrue answer. truth and learning: but, that it ought to be answered so, of any man, and especially, of a most Reuerende and Learned man: be it spoken with reuerence, I thinke the cleane contrarie.

Did not this most reuerend and learned man himselfe graunt before, The most reuerends former graunt ouerthrows this answer, but euen on the other side the lease, that Timothie had the authoritie of the laying on of hands? And what here was that, but ordeyning Bishops & Pastors? Except therefore, all those proues be imputed, that inferre Timothie was B. of Ephesus: and this of Timothy conferred with Iames and Simeon after him at Ierusalem, and Titus in Creta: it is apparant, that Bishops tooke not that authoritie vpon them, without warrant of the worde of God. But this, that he sayth, it may be, and ought to be answered, stayeth not here, for he addeth:

And that the rule is false, which concerning this matter doth attribute it to the Apostles. The most reuerend.

Here is a rule indeede, for this matter, of ordeyning ministers. Did not the Apostles take vpon them the authoritie to ordaine Bishops and Elders? Doth not S. Paule confesse, that he toke that authoritie on him? And is Gods worde it selfe also, become a false rule, which is the rule of truth, that attributeth this matter to the Apostles? What could the open aduersaries of the word of God, haue spoken worse against the word of God? And how now shall this be shewed, that the worde of God doth not attribute this to the Apostles? Bridges. The most reuerendes far more voreuerend deniing the manifest scripture.

Which may be shewed (sayth he) by the ordeyning of Timothie by the Eldership. The most reuerend,

And haue we not hearde euen by Caluine, the matter clearly and at large shewed, that not onely the ordeyning of Timothie was doone by Paule alone: but also that it was the common vse to be doone by Paule alone? And that this woorde and in the, Eldershippe, signifyeth in that place, not the Colledge, Consistorie, or companie of Elders, but the office of the Elders. Pea Beza also yeldeth so farre thereunto. Bridges.

& electing

So that, the ordeyning of Timothie sheweth, not by the Eldership; that the rule is false: but that the rule is true which concerning this matter, (that is, the ordeyning of Elders, by the laying on of handes) doth attribute it to the Apostles. Withe nothe, none of all these fetches will serue; haue we any moze shifts left to helpe the matter?

The

Againe for as much as election is the chiefe grounde of Church offices, which dependeth of the voyces of the whole companie, and not of the laying on of hands, which made not Bishops, but sent the into their possession after they had made them: we may more truely affirme with the Apostle, that the holie Ghoste by the voyces of the children themselves, made the Fathers, and not the Bishops.

electing.

Here is yet one or two devises moze together. And first, sithe the ordeyning of Bishops and Pastors of the Church, is so manifest a prerogative of the Bishops: to eleuate the same, and to withdraue vs from it, to the election of them, which he calleth the chiefe grounde of Church offices; I can not tell, what he may gather of these wordes, the chiefe ground: but I take not election to be the chiefe point, to proue the prerogative of superiour dignitie and authoritie. For, as there is a difference betwene these two. (as is confessed already by Caluine): so, though the election procede from other groundes, as from the causes, why the partie is to be elected, and so, tende moze to his commendation that is elected, or their profite for whose sake he is elected: yet is the ordeyning and giuing him the office that he is elected vnto, manie times both the greater dignitie and authoritie to the giuer, and the surer state vnto the taker. Although, no certaine rule can bee made heereof. For manie a meane man may giue possession of a thing, who not-withstanding hath not the gifte thereof, nor anie voyce in electing him thereto.

And againe, manie a one may giue a voice in the election, which hath not yet so great dignitie and authoritie, as solemnely to inuest the parties elected, in the office and possession of the same. For, if election (as here is sayde) dependeth on the voyces of the whole companie, as, when the people had the election of their Bishoppe: and it was sayde, Qui praefecturus est omnibus, ab omnibus eligatur: Hee that must rule all, must be elected of all: Shall wee nowe saye, that euery one among the people, that had a voice in election of the Bishop, had a superiour, or had but an equall dignitie and authoritie, with him that consecrated and ordeyned him Bishoppe? And is the action of consecrating and ordeyning by laying on of handes, (being indeede an higher action than giuing a voice in the election, yea, than is the whole election) so farre vnbased vnder election, and election so aduanced ouer it, that it is here sayde, it made not Bishops, but sent them into their possession, after they had made them, meaning the people that elected them? And is the

electing then to be a B. the making of a Bishop? And is the ordaining of a B, and the laying on of handes vpon him & the solemne action which the Apostles vsed, & wherof Paul gaue such a charge & prerogative to Tim. & to Titus, but the sending them into their possession, which other had giuen them? And did not the Apostles, nor Titus, nor Timothie, but the people make them? Did the people then make Bishops? And had the Apostles lesse authoritie in making Bishops, than had the people? And what meane these speeches, that the election dependeth on the voyces of the whole cōpanie? What is here meant by the company? Are not the people, of the companie, as well as the Clergie? And must it needs be the whole cōpanie? May not maior pars, or senior, or sanior: the greater, the senior, the sounder part serue: but that it must depende on the voyces of the whole companie, or else, it is no election? indeed election dependeth not vpon the laying on of handes: but rather the laying on of handes vpon election. But yet is not this true, that is here sayd: The laying on of handes, which made not Bishops, but sent them in to their possession after they had made them? For, of the twaine, rather, the laying on of handes doth make them: and not sende them, but set them in the possession of their office, by making of them officers. Whereas the election (whosoever elected them) did but electe or chose them before, to be afterwards made, by laying the hands vpon thē. But now, be the election of neuer so manie, and of the whole companie; may there not bee such a difference also of superiour dignitie and authoritie euen in the elections, that perhaps a fewe, yea, some one may carrie a greater stroke, than manie among them, or than all the residue, and haue (as they saye) a voyce negative, to counterpeise all their voyces affirmatiue? When Paule had Titus to ordaine or make Priestes or Elders in euerie Citie in Crete: Hee seemeth (sayth Caluine thereupon) to permitte too much vnto Titus, while he biddes him make ministers ouer all the Churches. For this should be in a manner a regall power.

Neither did the election depende on the voyces of the whole companie.

Inuen.

And furthermore, by this meanes, the right of electing is taken away from euerie Church, and the iudgement from the colledge of the Pastors. But this had beene, to prophane all the holy administration of the Church. But the aunswere is easie. It is not permitted vnto the will of Titus, that he alone might do all things, & put into the Churcher what Bishops it pleased him: but onely, that he should gouerne the elections, as a Moderator, according as it is necessarie. This kinde of speeche is common inough. So the Consull, or the Regent in the time of vacancie, or the Dictator, is sayde to create Consulles. For that, hee helde the sessions or meetings, in which they were to be chosen. So also speaketh Luke of Paul and Barnabas, in the Act. 14. 13. not that they onelie, as at their commaundement, set Pastors ouer the Churches, neither allowed nor knowen, but because they ordeyned fit men, which were chosen or desired of the people. We learne indeede of this place, that there was not the such equality among the ministers of the Church, but that some one man was aboue them, in authoritie and in Counsell: but this was nothing to that tyrannicall and prophane custome of collations, which reigneth in the Popedome. For the manner of the Apostles was farre different.

Caluines cleere confession against the ministers equality in the time of the Apostles.

Whereby it is apparant, that there was not suche equalitie in the ministerie in the Apostles dayes, and in the primitiue Church, as is pretended, but that as some one, was the principall doer, in the making and consecrating of the Pastors and Fathers of the Church: so also, some one was the principall gouernour euen in the election. Which, though he vsed no tyrannie, force, selfe-will, nor absolute power there, in, as the Pope vsed: yet was it comparable to a Consulles, to a Regentes, yea to a Dictators authoritie in some respectes also, in the electing or creating of a Consull. But at least, he was aboue them, both in Counsell and in authoritie.

And therefore this conclusion which commeth in with the other shift, vnder the name of the holie-Ghoste, saying: We may more truelye affirme with the Apostle, that the holie-Ghoste by the voyces of the children themselues, made the fathers, and not the Bishops: Is but a blase to dauell mens eyes withall, if not also, a dangerous sinne (were it wittingly committed, as I hope it is not) against the worke of the holie Ghoste. Besides the iniurie heere offered to the Apostle Paule and to Timothie and Titus that had and vsed this authoritie. True it is, the Apostle saith: Act. 20. ver. 28. that the holie-Ghost made them. And true it is also, that the children may haue, and had their voices towards the making of them: but both this followe, that Paule made none? No, that Timothie & Titus (being Bishops, as is proued) made none: which is here so peremptorily concluded saying: & not the Bishops? If they made none, they brake Paules comandement. If they made anie, and were Bishops: then Bishops made the, although the holy Ghost made them to. Because, they were not made without the holy Ghoste: because, they were made of the Bishops in suche godlie order, as the holie-Ghoste did allowe of: and because, they were men enspired with the holie Ghost, and furnished with his giftes, to doe their duties. And such men, because the goodly people wished for, (as Caluine saith, they did wish for Timothy) or gaue their assents and voyces of approbation of the Apostles election and ordeyning of Tim. & Titus, and also approued both Tim. & Titus his election & ordeining of other godly and learned Pastors ouer them: therefore, howsoeuer the holy Ghost by the voices of the childre, made the fathers, the holy Ghost, as the principall author, & the sanctifier of the by his inuincible or (if visible) miraculous operation in them: and the children, by wishing and approving, either by voices, or holding up their hands, at the naming of them: yet, since for the outward forme of them, the Gouvernement of the elections, lay in Timothy and Titus; and (as Caluine saith) in some one man, as a moderator, as a Consull, as a Regent in an interim, and as a Dictator, though, not like a tyrant and a Pope; and fifth also after the election done, the laying on of hands, which was the consecrating, ordeyning, or making, belonged also most commonly (as Caluine saith) to one only, as here to Timothy and Titus Bishops: It may well therefore, and truly be said and iustified, without injury to the facts, of the holy Ghost, yea, to the glory of the holy Ghost, & without detrimēt to the children, or p̄iudice to the whole company: that the B. made the Pastors or Fathers of the Church, & still may make them, for any thing here alleaged to the contrary.

Another of his reasons is, (saith this most reuerend and learned man, against Epiphanius) a deprauing of places alleaged out of Paule, that the Church being newe borne, Bishops could not be so established euerie where at the first, as it is to be seene in the election of Deacons. Who yet can Epiphanius perswade, that it was for want of fit men onely, that there were manie Bishops in euerie Church? The most reuerend.

And is there yet behind another of Epiphanius his reasons, & that of places alleaged out of Paule? Then was there more the 3. reasons; yea, more then two (as it were) out of the worde of God. So trulie, this Learned man, tolde vs before, that Epiphanius did bring foorth 3. reasons to the contrary, two (as it were) out of the worde of God. But, what places alleaged out of Paule, hath Epiph. here depraued? Aërius indeede depraued 2. places alleaged out of Paule. Whereof Epiph. sayth: But his trifling & emulation hath deceiued the fore-saide Aërius. But he alleageth for his error, & the error of thē that heare him, that which the Apostle writeth to the Priests & Deacons, & writeth not to the B. & that he saith vnto a B. despise not the gift that is in thee, which thou hast receiued by the hands of the Eldership. And againe in an other place, he writeth to the Bishops & Deacons. Wherefore (saith he) a B. and a Priest or Elder is all one. And these places here alleaged out of Paule by this Aërius, are nowe also for the selfe same purpose, alleaged likewise by our Brethren, in their Learned discourse, as we haue heard at large discussed: but what sayth Epiphanius hereunto? Our Breth. allegations of the same places against the B. that Aërius alleaged.

And he knewe not (sayth Epiphanius) being ignorant of the consequence of the truthe, and had not reade the most profounde histories, that the holy Apostle when as the preaching was newe, wrote according to the matter sprunge vppe, euen as he had it. For, where Bishops were alreadye ordayned, hee wrote to Bishops and to Deacons.

For, the Apostles could not ordeyne all thinges by and by. Of Priestes (or Elders) and Deacons there was neede. For by these two the Ecclesiasticall affaires may bee accomplished. But where there was not founde anie woorthie of the office of a Bishop: the place remayned without a Bishop: but where there was need, & there were men worthie the office of a Bishop: there Bishops were ordayned. But when there was no multitude, there was not founde among them those that should be made Priestes or Elders, and they were content with a Bishoppe alone, ordeyned in the place. But it is not possible for a bishop to bee without a Deaco. And the holy Apostle put to this care that there should be Deacons to the Bishop for the ministerie. Thus did the Church receaue the fillings vp of the dispensation: thus were the places at that time. For euerie thing had not all at the first beginning: but in processe of time, those thinges were gotten, which were requisite for the perfection of thinges necessarie.

Ambrose in Ephes. 4.

Thus truly and grauely did Epiphanius aunswere these allegations of Aërius. And what deprauiing of places alleaged out of Paule is here? Was not this apparant, in the Deacons, which at the first, were not anie especiall office, till on occasion growing afterwarde? And doth not this stande with good reason, that (the Church beeing, as it were, newe and greene among the Gentiles) Bishops coulde not euerie where at the first, be so established? And doe we not reade, howe in some Churches sometimes are mentioned onely Apostles and Elders, Act. 15. for Ecclesiasticall functions? And in Antioche, Act. 21. Besides Paule and Barnabas, who were also Apostles, are mentioned onely, Prophetes and Doctors, which Paule and Barnabas Act. 14. made also in the Churches, onely Priestes or Elders, without mention of Deacons. So that all were not made in euerie place at once, and at the first: or at least, all are not expressed that were made, as Act. 15. and as to Titus in Creta, Paule mentioneth not that he should make Deacons, but Priestes and Elders onely, vsing that name indifferently for Bishops. So that (where the name is not expressed) might not Epiphanius well abouch, that this maketh nothing against the state in generall of the office, in that place not expressed? For, perhaps, it was not yet established there, as afterwarde it was. And doth not Saint Ambrose confesse as much, and more than this, euen vpon the place of Ephes. 4. so much vrged? He gaue some to be Apostles, and some Prophetes, &c. Applying them to the vse of the Church after the Apostles times, saying: the Apostles are the Bishops, the Prophetes are the expounders of the scriptures. Although among the verie beginniges, there were Prophetes such as Agabus, and the foure Virgines prophecying, as it is conteyned in the Actes of the Apostles.

Howbeit,

Howebeit, for to commend the principles of the Faythe: the Interpreters are now called Prophetes. The Euangelistes are the Deacons, such as was Philip. Although they bee not Priestes: yet may they preache the Gospell, but with-out a chayre, euen as Stephen and Philip mentioned. The Pastors may be the Readers, who with their reading, fatten the people that heare them, because man liueth not in breade onely, but in euerie worde that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. But the Maisters are the exorcistes, because they appease & correct the disturbers or else those that were wont to instruct and trayne vp with readings, those infantes that were to be instructed As is the manner of the Iewes, whose tradition made a passage vnto vs, which is by negligence worne out. Among these, after the Bishop he is vnderstoode to be more, who for the hidden sense of the Scriptures opened, is sayde to prophetic: especially, because he draweth out the wordes of the hope to come. Which order may now be that, that is of the Priest-hood or the Eldership. For all the orders are in a bishop, because first hee is a Priest, that is to saye, the Prince or chiefe of the Priestes, and he is a Prophet, and an Euangelist, and the other offices of the Church are to be fulfilled in the ministerie of the faithful. Notwithstanding, after that in all places, the Churches were constituted, and offices ordeyned, the matter was composed otherwise than it beganne. For at the first all did teach, and all did baptize, what dayes or times soeuer there was occasion. For neither Philip sought time or day, wherein he should baptize the Eunuche, nor interposed any fasting. Neither Paul and Silas differed the time, that they might baptize the chiefe man vnder the tribune, (or the keeper of the prison) with al his. Neither had Peter Deacons, nor sought the day when he baptized Cornelius with all his house, neither hee himselfe (did it,) but he had the brethren that went with him to Cornelius from Ioppe. For as yet besides the seauen there was no Deacon ordeyned. As therefore, the people encreased & multiplied, it was graunted to them all at the beginning; both to preach the Gospell, and to baptize, and to expounde the scriptures in the Church. But when as the Church had compassed about all places: conuenticles were appointed, and rectors & other offices were ordeyned in the Churches. That none of the Clergy durst (which was not ordeined) to presume vpon him, the office that he knew, was not comitted or graunted vnto him. And the Church began to be gouerned by another order & prouidence because, that if all might doe the same thinges, it should be vnreasonable, and it would be thought a common & most vile thing. From hence therefore it is, whereupon neither Deacons now doe preache among the people, neither the Clerkes or the Laytie doe baptise. Neyther are the faithfull baptized whatsoeuer day they list, except they be sicke.

reasons why

The writings therfore of the Apostle in all points agree not, with the ordinance that nowe is in the Church. For because that these thinges were written euen in the very beginnings, for he calleth also Timothie, that was of him created a Priest or Elder, a B. because Priests or Elders were at the first called Bishops, that the one giuing place, the follower should succede him. To conclude, in Egypt the Priestes (or Elders) do *ensigne them, if the B. be not present. But because the Priestes (or Elders) following, beganne to be found vnworthie to holde primacies or chiefe gouernements, the reason was altered, the Councell prouiding therefore, it was constituted by the iudgement of manie Priestes, that not the order, but the deserte, should create the Bishop, least that an vnworthie one should rashly vsurpe, and be an offence to manie. Thus doth this most Reuerend and learned Father S. Ambrose write also, euen as much or more than Epiphanius doth, on these wordes alleaged by the Apostle.

But nowe saith our most Reuerende and learned man: whome yet can Epiphanius persuaide, that it was for want of fitte men onely, that there were many Bishops in euerie Church?

Doth Epiphanius goe about to persuaide anie hereunto? Or had he anie cause to persuaide this vnto them? Which if hee would haue gone about to persuaide, he should haue contraried his owne speech, that sayde, there were some places, where there was no Bishop. This therefore, is rather a deprauing of that which Epiphanius doth alleage against Aërius: then that Epiphanius vsed anie deprauing of places alleaged by Aërius out of Paule.

The
most re-

Nowe, to conclude with Epiphanius, (for he letteth slippe all his argument, that by comparison he maketh from the examples of so manie thinges in the old Testament, that at the first were not ordeined) he saith, for that which he calleth, the 3. reason, out of the historie of those times: For that which not onely Hierome, but Epiphanius against the Basilians also reporteth concerning them of Alexandria: that is, Alexandria neuer had two Bishops, as the other Cities, vpon what ground the men of Alexandria did it, and followed not the examples of other Churches, let them see to it.

the bishop being present, when he would haue holpen the priest Manes sayd vnto the Byshop: suffer me to dispute against Triphon, for thy dignity (by reason of the bishops office) exceedeth me. Whereby it appeareth that then also in Mesopotamia, there was a great difference in the dignity and state of a Priest & of a bishop. And because this most reuerend and learned man alleageth Epiphanius against the Meletians: this also appeareth no lesse, if not so much more, euē in that treatise of Epiphanius. Besides that, in the story by him ther recorded of the sect that sprang from this Meletius, we may see a liuely, (if it may not rather be called a deadly, verily a dolefull) paterne of this Schisme, nowe occasioned by our Brethren.

The moste reuerendes alleaging Meletius sheweth a lamentable paterne of these contentions.

A schisme and sect made in the church, not for religion but for discipline.

There is a certaine company (sayth Epiph. lib. 2. to. 2. har. 68.) in the coast of Aegipt, from Meletius a certain B. in Thebaida, of the Catholike Church, and of the right faith (for his sayth was not chaunged at any time from the holy catholike church) this Meletius was of one time with the foresaid Hierax, and afterward did succcede him. He was also of one time with the holy Peter bishop of Alexandria, and all these were in the time of the persecution, which was made in the time of Dioclesian and Maximian. But the cause of Meletius was in this manner: he made a sect, but he departed not from the faith. This man in the time of the persecution, together with Peter the holy Bishop and martyr, and with other martyrs, was taken of those that were sent of the King, to wite, of the Dukes or captaines of Alexandria and of Aegipt at that time: The President of Thebaida was Cultianus, and Hierocles of Alexandria, and Meletius was deteyned in prison together with the foresaide martyrs, & with Peter the Archb. of Alexandria. But Meletius seemed also to excell among the bishops of Egypt, as he that had the second place after Peter in the Archbishopricke, as it were, for because of helping him, being vnder him, and vnder him taking heede vnto the ecclesiastical affayres: for this is the custome, that the bishop of Alexandria, hath the ecclesiastical administration of all Egypt, and of Thebais, and of Mareota, and of Lybia, and of Ammoniac, and of Marceotis, and of Pentapolis. Now, when as al these captiues liued in prison, to the ende they shoulde bee martyred, and had remained shut vp a long time: albeit others before the being deliuered had suffered the testimony of Martyrdome, and had obtrayned the honour of the reward, & were layde asleepe: but these as the princes and greater were reserued till afterwarde: when as some had indeed susteyned martyrdom, but other some had falne away from their martyrdom, and had committed the wicked worship of Idolles, and being compelled had also sacrificed: they indeede which fell and sacrificed and transgressed, came to the Confessors and to the martyrs, that by repentance they might obtaine mercy, being partly soldiers diers, partly Clearkes of diuerse callings, partly Priestes, and Deacons, and others. A commotion was made among the Martyrs, and no vulgare tumult: when as some sayde, those that once were false, and that had renied, and aboade not in their fortitude, neither had strived, oughte not to bee made worthe of repentaunce, leaste that those also, which yet remained, shoulde care the lesse for rebuke and punishment, by reason of such pardon to soone giuen vnto them, and shoulde so transgresse and fall to the deniall of God, and to the wicked worke of Gracisme. And this in deede was very agreeable to reason, that was spoken of these Confessours. And they that so sayde, were Meletius and Peleus, and certayne other martyrs more, and Confessours together with them. They therefore declaringe their zeale to God, spake these thinges, and they pronounced, that the persecution beeing ended, place to repentaunce shoulde long time after, bee graunted to these foresayd parties, in the time of peace beeing made, if so bee in-deede they doe repent them, and declare the fruite of their repentaunce. Notwithstanding, not that euery one shoulde bee receyued into his proper calling: but after a space of time shoulde be gathered into the Church, and into the community, and into the fellowship, but not into their callings: And this proceeded of the loue of the trueth, and was full of zeale. But the moste holy Peter, endued with mercy, and being as it were the father of them all, entreated and besought them, saying: let vs receiue those that are repentaunt, and let vs appoint them a penance, that they maye sitte with other at the church, and let vs not cast them off, nor their calling, as the same is that is come vnto vs: least peraduecture, those that once were of the deuill shatterd and broosed vnto confusion, through imbecillity and infirmity, should also by reason of delaying the time, bee cleane subuerted and not healed, as it is written, The lame ought not be overthrowne but rather to be cured, and in deed the speech of Peter was for mercy and humanity, but the speech of Meletius for the truth & zeal. Hereupon, for the face (or shew) of the argument, which seemed in both of them to bee godly, a sect or scisme was made: these affirming this thing, and those that thing which was the other. But when the Archbishop Peter sawe, that Meletius with his company, beeing too much moued with a godly zeale, resisted his counsell of humanity: Peter lift vp a veyle, and spreading abroad his cloake, to witte, a sheete or couering, in the prison, made an out-cry, they that think with me (saith he) let them drawe to me: and they that cleane to Meletius opinion, let them goe to Meletius: and the multitude of the B. and of the monks, & of the Preefts and of the other orders parted to Meletius very few B. at all, & a fewe other turned to Peter the archb. & after that these made their praiers by theselues, & also those by them.

them selues, yea and they perfourmed also their other sacrifices eyther of them seperately by themselues. But it hapned that Peter suffered martyrdome, and that blessed man departed, leauing Alexander his successor in Alexandria, for he succeeded in the throne after the foresayde Peter. But Meletius and many other, were sent into exile, being banished into the Phenecan mines, & then after that, those which followed were Confessors with Meletius, and Meletius him-selfe in his trauaile in prisonment, passing through euery region and euery place, did constitute Clearks, and bishops, and priests, and Deacons, and did builde vp Churches to him-selfe, neither those communicated with them, nor they with those: and euery of them wrote in his own Church, those that succeeded Peter, hauing the auncient Churches: The Catholike Church: but those that cleaued to Meletius: the Martyrs Church. Whereuppon also in Elcutheropolis, and in Gaza, and Aelia, when the same Meletius came thither, heelected many in this manner, and it hapned that he spent much time in the foresayde mynes. But in the meane season the Confessors were set at liberty from the mynes. Those also that were of Peters part: for many yet were aliue that were followers of Meletius, and neither had they any communitie one with another in the mines, or made their prayers together. But it fell out, that Meletius yet for a while liued in the worlde, yea, that he flourished vnder Alexander Peters successor, and was in friendship with him, and tooke heede to the affayres of the Church, and of the fayth. For hee often-times sayde, I haue had nothing diuers and altered. This Meletius beeing in Alexandria and tarying there for a time, hauing his communion with his company by himselfe, founde out Arius, and brought him before Alexander, because he had found Arius in his declarations to haue passed the bounds of the fayth. For he was a priest or Elder in Baucalide, a Church so called in Alexandria, for there a priest or elder was appointed for euerie day, for there were manie Churches, but now there are more, and a Church was deliuered vnto him, howbeit there was another with him: but for what cause this was done, we shall declare exactly in his place, when neede thereunto shall be. &c. But now when the blessed Alexander in Alexandria, after the death of the foresayde Meletius the Confessor, hauing taken a zeale against the sect and discord of the Church, began to seeme to trouble in all places, those that were left of Meletius, that had priuate community among them-selues, and to restrain and compell them, that they shoulde not dissent from the Church: but they beeing not willing, moued troubles and stirred vp tumults: and when they were so pressed and restrayned of the blessed Alexander: certein of the princes among them, and those that helde the cheefe places both in godlinesse and also in life, assembled, and went vnto their company, for because of communing together, to the end to obtayne, both that they might offer and haue communion priuately, and not be impeached, but there was one Paphnutius, a great man, an Anchorite, who also was the sonne of a woman that had made the confession, yea, he himselfe also had in a certain sort, attayned to the Confession: and Iohn their bishop being also himselfe a most reuerend man, & Callinicus bishop in Pelusium, and certain other that did this thing: who indeede going forth, being brought vnto the king, were repulsed and reiected. For those that were in the palace, hearing of the name of the Meletians, and being ignorant what such a kinde of name should be, suffered not them to speake with the king. And heerein it hapned, that Paphnutius & Iohn and the residue, consumed much time in the parts of Constantinople and Nicomedia: But then they grewe in friendship with Eusebius byshop of Nicomedia, and declared their cause to him, for they knewe that he had free liberty of speech with the king Constantine, & they besought him, that by him they might be made knowne vnto the king: But he, after he had promised that he would bring them to the knowledge of the king, and would procure the matter that they desired, requireth againe of them this petition, that they shoulde receiue Arius with them into their societie, to wit, him that fainedly and by a mockerie had made his repentance, and they promised that they woulde receiue him. Whereupon Eusebius presenteth them vnto the king, and openeth to the king their cause, and it was graunted to the Meletians, that from that time forth, they shold haue their communion by them selues, and be hindred by none. And would to God, these Meletians who shewed forth the extreamest iustice of trueth, had rather had communion with those, that fell after their repentaunce made, than to haue it with Arius and his sectaries. For, it happened to them, according to the prouerbe, that fleeing the smoake, they fell in the fire. For, neither coulde Arius haue had his state, nor his libertie of speche, but by this manner of occasion. Which ill coniunction hath hapned to them, euen vntil this day. For they which in times past liued purely, and were moste iust, and in faith Meletians, are intermingled with the disciples of Arius, being in these times removed from the fayth. And although some of them abide in the true faith: neuerthelesse, they are not estranged from foule vncleannesse, by reason of the society with Arius, and the Arians. But the coniunction of Meletians and of the Arians, had the originall on the foresaide occasion.

Thus much at large, and word for word, (vpon the occasion of this our most reuerend and learned mans obseruation, of that Epiphanius reporteth against the Meletians, concerning them of Alexandria,) I thought good (though it bee long) to set downe out of him: to the end, we mighte more throggly see, what these (not Miletians, but) Meletians were, in many pointes not much unlike our brethren. At the first, concerning doctrine, Pure in the faith of Christ, which I hope also our brethren yet be, and as sound in the substance of Christian religion (I trust) as either these Meletians were, or we are: but they were so severe in certaine points, of their pretended Discipline, howbeit, admitting the superior dignity and authority of bishops over Priests or Pastorall elders, and of Archbishops over Bishops, even in the heat of their sorest persecution, before the time of Constantine the great. As also at the beginning, did our brethren with us, though they dissented in divers other points of Discipline: yet, they still acknowledged, as did the Meletians both the Bishops and Archbishops superior dignities and authorities, which these our brethren now reject, & against whom, they have made such a schism of the Church of God, that we may even looke upon, and lament, the like tragicall division among us, that for too rigorous discipline fell out among them. In so much, that although both of us profess the sayth of Christ aright: yet will not now we our brethren ioyne in publike prayers with us, but separate them selves asunder, and (as these men did) make private assemblies and orders among themselves in their publike prayers & ministrations of Sacraments, & make bishops, Ministers and Deacons of their owne severall churches. But what the issue was of these Meletians, wee have heard, and may fear and in part already do feele, among our selves. God be merciful to us both and give us grace in time to foresee and take heed, that the publike adversaries of the gospel, or any other old or new fangled heretical sectaries, neither of the Anabapt. nor other like, have their finger in this pye. And that this great zeale to obtaine the having of these separte conventicles, discipline, ministry, communion, & prayers. &c. do not ioyne with them against us their brethren, least in the end, their former synceritie of sayth and life be stained by them. On this occasion, two bishops together (but the one of this faction) might spring up in one City. But the faithfull in Alexandria, (where from this sprang) still acknowledged but one, & the same there and then an Archb. and the B. in all that Province and every where else, to be superior in dignity & authority, to all other priests or pastoral elders.

Socrates. lib.
1. cap. 5.

Howbeit, Socrates li. 1. ca. 3. saith further of this Meletius, that he himself had bin before deprived of his bishoprick, by the Archb. Peter, for the same fault, wherein Mel. shewed such rigor against other: whereby this division grew, not only betwene the right believing Christians, and the heretikes: but also among the faithfull themselves. Whereupon (saith Socrates) great tumults was raised every where. For ye might see, not only the governors of the churches, vexing one another with contumelious termes: but also the multitude of the people to be distracted into 2. parts: whereof the one inclined to these mens opinion, the other to theirs: in so much that the matter fell out to that mischief & shameful state: that the christian religion ligion

ligion was euen on the very theaters mocked at, with the derision of all men. As for those that dwelt at Alexandria they contended of the chiefest points of our religion youthfully, and not without tauntings. They sent their legates to the other B. of euery prouince: but these deuiding their selues on either partie, raised vp the like contention. Yea the Meletians were intermingled with the Arians, who not long before were seuered from the church. But of what sort these also were, I think it meete to bee declared. Meletius a B. of a certain city in Egypt, was depriued of his episcopal office, by Peter B. of Alexandria, (who in the reigne of Dioclesian died by martyrdome,) both for many other causes and chiefly for that in the time of persecution, he had denied the faith and had offered vnto Idols: who when he was depriued, and had very many that cleaued vnto his faction: he gaue himself to be the ringleader of that heresie vnto the, which from that time euentill this day, are in Egypt called the Meletians. And when he could alleage no iust excuse or cause, why he seperated himselfe from the church: he said that he had onely in a terme, an iniury offered him. And he began to reuile Peter with raylings, and to deface him with reproches. And as soone as Peter had by martyrdome (in the rage of persecution) suffered death: he turned his reproches vpon Achilles that succeeded Peter in the bishopricke, and afterward a fresh against Alexander: who after the death of Achilles, obtained the degree of that dignity. And while these were thus occupied in this strife and dissention: in the mean time was holden the quest, concerning Arius, whome Mel. with those that were of his side assisted, & conspired with Arius against the B. Thus saith Socrates also of this scisme. Theoderetus both tel. li. 5. cap. 3. of another Meletius afterwards in Gratiens time, that when in Antiochia the chiefest citie in the orient, the professours of the apostolical opinions were also deuided into 2. partes: & the one part (streight wayes after the practises attempted against Eustathius the great) detesting the Arian wickednes & making their assemblies among themselves, had Paulinus to be their B: the other part, after the creation of Euseb. beeing with the notable Meletius, deuided from the wicked, & beeing exercised among those dangers that we haue mentioned, were gouerned by the doctrine of the most wise Mel. Besides these a third head gaue it self to the faction of Apollinaris a Laodicean: who putting on the person of godlines, when he was reputed, as though he would maintain the apostolical opinions: not long after he shewed himself to be an enemy of them, &c. But the Duke Sapor being entred into Antioche, when the law of the emperour was set forth, Paulinus affirmed that he was of the parts of Damasus. Apollinaris also (who couered his disafe) affirmed the same. As for holy Meletius maintained quietnesse, nor lapped him selfe in their contentions: but the moste wise Flavianus, beeing as yet a Preeste (or Elder) firste turninge to Paulinus, in the hearinge of the Duke, did say: if you (my freend) reioyce, in the community of Damasus: see that you proue the coniunction of your opinions. For he in the confession of one essence, preacheth manifestlie three persons of the Trinity. But you contrariwise take away the trinity of the persons. Wherefore, teach vs the consent of your opinions and then possesse the Churches, as the lawe commandeth. With which confutation, when he had stopped his mouth: hee sayde, that hee maruelled at Apollinaris, that so impudently resisted the trueth, when as he knewe well enough, that the famous Damasus auouched, that God the word did take vpon him our whole nature: to whome he alwayes taught the contrary: For (sayth he) thou depriest our mindes of saluation, which accusation if it be false, then deny thou now this impe of thy newfangelnesse, and receiue the doctrine of Damasus, and obtaine the diuine Churches. Thus did the most wise Flauian allay their boldnes, by the trueth of his speech. But Meletius of all men the mildest, sweetely and gentlie calling Paulinus, sayde: because the Lorde of this flocke hath set me also ouer the custodie of the sheepe, and other are committed vnto thee: sith there is a community of godlines among the sheepe: let vs freendly ioyne our foldes, and let go the contention of Mastership, and attend in common to the sheepe, that go in common in the pastures. But if the seate itself doe stoppe the concord, I also will endeouour to remooue this contention. Let vs set (I pray you) in the seate, the booke of the diuine gospell, and let vs either of vs sitte together on eyther side it. And if so be that I shall dye before thee: be thou (O freend) alone the Sheepes master. But if this shall happen to thee before me: then will I to my ability, take vpon me the care of the flock. When as Paulinus allowed not these his sweete and gentle speeches: the Duke deciding the cause, commended the Churches to Meletius the great. But Paulinus reteyned the mastership (or remained bishop) of these Sheepe, that had long before deuided themselues.

Meletius offer to part the bishopricke between them & to gouerne together for a full vnion.

Here agayne is another notable story of another Meletius, where more in one city toke vpon them, according to their factions, to be bishops: and what offer was made to appease the strife, of two at one time to haue ruled together, vntill the decease of the one or the other, and how in the end it was determined vnto one.

Thus much to this most reuerend and learned mans answers to Epiphanius, for the superioritie of one bishop, in one citie. The residue of his argumentes, because they are chiefly on the sentences taken from Ierome, Chrysostome, Theophylact, and Theodoret, whose sentences we haue before at large perused: I will here for this time, passe them ouer, saue that which he sayth of Cyprian, as yet vntouched.

The most reuerend.

And whereas Cyprian (sayth he) not in one place calleth the bishops successors successors of the Apostles, whose authority is from God: and if we take it so, as though by the very commaundement of God, these Bishops are the same, that in time past were the Apostles: the thing it self doth confute that, seeing there was alwaies a certaine portion assigned to euery Bishop. But the Apostles, by the direction of the spirite of God, though not confusedlie, didde exercise their Ministry, throughout the whole world.

The meaning of Cyprian is plaine without cauling. as the like saying of many other the auncient fathers, that bishops are the successors of the Apostles, because they succeeded both in the places & Churches by the Apostles fownded: and in the chiefeft dignity of the Churches orders, as in their times, the function of the Apostles was. As the Magdeburgēses note. Cent. 3. cap. 6. tit. de ratione gubernandi. pag. 150.

The firste and cheefest authority belonged to the Bishops, whome also Cyprian lib. 3. Epistola. 14. calleth Præpositors, placed ouer the residue, who in gouernment sustayned the chiefeft parte of the Ecclesiasticall administration. After them, the next in dignity, belonged to the Priestes or Elders, and the third to the Deacons. And that Bishoppes were then aboue the Priestes or Pastorall Elders, is apparant by Cyprians owne wordes. I haue long helde my patience (moste deare bretheren) as though our bashfull silence should help to quietnesse. But when immoderate and abrupt presumption, by the rashnes thereof, shall attempt to disturbe the honor of the Martyrs, and shamefastnesse of the Confessors, and tranquillity of the whole people, I must no longer hold my peace. For, what daunger of the offense of the Lord ought we not to feare, when as some of the Priestes (or Elders) neyther mindefull of the Gospell, nor of their place, no nor thinking of the Lords iudgements to come, neither that now, the Bishop is placed ouer them: do with contumely and contempt of him that is placed ouer them, claime the whole to themselues, which thing was neuer done at all vnder the aunccestors. Yea and (would to God) that casting flatte downe the saluation of our brethren, they would not challenge all thinges to them selues. I can dissemble and beare the reproches of our Bishoprike, as I haue still dissembled and borne them. But now there is no place of dissembling, where as our brotherhoode is deceaued by some of you: who, while without meanes of restoring the saluation, they desire to be plausible, they rather hinder such as are fallen. &c.

Whereby as it plainly appeareth, that the Pastorall Elders were inferior to bishops: so euen then, there were of the Cleargie, some Priests or Elders, that enuied and slandered this their B. Superiority, and would haue had the dealing, as far forth, as they in restoring the penitents, and in all thinges, equall authority to the bishoppes.

Junius re-

James B of Ierusalem.

Which thing (by Cyprians iudgement) how plausible a shew of reformation soener it had, was very offensive vnto God, and neuer before attempted of the Ministers. And so consequentially, this superioritye of Bishops placed ouer the Priestes or Pastorall Elders, had continued euen from the Apostles times. And thus might they well of him bee called the successors of the apostles. Not, that Cyprian meant, that there was no difference betwene the Bishops and the Apostles.

And therefore, this is a manifest mistaking to say: If wee take it so, as though by the very commandment of God, these Bishops are the same that in times past the Apostles; the thing it selfe dooth refute that seeing there was alwaies a certaine portion assigned to euery Bishoppe. But the Apostles, by the direction of the spirit of God, thought not confusedlye, didde exercise their Ministrye throughout the whole world,

Although herein and in other pointes more, the Apostles were distinguished from and aboue Bishops: yet might they also be Bishoppes well enough. For, as this Learned man saith: they did it not confusedlye: for their charge to goe into all the world, and preache the Gospell vnto all nations, was not so, that euery one of them shoulde trauell ouer all the world, and preach vnto all nations: But that by the world (being named per synecdochen the whole for the parts,) and that among them all, some here and some there, by the direction inuoyd, of the spirit of GOD, they dispersed themselves at length in diuerse parts of the world. And there all so diuerse of them, did settle themselves, so long as they lived, as is recorded in the moste credible histories of their travels. And some taried still at Ierusalem, as James, and after him Symeon. Of which James it is not onely in all the most ancient and not suspected records, constantly & expressly auouched, that he was the Bishop of Ierusalem: but even Iunius himselfe, (as precise otherwile as any of our Learned Writers, and no lesse Learned,) in his booke of notes vpon the Epistle of Iude, fol. 5. confesseth, saying:

Fowrthlie, hee is called Iudas the brother of James, not onely in this salutation: but also Zuc. 6. 16. & Mat. 1. 15. Because the name of James was moste famous among all men: as hee that moste of all was the Governour of the Church of Ierusalem. Who was called the brother of the Lorde, who was accounted iuste, who was surnamed Cholim-ham: or, as it is commonly written Oblas, by the sentence of alme; that is to say the bulwarke, (or compassing about) of the people in righteousness, as Clemens doeth interpret it, or τοις τοις λαοις, the wall of the people, as Epiphanius expoundeth it. As though hee coneyned the people, and environed them with defence rounde about, by the puritie of his doctrine, and by the holiness and righterighteousnesse of his manners. For Moses Exod. 32. 35. affirmeth, that on the contrarie, the people by vngodlinesse and impurenesse are made naked. Of these thinges wee haue moste plentiful witnesses. Peter Act. 13. 17. Luke, Act. 15. & 21. Paule, Gal. 2. 9. Ioseph lib. 20. in his history of Antiquities. Clement and Eusebius lib. 2. of his Ecclesiasticall history, cap. 23. which three last testimonies as we haue already perused, do confirme that Iames was the very bishop of Ierusalem.

But (saith this most reuerend and Learned man) if this be true, there should haue bene more Bishops in the Church of Rome it selfe: namely Peter and Paule, which yet afterwarde was counted peculier to one.

The most reuerend,

And must this needes follow, that if bishops were the successors of the Apostles, Peter and Paule must needes haue bene bishops of Rome: Such close conclusions indeede the Papistes make. And why not at other places so well as at Rome, where more than one of the Apostles were together: as at Samaria, and especially at Antiochia. But though bishops succeeded the Apostles in some thinges, yet it followes not, that they succeeded them in their Apostleship? And some of the Apostles were bishops also, as some were both Euangelistes and Prophetes, euen in the most proper signification of those functions. Yet for all that, were they Apostles still. But who maketh Peter and Paule bishop of Rome, because they were both at Rome? As for Paule, it is apparant he was there, and continued also there in teaching 3. yeere at once together: and yet we say not, he was Bishop there, nor Peter neither. And yet had they bene both Bishops there also, and at one time, why might they not for all that, haue afterwards had but one Bishop at once, and that one, successor well inough unto them both? but he replyeth.

Bridges.

Peter and Paule not B of Rome.

And surely, there can not be more, the chiefe in one and the same company at one time.

The most reuerend.

And cannot two be chiefe together, in respect of other inferior to them both, though in one and the same companie? There were 2. Consuls at Rome, both chiefe alike together at one time, ouer all the other Senators, their selues being of the same order and company of Senators. There haue bene two or three Emperours also of Rome, who were all of one and the same company, and parted the Empire among them at one time, and all had chiefe authorizty together, ouer all the ciuill state of Rome. and might it not be so in a Bishops office, yea two or three together, vpon some extraordinary occasion, and yet all alike superior to all the other Pastors in that Church or Diocese? The question of equality, is of qualitie, not of quantitie: the number doth not appreach the superiority.

It followeth nor, that because some Apostl. were Bishops: all Bish. must bee Apostl.

And (saith he) whereas the name of bishop, is said of the Apostleship, Act. 1. 26. it maketh nothing to the matter, except a man by like reason, would haue the Deacons to haue bene Apostles, because Paule calleth his Apostleship a Deaconship or Ministry.

Indee, if we would haue Bishops to be Apostles also, then he saide something to the matter, that Deacons should haue bene Apostles; because Paule calleth his Apostleship a Deaconship or Ministry, vndersta- ding the name of Deacon, in his vsuall and proper signification. But Paule doth not so call himselfe a Deacon; and yet now and then, hee exercised the proper office of a Deacon. Yea, all the Apostles did so, vntill (Acts 6.) they made a peculier office of the Deaconship. Howbeit not so, that they excluded themselves, or other Pastors, that they might neuer jointly exercise also, a Deacons office. So might an Apostle be a Deacon, though a Deacon might not be an Apostle. As the higher office might include the lower, though the lower include not the higher. And so the Apostles might be Bishops, although the Bishops succeeding them, might not bee Apostles. But, though their Apostleship it selfe Act. 1. bee called a Bishoprike improperly: what hindereth this in them, that the name and office of Bishop in his proper sence, might not be compatible, though not al one, with the name & office of their Apostleship also? And yet, if it coulde not neither, notwithstanding, sith that the Apostles made Bishops, and made them in the highest degree, of the Ministers ordinary and perpetuall orders, as the Apostles were for their extraordinary time the highest: so might they well of Cyprian be called the successors of the Apostles. So not onely Ciprian, but (besides the auncient Fathers already cited.) S. Augustine calleth the Apostles, Bishops: and Bishops the Apostles successors. Tom. 4. de quasi. ex nouo Testam. quasi. 97.

For (saith he) no man is ignorant that our Saviour instituted Bishops for the Churches. For euen he him selfe before he ascended, laying his hand on his Apostles, ordeined them Bishops. And more at large, Tom. 8. on the 44. psalme: that they succeeded the Apostles. In steede of thy Fathers, are Sonnes borne vnto thee. The Apostles haue begotten thee. They them selues were sente, they their selues preached, euen the fathers theirselues: but coulde not they be alwaies bodily present with vs? If one of them said, I desire to bee loosed, and to be with Christ: muche more is it the best. It is necessary to tarry in the flesh, for you. Thus indeede hee saide, but how long could he tarrie heere? Coulde hee vntill this time? Could hee for euer heere-after? Is then the Church desolate by their departure? God forbid.

In steede of thy Fathers, Sonnes are borne vnto thee. What meaneth it, In steede of thy fathers, sonnes are borne vnto thee. The fathers, the Apostles were sent, In steede of the Apostles, (or for the Apostles) sons are are borne vnto thee, there are ordeyned bishops. For from whence are the bishoppes borne, that are at this day throughout all the worlde? The Church herselfe calleth them Fathers, she herselfe begat them, and shee herselfe placed them in the seates of their Fathers. Therefore, thou thinkest not thy self desolate, because thou seest not Peter, because thou seest not Paule, by whome thou art borne: a Fatherhood is growne to thee of thine owne Children. In steede of thy Fathers are children born vnto thee, whome thou shalt make Princes in all landes.

What can be playner spoken then these sayings of S. Augustine, both that the Apostles were also Bishops, and that (as Cyprian saide,) bishops are the successors of the Apostles?

As for that which is here added of Hieromes former sentence, though I haue sufficientely and at large discussed the same: yet, since this moste reuerende and Learned man also, hath somewhat more to say thereto: let vs likewise heare it.

But wee are (saith hee) to looke into that also, that Ierome might seeme to be of the minde, that this kind of Bishop began then, when as Schismes arose vp in the Church.

Very true, euen so saith Hierome, and (as we haue noted) it followeth thereon, that this kind of bishop began, euen in the Apostles times. And what heere can this moste reuerend and learned man, or anie other say, to denie this conclusion, except he will denie Hieromes saying? If he will denie it: why doth he bring it for him? So that hee plainly thought, it was in the Apostles times. Yea, and he plainly so auouched, in the sentence also before alleaged out of Ierome, by this Learned man himself: For at Alexandria (saith Hierome) from the time of Marke the Euangeliste, till the time of Heraclea and Dionisius Bishoppes: The Elders placed one in a high degree or place, chosen by them-selues, whome they called, the Bishoppe. Against which the sacrament of our regeneration is a remedie: But S. Paule passeth ouer the baptizing of Infantes: Ergo: it was not a remedie in S. Paules time.

S. Paule also in the same Epistle that he speaketh of schismes, writeth of purpose, against whozedome, whereof diuorse is a remedie: but he passeth ouer the remedie of diuorse, in the cause of whozedome. Ergo: there was then in that case, no vse at all thereof. Saint Paule writeth of purpose against the abuse of the Lords supper, with their drunkennesse, surfitting, and making no difference of it from other meate, whereof it is also a remedie, to haue onely the elementes of breade and wine, and to remoue all other meate at such times as it is ministred: but S. Paule passeth ouer the forbidding of those oramus (or loue Feasts) which were vsed to be made when they came therto: Ergo: The Lords supper was neuer vsed onely with bread & wine in the Apostles times, but alwayes with another supper ioyned thereto.

On this fashion, we might reason of many moe thinges, But one for al Saint Paule writing of purpose against the same matter, to wit against the Corinthians schismes, doth passe ouer this remedie, the equalitye of all pastors in the Church: Ergo: In S. Paules time the pastors were not all equall. If it be replied. But yet these thinges are written of, in other places, either by S. Paule, or by some other: so y^e those remedies notwithstanding, remaine entier, although they be not there touched: And doth not this fully aunswere this most reuerende and Learned man, if this superiority among pastors, be shewed in other places: as in 1. Gal. and in the Epistles to Timothie and Titus? &c. Yea, what if in the self same place, the Apostle writing of purpose to the Corinthians aboute the same matter, doe sufficiently and plainly gather the superiority among the pastors? Doth not S. Paule name himselfe, besides Apollo and Cephas, on whose names the Corinthians pretended their schismes? And were not all these three, Elders, for all they were Apostles? Were not Paule and Apollo, of the same function that was Peter? Who (as this Learned man by and by his selfe confesseth) called himselfe fellow Elder: Ergo; an Elder. And was this S. Pauls purpose, in writing of purpose against this schisme), that where the Corinthians thought too much of these three Pastors, and made schismes about their affections to them, that for remedye hereof, they should so abase their estimation of them, that they should count them but equall to al other, and all other pastors (set aside their Apostleship) to be equall, and all one in dignitie and authority with them? No, howsoever the order and function of the Apostleship, was all one and equall in all the Apostles, and the Eldershippe among the Elders: yet neither as Apostles, nor yet as Elders, the persons were of like giftes, nor of like dignitie, and authoritie, in all places and respectes among them. Which superiour degrees and estimation, Saint Paule approueth and alloweth: and neyther to the Corinthians, nor anie where else, directly nor indirectly dooth improue the same.

Difference of the persons dignitie & authority in the equality both of Apostleship & Eldership.

But (saith this our reuerend and Learned man) that S. Paule foreseeing such a matter, doeth in the title of the Epistle ioyned to him-selfe Sothenes?

most reuerend.

And did Saint Paule and Sothenes, execute their Ministry in common as equals: because he ioyned him to himselfe in the title of his Epistle, and in his salutations? He ioyned Timothie vnto himselfe, in his other Epistle to the Corinthians: and besides Timothie, Siluanns in both his Epistles to the Theſſalonians: Doeth hee therefore execute his ministry with them in common, and as his equals? and how then dooth this Learned man himselfe euen heere confesse of the Apostles: (who it is euident, were not onely the firste in order next vnto Christe, but also highest in degree.) if these men whome in these salutations S. Paule ioyneth vnto himselfe, did execute their Ministry in common: and therein were equall vnto him?

Bridges.

These thinges hang not together. Whatsoever S. Paule in ioyning Sothenes vnto himselfe in his salutations did foresee: this Learned man fore-sawe not, no, nor after-saw his apparant contradictions to him selfe: and much lesse saue he, what S. Paule fore-sawe heerein, cleane different from that that he imagineth.

Wherefore (saith hee) no not the same Paule alone woulde excommunicate the incestuous persons, by his Apostolicall authoritye, but by the authoritye of the whole Eldershippe: Neyther dooth Peter Bridges. S. Paule had a superior authority ouer the whole Eldershippe, euen as Caluine himselfe confesseth on that place, 1. Cor. 5. 4. Wee muste note (saith he) that Paule though he were an Apostle, doeth not excommunicate after his own lust alone, but participate counsel with the church, that the matter may be done by a common authoritye: hee verilye goeth before them, and sheweth the way. but in that hee ioyneth associates with him, hee signifieth inough, that it is not the priuate power of one man, Marlorate on 1. Cor. 5. To the which Marlorate addeth, and that as out of Caluine also: firste vpon these wordes, I haue already decreed, for I haue also (saith he) already iudged and pronounced the sentence which you ought to follow. And againe, as out of Martyr. Verily, the Apostle goeth before other in iudging, which also it becometh those that in the Church are the greater, to the intent that the vnskillfuller people, may be in iudgement directed by their voice going before. And further, as out of Caluine hee saith:

The auncient Church had an order of Priesthood or Eldershippe: whereof the Apostle mentioneth. 1. Tim. 5. c 17. and these Priests or Elders were of two sorts. For, certaine of them both taught and administered the Sacramentes; yea rather, together with the Bishop, did gouern the Church, because the Bishop was of the same order that they were of. Neyther behaued he himselfe otherwise towards them, than the Consul of Rome towards the Senators.

If the priests or Elders minist. of the word & Sacram. did then together with the B. gouern the Ch. then were B distinct from Elders of the word & sacraments Whereby it plainly appeareth, that the Apostle, whether he ioyned vnto him (after he had fore-iudged and decreed the same) the whole Church of Corinth, or the Seniory, (of what sort of Elders soeuer they vnderstande it) to denounce in their assembly, the sentence already decreed of excommunication: yet notwithstanding was Paule their farre superior: Yea, that euery Bishop in his Diocese, ioyning with his seniorye, being of such Priestes or Elders as are of the order that the Bishop himselfe is of; neuerthelesse, still hee remaineth their superior, not onelie in other poyntes of dignitie, but euen in the voyces that they all ioyntlie assembled giue, in denouncing the partye to bee excommunicate, with their assents, whome the Bishop befoze hath pronounced iudged and decreed so to be.

And that he is as a Consull towards the Senators, to witte, of a far higher authoritye than anye one, or than all his Bretheren in the Senate. And that this was the order in the auncient Church of the Eldership, whereof the Apostle maketh mention in the 1. to Timothy, 5. c. 17.

 All which if it be true, that Marlorate (as out of Caluine) both here resolve: then is it plaine, that in the Apostles times, there were Bishops of the same order, that the other Priestes or pastorall elders were, who both taught and administred the Sacramentes, and though with the Bishop, they did gouerne the Church together: yet had he a farre superior dignity, then anie one, or then all they had, as a Consull among & yet aboue his Senators. Which is the very principall poynt in question. And how is not then this Bishop, that heere in contempt is called the Bishop of Man, the Bishop of God also? As for excommunication, we wil re-ferre to his proper place. And for Peters calling of himselfe a fellowe Elder, because our Brethren, the Learned Discourfers, discourse better on it, I will likewise referre it, to their further calling on the same.

The residue here noted by this Learned man, for Ieromes sentence, is already answered, same that he addeth this:

And whereas hee saith in the same place, that it was decreed throughout all the worlde: we are to vnderstande it no otherwise, than of a priuie custome, brought in by little and little.

Howe priuie it was, and by little and little brought in, the Reader may vnderstande by that we haue shewed already: that it began in the Apostles times, the apostles not buttowing thereto: but willing the same: yea, some of the chiefe apostles themselves parties: Open to al the world in the most famous Churches, Ierusalem, Antioche, Alexandria, Ephesus, Rome, and all Creta ouer: spread from these places, throughout all Christendome: begun in the age of the apostles, and so continued in the Primitive Church, and held in reuerence among all these auncient reue-rend holy, and learned fathers, confessors, and Martyrs, before the errores, superstitions, pride and tyrannie of Antichriste began: recorded & testified by so many and so credible witnesses: confessed and graunted vnto euen by the moste reuerende and best learned men in deede of our owne times: yea, by these our brethren themselves that do impugne it, and yet in effect doo thus confirme it: and shall wee now dare to call this a priuie custome brought in by little and little? But what dare not this man from beyonde the Seas (vnder the name of moste reuerende & learned) presume to conclude, that dare solde by all this matter thus?

And whatsoeuer is founde in Ignatius or other auncient Writers, when the Bishop of Sathan was not yet found out touching the authority of the Bishops or ouerseers (as Iustine speaketh) is to bee vnderstood of this kind of Bishop.

Thus both this moste reuerende and Learned man, shake off all these auncient writers, and holy fathers. Ignatius heere named, immediatlye succeeding the Apostles, and living in Antiochia, before the destruction of Ierusalem, not onely in S. Iohns and Simeons daies: but while manye other of the Apostles and Disciples lived, as Eusebius in his Chronicle witnesseth. Yea, though Bera also alowe the title and office in Timothee, that Iustine ascribeth to bishops: What of all this? Whatsoever Iustine speaketh; yea, whatsoever is found in Ignatius, or other auient writers whosoever they be, whatsoever they speake or write, neuer so good, neuer so holie, neuer so true, what though it were, when the bishop of Sathan was not yet founde out; if it once be touching the authority of bishops & Over-seers, it is all to be reiected with this contumelie: It is to be vnderstode of this kinde of bishoppe, which is called. The bishoppe of Man, that is to say, brought into the Church, by the alone wisdom of man; besides the expresse word of God. Thus doth this moste Reuerend and Learned man frō beyond the Seas, in a round conclusion, giue his iudgement of them, and so he leaueth them.

Let vs now therefore leane him also, to returne a Gods blessing beyond the Seas, from whence he came, and with all due re-

THis booke treateth specially on the Iudgements of other reuerend and godly learned men, from beyonde the seas also, in the late reformed Churches concerning this superiour authority & dignity of one pastor in a citie; or Diocesse or Prouince ouer his brethren and fellow pastors. Which one was called in a citie, or diocesse, bishop. in a prouince Archb. To the prooffe whereof are, alleaged vpon our brethrens allegation of Titus. What superiour authoritie he had ouer all the pastors of Creta: with the iudgements of Bullinger, Caluine, Aretius Hemingius, Herebrande with the orders of other reformed Churches for their Superintendents speciall and generall. The B. and Archb. of the fathers and other canons of the auncient churches regiment approoued by Caluine in Geneua, with the approbation of Jeromes sentence, and that this order was in the Apost. times, and not contrary to the Apostolicall Doctrin: with Caluines epistles to diuerse B. and Archb. & to the King of Polonia, approouing this superior authority: and his generall rules for all popish B. conuerted to the gospel. The iudgement of Zanchius and Bucer for those olde orders, specially of bishops & Archb. & for the old clericall discipline and regimēte due vnto them: of the obiections to the contrary out of Peter, and of the Titles proper to Christe: and whether the name Archb. be cōpetent to any Minist. & of Peters Title of fellow Elder: and of Christs prohibitions of Titles & rule, & of his example of washing his Disc. feet, &c. and of humility & Lordship: of bishops holding temporalities & royalties: & of obediēce vnto them in the same, & of Diotrephes. with caueats for the Ministers lawfull authority: and against vnlawfull liberty by equality: lastly of Bezaes iudgement on these matters for the Apostles and the auncient orders: & of the renuing those orders in the state of Geneua.

IN the same manner of speaking, he describeth the qualities of those, which were to be chosen Bishops and Deacons. Likewise vnto Titus. 1. 5. Hee calleth them elders, and immediately after, describing the qualities of such, as were meet to be ordeyned elders, hee calleth them bishops: saying For this cause did I leaue thee in Creta, that thou shouldest continue, to redresse the thinges that remayne: and that thou shouldest ordeyne elders in euery City, if any bee vnreprouable: the husband of one wife, hauing faithfull children: which are not accused of riot, nor are disobedient. For a bishop or ouerseer must be vnreprouable, as the steward of God, not froward. &c.

Concerning, the communicating of these names, Pastors, Priestes, or elders, and byshops, indifferently, of the being of the office all one and the same, vntill furder order in the Apostles times were taken: we haue at large before declared. But as for the matter, that among these Pastors, Elders or bishops, some one Pastor, elder or bishop, had a superior gouernment ouer many of the residue in the same order: as wee haue plainly proued it by Saint Paule, through-out all the same his Epistle to Timothy here alleaged, and also out of the other Epistle vnto him: so, for this Epistle likewise vnto Titus. 1. 5. Which Epistle appeareth to be so late written by Saint Paule, that there is no such iourney, or aboade, in any such place mentioned, in all those iourneyes which Saint Luke so diligently in the Actes recozde: & therefore it should rather seeme, to be written after that time.

The time when the Epistle to Titus was written.

Bullinger, in his Preface on this Epistle to Titus sayth: when it was written, eyther before or after the Apostle was taken, it is not euident ynough. Theophilaste thinketh it written before his bondes, and before the later to Timothie were published. Certainly, hee that wil search it more diligently, shall not want coniectures, whereby it may be gathered that it was written, after that by the sentence of Cesar, hee was at Rome acquitted.

But were it written then, or after, or before, or as Chytrens also Chytrens in his Onomastichon gathereth: yet maketh it no lesse, if not much more, Onomasticho. vnto this purpose, that euen at that time, while the name of Preeft or Elder and Bishop was yet vbled in common: notwithstanding there was, yea, and that no small difference, among these Preeftes or elders and Bishops, in the degree of superiour gouernment: which is apparant by the

the text it selfe, wherein Saint Paule giueth Titus beeing a priest, or elder, or pastor, or Bishop, a greates deale more authority and superior dignitie, then ordinarily appertayned to euery Priest or elder or Pastor or Bishoppe, as by what name soeuer they were tearmed. Which Caluine himselfe vpon these wordes, For this cause haue I left thee in Cre-ta, &c. doth note saying: This beginning doth clearely shewe, that Titus is not so muche admonished for his owne sake, as commended vnto others) leaste any shoulde hinder him, the Apostle committeth vnto him, his owne turnes. Wherefore it behooueth, that hee bee acknowledged of all men, for the Apostles Vicar, and bee reuerently receyued. For sithe that no certayne station was assigned to the Apostles, but an office enioyned to them, of spreading the Gospell through-out all the worlde: whereas therefore they trauayled out of one city into another, they vsed to substitute fitte men in their place, by whose labour that which they beganne, shoulde be finished. Pradica. So Paule boasteth that he founded the Church of Corinth, but other were the master-workman which ought to builde therupon, that is, to further the building. This indeede belongeth to all Pastors. For, the Churches shall alwayes haue neede of encreasinges, and of furderance, so long as the worlde endureth. But beyonde the ordinary office of pastors, a care of ordeyning the Church was committed to Titus, for pastors are wont to bee placed ouer Churches, that bee already ordeyned, and formed in a certayne manner: But Titus susteyned a certayne burden more, that it is witte, to giue a forme to churches not yet orderly framed, that he might establishe a certaine manner of pollicie together with Discipline. Thus hath Titus beeing an Elder, or pastor or bishop a Superior authoritie giuen him aboue other Elders, pastours or bishoppes, were they then distinguished or all one. As for the office of Titus, it is deuided (sayth Aretius) in two partes, the one is parted into correcting, the other into ordeyning. These two wee haue in the Apostles proposition: That thou mightest correct the other thinges, and Towne by Towne ordeyne Elders. That therefore, shoulde bee Antididum, Correction, but this ordinatio, Ordination. Aretius in
iii. Correction conteyneth all that, that is vicious in the manners of men, and ought to bee and may bee amended, according to the rule of Gods Lawe. In which part the Apostle hadde in-deede corrected many thinges, but not all, nor the whole. Hereupon was the precept of the amendment of the residue. &c Whereby wee are admonished, that alwayes and euery where, we haue neede of amending.

still that saying of the Apostle is to bee often repeated, Correct the other thinges. &c.

Time ordained Elders alone.

The other office of Titus, is to ordeine Preestes or Elders Towne by Towne. This is called ordination the ordination of Ministers: a place moſte ample and needefull to bee knowne. It is wont heere to bee enquired, who oughte to ordeine and then who are to bee ordeyned. Concerning the former, the Apostle in this place attributeth this to Titus alone: for there were no other in Creta that regarded this matter, or that coulde haue perfourmed it: and all the Magistrates were as yet heathen, and Titus was moſte rightly enſtructed of the Apostle, and endued with giftes of the holy ghoſte. At this day there is another reason, wee haue ſaythfull Magistrates and Chriſtian people: And therefore the force of the election pertayneth not to the onely Ministers, although heere it appertaine to Titus alone. And therefore our Churches. (He ſpeaketh of the territozy belonging to the Lords of Berne in Heluetia) doe keepe this manner, that the Ministers doe indeed elect, notwithstanding, they offer the to the Senate (as if we ſhould preſent the election to the Duēnes Maieſty, & to the Conſel) Which either alloweth or diſalloweth all the election, according as they vnderſtande the matter. Oftentimes alſo the conſent of the whole Church is ſought, ouer whome the Miniſter is to bee preferred. Thus ſayth Aretius not onely of their order in ordeyning Ministers, both different from this example of Titus, and from the rules preſcribed by theſe our Learned diſcourſers: but alſo to theſe, that Titus had there and then, the whole and onely gouernment of theſe thinges.

Caluines obiection and anſwere for Titus authority in electing & ordeining Paſtors.

Neither anſwereth that, which Caluine anſwereth to his owne objection: which though wee haue noted once befoze, in anſwering the moſte reuerende and learned man, when hee vrged Election as the cheefe ground of Church offices, which dependeth on the voyces of the whole company: Yet once moze, (if it be pardonable) let vs againe conſider his obiection, and his anſwere: But hee ſeemeth (ſayth Caluine) to permitte too muche to Titus, while hee commaundeth him to ſette Ministers ouer all the Churches. For this were almoſte a Kinglike power: and moreouer by theſe meanes, is taken away from euery Church the right of electing, and the iudgement from the colledge of the Paſtors: but this were to prophane all the holy adminiſtration of the Church. But the anſwere (ſayth Caluine) heereunto is eaſy. Not that it is permitted to the will of Titus, that hee might doe all things alone, and place biſhops ouer the Churches whome hee pleaſed: but onely hee commaundeth him to gouern the elections, as a moderator, euen as it is neceſſary. This is a ſpeeche common ynough: ſo is the Conſull, or hee that ſupplieth the place of the King in the vacancy, or

or the dictator, sayde to haue created the Consulles, because he held the court where they were to bee elected. And so saith Luke of Paule and Barnabas in the Actes: not that they alone did preferre, as at their commaundement, the Pastors of the Church, eyther tried or known: but because they ordeyned fitte men which were elected or desired of the people.

I omit here, in this matter (concerning Titus ordeining Ministers,) the contradiction of these two so notable learned men Caluine and Aetius: the one sayth, the ordeining and the election of them pertayned to him alone: the other sayth, not to him alone, the one sayth, they were elected or desired of the people: the other sayth, none regarded this or could do it: and yet both of these (thus varying) excellent men. But to reconcile them both as well as we may, yea, to yelde to Caluine as the senior, and the more renowned, and the more fauouring these our brethren Discourses, and being him selfe the cheefe Pastor euen in Geneva, wherunto they would neuer leuel our Ecclesiasticall government: let Caluines owne conclusion answer his owne selfe, and our brethren pretended equalitie of their Pastors. Indeepe (sayth Caluine) We learne out of this place, that there was not then such equality among the Ministers of the Church, but that some one was aboue them in authoritie and in counsell. Howbeit, this is nothing to the tyrannicall and prophane manner of Collations which reigneth in popery: for the manner of the apostles was very farre different. What can be playner sayde, then this conclusion of Caluine, that there was not then such equalitye among the ministers of the Church, but that some one was aboue them, not onely in Counsell but also in authority?

Caluines conclusion that the ministers were not al equal in authority in the Apostles times.

Neither is this confessed of Titus onely, but of the whole state of the Ministry then, to wit, in the Apostles times, and so: all the continuance of the Ministry after them, that there shoulde not bee among the Ministers of the churches (and by Ministers there, hee speaketh of Pastors) suche an equality as our Brethren here pretende, but that some one, both in Counsaile and also in authority, should bee a Gouvernor and Ruler, set ouer aboue his brethren and fellowe Ministers: and by what name could they or can we call him better, then a Bishop?

The ancient Fathers therefore, hauing by continuall succession received this Title, for a Superiour in authority and counsaile, among the Ministers of the Church, as not equall, yea, by a kinde of prehemi- so call him a Byshop: and finding Titus to haue such Superiority committed vnto him, ouer a whole Isle, hauing an hundred Cities or good Towns therein, do call him Bishop of Creta. Titus (sayth Hierome) the Bishop of Creta. In which Isle and the Islandes lying thereabouts, hee preached the Gospell of Christe, and there died.

Hemingius a famous and yet living learned man, writing upon this Epistle of Paule to Titus, in the summe of the first Chapter, saith on this wise: The summe of the first Chapter is, that a Byshop ought Towne by Towne, to ordayne Ministers of blamelesse life, and of sounde doctrine. Whereby he may stop the seducers mouthes, and blame such as teache peruerse thinges, that they may at length become sounde and repent. In which wordes, he signifieth, that both Titus was a bishop, and that generally all such as are Bishoppes haue a Superiority ouer Pastors and Ministers, both to ordeine them, and to correct them. And vpon these wordes, For this cause I left thee in Creta, &c. Hee saith: Having finished the Preface and salutation, he treateth of well ordeining those thinges, that were of Paule omitted, by reason of his suddaine departure, and of ordeining byshoppes in euery Towne. Because hee woulde not haue a want of gouernment in the Church, but that all might bee doone in order and decentlye, hee woulde that some man notable in life and Doctrine, shoulde bee the gouernour to ordeyne the Ministers, and to dispose all thinges rightly in the Church, which shoulde take heede that no heresies shoulde arise: Which (to conclude) shoulde studye that all things should bee done orderly, neyther yet heereupon, is the primacy of the Pope, nor their tyrannicall ^{at Rome} or freedome of liuing after their owne lawes, and iurisdiction of the papistes, which they challenge to themselves, established. For they serue not our Lorde Iesus Christe, but endeouour them selues with all their might, to extinguish the light of the gospel, that by the goodnesse of God is kindled. Albeit they are greatly defeated of their opinion: for the bloude of the martyrs is as it were the best oyle, for it causeth that the light of the gospel being kindled, doth burne the more. That thou mayest correct the thinges that are desired: that is, that thou shouldest rightlye dispose those thinges, that are desired in the ecclesiasticall ordination. For Paule as it seemeth hauinge layde the foundation, went vnto some other place, as hee that was the Apostle and Doctoure, not of one Nation, but of the Gentiles, leauing in the meane season, among the Cretensians, Titus, which shoulde set in order those thinges, that hee him selfe in so short a time had not furnished. Note, that the office of a Byshoppe in generall, is to dispose rightly all thinges in the Church. And that thou shouldest in euery Towne ordeyne Preestes or Elders. And the cheefest part of the Episcopall office is to ordeyn fitte Ministers of the worde, &c.

Neyther onely doth Hemingius write thus, on the occasion of these wordes of the Apostle to Titus, then the which, wee neede no playner testimony: but also vpon the fourth of the Ephesians, concerning Pastors, (under which name our Brethren woulde shelter Preeſtes or Elders, and byſhoppes, not onely to bee alwayes equall, but all one and the ſame. Hemingius ſayth, Paſtours were thoſe, whome at this day wee call Paroches, Pariſh Preeſtes, theſe were placed ouer certayne Churches, that by preaching, by adminiſtring the Sacramentes, and by a certayne holy Diſcipline, they mought gouerne them. Theſe are not for a time, but their office is neceſſary in the Church, euen vntill the Iudgement.

Doctours are theſe, whome the Church in times paſt called Catechizers: whoſe office was to preſcribe the forme of Doctrin, and to deliuer the foundations of the Doctrin, which the Paſtours afterwarde ſhoulde followe. Such as at this day, teache the youth Religion in the ſchooles. Theſe haue regarde that the true interpretation, and a iuſt meaſure of teaching, bee reteyned in the Church. Howbeit notwithstanding in the time of the Apoſtles, the manner of promoting as it is nowe in uſe, was not yet receiued. Neuertheleſſe we muſt vndeſtand, that the godly gouernors of the Churches, and of the ſchooles, ordeyned the degrees of promotions, vppon good and profitable counſayl, both that the arrogaunte ſhoulde not vſurpe to themſelues this Title of honoure, without the Iudgement of the Church: and alſo that ſuche as were fit men, mighte bee acknowledged by the publike teſtimonie, and bee had in price. Neyther this contrary to the dignity of the Eccleſiaſtical Hierarchy, which is commendeth order and comelineſſe to the Church; it leaueth vnto her the righte of ordeyning the cuſtomes, which ſeeme to make for order and decency. Wherefore there is no cauſe, that wee ſhoulde regarde theſe ſpeeches, of the proude ſpirites of ſuche as contemne theſe Eccleſiaſtical degrees: iſo bee, that they vnto whome ſuch degrees are collated, ſhall remember, that they are not the badges of the contempte of others, or of arrogaunte Supereminency; but rather, the publike Teſtimonies of the duety, that they owe to the Church, and whereunto (as it were with a publike Sacrament) they be bounde.

But perhappes the aduerſaries obiekt, that the Church maye not knowe Pompe: but ſhoulde haue the triall of Fayth, and of holye life, of prayer, and the laying on of handes. I anſwere: it is nothing vniſſing for Chriſtians, to beſtowe or collate the Teſtimonies of learninge; and honeſtye, vppon thoſe that are godlye and learned men, that the Church maye knowe, vnto whome ſhee mighte ſafely commend the gouernment and the care of Doctrin. Neyther hindreth it, that ſuch promotions haue nowe of long time bene abuſed: ſo that, the deſilings of them being wiped away, wee maye retayne the thinges that to the Churches and to the Schooles are profitable. Again they make exception, and say, that the Lorde prohibited to be called Rabbi, and Masters on the earth, because one is Master. I answered the same L. saith, we must not call father on the earth: who notwithstanding in his Lawe commaundeth the parentes to bee honoured. Wherefore, that forbidding is not to bee vnderstoode of the appellation or naminge, but of another matter besides, that the circumstance of the place doth sufficiently conuince, what is the meaning of that forbidding. For hee addeth: He that is greatest of you shall be your minister. Again, he that exalteth himselfe shall be humbled, The Lorde therefore woulde not, that the appellation of Father, or of Master, or of Doctoure shoulde bee taken awaye: but the arrogant trust therein. Hee woulde not haue that wee shoulde like of our selues, if wee seeme to excell in anye giftes. Hee woulde haue vs that wee shoulde not arrogantlye preferre oure selues before others, but rather that hee whiche is the greatest, shoulde make himselfe the Minister vnto all. Hee woulde not haue vs deuise anye newe Doctrine, but that in matters of saluation, we shoulde followe our onely Master Iesus Christe. But, as for that they vrge the sayinge of the Apostle Iames, who sayth, My Brethren, bee yee not many masters, knowinge that yee shall receiue the greater iudgemente: It is easily refel- led. For Iames in his forbiddinge, setteth downe this reason. For wee slippe all of vs in many things. The sense therefore of this forbidding is, that we woulde not bee rough controllers of other mens manners.

Hemingius

Bern. Eccle.

Thus sayth this excellent learned man Hemingius, of these degrees and Titles of Schooles and Ecclesiasticall promotions, and in his Synagma. Tit. De gubernatione ecclesie Sect. 12. Hee descendeth further vnto the particular Titles and degrees, which these our brethren especially doe forbidde: saying, Moreover, sithe that the Kingdome of Christe is gouerned by the worde and spirite of Christe the Monark, there are therein two kindes of men, that is to witte, the setters forth of the worde, and the hearers of them: who no otherwise than the Fathers and the Sonnes, reuerence and worship the one the other. And although the spirituall iurisdiction of these setters forth of the worde (of which iurisdiction wee shall speake afterwarde) bee all one: notwithstandinge the Degrees of dignitie bee not equall, and that partly by the Lawe of GOD, and partly by the approbation of the Church. For as Christe ascendinge from on high gaue Gyftes to men, Apostles, Prophetes, Euangelistes, Doctours and Pastors: So gaue hee vnto his Church power to edification. By this power the Church ordeyneth Ministers for her profite, that all thinges might bee done doone orderly, to the encreasing of the bodie of Christ. Hereupon the pure Church following the times of the Apostles, did ordeyne some Patriarches, some Bishops, some Bishops Coadiutors, who Iustine the Martyr calleth episcopos, whom we call Prepositors, some Pastors and Catechisers. The reformed Churches, after the darkenesse driven awaie, which the Pope brought into the Church, are content with fewer degrees, least by little & little, the matter might passe into a tyrannie. They haue Bishops, Doctors, Pastors, and Ministers inferiour vnto Pastors, whom by a fonde terme, they call Chapleyns. Among these, he that excelleth in the excellencie of giftes, in the greatnesse of labours, and in the degree of calling, is preferred before other in dignitie. Not indeed that he should exercise a dominion vpon other, but that he should rule other in wisdom and Counsell: so be, that he shall shewe the reason of his Counsell drawn out of the word of God, and out of the lawfull ordinance of the Church. For when Christe onely in his kingdome is absolutus, free from rendring anie account: it is fitte that they which be subiectes to him, should render a reckoning of their doings. Thus reuerently writeth this Reuerende and learned man Hemingius, on these titles and difference of dignities, in the offices & promotions of the pure and primitiue Church, succeeding the time of the Apostles, and of the reformed Churches in these dayes.

The degrees that the reformed churches do acknowledge

Vnto whom also accoꝝdeth Herbrandus, a famous Protestant writer, now living, though differing frō vs in the controuersie of the sacrament, who in Compendio Theologia, loco de ministerio. Upon this question whether there are, or ought to be, degrees among the Ministers of the Church? Yea, (sayth he) for God himselfe made and ordeined these degrees, with different giftes. Ephes. 4. Hee gaue some Apostles, but some Prophets, but some Euangelistes, but some Pastors, and Doctors, to the filling vp of the Sayntes, into the woorke of the Ministerie, to the building of the body of Christe. Also Paule nameth Bishops, Priests or Elders, and Deacons. Moreouer, by reason of order, for good order or discipline sake, and to preferue consent, concorde and vnanimitie, let some be superiour vnto other. Least there should be anarchia, a dissolute state without gouernement in the Church, orders were ordeyned among the ministers by a profitable Counsell. As among vs, (meaning the Germaine reformed Churches) are Subdeacons, Deacons, Pastors, Super-intendentes speciall, ouer whome doe rule Super-intendentes generall. (as we vse the names of Bishops, and Arch-bishops, after the olde and vsuall name) Vnto these, other chiefe and choise men, (as wel Ecclesiasticall as Polyticall, adioyned) do make the chiefe Senate of the Church. But this primacie is not of power, that for his higher degree, a greater authoritie, licence and power should be graunted to anie man, of decreeing any thing indgement of Bishops. thing, or of commaunding in the Church, or of ordeyning at his pleasure, or of determining in the controuerfies of Religion: for heere as much preuayleth, and ought to preuaile, the sentence of the lowest, as of the highest, which resteth on better and firmer testimonies of the holie Scripture, and of argumentes brought from thence, in what place or degree soeuer any man bee placed. But it is a Primacie of order, in the residue of the gouernement and polycie of the Church.

Thus sayth Herebrande of the Germaine Churches. But if no so, for admitting a bishop and distinguishing him from Priest or Elder: for allowing Sub-deacons, which we do not: for hauing Super-intendents speciall and generall: and for making this distinction for primacie of power and order in this sense, that this power of order, is of a standing and continuing degree of dignitie, superiour to Elder or Pastor: if so, these pointes, Herebrande and all those reformed Churches in this matter be reieted: let vs then come euen to Caluine himselfe, who doth yet more reuerently write of these titles and dignities of order, where they are not reteyned, then these our Brethren do among vs, be they neuer so godly vled.

*Caluin. Instit.
ca. 8. sect. 51.*

For, Caluine in his Institutions, cap. 8. de Fide. sect. 51. Hetherto (sayth he) we haue treated of the order of gouerning the Church, as out of the pure woorde of God it is deliuered vnto vs, and of the ministeries as they are ordeyned of Christe. Nowe, to the ende that all thinges may bee made manifest more clearely and more familiarlye, and may also be better fixed in our mindes: it shall be profitable to recognize the forme of the auncient Church in those thinges, which shall represent vnto vs before our eyes, a certaine Image of the equall diuine Institution. For, although the Bishops of those times haue sette foorth manie Canons, wherein they might seeme to expresse more then were expressed in the holie-scriptures: they composed notwithstanding all their whole domesticall administration, with such heedfulnessse, to that onely leuell of the woorde of God: that you may easily see, they had in this parte, almost nothing varying from Gods worde. Yea, if anie thing might be wished for in their ordinaunces, notwithstanding, because they endeouored with a syncere studie, to conserue the institution of the Lorde, and swarued not much from the same: it shall very much auayle, here briefly to collecte what manner of obseruation they had. According as we haue declared, three kindes of Ministers to be commended vnto vs in the scripture: so, what-soeuer Ministers the auncient Church of God had, she distinguished the into three orders. For out of the orders of Priests or Elders, partly were chosen Pastors & Doctors: the other part gouerned the censure or controlement trolement of manners, and corrections. The care of the poore and dispensation of the Almes was committed to the Deacons, as for the readers and Acolytes, were no names of offices that were certaine. But those who they called Clerkes, they acquainted the with certaine exercises to serue the Church, whereby they might better vnderstande whereunto they were appointed, and in time, might come the more readie prepared to their office, as I shall anon more at large declare. And so Ierome, when as he set downe 5. orders, he reckoneth vp Bishops, Priestes, Deacons, the faithfull, and those that learne the Catechisme: to the residue of the Clergie, and to the Monkes he attributeth no proper place. They therefore called all them Priestes or Elders, to who the office of teaching was enioyned. They elected one out of the number in euery Citie, to whom especially they gaue the title of Bishop, least that by reason of equalitie (as it is woont to come to passe) discorde should spring vp. Howbeit, the Bishop was not so superiour in Honour and dignitie, that hee had dominion ouer his Colleagues: but what parts the Consull hath in the Senate, to propounde the busineses, to demaunde the opinions to goe before, or gouerne the other in Counseling, admonishing, exhorting, to rule all the whole action by his authoritie, and to put in execution that which by the common counsell shall be decreed: that office did the Bishop sustaine in the assembly of the Priestes or Elders. And that this for the necessitie of the times, was with consent of men brought in, the auncientes themselves confesse it. So Hierome on the Epistle to Titus. A Priest or Elder (sayth he) was the same that a Bishop, & before that by the instinction of the Deuell, factions beganne to be made in religion, and that it was said among the people, I hold of Paule, I of Cephas: the Churches were gouerned by the common Counsell of the Priestes or Elders. Afterwarde, that the seedes of dissention might be pulled vp, all the carefulnesse was surrendred vnto one man. As therefore the Priestes or Elders knowe, that of the custome of the Church, they are subiected to him that ruleth ouer them: so let Bishops knowe, that rather by custome, than by the veritie of the Lordes disposing, they are greater than the Priestes or Elders, and they ought to rule the Church in common. Howbeit, he teacheth in another place, howe auncient an Institution it was. For he sayth, at Alexandria, from Marke the Evangelist vntill Heraclas and Dionysius Priestes or Elders, they alwayes placed in a higher degree, one that was chosen from amonge themselves, whome they called the Bishop. Euerie Citie therefore had their Colledge of Priestes or Elders, which were Pastors and Doctors. For all of them exercised also among the people, the office of teaching, exhorting and correcting, which Paule enioyneth vnto Bishops. (and here by the way, note, that then, which was yet in the Apostles times, the the Doctors as wel as the Pastors, had the exercise of exhorting and correcting as well as of teaching.) And to the end they might leaue seede after them, they trauelled in enstruſting the younger sorte, that had enrolled their names into the sacred soldage. Vnto euery Citie was attributed a certaine Region, which frō thence should take their Priests or Elders. And it should be reckoned as it were vnto the bodie of that Ch. Euery one of the Colledges (as I haue sayd) only for because of policie and of conseruing peace, was vnder one bishop. Who, so excelled the other in dignitie, that he was subiected to the assemblie of the brethren. But if the field or territorie, which was vnder his bishoprike, were more than that it might suffice for the bishop, euery where to doe his office: there were certaine Priests or Elders assigned in certain places through that fielde, who in meaner affaires did serue his turnes. Those they called Chorepiscopos, Bishops deputies, (or as wee call them bishops suffraganes) because they represented the bishop through out that prouince.

The fathers in composing all this forme
of gouernement by the only rule of Gods word
though it
be not expressed therein.

In which wordes Caluine plainly confesseth, that although all these degrees of dignitie be not expressed in expresse wordes in the Scripture: yet the Fathers had such a care to compose all their forme of gouernement by the onely rule of Gods woorde, that almost nothing is different from Gods worde. And that bishoppes were but one ordinarily in one Citie, who had Regions, and Prouinces, and manie Priests or Elders, yea, Colledges of Elders or Priestes, vnder them: & that some of their Prouinces were so large, that they had deputies or suffraganes also to supply their tournes. Which withall inferreth that this their dignitie ouer these persons, could not be onely for the present time of this or that action or assemblie, but was still standing and continuall, euen as those Regions and Prouinces allotted to them, and as were the numbers of Pastors and Colledges of Priestes or Elders in euerie Citie (as are our Cathedrall Churches) likewise abiding and continuing. And this dignitie of one Bishop ouer the Priestes or Elders, arose not of any ambitious aspiring: but of verie necessitie to auoide it. And that of the equalitie of Priests or Elders, dissentions and sectes would spring. And that this dignity is so auncient, that it was vsed in Alexandria a most famous Church, euen from Saine Markes time. Who, as Eusebius in his Chronicle noteth, died foure or fife yeares before either Peter or Paule, and while manie of the Apostles and Disciples were yet lining. For, to reiect that which Eusebius speaketh of Peter (or rather which is manifestly foisted into his Chronicle) that he was Christianorum Pontifex primus, the first or chiefe Bishop of the Christians, and that when he had founded the Church of Antioch, he went to Rome, where preaching the Gospell, he continued 25. yeares Bishop of that Citie: because this agreeth not with the holy Scripture, no, nor yet with that which Eusebius writeth, concerning Peter out of Dionisius Bishop

Bishop of Corinth, Li. 2. Hist. Eccl. cap. 25. as is afoze-saide, is therefore worthe to be repulsed: yet this which Eusebius hath both in his chronicle and in his Eccl. historie, of Annianus ordeyned the first Bishop of Alexandria after Marke the Euangelist: and of, Euodius ordeyned the first bishop of Antioche, another moze famous Church, the 45. yeare of the L. that is, the 12. yeare after the Lordes ascention: and that James the brother of the Lorde was ordeined of the Apostles the first Bishop of Ieru-salem, the most famous Church of all in those dayes, and that in the very yeare of Christes ascention: how soener the Scripture expresse it not, or that Ierome say it was done by cōsent of mē, or custome of the Church, and not of the verity of the Lordes dispensation; yet sithe this consent is of so manie and so holy men, and this custome so auntient and of these so notable Churches in the Apostles dayes: if this order had bene anye breach of the veritie of the Lordes dispensation, or of any perpetuall order set downe and commanded by the Apostles; or not good and necessarie, but dangerous and hurtfull to the Churches of Christe, by them both before and after planted: or had bene anie direct occasion to the tyrannie of Antichriste: no doubt they should haue knowen it, and foreknowen the euent, and would neuer haue permitted, but impugned, and expressely witten against the same. Therefore, we must either set on a bolde face, to denie this auncient originall of it, which Caluine dare not doe, but in this reuerent maner acknowledgeth and yeldeth vnto it: or else we must needes graunt, that this superioritie of one Priest or Elder ouer the res-due, to whom moze especially this title of Bishop should appertaine, is a godly and necessarie order for the Churches gouernement, and Aposto-licall: as approued euen by the Apostles. We graunt that bishops since that time haue encroched, especially the Popishe Bishops, and most of all the Pope. But what is that to our Bishops? Let our Brethren yelde the that, which here and in manie other places Caluine graunteth that the Bishop should haue a continuing superior dignitie, whether the assemblie holde or no: that in the assembly of the Priestes or Pastorall Elders, he should so be subiect, that notwithstanding, he should rule all the action, and be towarde them as a Dictator, or but as Vice-roy, or but as a Consull towarde his Senate, may rather, not so much by many partes: so, our Bishops take not vpo them, any such superioritie ouer their Clergie, but farre inferiour to all these examples: let them either therfore relect Caluine too: or else, with what face can they denie, this lower & moze moderate superioritie, than Caluine thus commendeth to bee exercised ouer their fellowe Ministers by our Bishops?

When Caluine writeth to the Bishop of London (Epist. 295.) to wit, vnto Grindall, he not only saluteth him by that name: but he acknowledgeth also his superiour authoritie ouer all the Pastors there inhabiting: Although (saith he) most Renowned man, and Reuerende Lorde, you expecte not till I giue you thanks, for that duetie of godlinesse which you haue performed vnto the Church of Christe: neuertheless for that care that you haue vouchsafed to take of our countriemen, which inhabite in the chiefest Citie of your Bishoprike, that not onely by the benefite of the Queene, they might haue libertie giuen them of inuocating God purely, but also from hence to call for a Pastor: except I should confesse my selfe bounden vnto you: I were to be condemned both of follie and inhumanitie. And sith you haue not disdeyned voluntarilie to request and exhorde me, to prouide a fitte Pastor to be chosen for them: there is no neede that I should commend them to your trust and protection, for whose health I see you are so carefull. And verily, as ye haue hether to testified your rare and singuler studie of godlinesse, in so liberallie helping them: so shall it nowe pertaine to your constancie to maintaine your good deede euen to the end. Thus doth Caluine acknowledge the Bishops authoritie, and so commendeth vnto him Galasius the French Churches Pastor in his Diocesse. True it is that in the same Epistle he afterwarde hath these wordes also: It greueth mee greatly, that all the Churches of the kingdome are not so composed, as all good men would wish, or at the beginning they hoped for. But an vnueriable indeuour is needefull to ouer-come all stoppes. But it is now expedient and verie needefull that the Queene do knowe, that you so willingly forgo, yea reiect fro you, what soeuer fauoreth of earthly Lordship, that you may haue the lawfull authoritie, & that, that God hath giuen, to exercise the spiritnall office. This shalbe the true heighth & excellencie therof. Then shall it hold the highest degree vnder Christ the head, if it stretch out the hand vnto lawful Pastors, to execute those parts that are enioyned to you. In which wordes (if we shall marke the wel) he still alloweth the B. a superiour authoritie ouer other Pastors, who they ordeyne, and ioine assistance vnto them. And he yeldeth in these titles. Reuerende Domine, & obseruande Domine, the name of Lorde, (except we translate it, Sir) still vnto them. But, for the matter, he still acknowledgeth a superiour authoritie to be in them. And as he doth this to the Bishop of our countries: so to the Bishops in other countries, such as professed the Gospell. As Epist. 272. he not onely for fashion sake bleth this stile (which if it were vnlawefull hee ought not to flatter him withall) Caluines re- uerend stile. Iohn Caluine to the illustrious and Reuerende Lord, Iames Ithauē Bishop of Vladislauia, worthy of me to be reuerenced for his excellēt vertues: but when he comes to the matter: he saith: This is my reason and matter of Epist. 272.

 writing, that the light of the Gospell being nowe risen vp among you, sith that God hath opened your eies that you are throughly awakened, for, I heare that you haue not only tasted the true doctrine of godlines, but that you are indued with that knowledge therof, that shaketh off all pretext of error and ignorance. But you for your prudence are not ignorant, how intollerable the prophaning is of the heauenly grace, whē as of set pupose we stifle it. And although this bright dignitie in the stage of the worlde, doth procure an applause (or reioysing) vnto you: notwithstanding you must diligently take heede, that the deceitefull flatter-ries doe not smoothe you: by the which snares, sathan at this day draweth manie into a deadly Labyrinthe. So it commeth to passe, that they which exercise their cunning to seeke shiftes, at length when they see their coulours vanish away, they openly oppose themselves against God, yea rather they, breakefoorth into manifest furie. Of this matter there are extant (no doubt) before your eyes too manie examples. While some violently with sword and fire assay to extinguish the heauenly doctrine. Other, that they may safely lye drowned in their filthes, do not onely make much of their slouth: but after the fashion of beastes, astonish their consciences. From this pestiferous infection of the Epicures: whosoeuer (being in his delightes) doth not earnestly and attentiuely take heed to himselfe: it can hardly be brought to passe, but that he shal waxe prophane, & casting aside the feare of God, hurle himselfe into the same wantonnesse with them. What therefore ought you to doe? Discordes are hotte among you: the one parte desireth the intier worship of God to be restored: the other part stiffly defendeth the wicked superstitions. For you to stande in the middle, whom God (as it were with his hande reached out) calleth to the protection of his cause: it is shame and wickednesse. Thinke what place you occupie, and what a charge is imposed vpon you. Adde this, that the enemies of godlinesse, while in their cluterie darkenesse, they can not abide the small sparkes of your godlinesse: they (as it were) thrust you out of their faction, which you voluntarily should haue fledde from. Pardon me of your courtesie, if in one worde. I be more sharpe (because that to profite you, I must speake freelye that I thinke): when you shall come to the heauenlie iudgement seate, the offence of betraying can not be washed away, except

except in time you with-drawe your selfe from that bande, that openlie conspireth to oppresse the name of Christe. But if nowe it bee greuous to you to be diminished, that Christ may increase in you: thinke on Moses example, which vnder obscure shadowes, did yet not doubt, to prefer the rebuke of Christ, before the delightes and riches of the Egyptians. But although peraduenture I haue beene more bolde with your Excellencie, then was meete: not-withstanding (sith my purpose was, to regard your saluotion) I hope my libertie shall not be odious to you, &c. Fare you wel, most excellent man, illustrious and Reuerend Lord: &c.

But here againe, least we might thinke, hee goeth about to perswade him to leaue his B. as a dignitie that he could not lawefullly retaine with the profession of the gospel (which was not his drift, but to haue him retaine still his place and dignitie, so farre as hee might doe it, without houering betwene the Papistes and the Epicures: and thereto, he willett him to thinke on the place he occupied, and what charge was layde vpon him: and yet, to renounce it, rather than to ioyne with those enemies of the Gospel) to shew this better, Caluine setteth downe more fully in his Epistle to the King of that countrey of Polonia, (Epist. 190.) what manner of superiour dignitie and authoritie, he not onely alloweth to remaine in a Bishop: but also in an Archb. so little thunneth he, or disalloweth, either the name or the office of them.

Caluini Epist.
190. ad Re-
gem Polonia.

Caluines allowance of an Archb. and B. vnder
him.

To conclude, (saith he) onely ambition and pride hath forged that Primacie that the Romanistes oppose vnto vs. The auncient Church indeede did institute Patriarchies, & did appoint also to euery of the Prouinces certaine Primacies, that the Bishops by this bonde of concorde, might be better knitte together among themselues. Euen as, if so be, at this day in the most noble kingdome of Polonia, one Archbishop were ouer the residue. Not, that he should ouerrule the residue, or snatching the right (or Lawe) from them, arrogate it vnto him-selfe: but that, for because of order, he should in the Synodes hold the first place, and nourish an holie vnitie among his colleagues & brethren. And furthermore, there should bee either Prouinciall, or Citie Bishops, which peculierly should giue attendance to the conseruing of order. Euen as nature suggesteth this vnto vs, that out of al Colleges, one ought to be chosen, vpon whom the chiefeest care should lie. But it is one thing to beare a moderate Honor, to wit, so farre as the facultie (or power) of man extendeth it self; another to comprehend the whole compasse of the world in a gouernment vnmeasurable. Thus doth Caluine most clearly (though he condemne the Popes vsurpation) approue both the superioritie of Pastorship, not onely in Bishops ouer Cities and Prouinces, where many Pastors be: but also of one Archb. and of one Archb. the chiefe and primate of a mightie kingdome, more then fīue times as bigge as Englande, to be ouer ouer all the residue. And this being well vsed, (without offering iniurie to the right of other bishops vnder him :) hee thinketh to be both good and necessarie . So farre off is he (as our Brethren here doe) from condemning the very name of Archbishops. So, he alloweth both the office and the name, euen here in Englande also: as appeareth by his letter vnto the Archb. of Canterburie Epist. 127. Caluini Cranmery Archiepisc. Cantuariensis salutem: Epist. 127.

When as at this time it was not to be hoped, which was most to be wished, that euerie one of the chiefe teachers, out of diuerse Churches, which haue embraced the pure doctrine of the Gospell, shoulde come together, and out of the pure word of God should set foorth to the posteritie, a certaine and cleare confession, of euerie one of the capitall pointes at this day in controuersie: I doe greatly commend (right Reuerende Lorde) the counsell which you haue begunne, that the English men might ripely establish religion among them, that the mindes of the people should not sticke longer in suspence, while thinges are vncertaine, or lesse orderly composed, than were meete. To which purpose, it behooueth all those that haue the gouernment there, to apply in common their studies: notwithstanding so, that the chiefe parts be yours. You see what this place requireth, or rather, what God according to the reason of the office which hee hath enioyned vnto you doeth by his right require of you. In you is the chiefe authoritie which the noblesse of honor doth not more procure vnto you, than the opinion long since conceaued of your prudence & integritie, &c. Thus doth Caluine where he still calleth vpon, for increase and speede of further, and full reformation) acknowledge both his title of Arch-bishop, and his office of Primacie, with the honour and authoritie thereof, aboue all other in the Churches ministerie, to be good and lawfull.

The place & office of an Archb. enioyned by God.

The chiefe aucth. Eccl. in an Archb.

And to shewe further, howe he alloweth the generall practise of Episcopall authoritie, where, when, and whosoener Bishop shoulde receaue the Gospell: whether he should giue ouer, or reteyne still a Superiour authoritie in his Diocesse, ouer the other Pastors in the same: hee hath fully decided this Question, Epist. 373. Si Episcopus vel curatus ad Ecclesiam se adiunxerit. If a Bishop or a Curate shall adioyne himselfe vnto the Church: Caluine answereth on this wise.

Being asked my sentence or opinion, concerning Bishops, Curates, and others of like degree, or whome they call Graduates, if that the Lorde shoulde vouchsafe any of them his grace, that they would adioyne themselves vnto the Church; howe must they behaue themselves towardes them, &c. Here, after his excuse for breuitie, by reason of his retorne, he sayth: If therefore it shall happen that in Poperie, anie to whome the cure of soules shall haue bene committed, that is to wit, a Bishop or a Curate, shall receaue the grace of the Lorde, so that he professe the pure doctrine of the Gospell: if he shalbe founde not to be so fitte for the office of a Pastor, nor to be endewed with that knowledge and dexteritie that is requisite: hee shoulde altogether doe very rashly, if he would intermitte himselfe into so great a matter. The fruite therefore, of his conuersion shall consist in that, if so be hee discharge him-selfe of all cure, and doe so acknowledge that grosse abuse, that he did beare before a void title with-out matter, and thereupon giue place to a fitte successor, that may lawefully be instituted, it shall suffice for him, if he holde the place of a sheepe in the Lordes folde. But if so bee, that anye suche one shall bee endewed with learning and dexteritie, yea and with affection to teach also heere-after: let him firste of all make a confession of his saythe, and holily testifie that he cleaueth faste vnto the pure and sincere Religion; and furthermore, that he acknowledge that his vocation, to haue beene ioyned with meere abuse: and that hee desire a newe approbation: and namely, that he professe, that to be frustrate that he was instituted before by the Popes authoritie: and withall, that he renounce all meanes vnlawfull, and repugnant to the order which the Lord Iesus hath ordeyned in his Church.

These things præmised: I see not what should let, that hee may not bee admitted to the office of a Pastor, so that hee promise, and doe in verie deede performe that faith, which is required to the executing of the office: and especially that he ioyne him-selfe, with the companie of the Ministers that purelie teache the woorde, and submitte him-selfe to the Discipline and polycie which hath place among them. As for the memorie of his former life, let that remaine buried, neither let any thing be imputed vnto him that then was committed, onely that he be admonished of the performing of his duetie hereafter lawefully. If that Canon of Paule bee objected, wherein is deliuered that a Bishop must be vnreprooue-able: I aunswere, here is not delt with (in my iudgement) concerning a simple and absolute election, but concerning the approbation and restitution to a certaine office, because of the corruption passing betweene, &c.

Here, after he hath proued that point, hee commeth to the conclusion, saying: These thinges beeing presupposed, the partes shall be of suche a Bishop as this, to doe his endeouour so farre as in him shall lie, that all the Churches which appertaine vnto his Bishopricke, shall be repurged from all errors and worships of Idolles, while hee him-selfe shall by his example goe before all the Curates of his Diocesse, and shall induce them to admitte the reformation, vnto the which by the woorde of GOD wee are inuited, and the which shall wholly aunswere, aunswere, both to the state and to the vse of the primitiue Church. As for that which appertayneth to those goods, which are called temporalities, whether they consist in Iurisdiction, or in annual rent, although the originall of them sprang out of that corruption, that is by no meanes to bee borne, with the pure simplicitie of the spirituall ministerie: notwithstanding, so long as things remayne thus confessed, the possession after a sorte of suffering them, may be left vnto them: So be, that exhortation be giuen vnto them, that they looke to it, howe they dispose those things, which they shall haue knowen to bee dedicated vnto God, both that they profane not thinges consecrated to god, and also that they conteyne themselues in the modestie which may be seeme true Bishops, &c.

Thus, by Caluines plaine opinion, for a reformed Bishop to haue a Diocesse, and gouernement therein of Curates and Pastors vnder him, is not contrarie to the state and vse of the primitiue Church, nor to the reformation vnto the which by the worde of God we are inuited, nor any vnlawfull meanes, or repugnant to the order which the Lorde Iesus hath ordeyned in his Church, but may aunswere wholly there-vnto. And so that Bishops doe these thinges, both for themselues, and for their office, and for their Diocesse, and for their goods and temporalities and iurisdiccions, that Caluine here would haue them doe: though he doe but tolerate the dispensation of their temporalities: &c. yet he manifestly alloweth them to remaine Bishops still, and to retayne their Diocesses, and to goe before or guide the Curates and Pastors, and all the Churches appertayning to their Bishopricks. And he seeth no let, but they may so continue.

Thus sayeth Caluine of these Protestant and Reformed Bishops. But aboue all other Reuerende and Learned mens iudgementes, from beyonde the seas in anye reformed Churches, that notable and godlie Learned man Zanchius, who is also yet liuing, hath moste pythily to this point (mee thinkes, be it spoken with-out contempt of any other) set downe his graue iudgement on these matters. In his last booke of the confession of his faith concerning Christian Religion: Who first in the 24. Chapter, in the title of the Militant Church, the 6. Aphorisme or distincti- on being this: From what kind of succession of Bishops can it be shewed, that any Church is Apostolicall? To which he answereth: We do so acknowledge, that from the perpetuall succession of B. in any Church, not what kind of succession soeuer, but that which hath adioyned therwith, a continuance of the Apostolicall doctrine, may rightly be shewed to be an Apostolicall Church. Suche an one, as in the olde time was the Church of Rome, and the succession of the Bishops thereof, vntill the time of Irenaeus, of Tertullian, and of Cyprian, and of certaine others.

But in all these Fathers times, and manie other like to them (as we haue shewed) this perpetuall succession of Bishops, was of suche as were superiour in dignitie, to the residue of the Pastors in those Churches: Therefore, this continuance of superioritie in Bishops, and suche titles of dignitie in the Ministerie, is not repugnant to the Apostolicall Church, nor to the Apostolicall doctrine.

Nowe, this Zanchius may the better be allowed of these our Brethren, for that in some of the fore-saide pointes, hee fauoureth in some parte their opinion: as, for their Elders that were not Pastors, cap. 25. Aphorism. 7. For their diuision of Doctors distinct from Pastors. And for the name and order of Elders, to bee vsed in the Scripture as all one with Bishoppes and Catechizers: Aphorism. 9. Which thing also we graunt as before is noted, the substance of the order to bee all one, and the difference onely to be in the degree of dignitie and authoritie. And also for Doctors to teache onely, but not with suche teaching, but that they did withall exhort, as he sheweth after: Aphorism. 10. yet notwithstanding (sayth hee) we doe not in the meane season disallowe the Fathers, for that according to the diuerse manner, both of dispensing the woorde, and of Gouerning the Church, they multiplied the orders of the Ministers: when as that thing was free for them, euen as also it is for vs. And when as it is apparant, that that was doone of them for causes which were honest, pertayning, according to that time, to order, to comelinesse, and to the edification of the Church.

The origi-

to be superi-
our and B.

For we knowe that our God is the God of order, not of confusion, and that the Church is kept by order, and lost amiss, by lacke of order. For which cause he hath instituted many also and diuerse orders of ministers, not onely in times past in Israel, but also after-wardes, in the Church, gathered together of the Iewes and of the Gentiles: and also for the same cause, hee hath left it free vnto the Churches, that they might adde moe orders or not adde them, so that the same may be done to adification. Whereas therefore, (when all the Ministers of the worde were called equally both Pastors, and also Bishops, & also Priests or Elders,) and whereas they were of equall authoritie; one afterwarde beganne to be preferred aboue all his Colleagues, howbeit not as their Lorde, but as the Rector in the vniuersitie aboue his other Colleagues: & to this man in principall, the care of the whole Church was comitted: wherewheretupon, and by a certaine kinde of Excellencie, hee alone was accustomed to be called by the name of bishop and Pastor, the residue of his fellow Ministers being contented with the name of Priests or Elders, in so much, that in euery City there began to be one onely Bishop, and many Priestes or Elders. This thing we iudge cannot be disallowed. Of which matter, the declaration and the sentence of Ierome both otherwhere, and also in the epistle to Enagriu, and in the commentaries of the Epistle to Timo chap. 1. is of vs approued. Who saith, all this came rather of custome, than of the verity of the Lordes disposing: that the plants of dissensions & of schismes, might be taken away. Verily by this reason, those things also that were ordeyned concerning Arch-bishops, yea, and of the 4. Patriarkes, euen before the Nicene Councell it selfe, wee thinke may be excused and defended: although that all thinges in successe of time afterwarde, were drawn away vnto the greatest tyrannie and ambition: which is the cause why that the neerer wee approche in those orders to the Apostolicall simplicitie, so muche the more is it also of vs allowed. And we iudge, that euery where they should endeuour to approach thereto.

The same reason that serued for B. serueth for Archb.

Nowe when Zanchius hath added certaine other Aphorismes, concerning the Church and the lawfull Ministers thereof: he setteth downe (Aphorism. 20.) their authoritie, saying: We beleue also, that great authoritie is of Christe giuen vnto the lawfull Ministers, to wit, to performe those thinges whereunto also they are called: to preach the Gospell: to interpret the holy scriptures according to the analogie of the faith: to catechise: to teach the people what is the will of God: to reprove and rebuke as well the great as the small: to remitte or reteyne sinnes ministerially, to binde the impenitent and to loose the repentant: to administer also the Sacraments, which Christe instituted, and according to his manner deliuered: to exercise Discipline after the prescription of Christe, and also by the expounding of the Apostles: to conclude, to all those thinges also which though they be not expressed in the holy scriptures, notwithstanding do appertaine to order, and to comlinessse, and make to edification, but not to destruction, according to the generall rule deliuered of the Apostle, That all thinges ought to be doone in order, decently, and to adification. For neither doe we beleue, that any authoritie is giuen to the ministers, that ought to be stretched beyonde the boundes of Gods worde, or vnto anie other ende, than to the adification of the Church. And therefore, we vtterly deny, that any Bishop, yea, or that all of them together, haue authoritie of ordeyning any thing contrarie to the scriptures: of adding any thing vnto them, or of taking any thing from them: of making newe articles of the faith: of instituting new Sacramentes: of bringing into the Church new worshipes:

of setting forth lawes that should bind the consciences, and that should be made equall in authoritie to the lawe of God : or of hauing dominion in the Church and consciences of the faithfull : of forbidding those things that God hath graunted, and would haue to bee free. Or finally of commanding any thing that is without the worde of God, as though it were necessarie to saluation : si the that it can not truely be sayde, that indeede the whole Church hath not this authoritie.

Aphor. 21. Hauing thus in euery particular, set downe and limited the authoritie of the lawefull Ministers of the Church, according to the worde of God : he proceedeth (Aphorisme 21.) vnto this : that the politike authoritie of Bishops which also are Princes, is not to be denied, for any thing before restrayned.

That B. may haue also po liticall au thoritie.

In the meane season we denie not, that Bishops which with all are also Princes, besides the authoritie Ecclesiasticall, should also haue their lawes politike and powers secular ; yea euen as the rest of Princes haue : the right of the commaunding secular things, the right of the sword : some of them the right of Electing and confirming kinges, and Emperours : and of ordeyning and administring other politike things : and of compelling the people subiecte vnto them to yeelde them obedience : and there-upon, we confesse, that vnto their politike commaundementes, which with-out the transgression of Gods lawe may be kept, their subiectes ought to obey, not onely for feare, but also for conscience. For we knowe, that all power is of God, and who-so-euer resseth, resseth the ordinance of God. And that moreouer, kinges are to be honored, and we ought to be subiect to Princes and Lords in all feare, not onely to those that are courteous and modest, but also to the froward and wicked.

To conclude, when he commeth to Ecclesiast. Discipline, which (Aphorisme 36.) he deuident into popular and clerical : in the 3. part of the clerical discipline, (Aphorisme 38.) he saith : The third is, that they should promise peculiar obedience in things that are honest vnto their Bishop, and to the Metropolitane of the Bishops.

Nowe although by all these Aphorismes, of this excellent Learned man, and great light of our age, Zanchius, it is most apparant what his Iudgement is, of the superioritie of Bishops, and with what reasons he proueth and confirmeth the same, to be in all pointes agreeable to Gods worde. Yet, for the further confirmation of these things, and to satisfie all suche as shoulde, or did mislike anie thing conteyued in them : let vs also not thinke it tedious, to peruse certaine other obseruations, that he hath lastly adioyned to these Aphorismes, in the foresaid confession of the faith, with the pze face of his reasons for the same.

The observations of the same Zanchius, vpon his confession:

Neither fewe nor light are the causes, with the which I was drawn, that I had leauer adde these obseruations to my confession, apart by the selues, than to alter any thing therein. There are not a few vnto whom it is knowen, on what occasion, at what time, by whose commaundement, in whose name, and to what ends, I being indeede vnwilling and compelled, wrote the summe of the Christian Religion. But although ech man seeth, that this confession was neuer (as it was hoped for) set forth in their name, for whose cause it was written: notwithstanding how this was done, and vpon what causes it was done, all men do not clearly vnderstande: while many men marueile at the dooing, but are ignoraunt of the true causes of the matter. Heereupon howe diuerse suspitions might haue hapned vnto many: howe diuerse iudgements might haue beene made, both of me and of the confession it selfe, I will not say of priuate persons, but also of the very Churches: to conclude, howe diuerse and sinister reportes, might haue beene scattered among the common people: what one is he among men that doth not knowe? It behooueth me therefore, before I shall die, to stoppe the sinister & naughtie supitions, iudgements, reports, concerning my doctrine. Which thing I iudged, could of me be done by no better meane, than if I should prouide, that both my confession, euen as it was of me written, should be set forth seuerally by it selfe: and also seuerally by theselues, my obseruations thereon, by the which, if any things were dark, they might be made plaine: if any things were doubtful, they might be confirmed: and that I should leaue the iudgement of the whole busines, vnto the whole true Catholike Church. Moreouer I thought, that to remoue false suspitions out of mens mindes, (if any were conceaued) I should doe no little good, if, what iudgements were made of learned men, concerning the confession: I should eue by their owne letters make them knowen to all the godly: especially sithe that also out of the same, euery man might easily vnderstande, for what causes the confession was not set forth, in that manner that it was purposed. A certaine greete man wrote vnto me of that matter, in these words:

Concerning that which you write of your confession, it was read ouer of me, and of N. and of others, with great pleasure. Which both was written most learnedly, & with a most excellent Methode. And if so be, you except that, which in the end you adde, concerning Archb. & the Hierarchie, it liked me exceedingly well. But when we did deliberate with our brethren N. N. the which are heere, concerning the way and manner of entring into a concord, among al the Churches of our confession: they with one consent did iudge: that this was both the only, & the safest, & the reddiest way: that the confession of faith already receiued & set forth, Vpon what occasion Zanchius set out these obseruations.

A Noble mans letter to Zanchius on this matter.

by the Churches of euerie Prouince should be composed & compacted into one harmony; because they are all of them, one most like another, so farre as appertaineth ad substantiam, to the substance of faith, and that their confession was refused of none of the Churches. This their counsell, when they proued it by many reasons, we haue written therof vnto you, and to the Reuerende brethren N.N. and to other Churches neighbors to vs, who all of them greatly like the selfe same counsell.

These things, out of the letters of that great man. To the same opinion almost, we might produce out of other mens letters also, writing of the same matter. But sithe it is not necessarie, for breuitie sake wee omitte them.

Zanchius nowe, being thus moued by these considerations, to iustifie all these his former Aphorismes, in these pointes aforesaid, setteth downe among other, these obseruations following.

Vpon the 25. Chap. Aphorism. 10. & 11.

The orders not struing with the Scripture.

When I wrote this confession of faith, I wrote all things of a good conscience: and as I beleued, so I spake also freely, as the holy scripture teacheth vs to doe. But, my sayth first of all and simplie, dothe rely on the woordes of God; after which, somewhat also on the common consent of the whole auncient Catholike Church: so bee, that the same consent, strue not with the holy scriptures. For I beleue that those things which were of the holy Fathers, beeing gathered together in the name of the Lorde, determined and receaued with a common consent of them all, without any contradiction of the holy scriptures: that those things (albeit they bee not of the same authoritie with the holy Scriptures) are also of the holy Ghost. Hereupon it cometh to passe that those things that are of this sorte: neither would I, neyther dare I with a good conscience disallowe them. But what is more certaine out of the stories, out of the Counselles, and out of the writings of all the Fathers, than those orders of Ministers, of the which we haue spoken, to haue beene ordeyned in the Church, and receaued by the common consent of the Christian common weale? But who am I, that I should disallow, that which the whole Church hath allowed? No, neither all the learned men of our time durst disallowe. For why, they knewe that both these things were lawefull vnto the Church, and that all those things proceeded and were ordeyned, both of godlinesse, and to good endes, for the edification of the elected.

Bucers opinion.

And for the cause of confirming this matter: I thought good here to inserte suche things as Martine Bucer of godly memorie, a man moste famous for singuler godlinesse and learning, hath left written vpon the Epistle to the Ephesians.

As for the administration of the woorde when it is doone by the reading

reading and reciting of the deuine scriptures, finally, by the interpretation and explication of the same, and by exhortations taken frō thence, and also by repetition, and by the Catechisme, which is perfourmed by mutuall questions, and aunsweres, of him that is the Catechiser, and of the party that is catechised, and by holy conferences and debates of the harder Questions of our religion: according to this manifold dispensation of wholesome doctrine, the giftes or offices of this function are also multiplied. For whatsoeuer belonged to the moste perfect manner of teaching, that (in the administration of the doctrine of saluation) is to be applied with most great study: because that, sith thou art a man the knowledge of seeing God, or lining according vnto God, which (as of al other it is most diuine, so also most difficult) ought to be set forth: they, now that teach artes diligently, contayned, in some certain books, (as, if a man woulde purpose out of Euclide, to teach the Mathematicall) first of all, they will reade and recite the booke proposed: and streight waies they wil expound the particuler words that are not commonly knowe, (as euery Art hath his proper wordes and names) and then, if anye collection or argument be more breefely made, they expound it, by resoluing the partes thereof, and make it cleare by many examples: out of the generall preceptes, they teache particulers, and they do enforme them how farre foorth they stretch. This it is (properlye) to teache: But he that is indeede a sure or faithfull Doctor, is not contente to teache these thinges, although by a faythfull delinerance of the Doctrine: but also hee repeateth it, and exacteth the thinges that he taughte, and offereth him selfe readye to his schollers, that they might demaunde a playn explication, of those matters whereof they doubt. Moreouer hee propoundeth the thinges that hee hath taught, to bee discussed in publike disputations, that there might no doubt at all remayne. Besides these thinges, he maketh oftentimes exhortations, to profit them well in the Doctrine proposed (Here again, the Doctor not onely teacheth but also exhorteth.) And hee addeth dissuasions from those things whereby they might bee hindred, and also admonitions, and reprehentions, and generall rebukinges. Last of all such a master marketh diligently, what may profite euery one of his schollers. And if he shall marke any to be slack in learning, he both correcteth him priuily, and admonisheth him of his duety. If hee perceiue any to goe lustily forward in learning, hee often times calleth him, commendeth him, and enflameth him, that hee might followe his studie more and more. Christ the Lorde him selfe did also keepe all these seuen manners of teaching. In the synagogue at Nazareth, hee read the 61. Chapter of Esay, and interpreted it. Luc. 4. in the mount, he expounded the commaundementes of God. Math. 5, and taught euery where, and and exhorted, and reprehended, and rebuked out of the worde of God. He answered also vnto all both good and bad that asked him questions, and on the other side he demaunded Questions, as Math. 22. He often catechized the Disciples, he himselfe was also present at the catechising. Luke. 2. Sith therfore the ministry of teaching requireth a work so manifold: there are also many orders of Ministers deputed vnto this Ministry. And first of all, Readers whose office was in a pulpit, a place somewhat higher, to recite the diuine scriptures, But this recitall of the diuine scriptures was ordeyned to this purpose, that both the tongue & the manner of speaking of the scripture, and the whole scripture it self might be made more knowne and familiar to the people. For, within a year, they recited all the holy bookes vnto the people. When as those that opened the scriptures, coulde not by expounding, finish but some part of the scriptures, and that no great part, neither in one year. While in the meane season, by the onely reciting of the diuine bookes vnto the people, the knowlege of all the pointes of our saluation was meruelously confirmed: for they are oftentimes in euery one of the holy bookes repeated, and are by diuers and other names expounded: so that alwayes the people out of the lesson following, shoulde learne manye thinges, which they coulde not as yet playnely perceiue by the former lesson: and by that worke, was the peoples iudgement confirmed, concerning all our Religion, as also concerning the expositions of the scriptures, and concerning all doctrine that was brought forth before them, eyther by the lawfull Curates and Doctors, or else by others.

Readers of Curate.

Singers of the psalmes & Hymnes.

For these causes, this office also of reciting simply the diuine scriptures vnto the people, was in the auncient Churches, highly esteemed. Neyther were any chosen to this ministry, but such as were commended for their singuler godlinesse, the which both we may vnderstande by other monumentes of the auncientes, and also is perceiued cheefely by one Epistle or twayne, of Saint Cyprian, as out of the fift Epistle, in the seconde booke, concerning Aurelius, that was ordeyned a reader: And Epistle 22, in the third booke, concerning Satorus: And in the fourth booke, concerning Celerinus Celestine. To these readers, were afterward adioyned Psalterists, who had the gouerning of the Psalmes and hymmes that were to be sung.

Concerning the Scriptures to bee reade, (the Lorde bee thanked) it is well ordered in the Englishe Churches, so that there might bee fift readers, which shoulde adde thereto a grauitie and religiousnesse, worthy of the diuine mysteries that were recited in the holy Lessons. Let it therefore bee pondered diligently, whose mouth they represent them-selues to bee, which in the sacred assemblies reade the diuine bookes bookes vnto the people: that is to wit, they represent the mouth of God almighty: then, of what moment, of what dignity, the matters are, that are recited, which are the wordes and preceptes of life eternall: last of all, to what manner of men, and to what purpose, the readers of the holy scriptures ought to serue. For they ought to minister vnto the sonnes of God, for whose saluation, the first begotten sonne of God shedde his owne bloude: by the which thinges the same saluation maye more and more bee made open, and bee thoroughly performed vnto them. Which thinges if a man with a true fayth consider with him selfe; what grauity, decency, religion, can bee yeelded in any action, that such a reader shoulde ouerslippe? But they which exercise this function, ought alwayes to haue that in the sight of their minde, that those thinges which are reade before them, ought effectually to serue to the edification of fayth in the hearers: the which also shall then at the length bee brought to passe, when as both those thinges are well vnderstoode, and also are receiued as the wordes of God. But vnto both of these, a moste cleare, well spoken, religious pronounciation, is required. Whereupon is gathered, that they are not the Ministers of Christe, which doe so recite the diuine scriptures, as though that were the onely thing which shoulde be required, that the shortest leysure that can be, may be spent in such kinde of recitall.

The pronounciation of the readers.

Interpreters

Now, there is another office, the interpretation of the Doctrine that is to be dispensed, that this to wite, a more simple explication of words and sentences. This ministry did the bishoppes execute, and the priests or Elders. Notwithstanding sometimes they admitted vnto this function, out of the order of Deacons, and of Sub-deacons, yea, and sometime of the layty, such as they founde to bee by the holy Ghoste made fitte, profitable to exercise the same. So Origene beeing also a lay man, was called to this office, in the Church of Cesarea of Palestine, by Alexander byshop of Hilda, and by Thertistus bishoppe of the same Church of Cesarea. Euelpis also, by Neonus bishoppe of the Larandians, and Paulinus bishop by Celsus bishop of Iconium: and Theodorus by Atticus bishoppe of the Sinadians. These thinges are reade in Eusebius in the sixt booke, the tenth Chapter of his Ecclesiasticall history. And out of the Epistle of those two bishops, Alexander of Ierusalem, and Theodistus of Cesarea, bishops in Palestine, to Demetrius bishop of Alexandria, who reprehended the fact of these two bishops, concerning Origene, as though it were a thing neuer hearde off, for a lay-man, while bishoppes were present, to speake in the Church vnto the people.

But these B. manifestly affirme, that this was not true, but that the holy Bishops were accustomed to exhort them, whome among the laytye they

They knew to be fitte, that they would bring forth ſome profite vnto the people, of interpreting the ſcripture, and in teaching: and that they would exerciſe this miniſtery, euen while they their ſelues alſo were preſent. And the ſeconde, and ſo the thirde part of the Miniſtery, to wit, interpretation and Doctrin, the biſhops and the prieſtes did adminiſter it cheefely by them ſelues. Notwithſtanding both out of the inferior orders, and alſo out of the lay perſons, if they had noted any to be fit for this office, they adioyned them to be ioint-laborers with the. After the ſame manner, did the biſhops and the prieſtes adminiſter alſo the fourth part of deliuering the doctrine, the which is, out of the diuine bookes (being expounded) to exhort vnto the duties of Godlines, to diſſuade from ſinnes, and from all things that may, on any part, ſlacken or hinder the courſe of a godlie and holy life, to reſprehen and chide thoſe that ſinne, to comfort the penitent: although the biſhops the prieſts or elders cheefly did perform this function, becauſe that it required ſo much the great authority. 1. Tim. 5. The fiſt part, the Catechiſmes, they commended now to the prieſtes, nowe to the Deacons, nowe to the miniſters of the inferior orders, euen as euery one appeared more apt vnto this kinde of teaching. And ſo, was Origene the Catechizer at Alexandria. The ſixt booke of the Eccleſiaſticall hiſtory of Eufebius of Caeſarea. Chap. 13. and 20. Alſo the ſixt part, the holy diſputations, they yeelded to euery one that was more apt thereto, although for the moſt part, the biſhops their ſelues gouerned them. The ſeuenth part, priuate calling vpon admonition, the biſhops alſo ſtudied to doe it by them ſelues. Howbeit, they alwayes exhort ed euery one of the prieſtes or elders, and the greater of the inferiour orders to doe the ſame. 1. Theſ. 5. Therefore, the readers ought to exerciſe the miniſtery of the Doctrin, by reciting the diuine ſcriptures, but the biſhops by interpreting and by teaching, by exhorting, by diſputing, and by priuate calling vpon, and moreouer both by reading, and by catechiſing, if that peculier readers and catechiſers want. Furthermore they committed the catechiſmes to certain Prieſts and Deacons, or elſe, to thoſe alſo that were choſen therunto, out of the inferior orders. As alſo they admitted out of thoſe, vnto the offices of interpreting, and of teaching, and of diſputing, whomeſoeuer they found apt for theſe offices, in what order ſoeuer they were of the holy miniſtery, yet alſo (as it is ſayde) out of the laity. But in theſe offices, that thing is diligentlie to bee marked, that the holie ghoeſte did in-deede ſo diſperſe vnto them that were his men, theſe giſtes of teaching: that vnto one he would giue the giſt and ſingular faculty, of interpreting and making plain the ſcriptures, vnto whom notwithstanding he giueth not with the like dexterity, and with ſo happy ſucceſſe, to teach and confirme the points of our religion, out of the diuine diuine scriptures, or also luckely to defende them in disputing. But to another he giueth a peculier and notable faculty of exhorting the brethren out of the scriptures, of admonishing, of reprehending, and also of catechising, and of priuate calling vpon; vnto whom notwithstanding, he giueth not, to excell in other giftes of teaching. This varietie of the gifts of the holy Ghost, wee dayly find by triall in those, that do publikey teach the people of Christ, which are Christes true Churches, and suffer themselves to be altogether ruled by the holy Ghoste. These Churches doe religiously note, what spirituall faculties are giuen to eche one in the Church, and doe so much as lieth in them, apply euery man to that point, that appertayneth to his function. Wherefore vnto the particuler parts of teaching, they giue particuler ministers, if so bee, they finde among the men that appertaine vnto them, those that are of the Lorde singularly made and furnished to the particuler office of teaching. But because it is necessary for the saluation of Gods people, that no part of the teaching (which I have reckoned to be 7 partes) be vtterlie ouer-passed in any Church: euery one of the Ministers, yea, and of the layty also, in what place soeuer he bee placed in the Church, ought to exercise (so farre forth as hee is able) all these partes of teaching, both of reading, and of interpreting, and of teaching, and of exhorting, and of Catechizing, and of disputing, and of calling vpon: See how farre our learned Brethren differ from this graue iudgement of Bucer and Zanchius for the exercise of these offices Yea euery one ought to take vpon him to him selfe, so manie of these functions that are to bee administered, and so much part of euery one of them, as vnto howe many, and to how much part of euery one, hee shall perceyue himselfe to be furnished of the holy ghoste. Let the example of an house orderly appointed and distributed, bee considered: wherein the Father of the house holde about other businesses, the Mother of the house holde about other the sonnes and the Daughters about other, the Man-seruauntes and the Mayde-seruauntes about other: Heere while all are present and in health, euery one in-deede goeth about his owne office: but if any of the Family bee absent, or bee not in good health, and there happen a necessity of some seruice: eche one so runneth to helpe that necessity, that oftentimes the men goe about the womens offices, and the Women the Offices of the men, the Maysters the offices of the seruauentes, and the seruauents the offices of the Maysters.

How euery minister according to his gift may do these thinges.

As Zanchius alleageth this out of Bucer, concerning the seuerat and mutuell vse of the Ecclesiasticall offices, in so many popnts different from these our Learned brethren, and that in the allowance of the church of England: so hee proceedeth Concerning also the Clericall Discipline:

The thirde part of the Clericall Discipline, is a peculier subiection: wherein Wherein the Clearkes that are of inferior degree and Ministry, doe submitte themselues to them, which in order and Ministry are superior. The Lorde hath taught vs this part of discipline, both by his example, who ordeyned his Disciples, that should become the Doctours or Teachers of Gods elected, throughout all the worlde, by a peculier mastershippe vnto this office, and by a certaine Domestickall Discipline: whome the apostles imitating, euery one of them also had his Disciples, the which he woulde frame to exercise orderly the holy Ministry.

Magisterio.

For, euery more difficult function of life, requireth also a peculiar & perpetuall doctrine, Institution and custody: as we may see in the studies of philosophy, and in the military institution. Which Lyncurgus throughly weighing, did so ordeyne the common weale of the Lacedemonians (as Xenophon witnesseth) that no order in the common weale, shoulde be without his proper office of a master. And Plato also in his Lawes and common weale requireth, that nothing at all shoulde bee among the Citizens, vnkept. Heereupon also our Lorde when as he would haue those who are his to be so set together, one with another, and to cleaue together: he verily putteth euery one of those that are his, vnder others of whom, as it were of members that are of more ample and larger spreadinge power and efficacye, hee shoulde bee kept, mooued, and ruled. The same thing hath the holye Ghoste commaunded, Bee yee subiect one to another in the feare of God, Ephes. 5.

The authority of a B. among the priesles.

The holy Fathers therefore in the old time, considering these things, haue described the same in the order of the Cleargy, that all the other Clearks should with a singular care bee kept and gouerned of the Presbyter or Eldershippe: but among the Preestes or Elders, the bishop, as a Consull among the secretaries of the common-weale: (according to the often alleaged example of Caluine) So hee shoulde beare the cheefest care and custody both of the whole Church, and also singularly of the vniuerfall order of the Cleargye. But vnto euery more frequented Church, they ordeyned bishops; and to euery one of such Churches, they commended the Churches neerer adioynings, that were in the lesser Townes or Villages, and to this purpose, they willed the Preestes and Curates of the same Churches (whome they called Chorepiscopos, Bishops Chorall) eche one of them to hearken to the bishop, that was neerer to them, and to the Presbytery or Eldership. Which Preestes or Elders, those B. being the more cheefe, called oftentimes together with al their Cleargy, and furnished them in knowledge and diligence of their functions. But whereas the Lorde woulde, that they which are men appertayning to him, shoulde mutually embrace one another, and sustayn care care one of another, as farre and as largely as they are able (for all Christians are one body) the holy fathers haue ordeyned, that the bishops of euery prouince (for now all the territories subiect to the Romanes were distributed into Prouinces,) should assemble them-selues together with the preestes or Elders, so often as the neede of the churches required the same: but for certaynty twise in the yeare, and shoulde enquire of the doctrine and discipline of Christ, how the same in all the particular Churches was administred, and did flourish. And where they had found, that sinne was, they shoulde correct it and such thinges as they had knowne to bee wel they should confirm them and aduance them. But, that these Synodes should rightly & orderly be administred, they willed, that both for the calling and moderating of them, the Metropolitans should bee the rulers of them, that is the bishops of euery Metropolitane City: for so the cheefest city in euery prouince was called, where the Pretory or palace of the cheefest president was. And therupon vnto these Metropolitane byshops, they enioyned a certayne care and heedefulnesse of all the Churches throughout their prouince: that if so be they vnderstoode of anie thing, that were not so wel ordeyned or doone, either of the ministers of the Churches, or of the common people, they should in time admonish them thereof: and if they could not amend the same by their admonitions, that to correct it, they should call together a synode of the B. for no iudgement was graunted vnto them, which by their owne proper authority, they might exercise in the Churches, that had bishops them-selues of their owne: for all the iudgement both ouer the people and ouer the Cleargy, appertayned to their owne bishop, and to the preest or Elder of euery church, and as for the B. the synodes iudged them. And thereupon when as the B. were to be ordeined vnto the churches: it was appointed that they should come together to the same church, with all the B. of their Prouince (if that with the profit of the churches it might bee doone,) if not, with some of them, Howbeit, not with fewer then two or three of them. Which bishops should gouerne the election of the bishop, if it were yet to be made: and being made, they should examine it, and most seuerely make inquiry of him that is elected, and search out all his life, and his ability for the Episcopall office, and then at length initiate him into the episcopall function. All which thinges were instituted and were in force vnto this ende, that there might bee among the churches and in the Ministers therof, so great a knowledge as by any means was possible, and a mutuall care: and to debarre and expell all offences of Doctrine and of manners, and to susteine, aduance and make more effectuell the edification of faith & life, worthy of Christ the Lord: in so much, that if so be any had ceased from their duetye or office, the other bishops shold giue assistance, yea, to the excommunicating & casting him out out of the Episcopall office. Let those things be considered, that Saint Cyprian wrote to Stephanus bishop of Rome, concerning Martian bish. of Arles, who fell into the Nouatians sect. The first booke, Epist. 13. and also those things that he wrote in the third Epistle, the first booke, concerning a certayn portion of the Flocke distributed to euery one of the B. and the things that he hath in his Preface, and in the counsaile of Carthage, as he writeth to Quirinus.

Patriarckes.

Furthermore, when as all the world was replenished with Churches, and that the Metropolitanes also had neede of their owne particuler cure, for neither (as there began to be very many) were all of them wise or watchfull inough, (for alwayes in all orders of men, fewe are excellent) the care of some of the prouinces, was committed to certayn Byshops of the cheefe Churches: as to the Romaine, to the Constantino-politane, to the Antiochian and to the Alexandrine, and afterwarde to the Casarien of Cappadocia, and to certain other, euen as (the Churches of Christes faythfull people being multiplied) the necessity seemed to require. Notwithstanding, vnto these Primate bishops (whom afterward they called Patriarckes) there was no right at all ouer these other bishops or Churches, then that I haue sayde, was vnto euery Metropoli-tane, ouer the Churches and bishops of his prouince. Euery one vnto his owne portion of Churches, ought a singuler care and heede fulnesse, and also to admonish the bishops in time, if any had aught offended or slacked in his office. And if by admonishing he had profited nothing, to adhibite the authority of a Councell. Among these the first place was yeelded to the Romaine, both for the reuerence of S. Peter, and also for the maiesty of the City. By which reason the fathers afterward ensu-ing, gaue the second place to the Constantinopolitane, as to the other Rome, and to the bishop of the seate of the Empire: whereas the Antio-chian had before that, obtained the seconde place among these Patriarckes.

But as the nature of man defiled with ambition, laboureth alwayes more, that he might rule far & wide, then that hee might rule well: these Patriarckes on the occasion of this generall care of the Churches to the committed, drew vnto them, first, the ordeyning of the bishops that were neerer to them: And by that ordeining, snatched by litle and litle, and confirmed some iurisdiction ouer such byshops and their churches. Which euill when now it glimpsed foorth, began to become a greuous contention, concerning a generall empire ouer all the Churches. Which indeede first of all Iohn a certaine bishop of Constantinople, vnder the Emperour Mauritius, attempted to take vpon him. Of which contenti-on very many Epistles, among the Epistles of S. Gregory, lib. 5. 6. 7. are extant. At the length vnder Phocas, the Romaine obteyned this Title of the vniuersall Bishop. Which title by little and little, the bishops of this sea, began more to abuse: vntil vpon occasion, first by the diuision of the Empire vnder Charles the greate, afterwards by the discordes of Princes and nations: whereby they brake the power of the Emperor of the West, and of other kings: They haue lift vp themselves, into that Anti-Christian power, whereof now they vaunt, hauing firste oppressed the power of the Bishops, and then also, of the kings and Emperoures. Thus therefore hath Sathan ouerthrowne, all the healthfull obedience & gouernment of the clerical order. For the Romaine Antichriste hath taken an immediate Empire vnto himselfe, ouer all the Cleargy, and also ouer the Laity: & hath dissolued the custody of the Bishops, when they were good, and their care towards those that were commended to their truste. But because it is altogether necessary, that euery of the Clerkes, should haue their proper keepers and carers for them: the power and authority, as of Bishops, so also of Archdeacons, and of all other, by what meanes soeuer they be esteemed, vnto whome any portion of keeping and gouerning the Cleargie is committed, is to be restoared: and also their vigilancy, and heedfull regarde or correction, leaste any should bee at all in this order, vnkept. Thus farre Bucer, not onely faithfully reciting, but also praying the custome of the auncient church in diners orders of Ecclesiastical functions to be ordeined, of the which we haue before spoken.

Moreouer, I ought also to haue had consideration of those churches which although they haue embraced the Gospel; notwithstanding both in matter and in name, they haue retayned their Bishops and Archbish. Besides that in the Churches also of the Protestants, there want not in very deede Bishops and Archbishops: whome (hauing chaunged their good Greeke names, into euill Latine names,) they call Superindentes, and generall Superindentes: but where also, they neither obtaine these old good Greeke names, neither these newe euill Latine names: euen there notwithstanding some principals or chiefe are wont to bee, vnto whome almost al the authority, doth belong. Woyniting out, as it should seme to Geneva, &c. The controuersie therefore should haue beene of names: but whenas we agree cōcerning the matters; what do we brawle concerning the names? In the meane season, euen as I haue not disallowed the Fathers, in that matter, whereuppon the quæstion is: so can I not, but loue our mens zeale. Who haue therefore hated the names, because they feare, leaft with the names, the olde ambition also and the tyrannye, with the ruine and desolation of the Churches, might be called againe.

Thus reuerently writeth Zanchius, of these Ecclesiasticall orders, & of this superiority of Bishops, and Arch-bishops: yea and of the Patri-arches also, befoze the pride and tiranny of Antichriste came: and that it came not by these orders and dignities, but by the ambitious breaking and violating of them: and he neither disalloweth, but highly commendeth these Fathers, and these orders and dignities, as good and necessary, and nothing prejudiciall to the word of God: nor condemneth the zeale of these our brethren, though he shewe withall, that albeit they shunne and hate the name of Bishop and Archbishop: yet they haue the matter, and retain still such principall or chiefe ministers among them, to whom almost all the authority doth belong. Now as hee hath thus at large defended and confirmed his 10. & 11. Aphorismes: so coming to the 12. he proceedeth against the ambition & tyrannie of the Pope, to shewe that none of al these orders and dignities, no not of the Patriarkes, were any occasion therunto saying: For neither Christe ordeyned such an head: neither the auncient Fathers would admit it, bicause it was not expedient for the Church. But they were contented with 4. Patriarks, the Romain, the Cōstantinopolitane, the Alexandrine, and the Antiochien: who all of them should be of equall authority and power, and ech one should bee content with his owne bowndes, euen as it was defyned in the Nicene Councell, & confirmed in others: and that, not without great & waighty causes. Of the which, this in my iudgement is not the laste, to wit, leaste the dores should be opened vnto tyrannie in the Church: but rather, that if one should dare to attempt any thing, contrary to the sownde doctrine of Christ, and contrary to the liberty of the Church. The other Arch-bish. being of no lesse authority with their bishops, might oppose themselues and dawnt his boldnes, & breake his tyrannie. The Church in respect of Christe, is a kingdome: In respect of men, that are in the same, & cyther do rule, or be ruled: it is a gouernment of the best persons.

The origi-
nall of Pa-triarkes for general cou-
rels.

This is Zanchius graue iudgement, euen of these Patriarkes, that if they had beene kept as they ought to haue bene, and according to the good purpose of their institution: they were so little occasiō to any popish pride or tyranny, that they were the most especiall suppression of it, and of al errors and factions in the Church, and that it impeacheth nothing Christes kingdome. And what hath Zanchius said herein, (saue for the bare title of Hierarchie) that Caluine himselfe doth not anow: who saith: Institut. Chr. cap. 8. de Fide. Sect. 54.

But that al the particular Proninces, had one Arch-bishop among the Bishops: and that in the Nicene Councell, Patriarks were ordeyned, that in order and dignity should be superiour to the Arch-bishop; that thing appertayned to the conseruation of discipline. Albeit, in this disputation it can not be ouerpasse, that these degrees therefore, were chieflye instituted for this cause, that if any thing should happen in any Church, which coulde not be well dispatched of a few: it should bee referred to a prouinprovinciall Synode. If the greatnesse and difficulty of the cause, required also a greater discussing, that Patriarkes were adhibited together with the Sinodes: from the which there should be no appeale, but a generall Councell, The gouernment being thus constituted, some called it an Hierarchie, an holy gouernment, or sacred principallitye, by a name (as seemeth to mee) vnproper verily, vnused in the Scriptures. For the holy Ghost would take heede, least any should dreame of principallity or Domination, when as the gouernment of the Church is treated vpon. Howbeit, if omitting the name, we shall looke into the matter: we shall find that the old Bishops would not faigne another forme of gouerning the Church, different from that which the Lord by his word prescribed. Thus also doth Caluine his selfe confesse, besides that which he before confessed. And what shoulde wee then (as Zanchius saide) brawle about the name: the matter whereof is thus, of al these so excellent learned men, both the auncient Fathers, and also the late, or yet liuing moste famous writers, approued, practised, and confirmed: and yet what signifieth this name Hierarchie in effect also, which Caluine only here misliketh, but an holy principallitie or sacred gouernment, not different from this name Ecclesiasticall regiment: which title our brethren here allowe, & so often in this their Learned discourse of Eccl. gouernment? Let vs now therefore returne to procede on their learned Discourse.

The name

Finally S. Peter chap. 5. 1. the place before alleaged, comprehendeth all the three names, of Elders, Pastors, and Bishops. The Elders (saith he) which are amongst you, I beseech. The name of Pastor, is vnderstanded by relation of the names of feeding, and the flock, which he vseth also by the name of Archipomen, which signifieth the chiefe of Pastors, whiche is our Sauour Christ. The name of Bishop, or Ouerseers, is included in the word ἐπισκοποι, which signifieth them, which do carefully exercise the office of Bishops or Ouerseers. His exhortation is this. The Elders which are amongst you, I beseech, which am also a fellow Elder, and a witnesse of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shalbe reuealed: Feed the flock of God which is committed vnto you, so much as in you lyeth, carefully ouerseeing, not by constraints, but willingly: Not for filthy lucre, but of a ready minde: Not as exercising Lordship ouer the heritage, but that you may be examples to the flock, And when the chiefe Pastor shall appeare, you shall receaue an vncorruptible crowne of glory. S. Peter in this place reprocureth three notable vices, which do great hurt among the Minist. of the Church, if they be not taken heed of: slouthfulnesse in teaching: couetousnes of lucre: & ambitious desire of exercising Lordship: exhorting them to painfull diligence, because they were B. or Ouerseers: to a ready care because they were Past. & therefore should labour for loue of the flock, & not for lucre like hirelings; to humility, because their chiefe dignity in that they were Elders,

Arch-bish. excell in godlinesse, that they might be an example to the flock, which
 Cc. cannot be, except they submit themselues and their liues, to the comon rule of other men : which, most excellent vertues if they embrace, they should be sure to be plentifully rewarded by him, who onely deserueth to be called the chiefe of all Elders, Pastors, and Bishops : to whome onely, these honorable names of Archipresbyter, Archiepiscopus, & Ar- chipoimen, and such like, do properly agree. For, as the Apostle, calleth our sauour Christ in this place, the chiefe Pastor, so in the second chap.
 1. Pet. 2. 25. the 25. verse, he calleth him both the Pastor and Bishop of our soules.
 Wherefore, as he onely is our chiefe Pastor, or Archipoimen, so is he also our onely Archbishop. And that the name of Archipresbyter, or cheefe of Elders, pertayneth to no mortall man, may be seene by this place, where
 S. Pet. that excellēt & high Apost. who if any mā could, might as well as any haue challēged that name, durst not cal himself other then a fellow Elder: no, not when he sought authority to himself, by that name to be bolde, to exhort the Elders of the Church. But leaste anye should thinke we stay onely in names & tearmes, which are not so greatly material, let him consider, that S. Peter expressly forbiddeth the Elders to exercise Lordship ouer their seuerall congregations, how much more ouer their fellow Elders.

Where are cited two testimonies out of the Apostle S. Peter : The first 1. Pet 5. v. 1. 2. 3. & 4. Out of which, our Brethren firste doe gather, that Peter exhorting the Ministers of the Church, comprehendeth al the three names, Elders, Pastors, and Bishops, indifferently. Elders, plainly: Pastor, vnderstanded by relation, of the names of feeding, and the flock, & by the name of Archipoimen, which signifieth the chiefe of Pastors, which is our sauour Christ: and the name of Bishops or Oversee-ers is included in the word Episcopus which signifieth the, which do carefully exercise the office of Bishops, or overseers.

Now although we may most easily graunt all this, as nothing preiudciall to the question: Yet for, what slender arguments these are, & because a name may be included; or by relation of some sense may be vnderstan-ded: therefore, the name of Bishop in this or that place so included, muste alwayes be as ordinary & proper a name, as is the name of Priest or Elder, by the which he is expressly tearmed. We denie not (as we haue often before shewed) but that both the tearmes, and the offices also that the tearmes purpote, were then for a while vsed indifferently: but whether the vsage of them afterwarde, & that, in the Apost. times, more properly to one among the Pastors or Elders of the Churches, were vsed well, is to be continually reteyned, that is here the question. S. Peter calleth (& that expressly) al Christians holy sacerdotal Priesthood as also S. Iohn calleth the, Kings & Sacerdotal Priests in expresse tearmes, & not inclusively:

 Apocal. 1.

And many other tearmes by relation of vnderstanding, may be very aptly applyed to manie men, and yet we may not these vpon make proper names of them. Every Querser is not a Bishop, nor every Shepheard a Pastor: nor every Elder a Minister of Gods word. The name of Elder is vnto of S. Peter, even immediately after this allegation cited, not for a Minister of the word of God, ver. 5. as Beza noteth. Heere the reason of the Antisthefs requireth, that we should take this name concerning age, and not concerning dignity. But if it be to be taken in the firste verse, as Beza taketh it, saying, The name of Priest or Elder is generall, comprehending all them that are (as I may tearme them) of the Senate Ecclesiasticall; vulgarly, Seniors: how then do our Brethren here saye, that S. Peter there comprehendeth all the three names, of Elders, Pastors, and Bishops: and so restrayne it onely vnto those, that are Teachers and Ministers of Gods word?

Proper and improper names.

Concerning the collectiō that our brethren gather out of S. Peters words ver. 1. 2. 3. and 4. That hee reprooueth three notable vices, slothfulnesse in teaching: couetousnesse of lucre: and ambitious desire of exercising Lordship: and that if these three be not taken heede vnto, they do great hurte among the Ministers of the Church: All this againe, wee confesse is true. And euen because these three must be taken heed vnto: we therefore, with all the fore-said holy fathers, and godly Learned men, do thinke it very conuenient and needefull, that there should be amongst the Elders, Pastors and Bishops, some superiors to call vpon them, as Peter did, and to Querser, that such as are slothfull in teaching, shoulde bee ordeined caused to be diligent in teaching, so much as in them lyeth. And suche as are couetous of lucre, shoulde be taken heed vnto: and either remoued, or so reformed, that both in taking and in spending the goods of the Church, they shoulde so behaue themselves, as the lawes of God, and the godly ordinaunces of the Church and realme, hath in that behalfe provided. And that those which forgetting their calling, are puffed vp with anye ambitious desire of exercising Lordshippe, shoulde bee repressed: and if they haue anye suche title or office, shoulde exercise their Lordship in humility, without ambition or pride.

How necessary Bish. superiority is, by our Brethrens own collection.

Sloth,

Couetousnesse.

Pride.

But this simply debarreth not, the exercise of all kinde of Lordship in any competent dignity, reuerent title of honor, and superiour authority, which is the question, but rather confirmeth it, so to be exercised, with painfull diligence and ready care, without slothfulnesse: with hospitalitie, & loue of the flock, without couetousnesse of lucre: with modeste humility without ambitious desire of exercising Lordship. We allow here this collection out of Peter, that hee exhorteth them to painfull diligence, because they were B. or Quersers: to a ready care, because they were Pastors: & therefore should labour for loue of the flocke, & not for lucre, like hyre-lings:

lings: to modest humility, because their chiefe dignity, in that they were Elders, was to excell in godlines, that they might bee an example to the flock. All this likewise is true, their excellencie in godlinesse, is aboue all the excellencie in any dignity or Ecclesiastical honor, that they can be exalted vnto: but that that followeth, which can-not be except they submit themselves and their liues to the common rule of other men: is somewhat darkely and straungely spoken. For if our brythren meane by this submission of themselves and their liues, to the common rule of other men, that they should haue no superior Ecclesiastical authority ouer other men, but that all other men were equal and alike in all Ecclesiastical gouernment vnto them: or rather, that the ouerseers of other men, should be in their rule & ouersight, be vnder & inferior to the rule: and that also, to the common rule of other men: this were a manifest absurdity in all reason, and a plaine contradiction to it selfe.

Neither Peter nor Paul require such submission.

Neither did Peter or any of the Apostles so submit themselves: neither were Timothy or Titus bidden by S. Paul so to submit themselves: neither doth Peter here, or any where els, wil any Bish. Pastors or Elders, so to do. But, for al their humulity of minde, and diligence of body, in teaching, &c. neuerthelesse, to ouersee, to commaund, to rebuke, to rule & gouerne other men, Ministers and all, according to their place of calling, and authority of God committed vnto them. And they that thus do, and embrace withall, these most excellent vertues: they should be sure to bee plentifully rewarded by him who only (as here is truly said) deserueth to be called the chiefe of al Elders, Pastors, & Bishops. Neither is there any, (at least that I know, or I thinke, that our Brythren can name) except that man of sin the Pope, which claimeth any such title, to be called, the chiefe of all Elders, Pastors, and Bishops: sure I am, none deserueth so to bee called. As for any of our Arch-bishops, whose dignitie, as it conteineth no such absolute, either powe or title: so it stretcheth nothing nere to all, or to halfe, or to a quarter, and but scarce to a handfull, in comparison of all Elders Pastors and Bishops: and is bownded onely to this little corner and portion of the Church, in the realme of England: both they and all we still acknowledging this, that our Lorde Iesus Christe only deserueth to be called, and onely is indeede, the chiefe of all Elders, Pastors & B. as heere is said. And also, if these wordes following, bee likewise so absolutely & generally vnderstood, To whome only these honorable names of Archpresbyter, Archiepiscopus, Archipomen, and such like, do properly agree: we agree also, that they agree only (in that proper sense) to him. As Christ (in an absolute vnderstanding of good,) saith: Luc. 18. None is good but onely God. And as S Paule saith to the Rom. 16. namely to Timothy. 1. Tim. 1. 17. To the King eternall, immortall, inuisible, & wise onely, be honor & glory for euer and euer. And 1. Tim. 6. 15 & 16. speaking of the comming of the the coming of our I. Iesus Christ: whom in his times, he that blessed one, and only per to Chr. Prince, King of kings, and Lord of lords, shall shew: who only hath immortality, &c. And as the same our saviour Christ willeth vs, not to be called father or Master: For we haue one Father and Master, which is in heauen: so to whom only these honorable titles do (indeede) properly agree: speaking properly, of proper agreement, in the forth and highest manner of propriety. But if we make al these honorab. titles, so properly to agree vnto Christ, that none of them may be vnderstood, included, or communicated, to any of Eccl. Politicall, nor oeconomicall Ministers of Christe: so that none at al may be called either good, or King, or Prince, or Wise, or Father, or Master, by participation of any portion of the goodnes, power, wisdom, fatherhoode, Maisterhippe, &c. of God, as offices, gifts, or graces imparted to vs: while we should hypocritically, or zealously pretend to honour him, and to seeke his only glory: we should both vnthankfully (indeede) not acknowledge his goodnes and gracious giftes, whiche recomende to vs the more glory in him: and disobedientlie dishonour him in his ordinances, and higher powers, that he hath placed ouer vs.

How diuers

cles are first

But where now doth God, (in this, or any other expresse, or inclusive place of all the Scripture) challenge to himself all these honorable names to agree onely and properly vnto him? The honorable name that Saint Peter onely. Heere ascribeth to Christe, is Archipresbyter cheefe or principall pastor. Which Title I neuer hearde of any other, that it was giuen vnto, or taken vpon him. As for Archipresbyter a principal priest or elder (which termie it is not in vse with vs, nor Arch-priest, as our aduersaries cal it) because in the office of Priesthoode, Elderhip, or Pastorship, we acknowledge all to haue one office vnder the high-pastor of our soules, and auuncient of daies Iesus Christ. Whelie, sith that the name Archbishop, signifying a chief or principall ouer-seer, is no where in the Scrip. properly, nor not properly applyed vnto him, shall we dare to say, as wee maye of some other peculiar titles and names of God, Iehouah, Omnipotent, &c. (when as God now & then of his goodnes bouchsafeth to communicate to some his especial spirit. to honorab. names, belonging to himself, Adonai, Elohim, & the name of the Lordes Christ, or anoynted, &c.) that these honorable names Archipresbyter, & Archiepif. do so only & properly agree vnto Iesus Christ, that none other, in no other conditional sense, may be called by them? I thinke this can not wel be prooued by scripture, nor any reason or argument will inferre it.

Archipomen
& archpriest

If we thinke this word Archiepif. that is, Prince, by contraction prefixed, and in corporate to the other words, Archiepif. & Emmanuel do so aduance the sense therof, & they become not competible to mortal men: especially being applyed to the ordering & gouerning of the church: are not those names & offices being simply taken without this composition seruing to builde the Ch.

as S. Paule saith Ephes. 4. even on the place, that our Brethren do allege for pastors and Doctors: that they are all given to the worke of the Ministry vnto the edifying or building of the body of Christe, &c. So that indeed, at these offices that Christe ordeyned, are but builders of this mysticall temple, vntill we all come to the vntity of faithe, and of the knowledge of the sonne of God, vnto a perfect man, vnto the measure of the age of the fulnesse of Christ: And who is the principall builder of this Temple? but even hee that saide of the Temple of his owne naturall bodie, to the which his mysticall bodie is compared: Destroy this Temple, and in three dayes, I will builde it vpe againe. Io. 6. 21. Whereupon (saith S. Paule Heb. 9. 1. &c.) holie bretheren, pertakers of the heauenly calling, consider the Apostle and head-Priest of our confession Iesus, who is faithfull to him that hath preferred him, euen as Moses also in all his house. For he was counted worthy of greater glorie than Moses: how much greater honor than the house, he hath that made it. For euery house is builded of some man, but he that created all thinges is God. And verilie, Moses was faithfull in all his house. as a seruauant, in witnesse of those thinges, that were to bee spoken. But Christe is in his house as a Sonne, which house are wee, if wee keepe firme and sure the confidence and glorie of hope, vnto the ending.

These names
& offices gi uen to the building of the Church.

Here are these honorable names, attributed both vnto Christe, & vnto Moses: that as Christe was the builder of the spirituall house or temple of God: so was Moses. Christe as the sonne and owner, Moses, but as a seruauant in Gods house. and yet commeth in S. Paule, 1. Cor. 3. v. 9. 10. Ye are the building of God, according to the grace of God that is given to mee, I as a wise Master Arch-builder, (or chiefe builder) which we commonly translate Maister builder, haue laid the foundation, & another buildeth vpon it?

What? durst S. Paule say of himself he was, maister which tearme principally, is proper vnto Christ? For the worde signifieth, such principallitie and chiefe degree: applied by S. Paule vnto himselfe, and that in the cheefest worke of Gods Church, the building of it: the worke that conteyneth all Ecclesiasticall offices, and whereto all do tende: and that without any derogation to Iesus Christe. Although Christe absolutelie, simply and aboue all, be the onely and proper maister of all this mysticall building. And is this honorable name Elder, of such honorable Eldershippe, and prerogative aboue builder, or of any such peculiar application to God the Father, or to Christe the sonne, that it is onely and properly applied to him? Indeede, Christe is called, the olde or annient of dayes, not the elder, except with addition: our Elder Brother: other wise, this honorable name is not so proper onelie to Christe, to be called Presbyter, as to be called Sacerdos. And therefore is lesse iniurious, yea, no iniury at all, to the peculiar, or to any other honorable name, of our sauour Iesus Christ, to be called Archpresbyter. And yet, if Presbyter

If it bee saide, the highe-prieste was so called, because hee prefigured Christe: True it is. But, sith our Brethren confesse, that those offices & callings, were likewise also for good order of discipline among them, although that priesthoode both in him, and in all other of that order of Aaron and Leui, bee accomplished in Christe, and so abolished: yet, as the degrees of order and differences of Ministers among them (by our Brethrens owne confession) was the signe also of the differences among vs: So, why not withall, of the differences of degrees and dignities in the same. And sith our brethren alleage hereunto, the Synagogues among the Iewes, and their order therein, and that they had ^{The name} ~~chief~~ ^{of} ~~gouernours~~ ^{Archipres-} ~~or princes~~ ^{byter} ~~of the Synagogues~~ ^{among} ~~which order of digni-~~ ^{the Christi-} ~~tie, was not abolished by Christe: and some good christians were such~~ ^{an Iewes.} ~~among the Iewes, not disallowed but commended by S. But if our brethren aske vs, what we say to the other honorable name Archiepiscopus: in dede, wee neede saye the lesse to this of Archipresbyter, ^{Archidiacon} ~~Arch-prieste~~, or Arch-elder, retayning no such name among vs, as wee haue of Arch-deacon, and Arch-bishop: but because the name of Deacon is a name much lesse proper vnto Christ: Arch-deacon may bee afforded with our brethrens lesse suspicion, of touching Christes glory and preeminence. Deacon signifying but Minister, Arch-deac. can signifie but a chief ^{Bishop.} or principall Minister: and therefore may be suffered with lesse enuie: and we haue heard Zanchius & Bucers allowances of it. As for the name of Bi. being a name of dignity and (being wel vnderstood) as S. Paule saith, deseruing double double honor, it is not only a name pertaining to Christe, which is called the Bish. of our soules, but also communicated by his Apostles vnto mortall men. And though the name of Archb. signifie a principall overseer in his dignity, & being simply and absolutely vnderstood of Christe alone all other: is in very deede only the true archbishop: yet since the Scripture expresseth no where this name, either peculiarly or at all vnto him: & since so many holy fathers, of so great antiquity, both in their severall writings, & with so many vniuersall consents, even in the best allowed both generall and provincially Counsels, vpon so grounded reasons, to so good & necessary purposes, & in such lawfull cases: but yet, with such conditions & howndes (as is aforesaid) did ordaine, receaue, & continue the same: and since that also, such notable Protestants of our owne age, in the Churches reformed, Luther, Melancthon, Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, Bullinger, Peter, Martyr, Gualter, Hemingius, Zanchius, yea, and Caluine himselfe (as wee haue heard) alloweth the institution and practise thereof: I see not, how our learned brethren discourses can rightly finde any at all of these vices, that Peter here reproveth, as doing great hurte among the Ministers of the Church, to be directly conseynd in this honorable name of Archb. but if it may be well vsed with painefull diligence, ready care, and with modest humility, to the greate benefite among the Ministers of the Church, & to the suppressing of all these foresaid, three notable, & many other as notable vices, factions and schismes, disorders & confusions, errors & heresies, when any such begin to spring and breake out, among the ministers of the Church, to suppress them by the godly industry and necessary authoritye of the Bish. and Archb. iurisdiccions.

How far we yeeld to our brethrens argument for these termes how far wee denie it.

But our brethren here do make these reasons: & first for Archbishops: For, as the Apostle calleth our Sauour Christ in this place, the chief pastor, so in the 2. chap. v. 25. he calleth him both the Pastor & Bishop of our soules. Wherefore as he only is our chiefe Pastor or Archipoimen: so is he also our onely Archbishop. This argument were to some purpose if we simply denied Christ to be our Archbishop, or to be our onely Archbishop in that sense, that is equivalent there to Arch-pastor. For as our brethren heere theirselues confesse, it is to be vnderstood of him, who onely deserueth to be called. the chiefe of all Elders, pastors, and Bishops: In which sense we not only acknowledge him to be the only Archpastor, but to be the onely Arch-elder (if we may so tearme him, because he is our elder brother) or rather Archpriest betokening the chiefe dignity of that his office, and also to be the onely Archbishop. But sith we, nor any good Protestant, nor any of the auncient Fathers, vnderstande Archbishop in that sense: Therefore, this argument a comparatiu, and of the similitude of the one tearme to the other, is disparatum and much vnlike. The one is a plaine tearme expressly ascribed in the Scripture vnto Christe, and not the

the other: and therefore, if our brethrens arguments from the expresse scriptures be good, then haue we better liberty, to deny their reasons goodnesse, for this tearme. And if this reason be of good consequence, as the Apostle calleth our Saviour Christ in this place the chiefe Pastor: so in the 2. chap. the 25. verse, hee calleth him both the Pastor and Bishop of our soules. If these places follow thus, as the one, so the other: why may we not better conclude thus? But these honourable names, the Pastor and Bishop of our soules, are not so absolutely in all senses proper onely vnto Christe, but that vnder Christe in some good and true senses, they are also competible, to other men. Therefore, these tearmes of Pastor, but more especially of Archbishop, which in no place is ascribed to Christe, are not so absolutely in all senses proper onely vnto Christ, but that vnder Christ in some good and true senses, they are also competible to other men, so that if we consider their owne argument better, it maketh not so muche with them, as against them.

Now as they reason thus on these two tearmes Arch-pastor, & Archbishop, so againe for the thirde tearme, Archipresbyter, they likewise say: And that the name Archipresbyter or chiefe of Elders, pertayneth to no mortall man, may be seene by this place, where S. Peter that excellent and high Apostle, who if anye man coulde, might as well as anye, haue challenged that name, durste not call him selfe other then a fellowe Elder, no, not when hee sought authoritye to him selfe, by that name to bee bolde, to exhorre the Elders of the Church.

Pag. 27

No man (as I said before) among vs in Englande, hath anye such name, as Archipresbyter, Archpriest, or chiefe of Elders, and therefore it is needelesse to challenge the discipline of the Church of Englande for that, which (all Englande seeth) we haue not. But if our brethren think, with an awke stroke, thzough the sides of this title of Arch-priest, to wounde the title of Archbishop, inferring thus: If the name of Archbishop bee allowable, which is the higher title, then muche more is the name of Arche-presbyter, allowable, whiche is the lower: But that it is not allowable; therefore, muche lesse the greater of Archbishop.

The name of Archpr. not in vse among vs.

Our brethrens argum.

The Matter of this argument being distinguished, the defect therof, forthwith appeareth. True it is, that where they vse the title of Archpriest, they vse it as inferiour both to Arch-bishop, and to Bishop: because they take it onely as a chiefe or principall person, among a number of those that are but mere Priestes or Elders, without any Episcopall superiority. And so likewise Arch-deacon, as a chiefe or principall person, among a number of other Deacons. And thus also vse we the honorable name of Archb. for a chiefe or principal person among the Bishops, that is to wit, one.

Our vse of the name Archbishop one, to whome among some other of the same order and Ministry, a certaine superior dignity aboue some the residue of his fellowes, is attributed. In which sense also, this name Arch-priest, or Arch-elder, though we vse it not, might of others (as is aforesaid) be vled wel enough. But because the name Prieste, or pastorall Elder, hath a nearer reference to the office, which is al one and the same, both in the him, and in Bi. and Archbish. And the name of Bish. signifieth not a severall office of the Ministry, but a superior degree of dignity and authority, in the selfesame order of the Ministry that the Priest or pastoral Elder is in, as S. Aug. to. 4. in his questions ex libro mixto. quest. 101. saith. Quid est enim Episcopus, nisi primus Presbyter, hoc est, summus sacerdos? For what is a Bishoppe, but the chiefe Priest or Elder, that is to say, the highest sacred Minister? & this he speaketh euen of that place of S. Paul. 1. Tim. 3. where the priest or Elder is called a Bishop. so that the bishop: yea, and the Archbishop, are still but Priestes or Elders, in respecte of the order and office of the Ministry.

Although therfore the name of Bishop, being an honorable name, howbeit, but a name of degree in the office of dignity and auth. & therby may aswell admit the name of a superiour among themselves: as also ouer the residue of the Ministers: yet, sith the name of Pastor, Priest, or Pastoral elder, continueth still both in the Bishop, and in the arch-bishop, being not so apt to admit such a superior title of dignity among the Pastors, priests or pastoral Elders, which are titles common to them al, & signifying rather the substance of the office, than any quality of degree therein: and substantia non dicitur, secundum magis & minus. Which reason, though it sufficeth vs to vse the title of the one, & not of the other, because Arch-priest, which indeed is lesser in respect of degree, is the greater, or at leasse, in both is al one, in respect of the office or order of the Ministry, and therfore we vse it not: yet, (so any thing here alleaged by our brethren) not only we might vse it, but euen the Papists might still vse the title of Archprieste, as they do, vnderstanding not the name Prieste for sacrificer. For, where our brethren say, that the name of Archpresbyter or chiefe of Elders, pertaineth to no mortall man: neither they, nor any other (except the Pope himselfe, who said also, he was the B. of Bishops,) did so vse the name Archpresbyter, in this sense, thus indefinitely and in generall spoken, as chiefe of Elders: but as a chiefe person in some subalternall respectes, among a certaine number and appointed companie of his brethren, Priestes or Elders. And so it may well appertaine to a mortall man, yea, to a man framed after our brethrens owne deuising: to be a chiefe man among his brethren Elders for a time, or for an action in the assemblie of them. Yea, in this restraints, they admit the name of Archbishoppe also. And if (as they say) Episcopus and Presbyter bee all one: then in that sense, admit-mitting Archbishop, how far will they differ from admitting also the title of Archipresbyter? but now let vs see their argument against this title, that is here alleaged out of Peter.

The argument is this. If any man could, S. Peter that excellent and high Apostle, might as well as any, haue challenged that name, Archelder.

Our brethren
rent argument from
S. Peter.

But, S. Peter durst not call himselfe other than a fellowe Elder, no not when he sought authority to himselfe, by that name to be bolde to exhorthe the Elders of the Church:

Ergo: No mortall man) that is an Elder, can or ought to dare, to challenge that name Archipresbyter, or to call himselfe, other then Concerning here our brethrens Maior in this argument, wee gladlye allow it, both that S. Peter was so excellent and high an Apostle: and also that if any (more) mortall man could, he might as well as any, haue challenged that name. But, by the way, (because of these words more than I looked for) had S. Peter (in any respects) any superiority aboue his fellow Apostles? Did he then excell the residue in any dignity? or were not the residue as high as he, but that he by an excellencie, is here saide to bee high, more than all they? Were not our brethren afrayed, least by these speeches, they might seeme to confirme the Papists opinion, that S. Peter was the head of the Apostles? yea, diuerse of the Fathers cal S. Peter the Prince of the Apostles, as both Origen in his 17. homily vpon Luke: and Cyprian lib. 1. Epist. 3. lib. 4. Epist. 9. that Peter was the foundation of the church: and yet both neither Origene allowe anie primacy of the B. of Rome, or of the church of Rome from Peter.

How S. Peter excell'd among the Apost. and whether in dignity.

And Cyprian De simplicitate Prælatorum saith: The Lorde speaketh vnto Peter, I (saith he) saie vnto thee, that thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke, I will build my Church, and the gates of Hel shall not overcome it. I will giue to thee the keyes of the kingdome of heauen: and the thinges that thou shalt binde vpon the earth, shall be bounde also in heauen: And to the same party after his resurrection, he saith; Feede my sheepe. And although (after his resurrection) he gaue his power alike euen or equall to all the Apostles, and say, As the Father sent mee, so send I you also: receaue ye the holy Ghoste, If ye shall remit sins vnto anie, they shall be remitted vnto him: if you shall holde them, they shall be holden: Notwithstanding, that he might make vnity manifest, he by his authority did dispose the originall of the same vnity, beginning from one. Certainlye, this were the other Apostles also that Peter was, endewed with like consort both of honour and power, but the beginning commeth from vnity, that the Church might be declared to bee one.

Parva

So then, though the honor and power, in respect of their office of Apostleship, ftleship, were æquall in them all, and of like consort: yet in this respect, & in all numbers and orders, there muste euer bee a beginning from one; therein was Peter in the Apostles company, the firste and cheefest: And so is he called of the Euangelist Mat. 10.1, by the name of first. Neither is he set down first, for order only: but also for some other preeminence dependant thereon. And therfore, we may safely gather that Christ made a speciall choise of these 3. Apostles, Peter, Iames, & Iohn, more than of al the residue. Whereupon it should seeme that these 3. were as S. Paule noteth Gal. 2. esteemed as pillars, & seemed great among the. And though Iames had the prerogative of being made the B. of Ierusalem, & not Peter: yet (as it is very well said here by our brethren) in respect of the fellowship of the Ap. Peter & not Iames was that excellent and high Apostle, that excelled and surmounted all his fellowes, as ring-leader, and though not as head; yet oftentimes as mouth of all the residue. And could there be these differences & degrees of excellency, height, and greatnes, in this one fellowship of the Apostles (the honor and power of like consort in the office of the Apostleship still remayning) & may there not be so, among the Elders, & yet, one to be B. and among the Bishops, & yet, one be Archb. without the impeachment of the honor and of the power of like consort, in the office of Eldership, & Bishoprike. If one among them (notwithstanding the equality of their Apostleship) was, and might be rightly called: that excellent & high Apostle: why may not one likewise among the Elders (notwithstanding the equality of their Eldership) be indèdè, & so be called, that excellent and high Elder; & one B. among the B. that excellēt & high Bishop.

But, let this go, as a scape by the way: yea, let S. Peter be neuer so excellent and high an Apostle: yet (say our brethren) he durst not call himselfe other than συνεπιστάτης, fellow Elder.

So? durst he not so? how then durst he, even at the first dashe, and the very firste wordes of his Epistle, call him selfe, Peter the Apostle of Iesus Christ. lo, heere he called himselfe other then συνεπιστάτης, a fellow Elder.

Yea, but (say they) he durst not, when he sought authority to himselfe, by that name to be bold, to exhorte the Elders of the Church: even then durst he not call himselfe other than συνεπιστάτης.

What? & did S. Peter then seeke authority to himselfe? or, if he did it, did he seek it by that name? Was not the name of the Apostle, of more antiquity than Presbyter was? or, then συνεπιστάτης was? yea or then συνεπιστάτης had ben, if he had used it? or, did he not rather then, sette aside his authority, and set aside the name of apostle, and descende down to their owne name & order, unto whome he wrote: being but in respect of their Ministers, Priests or Elders, and abasing him selfe, to insinuate and perswade them the rather, as though that excellent and high apost. had bene but their fellow, in that office of Priesthoode or Eldership, though in his apostleship far aboue them.

And therefore (be it spoken under correction) this seemeth not to be so well auouched of our brethren: that S. Peter durste not call himselfe other than ^{superiour} a fellowe Elder: no, not when he sought authority to himselfe by that name, to be bold to exhorthe the Elders of the Church, For, S. Peter, could, & durst, if he would haue done it And he did it, when he would vse his authority, But here it shoulde seeme, he vsed or sought it not, but set it aside, and vsed this lower tearme, in his modest humility to the which he exhorted them. And yet, this no white hindred his superior dignity & office of apostleship far aboue them.

Peter both durst and did cal himselfe other
then ^{superiour}
Elders.

But wherefore is this word fellow Elder, here so urged, that S. Peter where he sought authority to himself, durst vse no other name? doth this word fellow Elder inferre, that all that are fellowes euen in the very Eldership, must be in all respects fellow & fellow like, and all of such equality, that no superiour dignity may be admitted in this fellowship? S. Paul also calleth diuerse persons his fellow labourers in the Gospel, & his fellow seruants: yea, he mencioneth his yoake-fellowe, which is, of diuerse, expounded for his wife: yea, he calleth all the sonnes of God, fellow heires with Christe: and is there no difference of dignities in these fellowships?
In the Courte, the best noble man in Englande, wil many times cal those that are of far inferiour offices, & yet her Maiesties souldiers men in her most honorable household, their fellowes: shall we say they durst not call themselves other than their fellowes? or that they are all alike & equall. But if this fellowship that Peter speaketh of be in the Eldership: then by the way, we haue here to note, that S. Peter was both an apostle: & an elder.
But our brethren say, an elder is all one with a B. therefore the name & office of a B. was not so separated, but that euen the Apostles also both might be and were their selues Bishops.

Our brethren
stay on names,

But least (say our Brethren) any man should thinke, we stay only in names and tearmes, which are not so greatly materiall: let him consider that Saint Peter expressly forbiddeth the Elders, to exercise Lordship ouer their seuerall congregations, how much more ouer their fellow Elders.

If our brethren would not, that any man shoulde thinke they stay only in names and tearmes: and if names and tearmes are not so greatly materiall: I marvel they make so much ado about them, or rather, as it seemeth (for any thing here alleaged) stay (if not onely) yet moste vpon them: the thing indeede that S. Peter here expressly forbiddeth, is to exercise Lordship, so that Saint Peters forbidding, is not for any name or tearme, but for exercise of Lordship. Neither do we deny, but that which the Apostle Saint Peter forbiddeth the Elders, should be still forbidden them.

And with our brethren, allowing Caluines & Bezaes interpretation, (with from Caluine, they seeme to haue taken all these their observations, on the foresaid place of Peter, though some what altering both Caluines words & sense herein) that the word Cleargie signifieth not the whole order of the Ministers

Ministers, but the particular Churches, and the vniuersal body of the Ch. (that is, al the congregation, being the L. inheritaunce & allotment), as well as the Ministers: Doth S. Peter then forbid, that any one Elder should haue & exercise any superior gouernmēt ouer the cleargy, vnderstanding the cleargy in this sense? If he doth not, but alloweth it, & his self practised it, then, howsoeuer the name both of gouerning, & of clergy may be abused, y^e matter is cleare, that one Priest or Elder, among the residue, may haue a lawfull superior auth. & gouernmēt ouer the cleargy; (that is) ouer all the vniuersal body of the Church, in euery particular or seuerall congregation: & so not only ouer the people, but also ouer the whole order of Minist.

Caluinc,

What Lordship Peter proueth, -

For the matter that is here forbidden the Elders, is not to be uenerunt, which simply is gouerning and exercising a lawfull authority: but rather manifestly he doth inferre it, saying: μὴ ὡς κατακυριαρχεῖτε, τῷ κόσμῳ, neither as misruling of the cleargy. On which word saith Caluine: Because with the Grecians, the proposition κατα for the most part is taken in euil part: Peter heere reproveth a preposterous Lordship: such as theirs, who not considering with theselus, that they are the Minist. of Christ & of the church do couet somewhat more. Erasmus noteth on it: Nō dominātes more Regum: Not ruling after the māner of Kings: Non Dominio prementes, Not pressing the with Dominiō (or Lordship): so that here is nothing at al spokē against any vnlawfull superiority, that any elders may exercise ouer the cleargy. For other wise he should permit no government at all vnto them ouer the congregatiō, or of one at anie time in a synode. And therefore these wordes of Saint Peter must needs be vnderstood either of tw excellēg, or of tw tyrannicall gouernment, and so Caluine concludes thus: For God deliuereth not a kingdome to the Pastors, but onelie enioyenth them a care, so that theright in the mean time remaines entier to himself, and so saith Beza: he sheweth that not a kingdome, but a care is committed to them. So that this Lordship that Saint Peter expressely forbiddeth, is only against their exercise of a kinglike, or of a tyrannicall Lordship, and not against anie moderate Lordship and superior authority ouer the cleargie. But to proue this further and better (as they thinke) our brethren ascend from Saint Peter vnto Christ, saying:

Which thing also our Sauour Christ precisely forbiddeth, when there was a contention among his apo. about the primacy. The Kings of the nations haue dominion ouer them, and they that beare rule ouer them are called gracious Lordes or beneficiall, but you shall not be so. Also Mat. 20. 25. and Mar. 10. 41, Vpon the ambitious request of the sonnes of Zebedy, & the disdain of the other against the, The princes of the Gentiles exercise lordship ouer them and they that bee great, exercise authority ouer them, but it shall not bee so amongst you, but who so will be great amongst you, let him be your Minister, and he that will bee first among you, let him bee your seruant.

The

the same thing he taught by his example, when he washed his Disciples feet, and commaunded them to shewe the like humility one towards another, which were all brethren, which he their Lord and Master shewed towards them. Also Math. 23. 8. &c. He forbiddeth all ambitious titles of Rabbi, Master, Father. &c. The reason hee addeth, for you are all brethren. For these names agree properly to God and Christe. For the greatest dignity of an Ecclesiasticall person is a Ministrye, and not a Lordship.

Christ forbiddeth greater.

Iohn. 13. 13.

Math. 23. 8.

These places hauing bene before by other so often alleaged, and so fully answered, neede the lesse discussing. The wordes indeede of our sauour Christe cited by S. Luke. 22. 25. might seeme at the first shewe to forbid all gouernment, because he sayth οτι ουκ εστιν ουτως ουτως, they rule or gouerne them: But being larger and more plainely expounded, both not onely, by S. Mat. 20. 25, but also by S. Mark 10. 41, who both of them expressly vse the same word that S. Peter doth οτι ουκ εστιν ουτως ουτως, they do plainly shew, that it should be vnderstoode in the same sense. And therefore this is heere of our Brethren rightlye sayde than they were aware of: Which thing also our sauour Christ precisely forbiddeth, when &c. So that, as S. Peter simply forbiddeth not in the Ministry, all Superiority of gouernment and reuerend Title of honor: but onely such as eyther is proper vnto Kinges, or abused by tyrants & ambitious men: so the same thing beeing forbidden precisely by our sauour Christ also: if we wil be rightly precise here in, we ought not to stretch these wordes furder, than Sauour Christ & S. Peter do.

And as indeed, it is good to note, what here our sauour Christ precisely forbiddeth: so let vs precisely note withall, what here precisely he alloweth. For whereas both in Mat. and Marke hee saith, οτι ουκ εστιν ουτως ουτως, but he that wil bee among you made greater, which the olde translation calleth greater, And againe, οτι ουκ εστιν ουτως ουτως, be or be made first or chiefe: Luke saith, οτι ουκ εστιν ουτως ουτως, and againe, οτι ουκ εστιν ουτως ουτως, But hee that is greatest among you, and he that is Prince or gouernor. Here all these titles are both precisely expressed. The first amog them, that is to say among the ministers of the word, and sacraments, and not only the first in order of number, but in the quality and degree of dignity: first, that is, great, greater, & greatest amog them. Yea in precise wordes, the prince or gouernor of the. And all this, with this condition, is expressly & precisely allowed of our sauour Christ, that is to say, so y the same person be the Minister or the seruant of the al.

If our brethren say: how can the same person be both greatest & least, gouernor and seruant all at once: although these may agree wel together, in diuerse respects: yet, to vrgs euen the precise wordes of our Sauour Christ, Christ expressly doth expound himself. For that which is said before he should bee, Luk. 22. saith, οτι ουκ εστιν ουτως ουτως, as though he were one that serued: that is to say, he should in his greater dignity or gouernment of them,

How Christ expoundes his owne wordes.

Masters & fathers behaue himself in lowlines and humility, as if he were the seruant & the least among them, And this wel accoꝝdeth to S. Peters forner sentence, exhorting the Elders, amōg other vertues, to modest humility. But our bz then perhaps, would not haue these expresse words thus precisely bꝛged, & yet, see how they make it moze plain, enen by the very example that they bꝛing (as they thinke) against it.

Our Br. ex-

The same thing (say they) he taught by his example, when he washed his apostles feet, & cōmanded the to shew the like humility one to another, which were al brethren, which he their Lorde & master shewed to them.

Humility
debarreth
not superiority of office.

And was this example in deede, the teaching of the same thing? What then, if he for al this great humility, yea, & that, cōmanding them to shew the like humility, did not withstanding, retein stil a superiority of lordship & mastership ouer them, that both our bzethzen confes, saying, which hee their Lord & M. shewed towards the. & when Christ had shewed the this exāple, he himself said: Vnderstand ye what I haue done vnto you? ye call me master & Lord, & ye say wel, for so I am. If now, he taught them by his doctrine the same thing, in the foresaid places, Mat. 20. Mar. 10. & Luc. 22. that he taught them here by his exāple: then do not those places precisely forbid, euery Mastership & Lordship, or superiority of authority & title of dignity & honor, amōg the ministers of the word & sacraments. Neither doth Mastership, or Lordship, or superior authority & title, therof amōg the (being so far as we acknowledge the, inferior to our Sauour Christ) any whit impugne the disciples, or any godly Prelates humility, or their humility impugne their Mastership, Lordship, or superior authority & title, as it did not in this example of Christ, nor in other humble both Princes & Prelates, as Constantine, Theodosius, &c. Ambrose, Augustine, &c. that with the Apostles followed this example. And to the same effect writeth both Ierom, Augustine, and diuers others: Superiority therefore, in the godly gouernors, ciuill or ecclesiastical, may ioine with the true humility wel ynough.

As for that place, Mat. 23. 8. &c. where (they say) Christ forbiddeth al ambitious titles of Rabbi, Master, Father, &c. Shal we condemn al these titles for ambitious? Rabbi, among vs is not in vse, but among the Iewes, and a reuerende name, signifying al one with Maister, great, or excellent, or one in steed of many: and giuen also to Christ, and accepted of him: and since, ascribed without offence, to many notable, christian and godly Iews, besides the wicked & erroneous Rabbines. As for the titles of Maist. & father, as they are vsuall among vs: so they are not ambitious: & if any ambitiously desire them, the ambition is in the man, not in the title. Neither doth Christ simply forbid these titles, but the ambition to obteyne them. For although in precise words he say, quoniam si in uocamini rabbi: But be ye not called Rabbi: neuer thelesse, the meaning thereof is so plain, that not only the old vulgar translation doth wel expound it, Vos autē nolite vocari Rabbi: but will not yee to be be called Rabbi, as who should say, Haue ye no inordinate will or desire to be called: But that also euen Beza him-selfe saith, id est, ne ambiat hunc honorem; neq; enim vetat Christus, &c. Be ye not called, that is to say do not ye ambitiously desire (or sue for) this honor. For Christe forbiddeth not, that we should giue to the Magist. and to Maisters their honor but he condemneth ambition, as August. declareth in the Sermon of the Lords words, out of Mat. 11, as Erasmus hath noted. ¶ Else, by these titles Master or Father in this place, he meaneth them not in such senses, as we commonly vse to call them: but so; such as are Doctors or Maisters in teaching and giuing preceptes, and so are the very wordes, Be ye not called Doctors: as who say Be ye not called Doctors of any doctrine of your selues, and precepts of your devising, no; be ye called fathers, as authors & originals of doctrine & religion, so that only appertaineth to God. Both which expositions as the text yeelds them apparantly, so the moste and best of all the interpreters old and new, agree vpon them.

Beza annot. in Mat. 1.

Neither doth the reason that he addeth, For you are all Br. (meaning, both by creation and regeneration, vnder God our cheef Master & father) take away the lawfull vse of this title Mast. & Father among men: or the being, either of Mast. in their subalternall degrees, either of Father in nature, in yeares or in dignity, either ecclesiasticall or political. ¶ Yea, our brethren theirselues (if they haue children) can be content they call them Father, and they call one another Master, for all these wordes.

Ephes 5. 5.
1. Tim 5. 21.

And therefore this is not so truly inferred: For these names agree properly to God & Christ: except they mean this properly not very properly, neither in this speech of God and Christ, (so; though St. Paul in a few places, speak thus distinctly, God and Christ: yet might we more properly vse St. Pauls plainer speeches: and sith Christe also is God and man, to haue said, God the father and Christ) Neither do these titles Father & master, agree so properly to God the Father and to Christ. ¶ For both Christe is called more properly of the twaine, the sonne than the father, And God the father of whom is all fatherhood in heauen & earth, thogh he be properly called God the father, and our heauenlie father: yet he is not properly called father, in the proper sense. ¶ For when wee saie a thing is proper to one, we commonlie exclude the proprietic of the same from all but him. But God that vouchsafeth (as I haue said already) to communicate higher & more proper names of his, than Master or Father, alloweth so generallie the vse of these names, Maister and Father, both to good and bad, no; debarreth them from any his ministers: that I see not how, in anie sense that we doe vse them, they can be aptly sayd to agree properly to God & Christ, which if it were true, then our vse of these names Maister or Father, were not onelie improper, but plaine blasphemie.

The name of Father not proper to Christe.

Brentus resolution for Ministers
that they may be magistrates.

nitie of an Eccl. person, is a ministerie and not a Lordship: Is a verbe and proper illation on the premisses. Howbeit, it may be well graunted without prejudice. And may as well be sayde, of any ciuill, as of anie Ecclesiasticall person, that his greatest dignitie is a Ministerie and not a Lordship. For in that he is Gods Minister, it surmounteth the greatest worldly dignitie he can attaine vnto, al were he King or Keyser neuer so great. And this also is in very deede, the greatest dignitie in enery Eccl. person, (aboue anie degree of externall dignitie, which for order sake hee is promoted vnto) that he is Gods Minister: as S. Paule saide, let a man so esteeme vs as the ministers of Christe, and stewardes of the mysteries of God, 1. Co. 4. 1. And in this respect, not the greatest prince in the world, if he feare God, but (be the Preest neuer so pwe, or low of degree) he humbly acknowledgeth this pwe Minister of Gods worde and Sacramentes, in his Ministration, to be of farre greater dignity, than is all his Ciuill power and externall Maiesty. But the question is not heere so properly, which is the greatest dignity of an Ecclesiasticall person: whether a Ministry, or a Lordship: meaning by Ministry, the Ecclesiasticall function, by Lordship, eyther a Title or an estate of some externall superiour government: as whether these twayne may bee competible. Which point though Caluine on the foresaid sentence of our Sauour Christ, Math. 20. resolueth it, for a Ciuill Princes or temporall Lordes part, that in cases of vrgent necessity hee that hath the Lordshippe of a Village or a city, may exercise the office of teaching: and the same he shewed in his fore said Epistle to the king of Polonia: and on the other part, Brentius, on the foresaid exaple likewise resolueth this point, for him that is a Minister of the Word, that he in diuerse respects also, may withall hold, as the possession of externall goods, so an externall Lordship or principality: Yet, sith that the most famous Zanchius, hath euen as it were the other day, besides his former confession, on this though not directly on neither of these points, yet added in his appendix. Cap. 25. Aphorif. 21. His obseruations also heereupon: I will onely here set downe that which he saith, whereby we may see howe much more any Lordships, than any of our bishops or arch-
B. haue, are allowable and our Brethren should gladlier yeeld vnto them.

There are two far different questions, (saith Zanchius) whether it bee lawfull for bishops to be princes also, and for Princes to be bishops, retaining their principalities: And whether they which already are both B. & princes, besides their authority Ecclesiasticall, may also haue rightes or lawes politike ouer Cirizens being subiects vnto them: and thereupon whether the subiects ought to obey them as princes, yea, or no. In my Aphorisme, I spake nothing at all of the former question, because it was not necessary: but onely of the later. But who doth not plainly see, that it is made manifest by the testimonies of mee brought forth, that, by wha-

what right and by what wrong they were created princes, they must wholly obeye them. For why shoulde not they that are subiectes to the B. of Mentz, Coleine, and Triers, being princes of the Empire and withal Archb. obey them in things that fight nothing at all with Christian godlinesse? Certesse, it were the part of seditious men, not to obey them. But if they must obey these: why must not they also that liue vnder his gouernement, obeye the bishoppe of Rome, in the same thinges, and for the same cause? For of all these, the reason is the same or all one. Of the former question (as I sayd before) I disputed nothing, nor yet now also, in this my brieve confession, haue I determined to dispute. When as I know, that all are not of one opinion, and many thinges may be spoken on both parts. That place Math. 20. (Ye know that the princes of the Gen tiles or of the nations doe rule ouer them, & the great men exercise power ouer them but ye shall not so) Some interpreting it one way, & of the only apostles and Ministers of the word: others, another way, of all the Disciples of Christ and Christians.

The former question disputable on both partes.

Thus saith the renoumed Zanchius of these matters. And if so worthy and great learned man, and mosse earnest protestant, euen where he forbearerth the disputing of this former question, (which woulde God he had discusse) (but as I say) on the second question, he writte thus, of so Great estates and principalities, being ioyned with the ecclesiasticall ministry, yea, by what right or wrong soeuer they bee ioyned, yet that they must be obeyed, and that they play the parts of sedicious men that obey them not, in thinges not repugnant vnto Godlines: May not we, (that by many degrees cometh nothing neere to such principalities, as Zanchias speaketh of,) iustify the superiority and Lordship of bishops and Archb. among vs, which they hold vnder our most gracious soueraigne, but as Degrees of dignity for order sake, and vsing the same with ready care, painfull diligence, and modest humility, and acknowledging also their greatest dignity, to be their Ecclesiasticall Ministry, and not their external Lordshippe? But for the further confirming thereof: our Brethren haue yet one argument more, from the apostle S. Iohn, saying.

Saint Iohn also in his thirde Epistle sharplye reprooueth Diotrephes, beecause hee was princeps, one that desired the primacy, in the Church.

Pag. 29.
1. Iohn. 9.

This example also of reproouing this ambitious Diotrephes, is well alleaged against the inordinate desire of primacy in the Church, such as Diotrephes had: but is nothing to the question in hande, whether any Primacy in any particuler Churches among the Ministers of the worde, may bee lawfully exercised: yea, or no: if it bee not desired, but imposed on them or desired, in a more lawfull manner then this Diotrephes did. Our Brethren here translate it not very precisely but to their aduantage, tage, one that desired the primacy of the Church: where as the Apostles wordes are quisque suum, one louing the primacy of them. Expressly noting his ambition, that his loue was all set, not on them, but on the primacy of them. If our brethren then conclude that the primacy, if it might not be loued, must needs be vnlawfull: may we not as well conclude thus, There is nothing more wicked then to loue mony. Eccl. 10.

And therefore Mony must needs be vnlawfull? And rather, doth not this proue the more, that there is a lawfulness of the thing, yea, and a lawfull loue of it also, because the fault was neither in the thing it selfe, nor simply in the loue, but in the inordinate or immoderate loue thereof. Whether this Diotrephes were a Minister of the worde of God, or no: that is not apparent. If he were not, it is the further from the Question. But if hee were, as it is not vnlikely, then it argueth, that euen in the apostles times there were Degrees of dignity in the Ministry, whereby some were Superior to the residue of their fellow-brethren in the Church, and some were chiefe also among them. For, Ignoti nulla cupido. If there had bin no such Primacy, there had bene etc. But to be in Loue with these dignities, and so to desire them ambitiously, or to vsurpe them tyrannously, as saint Iohn sayth, that this Diotrephes did (, who would not receyue, no, not
S. Iohn him-selfe that was farre in dignity his Superior, nor would entertaine the Brethren, and forbad other that would receiue them, and cast them out of the Church: this insolency, tyranny, and ambition, con-dēned in him, or in any other like him, is nothing at all against this lawfull superiority or primacy which is allowed among vs, yea, rather, it confirmeth the same. Howbeit, it is a good example (we confesse) for all Prelates of the Church, to take heed of the like vices, in their Ecclesiasticall government.

Nowe, when with all these testimonies and examples, our Brethren haue made this Learned Discourse, against this Superiority of Bishops ouuer their Brethren Pastors: least it might be thought, they had too much abated the bishops authority: they make exception and say.

Howbeit, in this case we must take heede, that we spoyle not the Ministers of the Church of all their lawfull authority.

This is a good caueat, if it had come in time. But although we commonly say, When the steede is stolne shut the stable dore: yet better late then neuer. For if all these things that our brethren haue auouched, were admitted: a great part of it, though not all their lawfull authority should be spoiled. But, if wee must take heede hereunto, it is good yet taking heede in time. For, these reasons haue so forestalled, a number of our brethren, that it is more than high time, it were taken heede vnto.

And yet, if we would take good heede indeede, and not bee caried away with the wyes and glorious pretences of Zeale and Reformation, so farre, that we take no heede to discern betwene the matter of Religion, & the forme of Discipline: betwene things commanded and commended: be-twene

twen ius & factum, the fact done, and the right of the thing to be done: authority. betwene Rules and examples: betwene things expresse & things inferred: betwene the vse of things and the abuse of them: if we wold take heede to the auncient recordes of vninspected Chronicles, to the graue testimonies of the auncient holy fathers, to the continuall (euen from the apostles times) and vniuersall practise of all the whole and all the parts of the Church of Christ, vntill our owne age: and if now (after the general cor-ruptions of the papists,) we woulde take heede to the sounde and mature, iudgement and consent of the best Learned godliest and most reuerende, renounned Protestants: & most of al, if we wold take heed to the testimonies and examples cited out of Gods most holy word, & not shuffle them ouer, & losely apply them: if we wold (I say) take moze diligent heede to all these things: we should neither spoyle the Ministers of the Church of all, or of any their lawfull authoritie, nor entangle our selues with these vnnecessary troubles and diuisions that we make. But our brethzen thogh thus late, howbeit now at length, willing vs in this case, to take heed, that wee spoyle not the Ministers of the Church, of all their lawfull authority, as though they were content we shold take no great heed thogh they were spoiled of some of their lawfull authority: doe adde this reason.

For although these testimonies of scripture, directly condemn the authority of one pastor aboue another: yet neither do they set euery pastor at libertie by himselfe, to do what they list without controlmēt: nor yet do take away the lawful authority he hath ouer his flock: but that impe-rious and pompeous dominion, which is meet for ciuil magistrates, and great potentates to exercise in worldly affayes: otherwise (in respect of their lawful authority) they are called by the apostle in his epistle to the Hebr. Guides, such as are appointed to ouersee the flocks, & vnto them submission & obedience is commaunded, in the same chap. verse. 11.

Whether these testimonies of scripture, that haue bin alleaged, directly condemne the authority one pastor aboue another, yea, or no: I refer it to the better taking heede of al these testimonies, & on that which hath on either side bin saide thereon. Direct condemnation shold haue bin vttered in some expresse words. But as yet, there hath passed no such direct sentence, nor direct implication of any condemnation thereof at al, but rather the clean contrary. But our brethzen presupposing this condemnation, & yet again doubting the obiection of another no lesse inconuenience, thā the spoyle of all the lawful authority, thinking to pzeuent this also, do say.

Yet neither do they set euery pastor at liberty by himselfe to do what they list, without controlment.

How far off (must we imagine) wold they be set, frō such a liberty, euery pastor by himselfe to do what they list without controlmēt: when as no one among thē hath any authority ouer another, but euery one of thē is equal, & in al respects fellow & fellow like vnto another, haue fellow well met, without any one among them any whit superior ouer them? are they not then the nearer, to do euen what they list? at least, may they not doe so, for any one among them that can let them? who although hee doe controule them, hath hee any authority to controul them? And, except they haue the greater grace of God, so to stay themselves, that (as it is said, 1. Tim. 1. There is no lawe giuen to the righteous:) they neede no lawe nor gouernour ouer them.

But if the apostles (as we haue heard Caluines confessiō) were not with out one of their company to be a superior among them: may we not wel think, that other pastors haue as much and farre more neede, to haue one pastor also among them to be their superior? Yea, and it were but as Beza saith in his confession, cap. 5. De eccl. vpon this article, 29. That there ought to bee some order appointed in the college of the Pastors.

Although (saith he) the authority of the pastors among themselves be equall, as it is one function, Notwithstanding it is necessary, that al companies should be gouerned in some certain order. Therefore wee see, that at Hierusalem in the college of the Apostles, Peter went before the residue. Howbeit, it comes not to passe heereupon, which some strue for, to wit, that the apostleship of Peter, is to be distinguished from the office of his colleagues, as though he had bin a prince ouer the apostles, or as the head of the church. For he wēt before his colleagues, only, for because of order, and that in the common assemblie, so often as need required. And that it was so, it is manifest of that, that being before the Church reprehēded, by those that were of the circumcision: he yeelds a reason of his legacy that he had trauelled in: and is at Antioch openly by Paul reproued. Neither shall any, no, not the lightest testimony in all that whole history be found, out of which this primacy may be gathered. But on the contrary, the whole order of the history conuinceth, that the vocation of the Apostles was euen, and the function equall.

Here Beza maketh among the Apostles, & all Pastors, both an equality & an inequality. In respect of the function & apostleship or pastorship, al are euen & equal. Peters apostleship is not distinguished or different from the apostleship of the residue, as thogh he were their prince or head: this Primacy or any the lightest testimony thereof is not to be found. Yea, in this respect, he suffers himselfe to be reproued, both of his equals and inferiors. But in respect of order they are again vnequall, & the same Peter so much superior, that he goeth before the al. And hereupon he setteth down for all pastors a generall rule: that although in respect of the function or office of the pastorship, al pastors be euen & equal: yet in respect of their company, & of some certain order, it is necessary that they shold all of them bee gouerned, and so some one or few among them, must of very necessity be their superiours. But let Beza procede.

There-

Therefore we acknowledge that it is necessarie, that there should be some one among the Breth. which should assemble together the college: which should shew the of the busineses, which should send his colleges to gather the voices, to conclude, which should when need shalbe, write & speak in the colleges name. Such an one was he in the ancient church, ^{Priestes in the primi-tive church} who Iustine calleth episcopus, that is, the bishop: they cal him now in some places the deane of the companie, which hath a yearely office, to wit, where the Chuches are distributed into companies: otherwhere, they call him a Super-intendent, to auoyde I suppose, the enuie of the Episcopall tyranny. But we are not ignorant, howe many things were ordeyned by the auncientes, concerning the seates of Bishops, of Metropolitanes, and of Patriarks, and that of the best zeale, and that with the limites of ech one determined, and hauing a certaine authority attributed to them. Yet neuerthelesse, because that horrible tyrannie which ^{Superintendent.} springing from these beginnings (as Hierome rightly iudged, and is manifest by all the whole hystorie of those times) did vndoo or leese the vniuersall Church, and almost that alone hindreth at this day the renewing thereof: we rest our selues in the order and custome of the Apostles, whom it appeareth sufficiently to haue chosen by their common consent, in the procuring of their busineses, them that they iudged to be ^{Metropoli-tane.} most fitte, according as necessitie did require, and euen in such sorte, that the power of those men should be temporarie, (or continuing but for a time) and should be defined or bounded, and that the Churches among themselves should yelde reuerence one to another of dutie, but not of a certaine royall Empire, to wit, when as they sought this onely thing, that they might mutually one helpe an other, in the encreasing of the glorie of God. So farre is it off, that it should be lawefull for anie man, to attempt aught of his owne will, or that any should saye, that he ought to be iudged of no man although hee drewe all men hedlong into hell, as that Romane Antichrist not onely sayd, but also left it written, that a perpetuall monument of the Romaine Apostacie might remaine. And that these things were thus practised of the Apostles, may to euery man be manifest out of the hystorie of Matthias, and the Deacons election, & also out of that, that Simon & Iohn are sent of the residue of the Apostles vnto Samaria, and Barnabas, Iudas, and Silas vnto Antioche: yea, and that out of all the Synode holden at Hierusalem, and out of those things which in many places are written of Paule.

If there were no more graunted, but this that here Beza yeldeth vnto: it were inough sufficiently and directly, to condemne the assertion of our Brethren, denying the authoritie of one Pastor aboue another. For here is some authoritie plainly graunted, yea, and thought necessarie, of one aboue another; both among the Apostles and among the Pastors. Howbeit, Howbeit, (by the way, and once againe) I maruell no lesse than before I did, at this so reuerend & godly learned Father M. Beza, that he would not only (as before) affirme, that from these beginnings of the order among the auncients as well for Bishops as Metropolitans & Patriarks, that horrible tyranny, which he after speaketh of, did spring: but that he appealeth also to the whole hystorie of those tymes. Whereas, he is not ignorant, (as he saith he is not) or if he be, he and all the world may most easily knowe, by marking better the hystories of those times, that those orders (as he also confesseth them to haue bene ordeined even of the best zeale, and that also they were bounden with limites, and with a certaine authoritie attributed vnto the, and so were not vniuersal, nor of anie absolute and indefinite authoritie) were the very stoppe and abiding of that horrible tyrannie. Which tyrannie could neuer take place, so long as those auncient orders continued inuiolate. And therefore, this is a manifest iniurie to those orders, were they good, or were they bad: to say, that that horrible tyranny sprang of those beginnings, by which it was repressed & kept backe: as may appeare both in Cyprians times, and by that counsell of Aphrike, wherein S. Augustine himselfe was present.

And as for that which Beza citeth hereunto of Hierome on Titus: is the thing that here I most doe woonder at, that suche an excellent man, so constantly aoucheth this auncient Father, even to the cleane contrarie, both of that he euidently meaneth, & most plainly speaketh. Doth Ierome say or meane, that that horrible tyranny sprang of the auncient Fathers constitutions of Bishops, Metropolitans, and Patriarks? Saith he not rather that the auncient Fathers constitutions of Bishops (of whom only he there speaketh) were made to stop scismes & diuisions in the Church? And if they stopped factions & scismes then: are they become almost the only stop or hindrance of renewing the Church now? Surely, then some other thing doth stop the right course of the: which stop being take away, & they restozed to their first institution, ordeined by the best zeale of the auncients, with their olde certaine authoritie attributed vnto them, and their boundes limited as they were before that stop came: what letteth, but that as they were ordeined of the best zeale, so they may be renewed and continue with the best effect? And what is the greatest stop of them, but euen that horrible tyranny of that Romane Antichrist here mentioned? What brake these bounds, and vsurped a cleane contrary authoritie, that is to say, vnbounded, absolute & vniuersall. And thinking it was lawfull for him, to do what he list without controlement, vaunted, & he must be iudged of none, although he drewe all to hell hedlong. Remove this stop, & expel this horrible tyranny of that Romane Antichrist, or if there be any other tyranny or abuses pceded that remaine, remove them: and then may these ordinances of the auncients remaine well inough. ther will they become any stoppe or hindraunce to the renewing of the Church, but be one of the greatest furtherances therunto.

And if the Church of Geneva will not admitte all those orders of the auncientes, for Bishops, Metropolitans and Patriarkes: we also admitte not that Patriarke of the West, because hee is become that Antichrist, and deuourer of all his fellowes by that horrible tyrannie, but allowe onely Bishoppes and Metropolitans or Arch-bishoppes, as of moze auncient time, before that horrible tyrannie did beginne. As for the name of Bishops, wee finde it expressely in the Scriptures, and therefore we auoide it not, for any Episcopall tyrannie, or rather tyrannie not Episcopall, wherewith the name hath bene abused. So moze than we should auoyde the names of Doctors, Elders, Gouvernors, Deacons, which our Bretheren vse: though, none of them all, but haue bene abused; or of Kinges, Princes, Lordes, Masters, Fathers; or of Gospell, Church, Sacramentes, Praying, Preaching, Fasting, Excommunicating, &c. All which names, and a number moe, haue bene no lesse Hypocritically, at least, shamefully abused: yea, the name of Iesus, of Christe, and of God: that for the abuses of a name, other wise good and lawefull, wee should cleane leaue all vse thereof, and deuise for Bishop, a newe or an vnusuall name of Superattendent. Let newe lawes and offices haue newe names a Gods name, but let olde names being renewed to their olde state, stande as before they stood. And since both the matter of the name Metropolitane, and also the name it selfe is founde (as wee haue already seene) to haue bene extant without any tyrannie or abuse: yea, the matter and name of Bishops from the very Apostles times: we neede neuer change the names, nor be ashamed of the, nor feare by reason of the, the stoppage of renewing the Churches state. Nay, we haue felt, if we would, as we shold, dutifull acknowledge it, that the renewing of the Church hath ben with vs (God be prayesd) mightily furthered by them. And although that worthy City & Church of Geneva, haue founde that the Bishop there being a Papist, & an open enemy of the Gospell, deuoted to Antichrist, hath bin a stop & hindrance to the renewing of the Church among them, insomuch that God hath there renewed his Church wout him (to God also be prayes for it): yet what hindreth this, but that, if their B. had reformed himself to y rule of the Gospell, he might haue kept his Bishopricke welinough? And the Church of Geneva and all the Ministers and Pastors therein, not onely might, but ought to haue acknowledged him, to bee their Bishop and Superiour, even by Caluines owne prescription to other Churches, where the Bishops would receaue the Gospell, as is already declared. And so shold Caluine himselfe and Beza also, (and I beleue would, if they would haue bene Pastors there) haue acknowledged the Bishop of Geneva their Superiour.

The orders that we acknowledge are no hindrance, but furtherance to the churches reformation.

Olde offices renewed to haue their old names.

But

We enuie not the state of Geneva nor they ought to prescribe to vs.

But God disposing it other wise, by the default and tyranny of the Bishop: if they no^t acknowledge themselves, to rest in any order and custome of the Apostles, and can so doe, it is well doone (and againe God be pray^ded for it) wee enuie not them, no^r disturbe their rest in the same order and custome of the Apostles whosoever: neither can they, no^r do therein prescribe to vs.

The Apostles orders.

And yet, if it were the order and custome of the Apostles, that they rest in, we haue plainely and at large saide, that the order and custome of the Apostles, both among themselves and in other Churches, permitted Bishops and the Superioritie of the same: and that not so temporarie, as, standing for an only present assemblie, which perhaps might not hold out an hower or two: no^r, for a day, a weeke, a moneth, or a yeare: but as standers and continuers in the same. Yea, Zuinglius, that saith a Bishop and a Priest or Elder were once all one: yet, in his booke de Ratione & officio Concionandi, or Ecclesiastes, The Preacher, he saith: Againe Act. 3 1.

Zuinglius de officio concionandi.

Luke writeth thus: The next day wee that were with Paule came to Casarea, and entring into the house of Philip the Euangelist, which was one of the seuen, we abode with him. This man had foure daughters, Virgines prophesying. In which place, first we haue to note that thing, that this Philip of the Church of Casarea the Euangelist, was a Bishop or a Pastor. Neither is he of Luke called an Apostle. Howbeit, he was one of the seuen, which were ordeyned Deacons, as the same partie shewed before cap. 6. That thing also withall ought to be noted, that they layde downe the name of the Apostles, so soone as being fixed to any one Church, they had the continuall cure thereof, that is to wit, when as either being hindred by age, or else afflicted with diseases, with the troubles of peregrinations, and with dangers, they were not able to suffice any longer. For then were they not any longer named Apostles, but Bishops. But we may bring forth S. Iames (whom for his age, we call Iames the lesse) an example, or rather a witnesse of this thing. For Hierome, and withall all the auncient Fathers, doe name this man Bishop of Ierusalem, for no other cause, than that hee had placed his seate, fixed in that Citie. For when as before (as also the other Apostles, being giuen to peregrinations) he had taught the faith ech where all ouer the countreyes: hee was at the length by the Apostles themselves, ordeyned to be the partie, that as a certaine diligent watchman, shoulde take vpon him the cure of the Church of Ierusalem. The same thing we may say of Iohn the Euangelist and Disciple of Christ. For when as he (hauing beene cast forth to diuerse dangers) had long time administred the function Apostolicall: at length being made the Bishop of the Ephesians, he departed out of this life in that Citie, in the 68. yeare after the ascension of the Lorde.

The Apostles when they settled themselves became Bishops.

S. Iohn B. of Ephesus after Tim.

Nowe then, some of the Apostles being on this wise Bishops in suche places, places, and so, as our Brethren call them Pastors: shall wee thinke, that the other Pastors in those Citie did not stil acknowledge a Superiour dignitie vnto them, and that for a longer time, than for the occasion of some present action or assemblie? Yea, haue all the Pastors alike euen, and as full authoritie equal in Geneva, it selfe, as that most excellent instrument of God Master Caluine, or the most worthy Master Beza, yet liuing: Andeade I can not precisely tell; but I thinke not so, nor it seemeth so, and in my simple opinion (be it spoken with due honour reserved to euery godly and Learned minister there, be they neuer so equall and all one, in respect of the same function and Ministerie) it were not meete it shoulde so bee. Or if it be so, yet, were it not so good, no not for them: as if that (I speake of Beza in Geneva) or some other excellent man were appointed, to haue a continuing and standing moderate office, ouer all the residue of his fellowe brethren there in the ministerie, to ouer-see and gouerne them, assigned vnto him, and to exercise the same with painefull care, readie diligence, and modest humilitie, so long as he is able to discharge the same. And so indeede, it shoulde drawe nearer to the order and custome of the Apostles. And yet, if their order and custome had admitted such a temporarie superior among them, as had serued only the tournes but of temporarie occasions: yet, thereby also for that time and occasion, one Pastor had had the authoritie ouer another: yea, ouer all the other in the companie. And how then do our Brethren here affirme, that these testimonies of scripture directly condemne the authoritie of one Pastor aboue another?

As for the testimonies that Beza alleageth, euen of the very first of them concerning the election of Matthias, Act. 1. Caluine vpon these wordes, ver. 16. The scripture must haue bene fulfilled, sayth: Because Peter maketh the speeche; the Papistes make him the head of the whole Church. As though none may speake in the assembly of the godly, but forth-with he must be made a Pope. We graunt indeede, that as it is necessarie some one in euery assembly, must holde the Primacie or be the chiefe: so the Apostles yeilded this honour vnto Peter. But what is this to a Popedome? So that here, though that horrible tyrannie of the Pope be not inferred, which the Papistes on euery inkling greedily gather: yet, Caluine not onely confesseth plainly, both in Peter a certaine honour of Primacie yeilded vnto him: but also confesseth it necessarie for euery assembly of the faithfull to haue such a Primate. The like he sayth of the other example, Act. 6. Of the sending of Simon and Iohn vnto Samaria. How Peter Concerning that Luke (sayth he) declareth, that Peter was sent of the residue: hereupon it may be gathered, that he exercised not an Empire ouer his Colleagues, but did so excele among them, that notwithstanding, he was vnder the bodie and obeyed it. So that, his authoritie excelled any and euery one of his fellowes in particular: but in respect of the whole bodie and corporation of them, he was not so much as fellow but inferior. As for the last testimonie cited here by Beza Act. 15. what Caluine hath sayd already thereon, euen for the standing Bishoprike of Iames at Ierusalem, and how therein he excelled the residue of the Apostles: we haue at large heard before.

Now where our Brethren adde, that yet they take not away the lawfull authoritie he hath ouer his flocke: but that Imperious and Pompeous dominion, which is meete for ciuile Magistrates, and great Potentates to exercise in worldly affaires: euen as Beza said, it was not of any kingly Empire or royall commandement, and yet, was it a reuerence giuen of dutie: and as Caluine saide, it was not a Papacie nor Empire ouer his Colleagues, and yet, he did excell among them, and held a Primacie ouer them, and the other yeelded an honour to him: so, these our Brethrens sayings may be well allowed. And I thinke, no Bishoppe or Arch-bishop in Englande doth desire any other, then such limited authoritie of their office, as may well agree with these moderations, and rather stande with humilitie, modestie, and diligent oversight of good order: than to aspire to any such royall Empire, or to exercise anie Imperious and Pompeous Dominion. And saue for the name sake of Lorde, that for a litle more reuerence (God wotte) they are honoured with all: (if I should not rather say, for some others, a great deale more enuied for that they haue not;) our Bishops haue bene metely well shynen for such matters.

The learned disc. This Pompeous & Imperious dominion being thus created: otherwise (say our Brethren) in respect of their lawfull authoritie, they are called by the Apostle in his Epistle to the Hebrewes, Guides, such as are appointed to ouersee the flocke with authoritie, and vnto them submission and obedience is commaunded in the same chapter, ver. 17.

Pag. 29. & 30. Bridges. If this name ηγούμενος, (used in that Chap. by S. Paule) which not only signifieth a guide, but a Captaine going before all the residue with government & principalitie, may enclude a lawfull authoritie & comandement of submission and obedience, without Imperious and Pompeous dominion: our Brelates (I hope) wil desire no more, nor so much neither in all lawfull respects, as may in this worde ηγούμενος be well conteyned. But if here in the word flocke, wherof the B. is guide, they include not the whole congregation, and so with all, the inferior Ministers and Pastors in the same, as well as the other people: then is not this alleaged to the purpose, whether any one Pastor may haue Superior authoritie ouer another, and be ηγούμενος of the residue, and then it is but a flocke here to alleage it. But, if it be vnderstood of the whole particular Church: then indeed it is alleaged to the present purpose: but it proueth, that (the Imperious & Pompeous ous dominion excepted) one may haue authoritie ouer another.

Other names are applied to them in the Scripture, but they bee for the most part more generall, pertayning to all kinde of teachers in the Church of God, both in the time of the lawe & of the Gospell, as Seers, Prophets, watchmen, Angels, Laborers, Builders, Stewards, & such like: all which with many other, serue to expresse some part of their office, as their knowledge, their diligence, their authority, their faithfulness, their discretio: also the necessitie of the, the comoditie that cometh by them.

Concerning these Titles, as not in controuersie, I passe them ouer.

The argument of the 6. Booke.

THE 6. Booke is of the Pastors or Bishops office. For the limiting of him to one only congregation. Whether the Pastor may haue Curates or Substitutes vnder him to supply his absence. Whether all ministers are to be vtterly expelled, be they neuer so Learned or diligent, if they haue not the gift of preaching, and can not confute the gaine-sayers. Of ministers that are altogether vnskilfull, and of their remoouing. Whether all be eternally condemned, that do not by hearing of preaching become faithfull. Of the lacke of preaching, & of the impossibility to furnish euery congregation with preachers. Of the hindrances hereof, & the indenuors to helpe it, & of our Brethrens preposterous means. Of the state of the French Churches for abundance of Preachers. Of pluralities & non residencies. Of reading a prescribed forme of prayers, Psalmes, and chapters. Of the students discouragement for the ill bestowing of liuings. Of the want of lyuings able to maintaine Learned Preachers. Of spoiling the ministers maintenance, vnder pretence of better providing for the, & of these spoilers & mockers of God & mā. Of their mainenance in the french churches without such helps as we haue. Of the Prophets setences applied to our vnskilful Pastors & reading ministers. Of the vse of godly learned homilies, & whether they may be effectua l in the hearers. Of the Pastors duty. What Ministers our Br. impugne & we defend.

Of our Ministers exercises. Of three remedies that our Brethren set downe, to helpe the necessities for lacke of liuinges: of restoring the Sacrilege of Abbies, of diuiding superfluities of some places, and of a 3. namelesse and generall remedie. Of the remedies to supply the want of Learned men: by eneoragers, by ouerseers in the vniuersities, by tourning out droanes and vnprofitable heads of colleges, by placing newe gouernors, by erecting new Doctores in as many places as may be, by compulsion, and by prayer. Of the corruption of our state. Of our Brethrens dispensation, till all these things can be brought to passe. Of our Brethrens hope to effect all these things, and in howe short time, and of their incouragement hereunto. Of their commending her Maiesties most honorable & glorious raigne. ¶ 31.

BUT concerning the names of Pastors, as they are a speciall office in the Church, this may suffice. But for as much as we haue vnderaken so to describe a Pastor and his office, as all other offices of the Church may be described therewith: we must not stay onely in the name, but set forth also the whole substance of the person. For which intent it shall be necessarie for vs to consider a Pastor or Bishop two wayes, in the proper function of his ministerie, and in gouernement with his Elders: by which we shall vnderstand how this ministerie ought to be reformed and restored among vs. As touching his office, something hath beene sayde before generally, vnder the description of his seuerall names. But now more particularly we must examine what belongeth to his charge.

Bridges.

Our Brethren presupposing they haue in this their Learned Disc. sufficiently proued, that the names of Pastor & Bishop must alwaies be taken synonymically, as diuerse words signifying but one thing: and that there may be no such dignitie accessorie to the office, as whereby one Pastor or Bishop may haue authoritie ouer another: doe now proceed to their platfome of prescribing lawes, concerning these Pastors and Bishops office, and the reformation that they would propose vnto them. Whereof I marueile not a little, at our Brethrens ouer boldnesse in these things, (and crauing pardon of my terme, least I also be thought ouerbold with them, and I would gladly vse a mylder terme for their sakes, if the matter could permitte it) that they dare take vpon them to sette downe lawes and orders, of refovrming and restoring these offices of the ministerie (imagining they stande nowe deformed, yea, lost) they being as I take them to be (for they are namelesse) but priuate persons: except they alleage that they be ministers: but, whether authozised or exauthozated, yea, or no, I knowe not. If they be, exauthozate, then are they still as more priuate, being depriued of the publike personage & action that they had, if they be not, then do they contrarie to the state of their owne calling, exercising the office of that ministerie, which their selues professe to be deformed and lost. And how soeuer the title of their Learned Discourse pretendes in the front, onely a brieft and plaine declaration, concerning the desires of all those faithfull Ministers, which doe seeke for the Discipline and reformation of the Church of Englande: where is pretended nothing but a declaring of the desires that they seeke: yet, in the seeking, they desire it in such a peremptorie fashion, that we finde their desires to be a plaine charge and prescription, which is both aboue any authoritie that they haue so to doe: and, were the matters that they would haue reformed and restored better than they be, yet, this maner that they vse is nought, and a dangerous president. If they pretende the example of the Prophets and Apostles: did they cast forth their writings in this manner? And yet should our Brethren offer a manifest iniurie, to those holy extraordinarie examples. Except they could either proue themselves to be such Prophetes and Apostles, as they were: or to vrgue no other thinges, than they commaunded to be perpetually kept, and so being deformed or loste, to be reformed or restored. Other wise, me thinks this dealing (considering their persons, and the matters and their manner of them) is plus satis pro imperio, euen while they speake against imperious dealing, and may better be called a prescript commaundement of their discipline & reformation, then a Learned discourse vpon it. But to come to these rules,

The Pastor must be limited to one only congregation of such competent number, as he (if he be but one.) or if they be two, may be sufficient to the instruction of all and euery member of the same Church. And first he may no more lawefully haue charge of two or 3. Churches, then he can be possibly in diuerse places. No more then a shepheard of who he taketh his name, may haue the leading of sundrie flockes in diuerse places; neither may he be absent fro his charge, with better reason then a shephearde from his flocke. As for substitutes or hyrelinges, will not bee allowed in this case: for Pastors are substitutes of God, and haue an office of credite committed vnto them, therefore by no good reason may they make any substitutes in their place, or comit their charge vnto another. The law of man grounded vpo good reason, alloweth not substitutes of substituts: nor committing ouer of an office of credite in temporall matters. How shall God almighty then take it in good part, when the flocke of Christ which he hath purchased with his own blood, shalbe so greatly neglected, to the endangering of their euerlasting saluation? Therefore the ordinance of God is, that the Pastor should attende vnto his peculier flock. That Elders should bee ordeyned in euery City Towne or other places. Titus. 1. 5. and Actes 14. 23. Our Breth, rule and the duty thereof.

The contrary examples in Tim and Titus whom they cofesse
to be pastors

Our Brethren here setting downe their principles, for the Bishops and the Pastors office, which they make all one, (vnderhand thereby to ouerthrowe the most of all the liuings and iurisdictions of the Bishops) first set downe this rule, The Pastor must be limited to one onely congregation. I would faine knowe (especially, vnderstanding the name of Pastors, as all one with Bishops) where this rule is made such a necessarie and perpetuall principle, in all the scripture? We finde the manifest contrarie, both in Timothie and in Titus, who were Bishoppes, as we haue proued: and so, by Caluines and others plaine confessions, and by our Brethrens owne consequence, they were Pastors. But moe congregations than one onely were committed to their charges: how therefore is this a true principle, that a Pastor must be limited to one onely congregation? If our Brethren, to auoyde the force of this argument, thinke to escape, in saying, that here they meane not such Proestotes, and higher Pastors which had superiour authoritie ouer other Pastors, as Timothie and Titus had: doe they not here then confesse withal the principall point in question, and that which is with might and maine stood most vpon, that no pastor hath superiour authority ouer an other, but all are equall? Graunt this, that they being Pastors, had a superior authoritie & charge, ouer moe congregations at once then one only: and then this rule of our Brethren, heere (being vnderstood of Pastors hauing lesse charge and authoritie, being not Bishops, Proestotes or other Prelats of higher calling) may more easily be graunted, to haue but one only congregation limited to them.

If our Brethren saye, that charge ouer moe congregations was not committed to Timothie and Titus, in respect of their pastورشip: although that shift be already sufficiently preuented: yet, what helpes it here to vphold this rule? Sith Titus was Bishop of all Creta, where many congregations gations were, that had severall Pastors. And Bishop (they say) & pastor are all one: or, were they not all one, were he as a B. or as they say an Evangelist or what they will; yet still withall he was a pastor (as Caluine confesseth) of all those severall congregations. And this being graunted, at least proved, for these pastors that haue any other superiour authoritie annexed to their pastorship, that they be not subiect to this rule: then followeth it not of any necessity on this broken rule, that al other pastors are simply so tied thereto, that they must alwaies be limited to one only congregation. For, as it is here of our Brethren said, that two may be admitted to one congregation, according to the competency of the number: so, if the number be lesse, why may not 2. small congregations, being nearer together, be limited likewise to one pastor, in want of such sufficient & learned pastors, as our Brethren afterwarde crie upon, & complaine of the rarenes of them? Or, if 2. Pastors be limited to one, or to moe congregations, as occasion and necessitie may require: why may they not be one ouer & vnder another, according to the more or lesse worthines of the pastors? So that betwene them both, or moe, or fewer, sufficient instruction & ouersight of al & euery number of the same Church be provided for. And if our Brethren may haue authoritie (without authority) to vnite 2. or 3. lesser and nearer congregations into one, which they also appoint to be done, for the greater confluence of the people, & the better maintenance of the Pastor: comes it not in effect all to one reckoning: and hath not one still moe congregations than one? although all are made but one congregation, being thus vnited: but that now his congregations are more distant a number, which he had rather (if he could conveniently, both for his peoples profit, and his owne ease) were nearer combined or vnited. Albeit, as we see some conueniences, that might make such vnions in the smaller congregations to be wished; so, as many and as great inconueniences on the other side, both in the countrey Villages, that might more often and with more daunger be left all desolate; and euen in the nearer & more frequent congregations in Townes and Cities) make these vnions againe to be so feared, especially in contagious times, that it were better one learned pastor had 2. or 3. congregations, with his ministers to ouer-see them vnder him severally, then two or three congregations to bee vnited into one, and haue one, or two, or three pastors ioyntly & equally, (but in one place and assembly) for to guide them.

But to leaue the scanning of these things, to those that haue better experience and more skil, than I professe, or our Brethren seeme to haue, for all their Learned discourse hereon, and to those that haue more authoritie than we both: from this let vs come to an other principle, that our Brethren as a correlative set downe hereupon, who to confirm that they haue sayde, do further say.

As our Brethren would haue 2. Pastors ouer one greater congregation, so may one Pastor be ouer two lesser.

Our Brethren vniting of moe congregations into one, is all one in effect with hauing moe severall, if that moe severall be not better.

of Pastors.
Our Breth.
second rule.
The Pastors
being in di-uerse places.

And first, he may no more lawfully haue charge of 2. or 3. Churches then he can possibly be in diuerse places.

And is not this possible for him well inough, to bee in diuerse places? Therefore, for any thing here alleaged to the contrary, he might haue 2. or 3. Churches, possible and lawefully well inough. If they saye, it is not possible, to be in diuerse places alwayes, and together at once, that is another matter. And sooth indeed it is plaine impossible.

A Pastors absence on diuerse occasions being supplied by another.

But is this required, with such absolute necessitie, in euery Pastor? may not sicknesse, prisonment, banishment, sute of lawe, attendance on the Princes commaundement, repaire to prouinciall, nationall, or oecumenicall Synodes, and a number of such like occasions, make a Pastor be in other places, other whiles, than where he is Pastor? And yet, be Pastor there still in vertue of his office, though not in action of his person, while he is thus absent. If our Brethren say, this absence is not ordinarie, but rather his spirite and heart is present with them, for all the inuoluntarie detention of his bodie: what doth that helpe the matter? Since we plainly see hereby, that he may on so many-solbe occasions (remaining notwithstanding a true and faithfull Pastor) be both possibly and lawefully in other places? Whether are anie permitted to be at anie time absent ordinarie, except vpon lawfull and expedient considerations, and necessarie prouisions of supplie. If our Brethren reply, that euen because there may fall out such extraordinarie occasions of the Pastors absence, they would therefore rather of the twaine, that there shoulde bee moe Pastors in one place, than to haue but one Pastor in moe places, because the one in such cases may supplie the others absence: although we must not so muche alwayes attende what we would haue, as what wee may haue, and what euerie congregati- on may sustaine: yet, is not this againe in effect all one, as when the Pastor findeth at his charges, and is so bounde by lawe to doe, (if vpon anie consideration hee him-selke be licensed to be absent) his lawe- full and sufficient Substitute, to the instruction of all and euerie mem- ber of the same Church, in the time of his absence? And is not this the nearer way, to bring two Pastors also to one congregation, yea, euen in those that are the lesser congregations?

And yet, were there two or moe Pastor in euerie congregation: if eeh Pastors continuall presence, must be still, with all & euery member of the same Church: what one Pastor can there be, that shall alwaies bee still present with euery one, but be absent from some, while he is present with other: yea if as S. Paul calleth diuers families, diuers churches, Rom. 16. 5. 1. Cor. 16. 19. Colloss. 4. 15. and Philem. ver. 21. If he goe but as S. Paule saide he did at Ephesus Act. 20. ver. 20. from one house to an other: how might not this be spokē against any that shold do y like: y he may no more law-

lawfullie haue charge of two or three Churches, that is, two or three families, than he can be possible in diuerse places? But if he may be possible well enough in diuerse places, though not at once but at diuerse times: then as the diuerse places bee nearer or easier to bee looked vnto: so the charge of two or three Churches, as to the state (hauing authoritie to provide therefore) shal be thought conuenient, may lawfullie enough be of him sustained. But to increase this vnlawfulnessse and impossibilitie further, they adde this similitude.

No more than a shepheard of whom he taketh his name, may haue the leading of sundrie flocks in diuerse places: neither may hee be absent from his charge, with better reason than a shepheard from his flock.

Our brethrens similitude of a shepheard. Gen. 30.

Although this similitude be too preciselie here by our brethren vged in this point: yet to ioyne with them therein, while maye not also the verie shepherds of the brute beasts, haue the leading of sundrie flocks in diuerse places? Had not Iacob, so, both of Labans flockes of sheepe, and of his owne which flockes went not alwaies together. And how much easier may he be a ringleader or chiefe maister-shepheard, hauing other inferior shepherds vnder him, to leade the diuerse flockes, whereof he hath taken charge vpon him, and though al haue charge also and be shepherds of the same function that he is: yet, as he may haue a greter skill, so he may haue a greater dignitie, both ouer diuerse flockes of sheepe, & ouer the diuerse & perticular shepherds of the. Yea, is for the absence of the shepheard, was not Dauid appointed by his father to keepe his sheepe? And yet he was both called from the to be anointed of Samuel: & he remayned shepheard still, even after he was made Sauls Esquire: as it is saide, 1. Sam. 17. 15. Dauid went and returned from Saule, that he might feede his Fathers flocke in Beth-lehem. And when he was there, his father sent him with victuals, & gifts to his Brethren, & to their Captaine in the armie. And saith the text. verse 20. So Dauid rose vp early in the morning, and left the sheepe with a keeper. Montanus translates it, Et reliquit pecus super custodientem. Saith Vatablus, Iuxta custodem. 1. commendauit gregem custodi. As is the vulgar, he commended the sheepe to a keeper. The 72. καὶ ἀφῆκε τὴν ποιμαίναν φύλακν. Tremelius saith, deserto grege penes custodem. So that, Dauid heere being his Fathers shepherde, did appoint a substitute shepheard in his absence. And though his Brethren vpbayded him (as our Brethren here doe vs) and sayde, verse, 28. Why comest thou downe hether? With whom hast thou left those fewe sheepe in the wilderness? &c. Yet Dauid iustly defendes him selfe, and saide: What haue I nowe done? Is there not a cause? So that hauing a cause, he iustifies his absence, and atchined therby a worke no lesse necessarie, and farre more beneficiall to Gods Church, while his substitute attended in his sheepe.

A shepherds absence supplied. 1. Sam. 17.

Dauid defends his absence against his brethrens accusations.

But (say our Brethren) As for substitutes or hyrelinges, will not be allowed allowed in this case: for Pastors are substitutes of God, and haue an office of credite committed vnto the. Therefore by no good reason may they make any substitutes in their place, or commit their charge vnto another.

Princes called Pastors.

This reason not onely toucheth Eccl. Pastors, but euill Princes, that are called Substitutes of God, and Pastors also of their people, not onely of Homer, but in the scripture. 3. Reg. 22. Micheas prophesying of Achabs death though a wicked king: saith, I sawe all Israel scattered on the mountaines as sheepe that had no Pastor. And Esa. 44. 28. the Lord himselfe sayth to Cyrus, Thou art my Pastor and he shall performe all my desire. And the Prophet in the Psalme. 78. ver. 70. &c. He chose David also his seruant and tooke him from the sheepe foldes, euen from behinde the ewes with young brought he him to feede his people in Iacob, and his inheritance in Israel. So hee fedde them according to the simplicitie of his heart, and guided them by the discretion of his handes.

Howe our brethrens rules reach vnto and ouerthrowe Princes estates.

Princes being political Pastors may haue substitutes.

Princes then being Pastors, our Brethren say, Pastors are Substitutes of God, and haue an office of credite committed vnto them. Shall we therfore thus conclude here, with our Brethrens consequence? Therefore, by no good reason may they make any substitutes in their place, or committe their charge vnto another? Mought not Dauid substitute his deputies both in the teritories he conquered fro other Princes out of the bounds of Israel, and make Substitutes & Lieutenants of his owne Cities & Castles? Mought not Iosaphat make Zebadiah a ruler of the house of Iudah for all the kings affaires? 2. Chron. 19. v. 11. mought not Pharao make Ioseph his substitute ouer all Egypt? mought not Ahasuerus make Mardochus his Substitute? And Darius, Daniel? And Artaxerxes, Nehemias? both the holy Ghost improue this order of substitutio vnder the Emperoꝝ. Luke 3. v. 1. Now in the fift yeare of the reigne of Tiberius Caesar, Pontius Pilate being Governour of Iudea, and Herode tetrarch of Galilee, and his brother Philip, tetrarch of Iturea, and of the countrie of Trachonitis, and Lysanias the Tetrarch of Abilene? Did Christ denie Pilates authoritie to be lawfull, because hee was the debittie or substitute of Tiberius? or S. Paule not acknowledge Felix and Festus substitutes of Nero, and gouernours of those parties in his absence? And is not this also the doctrine of S. Peter, 1. Pet. 2. ver. 13. & 14. Submit your selues vnto all manner ordinance of man for the Lordes sake, whether it be vnto the king, as vnto the superiour: or vnto Gouernours as vnto them that are sent of him?

And are not al these againe both the kings substitutes, and the kings the selues the substitutes of God, as Iosaphat said vnto his Judges, (that he set through out the lande in euery Citie, 2. Chron. 19. 6. Take heede what ye do, for ye execute not the iudgements of man, but of the Lord? And S. Paul speaking of the Magistrate, Rom. 13. ver. 1. 4. & 5. saith: There is no power but of God, &c. He is the minister of God, &c. they are Gods ministers &c. and vnto his ministers nisters, but as substitutes? may they therefore make no substitutes vnder them, nor comit their charge vnto another? This doctrine of our B^{re}th. is very dangerous, & toucheth not only Eccl. Pastors, & Bish. & all appropriations to the Prince, or to whō soeuer: but also toucheth so nere, or rather cutteth cleane off, all Princes holding of diuerse realmes, dominions, & signiories, by what right of conquest, gift, inheritance, or any other neuer so good title, they enioy the same. Yea, and all nobles, or any other priuate persons, offices and linings; that as they are all of them, what soeuer they haue, and who soeuer they be, but substitutes of God, and haue offices of credite comitted vnto them: So if they haue any moe offices or linings than one, and in one place: they must cleane forsake them & giue thē all vp. And why? forsooth, because they are but substitutes of God, and can not make any substitute in their place. Now although this doctrine be so dangerous & absurde, notwithstanding, our B^{re}th^{en} to confirme it do proceed.

The law of man grounded vpon good reason, alloweth not substitutes of substitutes, nor comitting ouer of an office of credite in tēporall matters. How shall God almightie then take it in good part, whē the flock of Christ, which he hath purchased with his own blood, shalbe so greatly neglected, to the endangering of their euerlasting saluation. The learned disc. Pag. 32.

With I professe not the study of the law of man, I referre the discussing of the same, to the learned professors of it. But it being grounded (as our B^{re}th. say) vpon good reason, and but the law of man, & speaking but of the substitutes of man, it seemes no good reason, it should ouer-rule those, that by the law of God, are the substitutes of God, of whō our B^{re}th be fore spake. And although I gladly yelde vnto this rule of the law of man, being grounded vpon good reason: yet in my simple reason, it should seeme not to be so absolute a lawe, & so generall a rule, but that it may, both by the law of man it selfe, grounded vpon as good reason as it, & by the lawe of God, wherunto all the groundes of good reason giue place, admit many exceptions that controll it. For, although in the Courte of Delegates it might haue some place, & yet in some cases delegates (y^e are but substitutes of the Prince) do substitute delegates and other substitutes as commissi-ners vnder them, to search out matters and circumstances, and to call befoze them and examine such persons & factes, as they their selues being absent, can not inquire vpon. But what toucheth this the Prince him selfe that maketh these delegates, and yet himself is but a delegate vnder God? This rule of the law of man, Nemo potest glady potestatem sibi datam, vel cuiuslibet alterius coercionis, ad aliū transferre: No man can passe ouer to another the power of the sword, that is, the autozitie of putting to death, or of any other punishmēt: was an ancient rule among the Romanes, tending the libertie & life of man: and yet al kings, & Princes, to whō God hath giuen the power of the sword, though their selues be but the substitutes of God, they they make other their substitutes in this power: and thereby the iudges even as substitutes of substitutes, do punish offenders, and (if Justice so require) even by death. Yea, and their substitutes also under them, doe execute the sentence of those substitutes. And hath not also the law of man such an expresse exception: Vicarius Vicarium constituere non potest, sicut nec delegatus delegatum, nisi datus esset à principe? He that is a Vicar or a Deputie of another, cannot appoint another Vicar or Deputie, as neither can a Delegate appoint another Delegate, except he be given of the Prince. So that, by the Prince he may. And therefore, it is also saide in the Lawe of man, quando committitur, aliquid alicui subdelegato, cum auctoritate subdelegandi, tunc potest subdelegare, alias non. When an other thing is committed to any vnder Deligate or substitute, with an authority of substituting an other vnder him: the may he substitute such a substitute, or else not.

And this againe, is a cōmon rule of the law of man, & grounded also vpon good reason: Potest quis per aliū, q̄ potest facere per seipsum. That which a man can do by himselfe, the same he can doe by an other in his name. True it is, in some cases, & good reason to, he that is a substitute, without the will of him that did substitute him, especially where the Substituter or giuer of an office of credite, doth so restraine the substitute or receauer of the office, that he only must do it by himselfe there this our brethrens rule doth hold. Yea, so saith the Canon Law of the Pope: Quando Papa delegat causam: Dicendo, precipimus vel mandamus per vos, &c. Tunc non potest subdelegare. Similiter quando alicui magnum ministerium committitur, in quo industria persona eligitur, vel ut negotium personaliter exequatur, nisi de consensu parium. And yet, in offices of credite committed to anye, in temporall matters, his owne personall execution is in certaine cases forborne also, and (except in rigour of lawe,) is in good reason, dispensed with: as in sicknesse, imprisonment, or the Princes service, or such necessary and lawefull detentions of his person, a lawull substitute may by good lawe and reason, or by the Lordes accepting, and by the consentes of the parties, be allowed and serue as well and better nowe and then the tourne, than if the principall substitute were himselfe present. And with all if his absence, (by reason of his presence in some other place) may doe more good: then the lawe helpes him with another gentle rule, of that famous Lawyer Vlpian: Absentiam eius qui Reip: causa abest, neque ei, neque alij damnoſa esse debet. The absence of him that is absent for the cause of the common-weale, ought neither to be preiudiciall to himselfe, nor to another.

Now, if these favourable mitigations wil not serue (as I being no lawyer wil not gladly contende for them): Let vs then come to the inference of our Bzethrens argument, that they gather vpon this law of man.

Now

How shall God then take it in good part (say our Brethren) when the flocke of Christe, which he hath purchased with his own blood, shall bee so greatly neglected, to the endangering of their euerlasting saluation.

We graunt it were a dreadfull thing, neither woulde God take it in good part, that any such negligent substitutes should be allowed. But if this allowance of sufficient substitutes in the foresaid cases, be not done to the neglecting of the flocke of Christe, but to the auoiding thereof and of this danger: then (we hope) God taketh it not in ill part. So that, this must first be better proued, that al the ordeyning of substitutes, specially of such sufficient substitutes, as are in all respects, as forsooth Pastors, as the other pastors are that substitute them, is to neglect the flocke: or els, both for the antecedent and for the consequent, this is (God wot) a very slender argument. Their resolution hereon, and their proofes annexed are these.

Therefore the ordinance of God is, that the Pastor should attende vnto his peculier flocke. That Elders should bee ordeyned in euery city Towne or other places. Titus. 1. 5. and Actes 14. 23. The Apostles ordeyned Elders in euery church, of Derbe, Lystra, Iconium, and Tichia, and all the congregations about.

*The learned disc.
Pag. 32.*

Although this citing of the text, Act. 14. 23. be a very grosse error, yet passing that ouer: this conclusion is moze tollerable then the premisses, & I yeeld thereto. But that this attendance shoulde be with such a personal continuance, that it may admit no supply of substitute: is not as yet proued nor (I thinke) will be, by these places, but rather the cleane contrary. For although in either of them, mention is made of ordeyninge Presbiteres or pastorall elders in euery church, Town or City: yet whether there were moze than one in euery place, or that one might substitute another in his absence, there is made no expresse mention: onely, if we may measure the one place by the other. (as I see not why we may not, and our Brethren ioin them both alike) then in none of those churches the Pastor was so tied to his continuall abode, but that on good occasion he might be absent, hauing another sufficient substitute to supply the place. For, as Caluine sayth, vpon the Preface of the epistle to Titus, That because (no doubt) he was of some contemned, as though he had beene, but as Anye one of the common sort of pastors: and it may be also, that complaintes flew about on him, tooke vpon him more than was meet, that he receiued not pastors except allowed his iudgement &c. Paule putteth vpon him his owne person as well in creating Ministers, as in the whole administration of the Church. And in the Epistle to Titus 1. 5. the place heere quoted: For Paule testifieth that hee assigned his owne turnes vnto him, wherefore it is meete that hee shoulde bee of all acknowledged, as the Vicar (which is all one with substitute) of the Apostle, and recurrently receiued.

ceyued: so that besides the prooffe of his superiourity, beinge these pastor there, were he Euangelist, (as Caluine saith) or whatsoener hee were besides: as hee called also Paul him selfe, not onely the pastor of that Isle, but the Apostle of the Gentiles: so it appeareth also hereby, that substitutes were allowable even of the Apostles, for all they were them selues Gods immediate substitutes, in which respect soener we consider them, eyther as pastors, Euangelistes or Apostles. And Caluine draweth this to a generall rule, saying: Moreover it is a notable point, to note the modesty of Paule, which gladly doth suffer that to bee made vp of another, which hee himselfe begun. And that when as in dede, Titus was farre inferiour vnto him, hee refuseth not to haue him, ~~as a successor~~ the corrector, that should lay the last hande to his worke. Thus ought the godlye Doctors to bee affected, that euery man drawe not all ambitionlye to himselfe, but earnestly helpe the one the other: and that with howe much greater successe eche one shall haue laboured, the residue should e rather reioyce with him then enuie him. Neither onely doth Caluine thus applie to all pastors, this example of Pauls substitution of Titus: but likewise Bullinger, vpon saint Pauls wordes, in the ende of his Epistle to Titus, Chapter 3. vers. 12. When I shall sende Artemas or Tichicus vnto thee, doe thy diligence to come vnto me to Nicopolis, for I haue determined to winter there. Hee calleth (saith Bullinger) Titus vnto him to Epirus. Howbeit there is also another Nicopolis in Thracia, another in Cilicia and pontus. But hee woulde not haue him goe from Creta, before that he had substituted eyther Tichicus or Artemas, to wit, that the people of Creta, which of late beleueed, shoulde not bee destitute of the care of a faythfull Bishoppe. For it is a great wickednesse to spoyle the Churches of their pastors, except yee shall substitute other more faithfull, ~~not meaning that Titus was lesse faithfull than Tichicus or Artemas, but that they being his substitutes, did faythfully supply Titus absence.~~ Thus doe wee see in this one example, not only the absence of the Bishop or Pastor vpon conuenient occasion to bee allowed of the apostle: but also the allowance of a faithful substitute, in the absence of the Bishop and pastor.

Ro. 12. 7. 8.

Secondly, the office of pastors is, not onely to teache the same trueth in their seuerall Flockes, but also to applye it to the time and persons, of whome they haue charge, with exhortation and reprehension: with consolation of the afflicted, and threatning of the obstinate. &c.

This in fewe wordes is set forth by saint Paule speaking of the diuerse giftes of God in his Church, hee sayth: whether it bee hee that teacheth in his doctrine, or hee that exhorteth, in his exhortation. The Doctor therefore teacheth without exhortation. The pastor teacheth and and exhorteth withall. More at large, hee setteth foorth the same office in his exhortation vnto the pastors of Ephesus, willing them to followe his example, who supplied that office, vntill they were able to succede in his place. Also very breesely, and yet fully, hee describeth the same vnto Timothy, shewing first that all his foundation must bee out of the scriptures, which were sufficient for all partes of his charge, and then mooste earnestly commaundeth him to practise the same withall diligence, his wordes are these. Al scripture is inspired of God, and profitable for Doctrine, for exhortation, for reformation, and for enlustration, which is in righteousness, that the man of GOD may be prepared to al good workes: therefore I charge thee before God, and before the Lorde Iesus Christe, which shal iudge the quicke and the deade at his appearing, and in his kingdome, preach the worde, bee instant in season and out of season, improoue, rebuke, exhort withal long suffering and doctrine. 1. Tim. 3. 16.

Nothing of all this is in controuersie, vnderstanding teaching according to the measure of euery pastors gift: saue this sentence, that the Doctour teacheth without exhortation: which wee haue before at large confuted. Bridges.

The first part therefore, and the cheefest of a pastors office or duetye is to feede with wholesome Doctrine the flocke that is committed to his charge and therefore saint Paule describing what manner of men are meete for that charge vnto Timothy requireth that a Bishoppe or Pastor bee apt or able able to teache: For if a man haue neuer so much knowledge, and bee not apt or able to teache, hee ought by no meanes to be admitted vnto this vocation. And vnto Titus writing, Chapter 1. the firste verse 9. he requireth that hee bee suche a one, as holdeth faste the faythfull woorde accordinge to doctrine, that hee also may bee able to exhorte with wholesome doctrine, and improoue them that saye againste it. Weereupon it followeth necessarily, that whosoever is him selfe ignorant in the knowledge of Gods woorde, & therefore vnable eyther to exhorte with wholesome doctrine, or to confute them that gaine-say it, is altogether vnmeet for the office of a pastor or Bishop. The learned disc. Pag. 34.

Albeit, we might here inqurye, how it was said before, First, he maye no more lawfully haue charge of 2. or three Chnrches, &c. and then Secondly, the office of pastors is not onely to teach, &c. And nowe to conclude vpon this second saying: The first part therefore, and the cheefest of a pastors office, is to feede with wholesome doctrine: notwithstanding not to stande on such reckonings (though we wish they had reckoned more orderly, for our Brethrens sake, professing ouer the head of euery page, A Learned Disc. as also for the vlearneds better perceauing their learned course Bridges.

spirit, to another the gift of healing in the same spirit, to another faculties of powers, to another propheties, to another discerning of spirits, to another the kinds of tongues, to another the interpretation of tongues: and all these things worketh euen the selfe same spirit, distributing to e-uerie man severallie euen as he will. and ver. 28. &c. And God hath ordained some in the Church, as first Apostles, secondlie Prophets, thirdlie teachers, then them that do myracles, after that the giftes of healing, helpers, gouernors, diuersities of tongues. Are all Apostles, are all Prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of myracles? haue all the giftes of healing? doe all speake with tongues? doe all interpret? Neither also forgetting that place, Rom. 12. that our brethren themselves (entering into this matter on the other side of the leafe, put vs in minde of) Seeing then we haue giftes that are diuerse, according to the grace that is giuen vnto vs, whether we haue prophetie, let vs prophesie according to the proportion of faith: or an office, for the office: or he that teacheth in teaching: or he that exhorteth, in exhortation: he that distributeth, with simplicitie: he that ruleth, with diligence: he that sheweth mercie, with cheerefulnesse. All which places duly considered and conferred, that though these offices be not so distinguished, but that one may haue mo of them, as we haue already proued against our brethrens too precise seuering of them before, which now in the Pastor they woulde toyne together, for many of them, and that of necessitie: yet heereby we may plainlie see, there is no such necessitie of the coniunction of these severall giftes in all Pastors, but although some haue them all, some are not so furnished, but that notwithstanding they want some of these giftes, by our brethren here so necessarilie required: yet are they not to bee cleane excluded out of the Ministerie. And how do our brethren here then saie? If a man haue neuer so much knowledge, & be not apt or able to teach (meaning by teaching, not onelie such teaching as they ascribe onelie to Doctors, but also publike preaching, which containeth both teaching and exhortation, as they sayd euē in their last section, the Pastor teacheth and exhorteth with all, except he can teache thus) he ought by no meanes to be admitted in-^{not preachers,} to this vocation. And yet, if he could do this, and were not able to confute them that gainsay the wholesome doctrine, he is altogether vnmeet for the office of a pastor or Bishop. This were very harde to be urged, with such a peremptory necessity. Which if it were: perchance many of these our Learned brethen Discourfers theirselues might fail, especially in this last point, being not able what soeuer they perswade theselues) to defend these their owne desires, and to confute vs their Brethren, (whome they take in hande to confute: not of any vnwholesome Doctrine, which they confesse that wee profess so well as they, and as for those whome they shoulde rather confute in dede, as the papistes, the Anabaptistes, the Arians, the libertines, the brethren of Loue, and such like mainteining not wholesom doctrine, it would not onely appose them, but many other (yea, other wise good preachers) to confute them in such order, as the Apostle there requireth. In the famous Nicene Counsell were assembled many notable learned Bishops and Elders, and yet when it came to disputati-^{A simple man confuting a Philosopher.} on: one simple ancient father, who was no preacher neither, did more good in confuting a sophisticall and wrangling Phylosopher, even by the plaine recitall of the onely Creede: than al the the eloquent and Learned bishops were able to doe. For, as the Arian philosopher sayd: while they strined with words he had wordes ynough for them all. But when vertue came, words, gaue place to vertue. If it be sayde, this fact was not of a Pastor, but of a lay Confessor, as Socrates mentioneth Hist. Tripart. lib. 1. cap. 3. Which notwithstanding in Sozomenus, seemeth another like fact, to bee done by a Priest or Elder, being also a Confessor, to defend & other preests his fellowes, whome another philosopher insulted vpon: yet, even in the next Chapter, Sozomenus mentioneth a Confutation also not much vnlike, betwixt a pagane philosopher, and Alexander Bishop of Constantinople. For when Diogenes the philosopher desired to dispute before the Emperour, with the bishop: and he being vnexpert in such exercise of wordes &c. Notwithstanding tooke vpon him the conflict: by the commandment of the Emperour, When all the philosophers would speak, he required them to appoint out one, whom they would choose and commanded the other to hold their peace, and make what should bee spoken of them twaine. Wherspon one of them vndertaking the dealing of the whole disputation: the blessed Alexander saith vnto the philosophers, in the name of Iesus Christ, I command thee that thou speake not: and as soone as he had sayd the word, the deed was performed: For sodainly so soone as he heard the speech his mouth being closed vp, hec became speechelesse. This bishop was of great vertue, of life, and had the gift (as it appeared) of myracles. He could not dispute and confute: he gainsayer of wholesome doctrine, yet could he stop their mouthes partly well. But not preachers.

if our brethren had bene there, if they durst not speake, for feare their mouthes had bene stopt likewise, yet, they woulde after haue sayde of him that being vnable to confute, he was altogether vnmeet for the office of a Pastor or a byshop. But those that woulde say so of suche a man, were meete ynough to haue their mouthes also if not by myracle, yet by authority to bee stopped, rather than to open them thus at randon, against many good, playn, and simple pastors, who though they haue not the gifte of G D D with any audacitie and grace, of utterance in the pulpit make a plausible sermon to the people: yet in priuate admonition, in sound knowlege, in sincere & constant profession of the trneth, can teach and perswade with their example, and confute moze effectually by their life, (though other wise, in publike action they can doe little without their booke: and yet shall some of these perhaps, do moze good among the people) than some other eloquent and famous Preacher or Disputer, or Confuter shal be able to doe. I graunt these high and moze excellent gifts are to be honored with duple honor, but the other are not so far to be despised, as to be called altogether vnmeet, for the office of a pastor or bishop. Howbeit, (I confesse) if any be altogether ignorant of the knowledge of Gods worde, the same is also altogether vnmeet for the office of a pastor or bishop. Whereupon our brethren set down their resolution, saying:

Wherefore if wee euer minde such a reformation, as God shall thereby be glorified, & his Church edified, we must vterly remoue al the vnlearned pastors, as men by no means to be tollerated to haue any charge ouer the Lordes flocke: and also prouide that heereafter none bee receiued into that office, but such as are sufficient for their knowledge & ability in teaching, to take so waighty a charge in hand.

What a great vnthankfulnesse is this, to say, If euer we minde such a reformation, as God shal thereby be glorified and his church edified? As who shoulde say, it was neuer yet hether to, in all this Reformation of the Church, eyther endeouored, or so much as minded. And is all this that hath bene done, nothing to the glorifying of God, nor to the edifying of his Church: or hath it so fallen out, that both God hath bene glorified thereby, and his Church edified, and yet was neuer minded? with charity to our brethren be it spoken, this their censure is too vncharitable, both of her Maiesties, her Maiesties Brothers, and Fathers mindes, and reformation: with all their godly Councils endeouours, and all their learned bishops and preachers trauels, to these especiall purposes, that God might bee glorified and his Church edified: and too iniurious euen to the Glorie that God hath already gotten, and the edification that the Church, (namely of England) hath enioyed, and other Churches that haue in part felt, no small comfort and edification thereby: Gods name bee moze and moze glorified and prayesd for it.

But

But now we, imagining (if wee may so harden our heartes, and be-numbe our senses, as not to feele nor acknowledge these good blessings of God) that Gods glory and his Churches edification was neuer yet sette foorth among vs, nor so much as minded: what is the thing they woulde haue vs doe?

If euer we minde such a reformation as God shal thereby be glorified and his Church edified: we must vtterly (so) sooth) remoue all the vnlearn-ed pastors, as men by no meanes to bee tollerated to haue any charge ouer the Lords flocke, and also prouide that heereafter none be receiued into that office, but such as are sufficient for their knowledge and ability in teaching, to take so waighty a charge in hand.

Concerning the prouision for heereafter, it is very good counsell. But for those that are in office already (only for that they cannot publicly preach and exhorde and confute, though otherwise they haue neuer so muche knowledge) there is no remedy, but that they must euery one be remoo-ued, and that vtterly remoued, and that by no meanes to be tollerated, no not to haue any charge, though it be not, the pastorall charge; no not to be a Deacon, nor a Reader, nor yet a Dore-keeper ouer the Lords flock: this is a hard censure. Indeepe, nothing so harde, as one of them (with more eager zeale than the moste of the rest) wrote of late in his answers against M. C. for ioyning with the English Churches, saying: Wherefore I woulde say, there were holinesse in the dumbe Ministrye, (for that is their vsuall and mildest tearme they afforde the Ministers that are not publike preachers) if all the dumbe Ministers were hanged vp in the Churches, and publike assemblies, for a warning and terror to the reste, that are ready to enter such a function: then indeede, there were a holy signe and remembraunce of iudgement against such wretches: but other holinesse haue they none in them.

An vnchari-

and bloody sentence.

This iudgement is farre more rigorous and extreame, than this of our Learned brethren Discourfers. Yea, by this bloody sentence, some of our brethren perhaps their-selues, that are more Zealous than learned, or more Learned then able with any gift of perswasion to make any publike exhortation and confutation, might be called into danger, not now of their liuings, but of their liues, and although they would tell a fayre tale, to saue their liues, and would rather preach such slender stuffe God wotte as they had: yet, if they were vnlearned, they must be counted dumb dogs, they must trusse also, the rood would not suffer them to vtter it. So some might this Iudgement be reuerfed on some of their own wel-willers, who spare not to cast sooth such vncharitable and bitter speeches, saying, of the poore Ministers of Christ: we say not but that that our dumbe Ministers may be heard, for if standing on the galowes to bee executed, they say woulde come downe, I knowe we may heare them.

The state of the Minist.
that are not preachers.

Do these speeches saunour of Christian charity? If not, rather of the spirit of those cried Crucifige, Crucifige, and hauing crucified Christ, so these speak of hanging vp his poore Ministers. And as they in scoone had him come downe from the crosse: so these speaking of hearing his Ministers, doe say, they may indeede be heard, when they say they would come downe from the Gallows. Yet, well fare these our Brethren the Learned Discourfers, that are somewhat more pitifull to the poore vnlearned pastors, not to hang them by by the neck, as Theeues and Robbers, Traytors and Rebels, (for so they commonly call them) for a warning and terror: but to turn them out to shake their eares, and beg their Bread, with their wiues and children like wretches, Roagues, and Vagaboundes. Yea, they are saye dealt with that they haue their liues. And this is the mylder sorte of these our Brethren. And untill the poore Ministers that bee not Learned preachers, be at leasse thus gently handled: wee shall neuer minde suche a reformation, as God shall thereby bee glorified, and his Church edified.

Alas poore soules, which heretofore, euen for their zeal of Gods word, (though not al, yet many of them) in time of so great necessity, when the tyranny of Antichriste had wasted and taken away so many Learned pastors, and when the popish massing sacrifices were also remoued: then these good Zealous men, being of some readier skill and ability, than were the most part of the residue in thole dayes, did so, sake their former trades, whereby befoze they honestly liued, which if they had continued might yet thereby haue mainteined themselves: and with hatred and hazard of their liues, (the most part being then aduersaries of the trueth in many places) haue wholly dedicated them selues to the Ministry of Gods worde and Sacramentes: beeing also lawfully, both by the best pastors then of the church of England, yea, & many of them assent, desire, and election of by their brethren Protestants, with testification of their good conuersation: albeit not so Learned nor trayned in schooles, as godly zealous: nor able to preach, to expounde, to exhort, to confute learnedly in publike auditoz, though other wise sufficient to giue godly counsel, admonition, and instruction in all priuate: though in the open Congregation not daring (knowing their owne simplicity) to hazard themselves further then the distinct reading of the scriptures, with such fruitfull Interpretations and Homelies, as by authority are appooned and assigned, with the publike forme of common prayer prescribed, and the reuerent administration of Christs sacramentes: and haue now in the continuall exercise of these thinges, besides their priuate studies about this twenty, yea, some aboue thirtie yeares, spent all their time: and now in their old age, should be vtterly remoued, and by no meanes tollerated to haue any charge ouer the Lordes flock, nor any other prouision so much as spoken of for their maintenance:

nance: though not called in question, whether they would be hangd, or no: not Preachers.
 We thinke, these thinges if they were a little better considered and digested, should it least moze moue the bowels of mercie, yea the remouers of conscience and thankfulness, in our learned brethren, than to deale so extremly with them. It may be, that a number of such withall, are crept into the Ministry, altogether so ignorant, and perhaps so criminous and offensive, who might worthily sustaine so sharpe a iudgement, that it were better they were utterly remooued, than by any meanes to bee tolerated, to haue any charge of the Lords flock. For such I pleade not. But no reason, that their causes of entering into, and continuing in the Ministry, being so different, they should passe al alike so hard a censure. But what reason induceth our brethren hereunto.

Not all to be condemned alike.

What man, hauing but one hundreth sheepe, woulde make such a man a shepheard or Ouerseer ouer them, as were a naturall Idiot, or otherwise altogether vnskillfull or vnable too performe the thinges that belong to a shepheard? if no man haue so little care of brute beasts: what brutish negligence is it, to commit the people of God, redeemed with the precious bloude of Iesus Christe, to suche vnskillfull and vn sufficient Pastors, as neither themselves knowe the waye of saluation, neyther are able to lead other vnto it, whereof they are so cleane ignorant themselves.

The learned Disc.
 Pag. 36.

If our brethren meant only of such persons as they now speake of, it were moze than a brutish negligence in very deed, to commit the people of god, to such vnskillfull and vn sufficient Pastors. But before, they spoke of such, as had neuer so much knowledge: and now they come in with naturall Idiot, with altogether vnskillfull, vnable and vn sufficient Pastors: and such, as neither themselves know the way of saluation, neither are able to leade other vnto it, whereof they are ignoraunt themselves. Is there no difference betwene these & those that are both wise, godly, and learned; and diligent to leade the people of God, bothe by counsell, instruction and example: though they haue not the gifte of open preaching, publike exhorting of the people, and effectual confuting of the gainer. These are those, that we would haue moze fauorably delt withall. As for the other naturall Idiot, and altogether vnskillfull, vnable, and vn sufficient Pastors: we pleade not for any tolleration of the. And we hope there be not many suche hope-losse, that these words should thus in generall, be lauashly cast forth, to the blemish, suspicion and slander of the Ministers. But our brethren yet thinke harder of the matter, & (as it were) euen in pronouncing the sentence of eternall condemnation on many whole Churches in the realme, they say.

the state of manye flockes in this lande , who either seldome or neuer heare the word of God trulie preached, and therefore know not how to beleeuē, that they might be saued.

Bridges.

I meruaile now lesse, if our learned Brethren bee so hard hearted against all those learned or vnlearned, if they bee not preaching pastors, as to thrust them cleane out of all the Ministerie: since that in this their too earnest zeale, they thrust withall so manie flocks in this land, and in many other lands, cleane out both of the state of saluation, & also of the meanes to be saued. For first, loe heere what a number at a clap, by this thunderclap of theirs, are flatlie pronounced to be perpetuallie damned, whom we charitable hope, and verilie beleeuē, to be as safelie saued as our selues. If there bee no waie of saluation but by faith, how well might we then crie out indeede, O Lorde how miserable is the state of all our infants, dying not onelie befoze, but also after Baptisme in their infancie. The Papists as they pronounce that none are saued, but onely such as are baptized: so, for Faith likewise, they holde this opinion, that there is no waie of saluation but by faith, albeit, adding other things thereto, and seeing their infanties not capable of Faith, they affirme that they are saued, not by their owne faith, but by the Churches faith, and by the faith of their Godfathers or Godmothers, (as we call them) that in baptizing undertake and aunswere for them.

Our breth.

How the in-fanties of the faithfull are saued.

Luther and diuerse other following him, perceiuing the grossenesse of this erroze, (vpon which sundrie inconueniences depend) to be saued by the faith, not of himselfe, but of other: affirme that our infants haue they selues the substance of faith, although it be not able in act to shew it selfe: and that (as Saint Paule saith out of Abakuk, ca. 2. The infā lineth by his owne faith, they are likewise saued and iustified by their owne faith.

But Caluine seeing further into this matter, and that this properly and in verie dede is not faith, which requireth both an intellectual knowledge, and an actuall assured persuation and confidence on the truth of Gods promises, and couenant in the mercies and merites of Christ Iesus, which act of the minde infanties haue not; and considering that saluation properlie dependeth not on the act or on the habit of our faith, but on Gods eternal election, and the performance of his promise: and that faith being the gifte of God, is indeede the onelie meanes, and waie of saluation, to those that are capable to vnderstand, & by belæuing the same, applie the promise of Christ his merites, & saluation to themselves; but vnto those that are not yet grown to this capacitie their naturall defect or rather vnripenesse, maketh not the promise of God frustrate, nor defeateth the election, that was befoze the children were bozne, yea, ere the foundations of the worlde were laide, purposed in Gods eternal decree, & this foundation is sure, God knowes who are are his: Caluine therfore willeth vs, not to applie these sentences of Christ saluation (that recommend faith vnto vs) vnto the infants: but vnto those that are growne to capacitie by the gift of God in them, to vnderstande and apprehend the same. And for the infants of vs which are faithfull, and so included in the covenant betwixt GOD and his people, admitting our infants to receiue the Sacrament of regeneration, because though they bee not capable of knowledge and faith, yet are they capable of the thing signified, and of the fauour of God the Father, & of the grace of Christ the sonne, & of the inspiration of the holie Ghost; yea, although they die before they receiue the outward signe, yet, not to presume to iudge them cleane debarred and bereft of these inward graces, but to relie vpon the promise of the covenant, that he will not onelie be our God, and so our sauour, that haue faith in him: but the God and sauour of our seede also, although yet they haue not faith in him, and that we and our seede shall be his people. Neither onelie in an outward sanctification, whereby as the roote, so the branches are holie: but by the inward sanctification, and by saluation, so farre as accordeth with his eternall election in Christ Iesu.

So then, except this which our Brethren here saie, If there be no waie of saluation but by faith, be restrained to such onelie as are both of yeres, and of discretion also to vnderstand (at the least in some measure) & by faith, to applie the word of God vnto them: we should finde a manifest error, and too hard a iudgement contained in this sentence, that there is no waie of saluation but by faith. Secondly, here followeth vpon this, an assumption farre more hard and peremptorie, concerning the word of God, than this former proposition, concerning faith in him. And none (say our Bre.) can beleue but such as heare the word of God preached. And the ordinarie meanes to faith, is the word of God, which in the meane while debarreth not anie extraordinarie meanes, for God frelie to instill his spirit, and to giue his gift of faith by inspiration, as Caluine saith on the 14. verse, Rom. 10. vpon these words: How shall they beleue in him on whom they haue not heard? and how shall they heare without a preacher? Hee placed here no other word than that which is preached; because this is the ordinarie meanes, that the Lord hath ordained, of dispensing the same. If anie doo further contend thereon, that God cannot instill into men, the knowledge of him by other meanes, than by the instrument of preaching: we denie that is was the Apostles minde, who onelie looked on the ordinarie dispensation of GOD, but woulde not prescribe a lawe vnto his grace.

So that, againe we see, that this saying of our Brethren here, is prejudiciall, not onely vnto mens faith, but vnto Gods grace, thus flatlie to affirm, that none can beleue but such as heare the word of God preached. But all this for faith and preaching, our brethren thinks to warrant out of Beza in his Confession cap. 4. Artic. 35. where he saith: thirdly sith that without faith, entrance to Christ & life eternall is open to none: and the preaching of the word, is the ordinary instrument of the holy Ghost, to engender faith in vs: it followeth, that the preaching of the word, and the same effectual, is to be required in all of ripe yeeres, to this purpose, that they may be saued: except, whē it hath pleased God extraordinarily to worke in their harts. If our bʒethʒen had kepte themselves within the modest compasse of these boundes, as Beza doth, for faith in them of ripe yeeres, and with preaching as an ordinary instrument of God, and gone no further: this had bene allowable.

But now, what meane our bʒethʒen hēre by preaching? can no pʒiuate, noʒ publike reading of the woorde of God; with neuer so diligent marking and conferring of the same, and with reading also and conferring the sounde, learned, plaine, and godly expositions, interpretations, Sermons and commentaries of the woorde of God: noʒ no reading of sincere common places, gathered out of Gods woorde: noʒ no pʒiuate conference with godly and learned men, upon doubtēs and scruples, noʒ in catechizing, oʒ exercise of Doctors, which our bʒethʒen say pag. 17. must teach onely true doctrine, and confute all hʒeresies, and false opinions by the word of God, concerning all articles and principles of Christian religion, without applying their teaching to any particuler state of time, of persons, or of places: and must not exhorte, as preachers must: who still intermix exhortation, reprehension, consolation, and application with their doctrine: and can none come to beleue by none of al these meanes, noʒ by them altogether, except preaching bee continuallye adioyned to them? oʒ do our bʒethʒen understand preaching also in all these meanes: for they are both ordinary meanes in their kindes, so well as preaching, and very effectuall meanes, whereby oftentimes, and namely in wante of preaching, God worketh mightily in the instilling, and the encreasing of knowledge and Faith in his elected.

Now upon these two erroneous (by their leane be it spoken, for a bʒother may erre, but not persist therein) and too austere pʒemisses, our bʒethʒen make their sharpe conclusion, with a still and miserable exclamation, crying out:

O Lord how miserable is the state of many flocks in this land, who either seeldome or neuer heare the word of God truly preached.

Howe seeldome perhaps, then were to be wished: but neuer to heare the word of God preached, oʒ to heare it falsly preached, and not truely when it is preached, I hope there are not many flocks in this lande, oʒ rather, but very fewe, if any at all: yea, I beleue, no not one, but that hath heard the word of God, although the seeldomer, yet trulye and plainlye preached among them.

But what is meant here by these wordes truly preached they spake before of the word of God preached: and now they come in with truly preached. Wellike, if it be not preached in such manner & forme, or with the avouching of such poyntes as these, that our brethren desire and contend for, and vse most to preach upon; it is not truly preached. And in that sense, they may peradventure say some what more truly, that in many flocks of this lande, it is seeldome or neuer heard. Although (I am afrayed) it be in too many flocks in this lande, on that fashion, by some of our brethren, both too often, and also too vntruely preached. Whiche maketh indeede a miserable state in many flocks of this land, & hath bredde and still breedeth a moste miserable, lamentable, and horrible schisme in manye flocks of this lande, and more miserable is like to breede, if suche preaching should not be restrayned.

Preaching truly.

But what a foule slander is this (& that for such to make, as in the preaching of the Gospel, professe to be our brethren) not only for the ministry of this lande, but also for the flocks and people of the same: that they seeldome or neuer haue the word of God truly preached, and therefore know not how to beleue, that they mighte bee saued. As though they were all infidels, Turkes, Saracens, or some wylde sauage people: or at the leaste, worse then the Papistes, of all whome. I dare not hazard so far as to say, that they, neither beleue in God, nor know how to beleue, & not onely stand as damned creatures, but as those that are destitute of all meanes, whereby they might be saued. This is too heauie censure of our brethren. But now that they haue thus passed their sentence, leaste wee should appeale from it as vniuste, vnmmercifull & vnttrue, or but aunswere any thing against it: they preuent that which they imagine, we will aunswere thereunto, and replie before hande to our imagined aunswere saying.

The church and realme of Englande fowly slandered.

But heere it will be aunswere, that as it is a thing greatly to be desired; so is it altogether impossible, to provide the church of so manie learned Pastors, as should take charge of euery seuerall congregation.

The learned Dis. Pag. 37. Bridges.

And haue wee no other aunswere to make vnto our brethren but this? what a strange foading of themselves is this, and condemning of others, to imagine also, that we must aunswere this and that, euen as they conceaine in their fancies, and would haue vs frame our answeres to their objections and surmises? Hath any of vs, or haue I aunswere thus (except by way of debating) to any of their like accusations aforesaid? And yet, I hope, I haue aunswere truly and sufficiently, for any thing yet alleaged by our Learned Brethren, what shew soeuer it carry of learning, when it is not aunswere. Albeit our brethren haue bene by other (if aunswere would serue) thoroughly aunswere. Nayther should they now by me haue bene at all aunswere, saue vpon vrgent promocation thereunto. As it is a thing greatly to be desired: so is it altogether impossible, to provide the Church of so many learned Pastors, as shoulde take charge of euery seuerall congregation.

With they will needes haue this to be our aunswere: let it stande in gods name so; our aunswere, so it be mollified in these wordes, altogether impossible: which is as much to say, as absolutely impossible. And who can say so, with, nothing is impossible vnto God: who can make the stones to crie, and of them make children vnto Abraham: and with that which is impossible to man, is possible to God, &c. But according to the state of things either as they are, or as they may conveniently be holpen, one thing considered with an other: might we not well answere, this aunswere, that vnto man it is vnpossible, specially vnderstanding impossibility, (as it is oftentimes vnderstood, for such a difficulty, to bring to passe, as wee could not well, see how it should be done, without as great, or greater dangers to ensue.

But heereto we reply, (say our brethren) that it is a thing necessarily required at our handes, by God almighty, and therefore we must object no impossibility, especially when our owne negligence is the cause of all the difficulty, or if you wil so call it, impossibility.

Albeit, we might not amisse enquire of our brethren, what they mean by these Learned Pastors: and with what necessity God requireth that all Pastors should be such learned Pastors, : notwithstanding, for any thing here replied on our supposed aunswere, are there not some things that are necessarily required at our handes by God Almighty, that we must needes confesse, are euen altogether and absolutely on our parts impossible? as the perfecte obedience of Gods lawe. And yet, especiallye our negligence, in our firste parents fall, and our owne sinnes in vs, are the cause of our not difficulty, but mere impossibility to do those things, that Almighty God necessarily requireth at our handes. Except wee shoulde say with the Papists, that we can fulfil Gods law, or else in them, accuse God of iniustice, if he should require at our handes an impossibility. And that therfore, we must object no impossibility, for we replye, it is a thing necessarily required at our hands by God almighty. If our brethren say that therein God helpeth vs another way: so may he do here also, though the Minister be not all thing so learned a Pastor, as God necessarily requireth at his handes that he should be

Wee confesse (say our brethren) it wil be harde at firste, but we muste do our endeuour, and commit the successe vnto God, and there is no doubt, but in time it will grow to an happy end.

This confelsion is very true, it will be hard at the first. And wee assent, that we must do our endeuour, so far forth as we conveniently may but but not to the iniury, & much lesse to the vndoing, of any neuer so simple & poore a Minister, if he be vertuous & diligent to his power in his function; and so commit the successe vnto God. To whome, if our brethren would indeede commit it, they would omit these vnnecessary contentions, nor so urge their desires of reforming discipline,, nor publish these deuises & platfoymes of Ecclesiasticall gouernement, entituling them solemnely, Learned discourses, prescribing more than is lawfull for priuate men to doe, at leastwise, they would neuer so far proceed in them, with such vn-brotherlike inuectiues against the publike Magistrates and Ministers learned and vnlearned: but desire those thinges that they thinke are amisse, and would wish reformed, in a more Christian.charitable, and good subiectlike manner, than they doe: & the there is no doubt, but that whatsoeuer were indeede to be reformed, though it be hard at the first, yet by this softnesse, in time it would at last grow to an happy end. For, as the Pro-uerbe is, A good beginning maketh a good ending, But such a prepos-terous and violent beginning,, continuing and encreasing, as hether to our brethren haue vsed for these matters, and do vse, not only breedeth a pre-sent disturbance and continuall schisme: but also boadeth a doubtful suspi-tion (without gods mercifull help) of a tragicall and vnhappy ending.

But when (say they) we shalbe altogether carelesse, as wee haue beene long time: and that is worse, not acknowledging any default in this be-halfe, (as there be that do not,) and that is most of all, mainrayning such lettes and hinderances, as be continuall nurseries of ignorance and ig-norant Pastors: we may be ashamed to alleage that difficulty, for which none are to be blamed, but we our selues.

To be carelesse in so carefull matters, is a great default. But we must take heed on the other side, of too much curiositie and of rashnesse, both in thrusting our selues (beyond our calling) into actions of pretended refor-mation: and also take heed, whome thus at randome and in these gene-rall speeches, we accuse to haue bene so long time carelesse. For, as this carefulnesse principally pertayneth to those, that by authoritye are called to the charge and care thereof: so her Maiestie, with her honorable coun-sell, and the godly learned Prelates, haue not onely had great care in this behalfe: but with carefull franayles, haue muche endeouored, that these troubles might bee happilye ended. But euermore hether to unhappily, these our Brethrens intempestiue sturres, haue bredde such lettes and hinderances hereunto: that they are now further off, and call moe and higher pointes in question: than they did about Caps and Surpleses at the beginning.

And these contentions, being more earnestly trauer sed between the lear-ned, haue geuen aduantage to embolden the common aduersarye of vs both: and withall haue occasioned the moe vnlearned in the Ministrye, to bee lesse taken heede vnto, than other wise moze easly they mought haue beene.

Which neuerthelesse we complaine not vpon, as Adam did on Eue, to poste all the fault vnto our b:eth:en, & not acknowledge any default here-in among our selues: but noting the same, (with dueitfull submission to their authorit y) we wish that some euen of our Bishops, had bene so carefull in this long time, that they had not admitted some, though prettilye learned, yet too head-strong and newfangled Ministers, that since they haue entred into the Ministry, forgetting the calling of them, by whome they were called, (if they haue any calling in the Ministry) forgetting the othe of their Canonically obedience to their Bishops, and of their loyall obedience to their prince, haue, and do make, all, or the most parte of all these sturres. But their carelesnesse in admitting suche, hath beene since meetlie well punished, by these their disobedient and vnthankfull children. And some also they haue admitted into this function, too vnclearned, (wee confesse,) and vntwothy Ministers and so are not altogether cleare of maintayning the continuall nurseries of ignoraunce and ignorant Pastors: Yet neither haue they beene maintayned, but greatly rebuked, for their so carelesse doings: and therupon lawes and p:ouisions haue bene made, and stande in force, to repressse such vnclearned Ministers, and the makers of them. And though we acknowledge, that we may be well ashamed (and so y, in respecte of the defaultes of some) to alleage that difficultye for the which we our selues are to be blamed: yet, sith our b:eth:en also do here confesse with vs the difficultye, that it will bee hard at the firste, and are themselues also in no smal part a cause thereof, and of greater letts and hinderaunces to a happy ende, of these vntimely b:atwles and troubles: Let them take part of this blame and shame with vs, and either of vs, so some, & as much as we may, carefully endeouour to amend it.

from the disturbance of our sovraine enemies, haue at home continuallye not ceased to disturbe this rest and peace, with these contentions and diuisions: and defaming the cheefest preachers, in this realme, haue therebye not a little hindred the free preaching of the Gospell? and how again, may they yet bee moze ashamed, that being not content to liue in this rest and peace of our Church, nor with the free preaching of the gospel, although they themselues acknowledge it, yet they exclaime (contrary to that their selues doe here acknowledge) that they haue no rest, nor peace, nor the free preaching of the gospel, but cal the state of our church, a deformed state and deface it with far worse contumelies: & so both disturbe the preaching, of the gospel, (which other wise, their selues confesse, is preached freelic,) and grieue her Maiestye: Pea, some of them in their Pamphlets also, bzeake forth into verie disloyall speeches, which I now so beare to name, but all of them, disobey her Maiest. lawes, and yet here confesse her to be a most gracious Queene, & that they enioy al these excellent benefits vnder her Maiesties protection. Surely, if we were so vnfurnished of learned Pastors, as they exclaime, which notwithstanding is nothing so much, (God be prayed for it) as they to make it seeme more obvious, The gospel freely preached. tend it is: so (if we be so vnfurnished of learned Pastors, howe is the gospel freely preached?) and yet we wish, we were still better & better furnished than we be, and our Prelates put to their helping handes, as they may thereto: yet, if we were worse furnished then we are, (considering these benefits,) it might be some what better borne withall: than that the lack of the greater learning in some of our Pastors, should be thus vnpayed to the whole state.

But now, if there be any thing to be holpen herein: is this a reason, to alter the Ecclesiasticall gouernement, and to punish the Learned pastors, and all the Bishops, bicause of some vnlearned Pastors among them And admit, that diligence hath not beene vsed of all partes, that mighte and should haue bene employed of all them that vnfaignedlye seeke the kingdome of God, and his righteousness.

Must all these partes that seeke vnfaignedlye the kingdome of God, and his righteousness, though not with imploying that diligence therein, that they should haue done, be therefore deposed of al their authority? yea, and that there must be no such authority at all, but all Pastors in authority must be aqual? Is this the readiest waye to make more Learned Pastors, or not rather to make fewer than there be: if not, to make them all the more vnlearned? and is this our learned brethrens vnfaigned seeking the kingdome of God & his righteousness?

And we haue yet, to thanke God for this, that although that diligence had not bene vsed of all partes, that might and should haue bene employed of all them that seeke the kingdome of God, and his righteousness,

yet sith it is graunted and cannot be denied, that they seeke the kingdome of God and his righteousness: though not with that diligence, that they might and shoulde haue done: This lack of diligence is farre better, at least wise, lesse euil in all those parts, than is the double diligence of these our brethren, that employ themselves and seeke by all meanes, to deface the learned Pastors (which God be praised are not a few) by the remainder of the vnlearneder sorte, and would cleane ouerthrow, not onely them that be diligent or negligent in authoritie, but the authority it selfe, vnder complaint of lack of diligence in all partes that haue the authoritie. And this diligence indeede of our brethren, hath bene such an hinderaunce to a great many, that might and would haue proued learned Pastors, that they haue cleane diuerted their studies, & professions from the Ministry, on this offence; or else, in halfe, yea in a quarter of all this time, this necessity might haue bene well supplied. But our Brethren, to turne vs from the consideration of these hinderaunces, doe devise vs another way, and say:

If wee seeke experience, what diligent and carefull prouision is able to do with the blessing of God: looke to our neihhbours and brethren in Christ, of Fraunce, who although they neuer enioyed one day of such peace, as we haue done so many yeares: yet howe plentifullye are they furnished with all kindes of Ecclesiasticall Ministers, and namelye with godly and learned Pastors, it would reioise any Christian hart to behold in them, and lament to see the lack in vs.

Yet once againe, we must seeke experience from our neighbours and brethren in Christe of Fraunce: when as these our brethren their selues confesse, that at home, for the free preaching of the Gospell, wee are and haue bene all the raigne of our most gracious Queene, in farre happier case than they: and confesse withall, that herein they neuer enioyed, no, not one day of such peace, as we haue done so many yeeres. And yet cannot our brethren be thankfull, for all this; except we also, be as plentifully furnished with all kinde of Ecclesiasticall Ministers, and namelye, with godly and Learned Pastors, as they be. What they meane by their plentifull furniture of all kind of Ecclesiasticall Ministers, they do not tell vs, and therefore it maketh the lesse matter. As for these specified, namelye godly & learned Pastors: albeit we were not so wel furnished as they for our parts: though our harts reioyce to behold this plentifull furniture in them; yet is there no cause, that either they, or wee shoulde lament this want in vs. Notwithstanding, what wanteth, we both acknowledge and lament; and with and endeouour to supply: that our and their ioy might be full both in them and vs. It is much hindred in Fraunce; by the open hostility of the publike aduersaries of the Gospell; and with vs, by our brethrens vnnecessary molestations, which are both lamentable to any true Christian of godly and learned Pastors among vs.

Christian heart to thinke on, and do much hinder the plentifull furniture Churches.

And although (to make the comparison more obious against the state of our Ecclesiasticall Ministers) our Brethren set a better face vpon the matter, for our neighbours and brethren in Christe of France: how plentifully they are furnished with all kinde of Ministers: and namelye, with godly & Learned Pastors, that it would reioyse any Christian hart, to beholde it in them: though the hearing of it, is a ioyfull hearing, to euery Christian hart: yet I doubt mee, we may rather wish it were so, than that in very deede, there is such great furniture of learned Pastors, as is here pretended. And that also we should quickly behold in them, if they might haue (were it the good will of God) as God be prayesd for it, we haue and enioye, such peace and rest with free preaching of the Gospell, vnder the protection also of their Kinges and Magistrates: It woulde then manifestly appeare, that they are not so plentifully furnished, and that they neuer had in all their Ciuill warres, any such great numbers of Learned Pastors: and so much the fewer, for that many of their small many, haue bene either so slaine and martyred at home, or dispersed abroad, & fled into other nations: that (I suppose) if al the remnants of them were assembled and viewed, they shoulde be founde not halfe a quarter able, except God (as he is able, who spake the worde, and great was the multitude of the preachers) raise vp a great multitude of more learned Pastors, to furnishe that great & populous realme, & al the seuerall congregations in the same.

And yet, now as they are, in these troublesome times of persecution, it may be, that in some few places of safest refuge, there may well be, in respect of their assemblies, some congregations among them, in Fraunce, in England, in Germany, and in other places, whether they are fledd for refuge, as to a Sanctuary whiche God in exile hath provided for them, as (God be prayesd) England is for many nations, in which they may easily haue plentifull furniture of godly and learned Pastors. Which, as it proceedeth from the grations prouidence of God, to confirme his afflicted people, in such times of greater triall and necessity: so, though it lamente our heartes to see their daungers, & we pray for them with all our harts, that they might enioy also such rest of body, & peace of conscience, with the free preaching of the Gospell, as we enioy: in the meane time it not a little reioiceth our hearts to behold such furniture of learned Pastors, as god of his great godnes hath giuen vnto them for their strengthening. And yet should both they & we, & all Christian harts redouble our reioicing, if they might enioy these blessings of peace & rest, with the free preaching of the gospel, as we do: though as many seuerall cōgregatiōs in France, were no better furnished with learned though other wise godly Pastors, than are among vs: and (I thinke) they would not repent them of such a barga-

pag. 39. Church, through those ignorant pastors that be: I knowe of none, but Bridges do acknowledge it with great griefe, and many godly Prelates and other in authority, employ their great diligence, to the helpe and redresse thereof: so farre, as by any lawfull meenes they may: And if any doe otherwise: we pray God also with our brethren, to lighten their blindness, and to change their hearts, and a Gods name, even by as long discourse, as our Brethren will, & do, (though they say they will not,) discover their palpable darkness, Discovering the same or any other defect in them, not as Cham did, when he sawe his Fathers nakednes, but so far forth, as they alwayes remember, that Charitas operit multitudinem peccatorum. Charity couereth a multitude of sinnes,

Which if they would indeede perforce, they would not make the matter worse than it is, and amplifie it by so great multitudes, and aggrauate it by calling such multitudes, not onelie ignorant persons, but Idiotes, Idols, and a great many fouler and vnfitter tearmes; and not onelie bestow such tearmes on them, but as many, if not worse, on the best learned and chiefest in authoritie, vnder her Maiestie, the Fathers, Bishops, and Archbishops. in the Cleargie. and must all these be condemned of blindness, and palpable darkness? And when thus they haue poured forth all that they can imagine, and a great deale more than they canne proue, or though they could proue, were conuenient (and it were but for their owne modestie) to haue discovered: and to discover it in such a gybing and scornfull manner, and in such eagre modes and vnreuerent tearmes, and to defile with such speeches, not onelie that that might be wished better, but withall, that that is not onelie tollerable but also commendable in them: & then to come in with their frumpe and saie, they wil rather praie for them: than discover them: me thinkes their praier would be more effectuell, if their long or short discoursing, though it were lesse learned, were more temperate. But now that our Brethren rather list to pray to God: they make their petition, saying:

& 40. the absence of Pluralities, and Non-residentes: which grosse corruptiōs of of pastorall office, as they may haue some honest pretence, so can they haue no better pretence, neyther are they reteyned with a better conscience, then the Priestes in our sauour Christes time, suffered the exchaungers of money, Grasiers, and Pulterers to make a burse or shambles, and a poultrie: yea, a denne of theeues of the temple of God, which was appointed to be a house of prayer to all nations. Mat. 21. 12, Mark. 11. 15, Iohn. 2. 14.

This prayer expresseth more seruour, than knowledge, or at leaste, Bridges. their acknowledging of that duefull obedience and charity, that were rather to be wished, our brethren had alayed the intemperance of their zeale withall. As not onely in wishing them reformed: but that there were not more difficulty in reforming them, that maintaine such or any other inconueniences in the Church. It is an olde saying and of great consideration, Better to suffer a mischiefe than an inconuenience. and worse is it, to maintaine it, than to suffer it. And how much the more, so much the worse. If then, such thinges as here be noted, are such inconueniences: how is not this too vnaduisedly cast forth, in forme of a prayer to God, that they muste bee reformed, and yet cannot but with more difficultye bee reformed, that maintaine them? Doth not this too nere touch principally her Maicsty, whom in the page before (more duefully) they acknowledged to be our most gracious Queene: and many ciuill Magistrates, besides those Ecclesiasticall Prelates, that haue to do in these matters: yea, the statute, and whole state that do maintaine them?

Our brethrens daungerous & flauorous speeches ynder colour of praier.

Besides that, every poore Curate which liueth vnder any Pastor, if hee be not himselfe so learned as the Pastor is, he is here called by this mylde tearme, a cankre of the Church. If a cankred Papist, or a cankred heretike (for the Apostle saith so, of hereticke & false doctrine, that it eateth like a cankre,) had so called our protestant Ministers, I woulde haue saide, he had spoken like himselfe. But it is a far vnlike and vnseemely speche, for Protestant Minist. to bestow vpon their brethren Minist. in the Gospell.

True it is, that by the Non residence of some Pastors, and the pluralities graunted vnto them, some Curates and Ministers of lesser giftes are maintayned: and (as I take it) reason too. For, as we haue shewed out of Caluine) the giftes of the Pastors being not alike, there may well bee difference in them, both of superiority, & of maintenance. Which may accord also wel inough with the saying of the Apost. The Elders that gouerne well, especially in the work of the word, are worthy of double honor. And therfore, if some more Learned pastors hauing also a greater gift of the spirit of gouernment, haue more parcels of the Church of god to gouerne, than other haue, and thereupon are permitted (in consideration of their greater labours in the word) to do good in more places: and for their better provision, to haue other besides them, and in their absences to attend continually allye to those congregations, while their more fruitfull traualles are otherwhere employed: if these also by order of lawe; and by authoritie of Magistracie bee prouided for: and yet, cannot bee permitted but by the lawe and magistrate, so that it is not free to euerye one that listeth, but to choice and more able men, and onelie to so good purposes, and alwaies with sufficiēt prouisions for euerye place and person so permitted: As it lawfull for euerye or anie priuate subiect on this publike fashion to exclaime against it, and also to inueigh against the Magistrates for maintaining of it?

But there is a myserie in this thing, more than euerye bodie wēneth, Pluralities and non residents are pretended, which if they bee abused, are not so maintained, but that vpon proue thereof, they are punishable, or to bee restrained or renoked: but other matters are shot at, to wit, the liuings of the Bishops, of the Colledges, or of anie that haue anie portions of the Church, impropriated and allotted vnto them. Howbeit our Brethren faile herein of their chiefe purpose, for, if all these were taken away, yet may the power and superiour authoritie remaine, though weakened, when the living is gone, and so al Pastors, notwithstanding al these brouse deuises are not equall.

Our brethren contradicti-on and slanderous accusation.

As for that our Brethren adde, of the pretence of these things, which they call grosse corruptions of Pastorall office; to omit the reconciliation of these sayings, that as they may haue some honest pretence, so they can haue no better pretence, than had the exchangers of money, the graffers and poulterers, to make a burse or shambles, or a poultrie, yea, a den of theeues of the Temple of God, which were indeede no honest pretences at al: This is also too rough a censure of our Brethren, so flatlie to condemne all the Magistrates and Ministers in the Church of GOD, which (in manner aforesayd) permit these things, to haue no better pretence nor conscience, than these deadlie enemies of Christ had. The Texts alleaged out of Matthew, Marke, and Iohn, stande onelie on a ranke for a bare shew, and proue nothing at all, that these matters haue no better pretence and conscience, than those grosse corruptions of those wicked Iewes had.

And is this now, that which our Brethren meant, when they sayde euen the last sentence before, they would rather praie to GOD to lighten their heartes, than by anie long discourse, to discouer their palpable darknesse? Indeede Breuis oratio penetrat calum? But this short Prayer pearceth beyond all Gods forbod, and this short discourse, Si breuis grauis, it were better be longer and be leuis. Howbeit, the burthen of it, is but a faburthen of a foule mouth, and of an heauie irksome slander, unfit for our learned Brethren to haue vttered. And yet not content therewith, our brethren proceede and saie.

But especiallie while the whole office of a Pastor, shall be thought to consist in reading onelie a prescript number of Psalmes and Chapters of the Scriptures, with other appointed formes of praier: and that hee may be allowed as a sufficient Pastor which dooth the things, which a childe of ten yeeres olde may doe as well as hee, so long shall wee neuer lacke vnlearned pastors, ignorant and vngodlie people, simonicall and sacrilegious patrones: so long the building of Gods Church shall goe but slowlie forward. Besides other superstitious fantasies, mayntained in the peoples heartes, which for shortnesse wee omitte to speake of.

Of what estimation reading hath bene accounted in the auncient and primitive Church, and the office of readers both of the Psalmes and Chapters of the Scriptures: we haue already declared out of Zanchius, citing Bucer at large for the same. And how auncient and allowable, appointed formes of Praier haue bene in the Church of God, among al the holie Fathers, & are yet euen in those reformed Churches, that are most now commended vnto vs of our Breth^r? yea, their selues also haue in print set down vnto vs appointed formes of Praier: though with what warrant and authoritie they may prescribe and appoint formes of praier to their Prince, and to the whole Church of Englande, and reiect that which is by lawfull authoritie of the Prince, and of all the states of the Realme and Church of Englande already appointed: I doe not yet knowe, and faine would I learne, how they are able to iustifie these dooings: and how their owne prescribing vnto others, their appointed formes of prayer and ministracion of the Sacraments, (they hauing no sufficient authoritie therevnto) dooth not much more confute themselves, that controll other for prescribing appoynted formes of Prayer vnto them.

As for that they saie, the whole office of a pastor shall bee thought to consist in reading these things: I know none that saith or thinketh so: or that hee may bee allowed as a sufficient pastor, which dooth the things which a childe of ten yeeres olde may doe as well as hee. Who alloweth such a one for a sufficient Pastor? And what are those things which a childe of ten yeeres olde may doo as well as hee? May a childe of tenne yeeres olde minister the Sacrament of Baptisme and the Lordes supper, or pronounce the publike absolution to the people? But they meane perhaps that such a childe may reade the appointed formes of prayers, Psalmes, and Chapters of the Scriptures, as well as he? What hee so, in the publike Congregation, and haue no lawfull calling therevnto? And yet, may hee doe it as well as hee that is lawfullie called? If they meane onelie, in the respect of his reading: I easily graunt it them, that any private man, woman, or childe, although younger than tenne yeeres yeeres olde, if his sight be quicke and his voice cleere, & he be wel enured to reading, may both reade as well, & farre better, than many an old Doctor, yea, than the most zealous and best learned Pastor in the towne, when his tongue soltreth, or his eyes ware dim, or age or other debility doth so weaken him, that he cannot so lowde, so cleane & reddily reade, as a childe or a woman may do. But the holy auncient Fathers, did not therfore contemne the office of Readers. No, they considered the person, whome for their calling and office, they represented, and permitted neither childe, woman, nor any man neuer so prompt a Reader, in such publike and autentike manner to reade these thinges, but onely those men that were lawfullye called and authorized thereunto: and did greatly reuerence and esteeme this office of Readers, although they were not yet made Pastors, but were Readers only. And shall we now contemne them, & condemne them, when these Readers are Pastors also: and say that such a Pastor reading, doeth the thinges which a childe of ten yeeres olde may do as well as he? And yet, it folloves not, if there were some such Pastors whome a childe didde excell, & that if any such vpo some especiall consideration were boyn with, all, we shall neuer lacke vnlearned Pastors; ignorant and vngodly people, simoniacall and sacrilegious Patrones, &c. Whereas, mee thinkes, (and I speake it bona fide, and I hope, bona cum venia,) that rather of the twaine, if these our brethren deuises should take place, we should haue moze cōtēpt of learning, and greater number of vnlearned Pastors: and so more ignorant and vngodly, and contentious people, moze simoniacall and sacrilegious patrones, (if any patrones at all should be allowed) moze slow forwardnesse of the building of Gods church, beside other many moe newe superstitious fantasies, which for shortnes we omit to speake of: than eyther now there is, or euer was, or euer would be, by any direct occasion of reading, a prescript number of psalmes and chapters of the Scriptures, with other appointed formes of prayer, as now we haue. But our brethren supposing, they haue here so full confuted this publike reading, of prescribed formes of prayer, psalmes and chapters, that wee our selues would seeke to haue it, yet for a while, at least to be tollerated: they would cut of this also, and say:

The sequēle

The learned discourse pag. 40. What though some say: formall reading might be borne withall for a time, vntill the Church might be prouided of sufficient pastors, which yet is not graunted; shall it therfore continue alwayes to the perpetuall decay of knowledge, and hurte of the Church of God?

& 41. Bridges. Who are those some that so say, that formall reading might bee borne withall for a time, vntil, &c: And what is here meant, by formal reading? If it be a comelie and reuerent forme of reading a prescript number of Psalmes & Chapters of the Scriptures, with other appointed formes of prayer before mentioned: Why shoulde anie saie it might bee borne withwithall for a time, vntill the Church might be provided of sufficient pastors? as though the reading of these thinges, should no longer be suffered, but that afterward, those that shoulde be thought to be sufficient pastors, should haue no appointed formes of Prayer at all, nor any number at all of Psalmes, or chapters of the scriptures prescribed vnto them, but that euery sufficient pastor, might be free, to vary in his formes of prayer, and number of Psalmes, and chapters of the scripture at his pleasure. What sufficiency shall be appointed for such Pastors, is not here set downe. For my part, I thinke there is no sufficiency in a Pastor to be counted a sufficient p^ruilege, so clearely to acquite him, but that, although he may now and then leane out, or adde, or alter some part of the prescribed and appointed forme, vpon occasion at his discretion, yet were it not conuenient, (were he neuer so sufficient learned) that there shoulde be no forme at all appointed. For wee must not onely consider the sufficiency of the Pastor, but withall the sufficiency or insufficiency of the people, and the order and comelinesse of the Church, which is best obserued, especially in these licentious and perillous times, full of errors and corruptions, not when wee are moste at libertye, but when Bishops appointed doe restraine vs.

The danger of hauing
no prescriptione forme.

But these our Brethren, the Learned discouersers, reiecte all suche formes of prayer, and say: What though some saye, formall reading might be borne withall for a time, vntill the Church might be provided of sufficient Pastors? which is not yet granted. So is? who are they, that haue of late set forth this Pamphlet, intituled, A booke of the forme of common prayer, and ministration of the sacramentes, &c. agreeable to Gods word, and the vse of the reformed Churches? Is not formal reading, and numbers of Psalmes, and chapters of the scripture, here prescribed? And if this booke of the forme of common prayer, be agreeable to Gods word and the vse of the reformed Churches: howe is this our Brethrens Learned Discourse, which they call a breefe and playne declaration, concerning the desires of all those faithful ministers, that haue and doe seeke for the reformation of the Church of Englande, agreeable to Gods word, and to the vse of the reformed Churches? and how do these our Brethren heere affirme, that if this formall reading shoulde continue alwayes, it shoulde rebounde to the perpetuall decay of knowledge, and hurt of the Church of God? which (as Bucer sayth) is to the great encrease of knowledge and manifolde benefite of the Church of God.

that take no paine, to live in wealth and ease, without punishment of their negligence?

Bridges.

And with what necessary consequence doth this hang, upon the continuance of an appointed forme of prayer, Psalmes, and Chapters? May not the rewardes of learning be bestowed vpon Studentes, and yet formall reading of these thinges still continue? yea, may not Students imploy their time moze continually in their studies, and haue the moze leasure to study better about the expositiō of the Scriptures, when the publike forme of prayer is already appointed and prescribed vnto them? True it is, that this is a great discouragement vnto Studentes, to see the rewardes of Learning, as commonly bestowed vpon the ignoraunt as vpon the learned: But woulde not euill Patrones doe so moze then they doe, except the superior authority of the Bishoppes did not restraine them? and if it were so that all were equall, and the bestowing of the rewardes of Learning, lay in the election of the vnlearned and vulgar people: woulde not the same discouragement as commonly, or moze commonly fall out then? And is this the waye to encourage Studentes, vnder pretence that the rewardes of learning are not so well bestowed, to spoyle and pull downe Bishoprikes, Colleages, Cathedrall Churches, Glebes and Tythes, &c. And to take all this cleane away, both from the vnlearned and learned too? And are these men now so carefull, of the greate discouragement of Studentes, to see the rewardes of Learning as commonly bestowed vpon the ignoraunt as vpon the learned? It is a good hearing, that they are so carefull for the matter: but it is a shrewde suspition, that if they bee not so well bestowed now, if it came to some of their bestowing, they shoulde (forsooth) bee sayre and well bestowed.

Liuinges ill bestowed would be worse bestowed if B. were not.

The vocations vndermined by the persons default.

If any that take no payne, live in wealth and ease, which I thinke be verie fewe, among the Ministers in these our dayes, and therefore may be of Studentes beholden with lesse discouragement, or any enuious eyes and that such escape without punishment of their negligence, to the encouragement vnto Idlenesse & slouthfulnes, in them that bee already in that vocation, what are these personal defaultes of them which bee in that vocation, to the vocation it selfe? yea rather, doe not these quarrells picked at their negligence, Idlenesse and slouthfulnesse, (while there are other that are not negligent, Idle nor slouthfull, and yet no learned preachers, but trauell in their vocation, bestowing that one small talent that God hath lent them, to the vttermost extent thereof and to the Lordes advantage) confirm and the moze approue that vocation? And may not those that are, negligent, idle, and slouthfull, be punished well ynough, and that moze orderly punished, and made to take paines: the state of the Ecclesiasticall government standing as it doth? is there no punishment with our brethren, but either hanging vp, or turning out: pea, and cleane ouertur-

But here againe (say our brethren,) it will be obiected, because there are not liuings able to maintaine al learned Pastors, we must be enforced to admit many ignorant Ministers. But againe we answere, it is our part, no onely to prouide learned pastors: but also liuings sufficient to maintaine them, vpon the necessity of Gods commaundement. Let him that is entrusted in the worde (sayth S. Paule) minister to him that doth in-

By which saying the Apostle confuteth all vaine excuses, which many are wont to alleage, why they woulde contribute nothing to the maintaihaue to doe with God and not with men onely. For heere is not regarded the liuing of a man, but howe much they esteem Christe and the gos-pell of God. Therefore except we will mocke God to his face, let vs obiect nothing to testify such shamefull ingratitude, that we woulde doubt, how they shoulde be prouided of bodily foode, of whome we receiue the foode of our soules. As though we could not aforde them an earthly recompence, of whome we receiue heauenly benefits. If nothing had bin before time allotted, towards the liuing of the pastors: yet were we bound in paine of damnation, to prouide sufficient for them: and now there is somewhat towards a liuing, where there is least, and in al places sufficient, if it were well disposed, why should wee obiect necessitie through lacke of liuings, to retaine Idols in stead of true Pastors?

Neither yet followeth it herevpon, that we must be inforced to admit many or anie ignorant Ministers, though some not so learned Ministers, as might deserue the greater rewards of learning. Our brethren answere herevnto, It is our part not onlie to prouide learned Pastors: but also liuings to maintaine the, vpon the necessity of Gods cōmandement. This is true, where sufficient liuings are not alreadie prouided for them, there it is our part, so far forth to prouide for them, as we conuenientlie are able. Saint Paule wrote to them that had Pastors, and were of good abilitie to maintain them. And it is likelie (as Caluine noteth thereon, frō whence our brethren seeme to take this obseruation) that the Doctors and Ministers of the word were euen then neglected, when there was yet no certaine portions allotted vnto them, but the Pastors liued on the peoples benenolence and contributions.

If this deuotion wared so cold then, that St. Paul was sayre to call vpon them and commaund them, in the primitive age and prime of the Church, the Apostles yet living: howe much more had wee neede in this last and corrupt age, (when so many are giuen to the spoyle of all things allotted to the Ministry, by these netwe fangled deuices, and by ouerthrowing the authority, and taking away the liuinges of the bishops, and other the best learned preachers in the Ministry,) to take heede, leasse while we would seme to pleade for the maintainance of the Ministers living, wee giue no occasion to the quite ouerthrowe and spoyling of them.

And if any (as indeed many) testifie such shamefull ingratitude, by their vain excuses such as Hierome, (on this pcept of thapostle) reckonesth vnto as our bethzen rightly say thereon: they doe but mocke God to his face. Euen such are many of those (although there bee also many other better disposed) that crye out so fast of vnlearned Ministers, and haue alreadye licked by a good portyon of the liuinges, that were dedicated to the maintainance of the best learned and cheefest in the Ministry. And by these our Bbethzens deuises and exclamations, doe euen gape for the swallowing of the residue. But sith (as it is confessed here) such prouision hath bin allotted for the living of the pastors, and yet, after al that is alreadye gone, there is somewhat remaining towardes a liuing, where there is least, and in all places sufficient, if it were well disposed: Why shoulde wee not rather seeke godly and lawfull meanes, that suche a sufficiency might bee well disposed, than to ouerthrowe all that is alreadye well disposed, vnder pretence that wee retayne certayne Idolles in steede of true pastors? as though none coulde bee true pastors, but learned men: and all pastors that are not learned, (may though neuer so well learned, if not learned preachers, exhorters and Confuters of the gayn-fayers,) are but Idolles and vntue pastors.

This Discourse of our Bbethzen, may perhaps (because they woulde so seme to fauour learned men) bee called learned in their owne opinions: but wee haue not so learned Christe, thus to condemne our poore bethzen Ministers, onely for lacke of learning: if other wise, being not ignorant of their office, they be diligent and faithfull to their ability. And that our learned bethzen woulde remember well this saying, Scientia inflat, charitas edificat. And that while they speake against these Mockers of God, they woulde bethink themselves, what God and man may think

God & man of this their strange dealing: to pretend, men are bound vpon necessity of Gods commandement, & in pain of damnation, to prouide sufficient liuing to maintaine learned pastors, euen where nothing hath bin before time allotted, and yet, to take from them that which is allotted, and to bereue them of their authority, and to do this to þ best learned, vnder a that to dooing it onely to the vnlearned: what a mockery is this, both of God and man vnto their faces? If our Brethren complaint bee here true, that many are wont to alleage vaine excuses why they would contribute nothing to the maintenance of their Pastors, & that is more shameful ingratitude, which we see find by proof that many would take away that which is already allotted, & make a mocke of this, which our Brethren heere, as it seemeth in god sadnesse tell them, that they haue to doe with God, &c. and that they mocke God, although in the end they shall finde, that though the latine be false, the sense is true, Qui mockat mockabitur, as David sayth, Psalm 2. He that dwelleth in the Heauens shall laugh them to scorne, the Lord shall haue them in derision, and shall charge them with it, when full heauily they shall aby, and betwax their mocking and their spoyleing: and will not we our Brethren (that complaine of these mockers and these spoyleers) be mocked also of them, and giue occasion to their spoyleing.

Is it not yet better to stande as it doth in the meane season, though all haue not share and share alike in the rewardes of learning, (as their gifts and charges are not alike) than (attempting thus with our Brethren, to alter and turquish all, vpon hope of equall diuision,) to open a gappe to these Mockers and Cozmozantes, clapping our Brethren on the backe, and encouraging them to enueigh against the Bishops, and to make odious the chiefest and best Learned Pastors: to complaine and crie out vpon the vneuen and ill bestowing and disposing of the ecclesiasticall liuings: and to pretende more equall distribution of them: and when all is first dissolved, and taken away from those that haue them: then in come these bowtering puttocks, to seaze in their clawes, and carry cleane awaye all the remainder from both the parties striving. And when all is gone: then after come our Brethren, and burthen their consciences for these mocks and spoylees, and exhort and charge them on paine of damnation to allotte some sufficient stipendes to their Ministers, Is not this another playne mockery?

God helpe the poore pastors and studentes, be they vnlearned, or neuer so learned, if it shoulde euer come to these new allotments and disposinges, what shoulde be thought sufficient for them. Other Realmes haue felt the lamentable experience, and (what face soeuer our Brethren haue set on the matter,) we reade of their best best learned pastors complaintes in their woordes, of this shamefull vngratefulnesse, of them, that vnder pretence of auoyding popish pride and tyrannie, haue spoyleed them, both of their sufficient maintenance of liuing, and of the lawfull authority of their ecclesiasticall government. But our brethren turne vs from the consideration of the Learned Pastors complaintes of this vngratefulnesse, in diuers parts of Germany, Denmarke, Scotland, &c. and woulde haue vs looke againe on the persecuted Churches in Fraunce, saying.

The great spoylees that learned men complaine on, that are made vnder pretence of reformation.

Looke once againe into France (for examples moue much) and behold the Churches there impouerished, and spoyled with long warres, persecution and vnquietnesse. They haue neither Bishoprickes, Deanries, prebends nor benefices to bestowe on their pastors, and yet Minister vnto them all thinges necessary for an honest sober life, and shal we that haue all this while liued in peace, and prosperity, vnder a godly and religious Princeesse, hauing all these helps, thinke it is impossible, by disposition of Godly and wise gouernours, to appoint a sufficient portion, for so many learned pastors as are necessary for our Churches?

We must once againe looke into Fraunce, and beholde the Churches there impouerished, and spoyled with long warres, persecution and vnquietnesse. And who haue thus spoyled them? haue not the aduersaries of the gospel? and they againe haue met with them, and metely wel spoyled the other. But they haue neither Bishoprickes, Deanries, Prebendes, nor benefices to bestowe on their pastors. Haue they not? the more pity, if it pleased God: it were better for them, and they had them, so they bestowed them better than they be bestowed. But (say they) these Churches haue none of all these helps to bestowe, and yet Minister vnto them all thinges necessary for an honest sober life. But I ask, if they had that they haue not, Bishoprickes, Deanries, Prebendes and benefices, to bestow on their pastors: should they not bestow them? and if they did bestow them on their pastors, were it not better bothe for their pastors and for them too? And shall wee then, who (God bee prayed for it, and continue it) liuing in peace and prosperity, vnder a godly and religious Princeesse, and hauing all these helps, to bestowe on our pastors, not bestowe them on them, but go about to take them from them? yea, to pul the all cleane doorne. If examples moue: let them moue vs, rather to be thankful in this point vnto God, and not to moue such vnquiernes among our selues, being without warres, as shal impouerish & spoil as much, as can the open aduersary of the gospel with his persecution. And if we wil not mock her Maiesty to her face also, but mean sooth as we say, that we that haue at this while liued in peace & prosperity, vnder a godly and religious princeesse, hauing all these helps: why obey we not this godly and religious princes lawes of ecclesiasticall gouernment, but exclaim on them as vngodly and vnreligious? is that a godly & religious prince, that setteth forth & maintaineth vngodly and vnreligious lawes, and that in the Ecclesiasticall gouernment of the Church, which is no lesse matter than the ciuill gouernment of the realm? How do these things hang together? yea, how doe not our brethren (in these wordes) so intagle themselves, that either they shew plainly, they mock her Maiesty to her face: or els beuoy them, selues that these their doings are the parts neither of godly nor religious subiects. Which when they shal consider better: I hope, this confession of her Maiesty, being truly spoken. & truly ment, wil somewhat better moue them to their duties. And sith that they confesse withal, we liue in peace & prosperity vnder a godly and religious prince: why should our brethren shew this shamefull ingratitude, both to her Maiesty, & to God the cheefest author whence this peace and prosperity, springeth, to disturb this peace, and hinder this prosperity, more than all the aduersaries of the Gospel, either do, or can doe: seeing they theirselues do here acknowledge, that Bishopricks, Deanries, Prebends and benefices, be al of them helps: why do they impugne them, as hindrances vnto Gods church, and to the pastors of it? as for the appointing of a sufficient portion, by the disposition of Godly & wise gouernors, for so many learned pastors as are necessary for our Churches. If they want any prouision, not prouided for by the Laws of the Church and realm now in force: no man (that I know) thinketh it either impossible, or not needful to be provided for. But this may be sufficiently provided for well ynough, without the ouerthrow of the Bishops or Archb. superiority ouer his brethren pastors, or without the spoyl of theirs, or any others livings, and especially, without the setting vp of these old pretended, but indeede, new deuised formes of Ecclesiasticall gouernment.

There is none excuse therefore to be admitted, but that we must endeavour to the vttermoste of our power, that every seuerall congregation, church or parish bee prouided of a learned pastor. For vnskilful shepheards haue bin too long thrust vpon vs, to the great dishonor of God, and defacing of the Gospel of Christ. Wee haue hitherto taken vpon vs without warrant of Gods worde, to allowe such for pastors of mens soules, whome no careful owner of cattel, woulde make ouerseer of his sheepes bodies. Which thing almighty God hath alwayes detested, and signified his misliking by diuers testimonies, both of the olde and newe testament. Therefore he sayth by the prophet Esay, complaining of the vnlearned pastors of Israel, which was the onely cause of their affliction and miseries. Their watchmen are all blind, they haue no knowledge, they can not barks, they lye and sleepe and delight in sleeping, and these greedy Dogges can neuer haue ynough, and these shepherdes cannot vnderstand, for they all looke to their owne way, every one for his aduantage, and for his owne purpose. Come, I will bring Vrine, and wee wil fill our selues with strong drinke, and to morrowe shall be at this day, and much more aboundant.

If the prophet had liued in these oure dayes might hee not haue spoken the same more truely of manye Shires in ENGLAND? Wee see therefore that blinde Watchmen, and ignoraunt dumbe dogges, and idle greedie cures, and vnlearned Shepherdes, that serue for nothing, but to fill their owne purses, or their paunches, by the testimonie of God his spirite, are denied to be meete Pastors of the people of God. The Prophet Ezechiel also enueigheth at large, against the Pastor. the vnfeeding shepherdes of Israell: saying, (For we be not the shepherdes of Israell which feede themselves: should not the shepheard feede the flocke: For we eate the fatte, and couer clothe you with the wolles: yee kill them that are fedde, but ye eate not the Sheepe. The weake haue ye not strenghtened, the sicke haue ye not healed, neither haue ye bounde vp the broken, nor brought agayne that which was drinen awaie, neither haue ye sought that which was lost. &c. throughout the whole chapter. When feeding of Gods sheepe is a matter of so great importaunce, and consisteth of so many partes, which the prophet hath heere described, how shoulde wee admitte them whome God reiecteth? Which being ignoraunt and vnllearned knowe nothing at all, and therefore nothing can doe that appertayneth to this charge, or any part thereof: vndoubtedly the reteyning of such, is a manifest token of the vengeance of God against vs, for so hee threatneth by the prophet Zach. his words are these. And the Lord saide vnto mee: take to thee yet the Instruments of a foolish Sepheraic. For loe, I will raise vp a shepherde in the Lande, which shall not looke for the thing that is lost, nor seeke the tender lambs, nor heale that is hurt: nor feede that which standeth vp, but hee shall eate the fleshe of the fat and teare their Hornes in peeces. O Idoll Shepherdes that leaue the Flocke, the Sworde shall bee vpon his arme, and vpon his right eye: his arme shall bee cleane dried vp, and his right eye shall bee vtterly darkened.

Bridges. Here first where our Brethren conclude on their former premises, that there is none excuse, &c. We graunt as befoze, that all vaine excuses are insufficient, and that we must doe our endeouour to the vttermost of our power, so it bee done without violence or iniury to any man. But that euery seuerall congregation, Church or Parish must bee provided of a learned pastor, meaning such a learned pastor, as shoulde make no ap-poynted forme of prayer: &c. is not so necessary. Howbeit, as learned a man were to be wished and provided for, as maye conuenientlye bee gotten.

Providing of learned men.

And if Vnskilfull shepherdes haue beene too long thrust vpon vs, is there no remedy, but we must thrust out the most skilful, for the vnskilfuls sake? But what doe our Brethren meane by this saying, that wee haue hitherto taken vpon vs, without warrant of Gods word, to allowe such for Pastors of mens soules, whome no carefull owner of Cattle woulde make ouerseer of his Sheepes bodies? And can they warrant this out of Gods worde, that we should onely allowe such for Pastors of mens soules, whome a carefull owner of Cattle woulde make ouerseer of his Sheepes bodies? Meritlye by this accusation they myghte thrust out a greate manye not onely vnllearned, but also the moste Learned and skilfullest Pastours of mens soules, that for any skill at all, and perhappes also for anye abilitie of their bodies, no carefull owner of Cattle would woulde make over-seer of his sheepes bodies. But if our Brethren saie they mean not so, though they say so, but onlie y^e we allowe such for Pastors of mens soules, as are more vnskilfull of the fooode of mens soules, than are such, as for their vnskilfulnesse to oversee the bodies of his sheepe, no owner of cattell would allowe for bodilie shepheards: as (I hope) there be none, or not many, so vnskilful: so, if there be anie, they are not allowed, much lesse thrust vpon vs, but rather instructed, or punished, or remoued, at least wise on p^rose they are remoueable.

As for these sentences, which our brethren here cite against vnskilfull pastors, were not onelie spoken against the wicked and Idolatrous Priests in those Prophets daies: but also against their wicked Kings, Princes, and Magistrates, as Caluine obserueth, saying on the same 10. verse, Esay. 56. Moreover, by the name of watchmen, hee not onelie vnderstandeth the Prophets, vnto whom the function of teaching was inioyned; but also the Iudges, the Gouvernors, and Kings, who ought to haue administred all things orderlie, &c. The applying therefore of this sentence vnto our state now, may inferre a verie dangerous and not subiectlike conclusion, and if our brethren will needs vnderstand it of the onelie Ecclesiasticall pastors, as that of Ezechiel and of Zacharie: yet why should they not rather applie it (as Caluine doth that of Zacharie) vnto the Popish pastors, that resemble these against whō the Prophets inueigh? Albeit Tremelius and other referre these sayings of Zacharie to the Magistrate also. But take it for the Ecclesiasticall pastors. If anie of the pastors in these or anie other Prophets daies, had diligentlie (at their due times assigned vnto them) read in their publike Congregations, the onelie lawe and the Prophets, and administred the Sacraments and rites then appointed; though they had not with anie interpretations at large expounded the same, nor giuen anie perswasible exhortation to the people: yea, though they were not of sufficient learning so to doe, but were able onelie to shew the briebe and simple meaning of those mysteries: yet, would not, nor could these Prophets haue applied these inuectiues, to anie such true and diligent, though not learned nor preaching pastors. And much lesse can our brethren or anie other, direct them against our Christian & godlie protestant Ministers of the Gospell, though they bee no learned preachers, interpreters, nor exhorters: if they diligentlie reade the onely word of God vnto the people, & sincerelie administer the Sacraments, and where a doubt is in anie principle of our religion, can onelie in briebe declare the same though they be neyther learned other wise, nor able to preach, exhort, persuaue, nor apply in publike action. So that, these sentences of the Prophets, are a great deale both to vniuersedie and to vniuersedie of our brethren hated and wrested against all those Ministers of the Gospell, that are no preachers.

Howbeit, if there be anie such among the Ministers of the Gospell, that may wrested.

If the Prophets had liued in our daies, they would not haue spoken as our breth.

may be rightlie compared into these, against whome the Prophets crye : we confesse it is not fit such shoulde bee maintained , neyther both antila we now in force maintaine them, neyther thinke I, that this which here confidentlie, our Brethren by waie of a question doe answere, is true : that if the Prophet had liued in these our daies, might hee not haue spoken the same more truelie of manie shieres in England ? No verilie (GOD bee praised for it) could he. For what manie shieres can our Brethren in England, whereof it may bee truelie sayd, their watchmen are all blinde, and cannot barke, &c ?

What an harde spech is this from our Brethren, to publish and denounce, though (thanks bee to GOD) not against all shieres, yet against manie shieres in Englande ? But I verilie hope, that if it shoulde be tryed, it cannot bee verified of anie one shiere in Englande . And yet, if in anie or manie shieres, there bee anie such (as we graunt there bee two manie, if there bee anie) so still I stande to my tackeling on this point, be they manie, or in manie shieres ; they may bee all well, yea, better reformed (without this newe alteration of our Brethrens Ecclesiasticall government) by the Bishoppes and Archbishoppes, superiour authoritie ouer them . For, howsoeuer by abuse, negligence, or corruption, anie such blinde watchmen, and ignorant dumbe dogges, and idle greedie curres, and vnlearned shepherdes, that serue for nothing but to fill their paunches, may heere and there creepe in : yet are none such by the Ecclesiasticall state of government allowed, but as they are founde criminous heerein, so they are eyther depriued or corrected.

And as for this sentence of Ezechiel, is so directlie spoken against those Pastors, that wilfullie suffered all the people to runne into open Idolatrie, that except we shoulde withall, burthen all the Realme to bee open Idolaters, and the whole Cleargie wilfullie to neglect it, and that they are neither willing nor able to speake ought against it : (although withall we graunt, it comprehendeth all those that are semblable in ignorance, negligence, couetousnesse, and voluptuousnesse, without anie regard of GODS people) it cannot thus largelie and at randon bee applyed to our whole state, neyther against those that are learned, painefull, and faithfull preachers, of which sorte (God bee praised, and increase them) we are not vnfurnished, neyther against those they Curates in their absences and vnder them, such as, although they bee not able to preach, yet they teach truelie and diligentlie to theyr abilitie, and frame theyr lines according thereto . As for such other as heere are named, I thinke it would be ouer harde for our Brethren, to finde out such to bee maintained, which bee ignorant and vnlearned, knowe nothing at all, and therefore nothing can doo, that appertayneth to his charge,

Ezechiels sentence abused, and the whole cleargie learned and vnlearned flattered charge, or anie part thereof. Neither doth the sentence alleadged out of Zacharie, touch our pooze Ministers. Who though they be not so learned, that they can with anie edification preach, as wee vse the name of Preachers, especiallie as our Brethren heere pretend to vnderstand the word: yet if they reade and set forth the worde of God with all their diligence faithfullie, they are so acquitted from this censure of the Prophet Zacharie, that Caluine writing at large vpon the same, compareth them onelie to the Popishe Pastors, not vnto anie Ministers of the Gospel.

Ministers.

Zacharies sentence written against the Ministers of the Gospel, though not preachers.

Now seeing (saie our Brethren) wee are taught by these wordes of the Lorde God, that it is a great and horrible plague to haue the Church of God encombered with such foolish and Idoll shepherdes: let vs studie to remoue such plagues from the flocke of Christ, whose armes are cleane dried vp, that they haue no force, and theyr eyes vtterlie darkened, that they haue no skill, so that they are not able to perfourme those dueties which pertaine to a wise and faithfull shepherde, except wee will betraie the sheepe of Christ, into the mouthes of rauenous wolues, and especiallie into the teeth of that great ramping lion the diuell, who neuer ceaseth going about to seeke whome hee may deuour for his praie. For what doo these reading Ministers differ from those Idoll shepherdes, which God in his vengeance threatneth to send, for the ingratitude of the people?

The learned Dis.
Pag. 47.

What we are taught by these wordes of the Lorde God, in these foresayde sentences of the Prophets: we haue before sufficientlie seene, that they touch not anie godlie and diligent Ministers of the worde and Sacraments of Christ, although they be not learned Preachers. We grant, it is a great and horrible plague to haue the Church of God encombered with such foolish and Idoll shepherdes, as Zacharie describeth: and to studie to remooue such plagues from the flocke of Christ, whose armes are cleane dried vp, that they haue no force, and theyr eyes vtterlie darkened that they haue no skill, &c. It is good counsell. But to demand heereon: What doo these reading Ministers differ from those Idoll shepherdes, which GOD in his vengeance threatneth to send, for the ingratitude of the people? Is a question with another demand to be asswyled. What they meane by these reading Ministers? For, what our albeit this is most untrue, that those Idoll shepherdes of whome the Prophet speaketh, were reading Ministers, but rather they are called Idoll shepherdes, for that they were not reading Ministers, but dumbe and silent Ministers, lyke to Idolles, that had mouthes and spake not. Yet, if they meane by reading Ministers, such among vs, as canne doe nothing else but onely reade: although sometime in the auncient Church, there hath also bene a greater use of such reading Ministers, whose office was onelic, or most especially to reade, and great account made thereof, & serued for god & excellent purposes, as out of Zachius & Bucer is declared: yet notwithstanding, if these reading Ministers perched into higher places of the Ministerie than they should, (as comming somewhat nēer to the touch of these tearmes) they might perhaps better deserue to be remoued. But if they simplie meane all reading Ministers, wheras the most part are able to giue good counsaile, instruction, admonition, & exhortation in priuate conference, besides their publike formall reading, though they haue no dexteritie in publike preaching: yea, there is none so learned a preacher in this land, or in anie other Church, but it may beseme him well enough to reade the publike forme of common praier in the Church; and to reade the Chapters and Psalmes appointed, and so, all sorts of Ecclesiasticall persons, being comprised in this tearme, Reading Ministers: it were ouerhard to remoue all, and to condemne all reading Ministers for Idoll shepheards.

The learned discourse.
Pag. 48. It will be answered (no doubt) that to supplie their ignorance, there are added to their appointed seruice, many godlie and learned Homelies, which if they reade with their seruice, there is not so greate neede of preaching and interpretation of the Scriptures.

Bridges. And if this be answered, for anie thing that is here replied, the answer might satisfie anie reasonable man, that were not too litigious and importune. Why may not many godlie and learned Homelies bee added, to supplie their ignorance that are not learned pastors? Is not an Homelie a sermon also? And if they be godlie, and learned, & many such Sermons, although they be but read plainlie and distinctlie vpon the booke, and not comed or spoken without the booke: may it not be safely sayde (at least thus much) that where they are orderlie and often read, there is not so great neede of other preaching, and of other interpretation of the Scriptures? Why as indeed, the reading of the (being read as they ought to be) is also a kind of preaching, and oftentimes no vnfruitfull interpreting of the Scriptures. But now, what doe our brethren here replie vnto the answer of this supplie?

We will derogate nothing heere from the dignitie of those Homelies: we will not accuse heere the vn sensible reading of vnlearned Ministers, neither yet the vnreuerent contempt of the ignorant hearers: but which all godlie and wise men must needes confesse, those exhortations that are not applied to the proper circumstances of times, places, persons, & occasions, are of smal power to perswade anie man, and least of all the ignorant people.

Experience.

How far we allowe of Homilies.

If long experience bee the mistres of fooles: whose mistres is late & short Experience? And why then doe our Brethren crie so fast, to haue vs looke vpon and followe the late experience, and that in other Countries, as a rule for vs and all to imitate: The question here demaunded how many Papists conuerted, &c? is veris captious. As though we allowed of ignorant and vnlearned Ministers; or allowed of such reading of formall praier and Homilies, as neuer hath the helpes of preaching, or applying the Scriptures to the proper circumstances before rehearsed. Whereas we hope, there is no Congregation so utterlie destitute of preaching, albeit, that the Homilies their selues (being as is confessed) both godlie & learned, be both a preaching and an applying of the Scriptures, & may be well vsed of anie neuer so godlie & learned a Minister, and much more the lesse learned that he is.

And no doubt, though we name not perticular persons, which we might well doe, and I for my part, & that in open disputatio of this matter, with some not of the meanness of our Breth. & that befoze p. 49. the, & the selfe of the Citty, haue heard diuerse godlie, zealous, & woorthipfull, seriously acknowledge great fruit by the hearing of Homilies, yea, and some that haue plainly confessed of themselves, that befoze being verie ignorant Papists, though they haue not onely ben conuerted by the hearing of the godly & learned Homilies, no: onely by hearing preachers, no: onely by reading the Scriptures, no: onely by praier to God, who only openeth, mollifieth, lightneth, and conuerteth the heart: but that God hath done it sometimes by all these meanes together, & sometimes by one, & sometimes by another, with conference, disputing, & other godly meanes: yet among all, they haue openly professed, that God hath conuerted the frō their Papistrie, & instructed the from their ignorance, & reformed the from their wickednes, not a little but verie much, by the often reading and hearing of printed sermons or Homelies of our owne Countreimen, & of other nations: as of Caluine, Bullinger, Gualter, Hemingius, & diuers others: & whether this be true or no,

no. where as our Bzeth demand, how many we are able to shew: let euery man shew himselfe as he hath found, I appeale to euery mans conscience, for his owne experience in this point: & I doubt not, but (if they will not vnthankfully hide it) many thousands in this land would rise vp, & with heart and mouth confesse, that they haue found no small comfort & edificati- on, by the reading and hearing of such godlie and learned Homilies or Sermons, as in our English tongue are set forth.

Againe, who seeth not, but he that is so blind that will see nothing, that these parts of a true pastors duty, which both the prophets Ezech. & Zac. reherse, namely, to strengthē the weak, to heale the sick, to bind the bro- The lear- ned dis- course. kē, to seek the lost, to bring home that is caried away, to cherish the yōg lābs, to feed the strōg sheep, &c. cānot be performed of any man by such means as these, but only by such a one as is a godly & lerned shepheard. pag. 49.

I grant these duties cannot be performed by such meanes as these, of any man that is altogether ignorant & vtterly vnlearned, such as our bzeth haue heretofore described. But I denie this, that these duties can be performed only by such an one, as is a godly and learned shepheard, in such sense, that he may not withall vse these meanes. Bridges

Wherefore, these poore helps of prescript forme, of reading of praier, of homilies, & such like, when they are alleaged to maintaine the igno- The lear- ned dis- course. rance of vnskilful pastors, are called no beteer by the iudgemēt of God, but the instruments of foolish & Idoll shepheards, which haue a certain pretence of pastorall office, but in effect are altogether vnmeet for the same: eue as Idols & Idiots are good for nothing, but able to do much hurt, concerning whō, our sauour Christ pronounceth this fearful sen- pag. 49. tence: If the blind leade the blind they shal both fal into the pit. How is now the promise kept which our bzeth made so late before, that they would derogate nothing heere frō the dignitie of those Homilies, which theselues confesse to be both godly & learned? And yet here eue the Bridges. verie next page, both Homilies generally, & also the prescript form of rea- ding of praier, & such like, are not only contemptuously called pore helps, but are in reproch termed the instrumēt of foolish & Idoll shepheards, & it is worst of all, they say they are called no better by the iudgement of God. other Priests and Levites? And had they not also many Sermons written by Moses, and by the other prophets, which they often used on the Saboth daies, and other feasts to reade in the congregations publickly, without any alteration of them, or the addition so much as of any exposition or exhortation gathered on them? And did they not in so doing, even all these things that here are mentioned, notwithstanding all things were prescribed vnto them? And yet were they no Idiots nor Idols, nor the blind leaders of the blind, nor these sentences of Christ nor of these Prophets were applied vnto them, nor the following of the prescribed seruice, are of them called the Instruments of foolish and Idoll shepherds. And, what godlie and learned Commentarie expoundeth these wordes of the Prophet, for the prescript forme of praier and Homilies?

Caluine on Zacharie chap. 11. 15.

Caluine on these wordes of Zacharie, chap. 11. verse. 15. Take to thee the instrument of a foolish shepherd, saith on this wise: The Prophet heere teacheth, that whereas God hath cast off the care of the people: there shall be some vaine shew of gouernment, but out of which it may easilie be gathered, that God exerciseth no more the office of the Pastor: as though he should saie, the people should be so forsaken, that notwithstanding they should thinke themselues yet for a while to be, and to remaine vnder the safeguard of God: Euen as we doe see in Poperie those proud boastings to flie about, the church to be neuer forsaken of God. Although therefore the truth of God hath hether to bene ouerwhelmed: notwithstanding it was the true Church, which was stuffed with wicked superstitions. Euen as therefore the Papistes boast and are contented with a title onelie: so we know the Iewes pretended their priuiledges, & these also were their weapons, when they would coape and conflict with the Apostles. What? are not wee the inheritance of God? Hath hee not promised, that there should be a perpetual sanctuarie to himselfe among vs? Is not the sacerdotall vnction a certaine and infallible signe of his grace? Euen as therefore the Iewes puffed out those foolish boastings against the Apostles: so also at this daie the Papists doe shroude all their shames, vnder the title of the Church. This now dooth Zacharie vnderstand, when he saith, that by the commandement of God, hee tooke the vessel or instrument of a foolish pastor or shepherd. It signifieth vnto the Hebrues anie instrument; we expound it a broken bagge. But that is to much wrested. I doubt not therefore, but that by the instrument of the pastor, Zacharie vnderstandeth the Ensignes or notable markes, out of the which it might be gathered there was yet some pastor, but in the meane season he calleth him a foolish pastor, that we may knowe, he was but a voide or a deceit full visard. The name therefore of pastor is heere placed by granting to it, as the Scripture often speaketh, and at this day we also grant now and then to the Papists, the name of the Church, and also also we graunt to their horned or mitred Bishops the name of Pastors. Use of Homilies.

Thus both Caluine apply this saying to the Papistes (as the most part both of olde and newe interpreters; apply the Pastor heere mentioned to Antichrist) and the instrument of this foolish shepheard to the title of the Church. But none that I read of, to the prescript forme of godly praiers or to the reading of godly and learned homilies.

If our Brethren say, that these thinges are not of themselves called the instrumentes of foolish Pastors, but when they are alleaged to maintaine the ignorance of vnskilfull Pastors: although, this be not true altogether neyther; yet, were it true, when these thinges are so alleaged: as the scripture in some sense, when it is wrested and alleaged to maintayne that, which it is not spoken of, no; appliable vnto, is called a dead letter, or rather not the Scripture at all, and so may be called in suche a wrested and false sense, the instrument of an Hereticall Pastor, and of the Diuell himselfe, or by any worse name: and yet bled and applyed in his true sense, (in which onely it is indeede the Scripture,) it is the holie woorde of God: as also wee may saye the like of the sacrifices, and other ceremonies of Gods lawe amonge the Iewes, when they were bled in their kindes, and referred as types and figures to Iesus Christe, they were the holy ordinaunces of the Lorde: but being diuoluen from Christe, whome they prefigured, to maintayne the errour of apostolical operation, as though they had vertue and grace in themselves, to forgive the sinnes of those that made the sacrifices, or of those to whome they applyed them: they are then called beggerly elementes, and as it were the offering vp of dogges, which God detesteth: so, if we shoulde commend the reading of prescript forme, of holie and deuout prayers, or of godlie and learned homilies, to maintaine the ignorance of vnskilfull Pastors: then indeede it might well be sayde, that the holinesse, and deuotion of those prayers, turneth to sinne and superstition; the godlinesse and learnednesse of those homilies, might well be sayde, by the iudgement of GOD to be no better than instrumentes of foolish Pastors, though in these places cited, God call them not so. But, since we alleage not, no; vse any prescript reading, or forme of prayer and homilies, to maintayne the ignorance of vnskilfull Pastors, but contrariwise, to instruct both them and all others that here the same, and so to bying them out of ignorance to godly and learned knowledge: these odious and contemptuous termes, can by no right bee iustlie applyed vnto them. And as so; the suffering of anye blinde guydes to leade the blinde: If they be suche blinde ones indeede as Christe speaketh of, it were not convenient they should be suffered. And if our Brethren would leane these vnnecessarie strivings with suche guydes as be not blind, but see as well, or better than theirselves, those blinde guydes where any be,

The Scripture wrested is not the scripture which in his true sense is gods holy word.

The learned disc. The ministers of the Church are the salte of the earth. If the salte be vnfaurie, wherewith shall it be seasoned? It is good for nothing but

pag. 50. to be cast out and trooden downe of mens feete. Let vs not therefore

51. seeke politike shifres to maintayne the vnfaurie salte, which our Saviour

Mat. 23. our Christ pronounceth to be good for nothing but to be cast out. By these and many other testimonies of the scripture, it is as cleare as the sonne at noone dayes, that it is the office and ducie of a Pastor, both to be able and willing to teach his flocke, and that no ignorant & vnlearned person is to be admitted to that charge, or reteyned, if hee be crept in, no more than a blind man is to be suffered in an office, which must be executed only with the sight: or a dumbe dogge to giue warning which can not barke, or an Idol to haue the place of a man, or a foole of a wise man, or a wolfe of a shepheard, or darkenesse in steede of light, or salte that is vnfaurie to season withall.

Bridges. We graunt, no politike shifres should be sought nor vsed, neyther (hope we) any are sought or vsed, at least, our Brethren haue not yet proued no politike shift to maintaine vnlearned Pastors. Neither are godly and learned Homilies, nor the prescribed forme of godly prayers, any politike shifres to maintaine them. If they were: our Brethren their selues might be burdened, to seeke also such politike shifres, that doe likewise prescribe a forme of publike prayer. Such Ministers as are here described, blinde, fooles, Idiots, Idols, dumbe dogges, wolues, darkenesse, salte vnfaurie, ignorant and vnlearned persons; where any upon iust tryall are founde and conuicted so to be, and of whom is no hope that they may become able and willing to teach their flocke, it had bene better (we confesse) they had not bene admitted to that charge, or being crept in, are not to be reteyned. Notwithstanding, all such may orderly be remooued, and yet the prescript forme of common prayer, & of godly & learned homilies, & the superior authoritie of Bishops & Archb. with the other discipline and gouernement of the Church of England already established, may continue well inough in force, without these brouis, odious and impertinent quarels, of mainteyning any such vnlearned ministers.

The learned disc. But while we intreate of teaching, to be the dutie of a Pastor, we do not only mean publike preaching when the congregation is assembled:

which he would haue them to follow. You know (sayth he) from the first day priuate du- ry house. By which is manifest that the Pastor must not onely teach al his flocke openly, but also he must instruct euery family priuately, wherefo-euer he shall see it to be needefull or expedient. Which dutie cannot be accomplished by a reading Minister. Also in the 26. ver. of the same chap. hee commendeth vnto the Elders, a generall care of the whole flocke. 11. 20. 16.

Take heede to your selues (saith he) and to the whole flocke. Which care cannot be well, or at all vndertaken, except they be diligent to teach, both all and euery one of their flocke, as neede shall require. Which thing also he willeth them once againe to obserue in his example, verse, 31. saying: Therefore watch ye, remembering that by the space of three yeares, I ceased not 11. 20. 31.

night and day, exhorting euerie one of you. By these testimonies, it is euident to see, what diligence the holy Ghost requireth of Pastors in teaching, both publikely & priuately, as well generally all their flocke, as particularly euery one of them. He therefore that is vnapt, to execute this part of a Pastors dutie, is altogether vnmeete, to whom gouernance of the flocke of God, should be committed.

All this, with these three sentences of S. Paul, (as our Breth. here say) Bridges. are especially referred to priuate exhortation, reprehension, & consolation.

And we grant this particuler and priuate teaching, to be a part of a Pa- The Pastors stors dutie, and that he which is (altogether) vnapt to execute this parte priuate duty.

of a Pastors dutie, is altogether vnmeete, to whom gouernance of the flocke of God should be committed. But again we say, that he which is apt to execute this part of a Pastors dutie, and is diligent to teach al and euerie one priuately wherefoeuer he shall see it needefull & expedient, is not altogether vnmeete, to whom the gouernance of the flocke of God should be committed. With there are many, both godly and learned Pastors, that can doe, & do to their habilities execute & accomplish these duties, & yet haue not the gift of publike preaching: and therefore, for their open actions, why may they not the better & oftner, vse the reading of the prescribed forme of comon prayer, and other godly and learned homilies, in the publike assemblies of the flocke and congregation?

 tion of so many thousand soules, redeemed with the bloud of Christ, who

What Mini-

Our Bretheren are all in extremes, as though wee allowed the committing this office of Pastorship, to those that are altogether vnmeete, and to such whom we know certainly to be able to do no part of a Pastors dutie sufficiently, which to doe is a great and iust offence. But we defende one, & they impugne another. Albeit, vnder the quarell against that other, they meane to wyng out indeede, both the one and the other, and not only the more insufficient Pastor, but the most sufficient. As for us, we onely speake in defence, and that but by the way of tolleration for a time, of such as are not altogether vnmeete, but willing and able to doe some part, or the more parte, and that sufficiently of a Pastors office, though not all, or all, though not in such sorte, as other better learned, that can publicly interpret and apply the scriptures, to the circumstances of times, places, persons, occasions, and in publike preaching haue the gift, learnedly and effectually to exhort, to comfort, to admonish, to reprehende the hearers, and to confute the gainesayers: although, they be yet able to doe these thinges better in priuate. And in publike they followe the formes set downe and appointed, of godly and learned homilies.

Not, but that we heartily wish as well as they, that all Pastors could as freely and learnedly preach, as can the best; at least, better than they now can. And the godlie Bishoppes and Prelates doe (I hope) endeavour themselves in their charges, to exercise the Pastors thereunto. Neither doe we allowe, that the Pastorall charge should bee committed vnto anie, that in anye respecte is insufficient. But if it were before committed vnto them, except they be altogether vnmeete, and no hope of anie sufficiencie in them; we thinke not, that by and by they must be thrust out by head and shoulders. But that they may bee permitted to doe what they can doe, and be trayned vp with such exercises of learning, as whereby they may ware more able. And in the meane time, godlie and learned Preachers to trauell the oftner in such places, the better to supplie that which wanteth, and hereafter not to committe the charge but to such onely, as shall bee more sufficient to discharge it. And this not onely we like and agree vnto; but I trust, yea, I knowe in many places, (so farre as conueniently may be doone) it is with all diligence and care already provided for, and may well be doone, the Ecclesiasticall gouernement of the Church of Englande, notwithstanding standing as it both.

But necessitie (you will aunswere) hath no lawe. This necessitie wee haue answered before, to consist in two pointes. In lacke of lyuings, and lack of learned men. The first we haue shewed ought to be no lette, lette, no not of an houre, if the other want could so soone be supplied. And both must of necessitie be provided for in time, or else wee testifie before God and his holie Angels, that they which neglect or withstand this prouision, shalbe guiltie of the bloud of al thē, which perish through the default of teaching, in the whole realme.

This is a good answer (being vnderstode in his right sence) that here Bridges. againe we are presupposed to make, necessitie hath no law. Our Brethren answer hereunto, by distinction of the thinges wherein this necessitie doth consist, to wite, in these 2. points, in lacke of liuings, and lacke of learned men. Well then, our Brethren here graunt (when they can thus properly distinguish the same) that there is a necessitie in this matter.

Two necessities, lacke of liuing & lack of learned men.

But, to the first they answer, that they haue shewed it ought to be no let, no not of an howre. Nowe verily, then it is a gentle necessitie, that so soone can dispatch so great a matter. But, for the other necessitie of learned men, they cōfesse it to be harder, saying: if the other want could so soone be supplied. If then a longer time must of necessitie be required, for the supply of learned men, how then should all these Pastors that are not learned men be forthwith tourned out, and no longer at all be receyued? Should the Churches lye utterly vacant, vntill these learned mē might be gotten? And should we supply this want with a greater want, y is, with none at all in the meane time, neither learned nor vnlearned?

But haue our brethren espied it out now at length, that both these necessities, yea that of liuings as wel as y of learned men, must of necessity be provided for in time? This is an other song than our Brethren sang before, that the one must be done out of hand & suffred no longer: & the other ought to be no let no not an houre: but (as better aduised) they now begin to see, that soft fire makes swete malte, and in space will come grace. It must haue time, or euer that these necessities can be provided for, & perchance a longer time than an houre, to provide for the easier of both these necessities.

For the time to supplye these necessities is contrary to that they saide before.

But howsoeuer they lengthen or shorten the time of this prouision: I would wish our brethren here aduise themselves, how they protest before god and his Angels, such solenne testifications, as here they make, of thē that neglect or withstand this prouision. For, if they meane, this prouision, that they immediatly set downe: it is a very dangerous prouision, in diuerse respects, not only against meaner persons: but also against greater personages & states, than I would wish our Brethren Protestants: yea, then besides to holy subiects, or charitable Christians, to haue delt in: least (though they haue no ill meaning) they giue occasiō of further suspitiō. And though they say, they meane generally any goodly and conuenient prouision: as I hope there is no goodly Magistrate or Prelate, that neglecteth or withstandeth the same: so I admonish our Brethren once againe, to take hede

Our Brethren protestation of such dreadfull protestations. Least, while so importunately they urge for necessarie, this vnnecessarie prouision that they set downe, and other their platfoymes and mobilles of Ecclesiasticall regiment: they doe not their selues neglect and withstande, suche goodlie prouisions of the Prince, and of those that haue authoritie hereunto vnder God and her Maiestie. whereby these necessities might haue bene long ere now, much better than they are, provided for. And let the withall take no lesse heed, least this prouision of theirs that followeth, would not, while they thinke to mende the matter, make it farre worse, both for the necessitie and want of lyuings, and also of learned men. Which, whether it will or no, let vs see and consider these prouisions of theirs, to supply and take away these two necessities.

Pag. 54

The lacke of lyuings may be supplied, eyther by restoring the sacristies of Abbeys, as Impropriations of benefices, &c. or by deuiding the superfluities of some places that haue too much, vnto the that haue too little, or by anie other godly meanes, that may be thought meete to those godly and wise gouernours, that by duetie ought and by authoritie may doe it.

*A threefold
prouision.*

To supply the lacke of lyuings, our Brethren do here set downe a three-folde prouision. First, by restoring the sacristies of Abbeys, as impro-priations of benefices, &c. Say, soft (good Brethren) let vs pause awhile on this, for (me thinkes) the vertie name of the Abbeys (the Abbeys prouisions being so great and riche) seemes to promise great matters. And there were no more but this poore helpe to restore the sacri-leges of Abbeys, meaning their landes and goods: the necessitie of the poore Pastors lyuings, would be helped well inough, I warrant you.
All the other prouisions might surcease. But I pray you, if wee should goe no further but to this: call ye me this a prouision of an houres warning? They were a longer while ere they were sette vp. And as it is a true saying of olde, Facilius est destruere quam construere, We may quicklier pull downe with one hande, than wee can easilie builde againe with both. They were quickly downe, and yet in longer while than an houre, or a day, or a yeare: and trowe you they would bee all so sone restored?

This restoring requireth a longer time tha is here set downe.

But I hope, ye wotte well what ye mean. For ye say not, all the landes and goods of Abbeys should be restored: but, by restoring the sacristies of Abbeys, as impropriations of benefices, &c.

What our Breth. mean by the sacrilege of Abbeys.

And I pray you, what meane you by these wordes, the sacristies of Abbeys? doe ye not meane the taking away from them their landes and goods? If ye so doe: call ye that sacristie? which is the worst kinde and highest degree of theft, when they robbe such thinges as are consecrated to holie uses. But I hope our Brethren thinke not so well of those deas of

of thames, the cages of uncleannesse; and nurseries of superstition; the chiefe pillars and mayntenance of the Pope his errors, pryde and tyrannie; that their landes and goods as impropriations, &c. were debited to suche holie uses; that the taking of those goods from them, might be rightly called sacrilege, euen as though it had bene the robbery of Gods temple among the Jewes; or of the Church among vs: I thinke our Brethren haue not so good an opinion of those Abbyes, nor so ill an opinion of the parties, that toke those landes and goods from the Abbyes.

The taking away their landes and goods was no sacrilege.

For if they account the taking away of those impropriations, &c. from the Abbyes to be sacrilege: then what doe they account the takers away of them? And who were they that toke away these goods and landes from the Abbyes, and dissolved the Abbyes themselves? Not onely the most renowned Prince of happie memorie King Henrie the eight: but all the whole state and persons in the Realme. Which gaue them to the King, and the King to diuerse Nobles and subiectes, as he pleased. If our Brethren should call all these Church robbers (which the name sacrilege becometh) because they dissolved, toke and gaue them away by law, & that by the highest order of laws in all this lande, no doubt vpon no lesse deliberation of all the states of the Realme, than it was the iust punishment of almightie God vpon those Abbyes, and one of the greatest shatterings of Antichrists kingdome in this land: to cal now these doings sacrilege, were nothing so dutifull and considerate a speeche, as our Brethren in a matter so important should haue used. If our Brethrens drift be, that they would haue all the Abbye landes and goods restored: howe their goods can possibly be restored, I can not see; their riches and Jewels beeing no small part thereof, so disperfed and consumed, as fewe men aliove can tell where almost anie reliques of them remaine. And their houses for the most parte left desolate like Ierusalem, scarce one stone standing on another; or rather like Babylon, for owles and infamous birdes and beastes to nest in. As for their landes and reuenues might better be restored.

The Abbye landes and goods can not be well restored.

But from whome againe should they be taken? And from howe highe, and some from howe lowe personages in this lande? And howe manie should thereby euen vtterly be vndone? And would not this also aske time to be considered? Or by what name shall we terme the taking them away once againe, from them that now enioy them? Or by what right and law should they be taken from them, and giuen to the supply of the poore Pastors? I graunt, no small part of them might perhaps, haue bene better employed: as some parte (God be prayesd) was. But that is past and gone, and done by order and lawe, and done euen by Gods iustice and great prouidence, whosoever looketh deeply into the dooing of it. But whosoever it was doone, howe it now should be vndone, and all restored and that to the Pastors: would aske (I thinke) a greater deliberation, a longer time, & a woꝝke of moꝝe waight and difficultie than we all do twene, oꝝ we are able to foꝛecast would followe, and perchance would fall out p. wayes woꝛse, than this one would euer be able to counterpeise.

If they mean the lands & goods that the Abbyes got sacilegiouſly
they can not be restored.

But if now our Bꝛethꝛen say, that they vnderſtande not by the ſacrileges of Abbeys, that which was taken away from them: but rather that which the Abbeys tooke from others, namely the Pastors liuinges: whereupon they say: as impropriations of benefices, &c. What doth this &c. meane, but the landes and goodes that the Abbies had? And ſoꝝ my part,
I had rather indeede vnderſtand the woꝛds of our Bꝛethꝛen in this ſenſe, that the Abbeys comitted ſacrilege, in taking impropriations of bene-fices. Although wee muſt offer no injury no not to the Deuill himſelfe.
Neyther can we ſo call it ſacrilege of the Abbeys, when they receaued the ſame by lawe and oꝛder, and with all the parties conſents that were the owners, oꝝ that had any title oꝝ right therein. But doth not this come in effect all to one reckoning, to robbe Peter and paye Powle? What a number ſhould be robbed of their right, and manie, of the beſt oꝝ moſt part of their liuinges; and ſome, of all the liuinges that they haue, if the onely impropriations of benefices, without this &c. belonging to Abbeys, (ſome Abbie hauing little elſe) ſhould be reſtoꝛed ſoꝝ the ſupply of Pa-ſtors? Which to be done without the owners good willes, that peraduentu-re alſo bought it with their money, oꝝ by exchange with the Prince ſoꝝ other landes, by what title ſhould we terme this reſtoꝛing? And to tarie till the owners were willing to reſtoꝛe it, and yet good men and earneſt pꝛo-teſtants, and many alſo no ſinall fauozites of our Bꝛethꝛen. I thinke it would aſke a longer time then an houre, to deliberate thereon, & perchance cleane alienate them from fauozing theſe deuises of our bꝛethꝛen, except they can finde out ſome other prouiſion ſoꝝ their Paſtors.

The 2. prouiſion by diuiding of ſuperfluities.

But, if this will be no better liked: our Bꝛethꝛen haue another way to the woꝛde. Or by diuiding the ſuperfluities of ſome places that haue too much vnto them that haue too little.

What places
haue ſuper-fluities.

Pea ſoꝝ ſooth, this indeede comes neerer to the touch, and is moꝝe plauſi-ble of the twaine, if there be any moꝝe ſtates to be deuided. What talke ye of reſtoꝛing that that is paſt? Let vs fall to deuiding of that that re-maines. Many will like farre better of this deuise than of the former.
Foꝝ why, they may perhaps in this diuiſion, come by a ſhare ſoꝝ their part, if they haue ought to doe therein. Wee is an ill cooke that can not licke his owne fingers, if this deuision once come to ſingering? But our Bꝛethꝛen would diuide, but onely the ſuperfluities of ſome places that haue too much. And is there any places that haue yet ſuch ſuperflu-ties, & too much? I doubt me, if they be well examined, they will be found to ouerflowe with a ſmall ſuperfluitie (God wotte) if not rather theſe places

places that are envied most, or suspected to have such superfluity and too much: have that copetency that may defray their necessary charge, & maintain (not with superfluity, but with sufficiency) the decency of their places and callings.

¶ Byethen, let us take heed of Iudas example, and not thinke such a-bundance superfluity or too much, when it overfloweth (if it overfloweth at all) so farre as stretcheth to the help and comfort of those that have to little. For if any do abuse their superfluity, (have they any) or their sufficiency, to their owne excess, either in sparing or in spending, and follow not the Apostles example, whiche knewe howe to abounde and howe to want, Philipians. 4. nor regarde his rule prescribed to the Corinthians: Let your abundance supply their defect that their abundance might supply your defect that there might bee equality, which (as Caluine sayth thereon) may bee made of a mutuall collation by a fit proportion, notwithstanding some possesse more and some lesse, and the giftes be vnequally distributed: If (I say) they that possesse more keepe not this rule: the fault is personall, not reall, rather the man, than the matters. And if one doe ill, he may be amended, or removed, and another may do moze good, the living standing intyre as it did, yea, though it were superfluous indeede, and though our brethren thinke it too much, yet of twaigne, better too much than too little, Nequius est dare quam accipere, as the Lorde sayd: And, si honores mutant mores: mutant mores et honores. If honours chaunge manners: let manners chaunge honours, and not enuy the manors for the manners.

¶ And what is meant here by these glauing speeches the Superfluities of some places to have too much? Are not Bishopricks, Colleges, Cathedral Churches, and Hospitales, here aimed at? as though these places had too much, and superfluity of livings, which they would haue eyther clean taken away, or pared and circumsised of some of their livings, lands and manors as too much, or doe they mean it of the places and Lordships of the temporaltie? that they nor any estate should haue any livings, that might to our brethren be thought superfluous and too much, but that a diuision must be made also thereof among these Pastors, that haue (as they say) too little. Nay, if these wordes should be vnderstoode of such diuision: they would that not vnworthily be liked as ill and worse than were the former, of restoring the sacriedges of Abbeys as impropriations of benefices &c. whereby not onely Bishopricks, Colleges, Cathedral churches, and Hospitales, but all the estates, even the highest and all in ciuill policy (vnder pretence of reforming the Church, and diuiding the Church livings) might be called in the compasse of this newe diuision, and as superfluous be meetely well rebated. But, if this be leperdous euen to the whole state, besides manifest injuries offered, not onely to many worship

Prouision. I will, yea, to all the nobles, and (that is most iniurious) to her most excellent Maiesty, by whome vnder almighty God, we enioy, be it much or little, all the linings we haue: and therefore the deuise of this diuision may not be attempted, without the incurring greater inconueniences than our brethren would thinke. When last of al, & in generall for all, this must serue the turne. Or by any other godly means, that may be thought meet, to these godly and wise gouernors that by duty ought, and by authority may do it.

The third
prouision.

This prouision was well referred to the last call, and when all sayles, may well serue to helpe at a pinch, in steade of all other deuises. If it will be no butter, make it cheere. If it will not sadge by one meane, then trie it by any other meanes. Say (say our Brethren) not so, but by any other godly meanes. And what godly meanes is that hath it no name; but any other shall we depend, we can not tell vpon what? Any other godly meanes (say they) that may bee thought meet to these, &c.

What? and shall it be arbitrary, that they shall thinke meete? and who be they that thus shall thinke meete, we cannot tell what?

Who? These godly and wise gouernors.

These; which be these?

These that by duty ought, and by authority may doe it.

But still I desire that we might knowe by some more playne description of what state or condition these shoulde be: for this is still Ignorant per ignorantiam. We tell vs of gouernors, and these gouernours, and godly gouernors, & wise gouernors, that by duty ought and by authority may doe it. And we are neuer the wiser, who they are, nor what office they haue; nor of what vocation they be: whether they be gouernors, that are so called in this Learned Discourse of Ecclesiastical gouernment, or whether ye meane any other ciuill Magistrates. For it may bee easily ghesled, yee meane not the Bishops & Prelates: nor yee meane (as it should appear by these wordes) the Queenes Maiesty. And who then shoulde these godly & wise gouernors be, that by duty ought, and by authority may do it, without the licence of their soueraigne? I see no godly no wise gouernor, that may or ought, or (I thinke) wil intermeddle in such restorings, diuisions, or prouisions, as here in a generall name, of I wot not what godly meanes, nor howe, nor when, nor to whome, nor to how many of them, it may, or it may not be thought meete. Is not this a Learned discourse, that our brethren haue here deuised, for the reforming, helping, supplying, restoring, prouiding, & diuiding of these linings? and thus they conclude this point, concerning the linings of the Pastors. Let vs now see how they deuise to help the other point, for the want of learned men.

The lear ned Dis.

Pag. 54

55. 56. The lack of learned preachers must bee so farre soorth supplied, as it may presently, by encouraging and exhorting so many as are able, to take take that charge in hande, by overseeing the readers and schollers in Divinity in the vniuersities, to doe dueties, the one in teaching purely, the other in learning diligently: by thrusting out these vnprofitable heades of Colleges, & other drone Bees, which eyther are vnable or vnwilling to set forward the studie of diuinity in their seuerall houses, and placing diligent and learned gouernors and studentes in their places, and by other good meanes reforming vniuersities, by erecting of Doctors and teachers, in as many places as may be: by compelling the vnlearned Ministers, in whome is anie towardnesse, to become schollers in Diuinity, with some allowance of liuing if they be willing to study, or else to send them from whence they came, to get their liuinges with sweate of their browes: and especially considering the greatnesse of the haruest and fewnesse of the Laborers, by praying earnestly the Lorde, of the Haruest in this great necessity of ours, to thrust forth Laborers into his Haruest.

 And in the meane time till God shall blesse vs with a sufficient number of Learned pastors, to take some extraordinary and temporall order for overseeing the Churches, that although they can-not bee all sufficiently instructed and gouerned: yet so many shall not bee altogether destitute, of all knowledge and spirituall gouernement, as there are now in this most corrupt state of the Church, in which we haue hitherto continued.

If the lacke of learned Preachers, must so farre forth be supplied, as it Bridges.
 may presently: then must not all the pastors that are not learned Preachers be presentlie displaced. Which is flat contrary to that which before so earnestly was urged, that they must no longer be retained. But now when our brethren come more aduisedly to consider and set downe before themselues, their own deuises, that they would haue for remedies: they begin to find & confesse that, which before they saw not & impugned. The first means that is here set down, is by encouraging and exhorting so many as are able, to take that charge in hande. This is good counsell, adding fitnessse to ability: for many are able, that for diuers respects it were not fit, they shold take that charge in hand. But sure encouragement & exhortation is so good means to fit & able persons thereunto: would to God our brethren the selues, would follow this their own good counsell: and not by these vnnecessary disturbāces, discourage & dehort many not only fit & able to take that charge in hand: but that haue taken it in hande, & haue both couragiously them-selues laide hande to this plowe, and haue encouraged others, and their heartes are now so discouraged, their handes so weakened and faine downe, yea, they haue so faine away, and pulled away their handes from the plough and tyll of Gods field: that withall they haue discouraged many other, which are eyther become of ecclesiastical more secular, Nemo reliquit nos ex seculum est presens saeculum or they are become New.

The first
 remedy of encouragement.

Neutralles in religion: yea, some are become playne apostates to the open aduersaries of the Gospell. Who onely are much encouraged hereby, exhorting themselves and others to gape for the spoyle of vs both, while wee thus contende and strue one with another, and all they holde close together against vs.

If therefore our Brethren will exhort and encourage other indeede, let them first leane off these innovations, and especiallve these eager contentions for them, and ioyne together with their Soueraigne Prince, with the Magistrates and prelates, with the lawes established, like good subiectes, and with vs their Brethren brotherlike, in defence and aduancing the Ecclesiasticall state of regiment that wee liue vnder: and if we finde or think ought to be amisse, take the reforming of it in such humble, charitable, e modest maner, as becometh our calling, without such scisme and breach of Gods and the Princes peace therefore, and so shall wee discourage and daunt our aduersaries, confirme our selues, and withal encourage and exhort moze effectually, so many as shalbe able and meet to take that charge in hand.

The seconde remedie of overseeing Students to doe their duties.

The seconde meanes is: By overseeing the readers and scollers in diuinitie in the vniuersities, to doe their duties, the one in teaching purely, the other in learning diligently.

This also is a good counsell. But who shall be these Overseers of these Readers in Diuinity to teach purely? if they be all equal: how shall this be without a superior authority to oversee them so to do, and continually to oversee that it so continue? Doth not this imply a continuing superiority? and of what function shall this continuing superior be? shall he be a Doctor or a Pastor? Because our brethren so necessarily would haue these offices alwayes distinguished, and vsed by distinct and severall persons. Shall the Pastor oversee the Teacher and that in teaching, which is made the proper function of the Doctor? But howe then was the Doctors office before, Page. 13. made the cheefe and principall office that is in the Church? or if the Teacher or Doctor shall oversee the Pastors, why is not the name of overseer which is the English of the name Bishop, that our brethren alwayes make all one with pastor, as well competible to the Office of the Teacher or Doctor?

Why they restraîne the overseer to the vniuersities.

And againe why doe our Brethren here restraîne the office of the Readers in diuinity, and of those that should purely teach, to the vniuersities? Whereas before it was moued, pag. 15. that Doctors and Teachers should bee appointed in euery Congregation: yea, anon after, among these meanes here deuised, they would haue Doctors and Teachers erected in as many places as may be. But here they mention onely the Vniuersities. But now if this be a meanes (as in deed it is a very good meanes) to the supply of learned preachers: by overseeing the readers and scholars lers

lers in Diuinity, in the Vniuersities to doe their duties, the one in Teaching purely, the other in learning diligently: so (God be praised) the vniuersities are not destitute either of teachers to teache purely, either of scholars to be learned diligently, either of ouerseers, both Bish. Chancellours, Vicechancellors, heads of houses, Deans in houses, to ouersee these thinges done accordingly, if we could be content and thankfull for it.

The third meanes is, by thrusting out these vnprofitable heades of Colleges and other drone bees, which either are vnable or vnwilling, to set forward the study of Diuinity, in their seuerall houses, & placing diligent and learned gouernours in their places.

The third
 meanes by thrusting
 out. &c.

God saue all: here is towards againe, another curious intertainment of Tom Drumme, by the heade and shoulders to thrust out (not nowe any vnlearned Ministers) but the heades of Colleges, and other (we know not who) vnder the title of Drone Bees: yet some affirm y^e a Drone Bee, may be a better head of a hie of Bees, at least wise, may doe better service in the hie, than a waspe, or than some stinging Bees may. I pray God this desire of thrusting out of the heades of Colleges, spring not from the priuate quarrells of some angry waspes, or of some busy Bees. These heades of Colleges are pretended to be vnprofitable: perchante in this sense, that they are not for their profite. But who are these vnprofitable heades of Colleges? For all these wordes might seme not so much to note some, as to giue a glieke to all, that are the heades of Colleges, to be vnprofitable. But for a the w^o of restraint, that they mean not all but some, here is added, which are either vnable or vnwilling to set forward the study of Diuinity in their seuerall houses. And what means our brether by this, that the heades of all the Colleges and houses, should be their selues professors of diuinity? but what if their places, and their whol foundation in their seuerall houses, doe altogether or for the most part, require both y^e in them selues, in the Fellows and Schollers of that house, another function and profession, eyther of Lawe or Physicke? How shall they then set forward the study of Diuinity in their seuerall houses? shal they break their statutes and foundations, to set it forward? or what is meant by this setting forward? I hope there is none suffered that sets it backward, but to forward as they may, and as the foundations of their seuerall Houses will permit. And if any bee other wise, and be found culpable: there are already such provisions, both of the priuate statutes of their seuerall houses, and of the publike Lawes of the Vniuersities, and of the Diocesse, and of the whole Realme: that such heades of Colleges as can be lawfully proued to be vnprofitable, & other Drone Bees, are already sufficiently prouided for. They may wel be reformed or displaced, the state of both the vniuersities & of all the Church of England, intierly standing as it doth. As for the placing of other diligent and learned gouernours and studentes in sion already their places: Soft a while the old must first be continued, and be orderly removed, or ever these fit to other governors that would be, be they never so diligent or learned, can be admitted governors in their places. Other wise, their diligence might be thought suspicious, for all their learning, if they haue not learned to carry till they be lawfully called to be governors.

The 4. means generall.

The fourth meanes is this, And by other good meanes reforming vniuersities. This is generall and vncertaine, as befoze was our brethrens conclusion of their meanes, for the supply of linings.

Bees better than waspes
in hives.

Neither are the Vniuersities (thanks be to God) destitute of many good meanes already provided, for the reforming of such thinges as are amisse among them. Although our brethren seeme here to go a great deale further, than to Readers, and to heads of colleges, or to abhor Drone bees in seuerall houses. For in saying they wold haue by some other good means

Vnprofitable heads of Colledges.

the Vniuersities reformed: what do they else but playnly inferre, that the whole state of both the Vniuersities shoulde be newe formed, & as it were made again, according to the regiment of their platformes: although they were altogether corrupted and out of order. And thus vnder pretence of the vnlearned Ministers: all the Learned men in the Realme, yea the nurseries of learning, and all the foundations of their seuerall Colledges and Houses, with the whole corporations of both the Vniuersities, must be altered and come vnder the reformation of this our Brethrens Learned Discourse of Ecclesiasticall government.

And yet our Brethren not thus contented, adde a fift beyond means, which would not onely vndermine the Vniuersities: but vnder a thew of encreasing the number of Learned men, would both discourage the best learned in the land & hazard all the land: to be pestered, with a far greater number of vnlearned pastors than there are. For what mean our brethren by this mean?

By erecting of Doctors and teachers in as many places as maye bee. Would they haue moe Vniuersities erected in as many places as may be? or would they haue Doctors erected without the erection of the Vniuersities: and that (as they sayde befoze, Pag. 15.) Doctors and Teachers shoulde be appointed in every Congregation? Would they nowe haue that every Congregations shoulde haue authority to erect Doctors and Teachers? As hee thinks, it is another matter to erect one to be a Doctor or Teacher, and being already so erected, to be appointed or allowed a place where to teache and exercise the function of his Doctorship. I hold well with it, that he might be appointed or assigned to teach, in as many places and congregations as may be. And this yet is spoken with more circumspectio, than to haue such Doctors & Teachers in every Congregation.

The prouisi-on already provided.

But herein this again is far worse, that these doctors & teachers shoulde be erected & created, or intituled doctors, in respect of this office of professing the teaching of Diuinitie, but onely in those places, where he shoulde bee thoroughly trained vp in a conuenient time of yeres, and tried with the exer-

exercises & disputatiōs of the scholes, by the learned & already approued ^{for.} doctors in the vniuersities, professing the study of diuinity. For any to be admitted at all for readers & teachers in diuinity, except the learned pre-lats, B. & ouerseers of those places, where he shold be appointed to teach had found him sufficient therunto, least a yong scholler should be erected, as Paul forbiddeth 1. Timoth. 3. 6. Whereon saith Beza, who our Geneva Bibles 1. Tim. 3. & note both follow: Least euen in that that he is lift vp into that degree, hee take occasion of pride, that may ouerthrow him, & so hee fall in the same condemnation, that the deuill himselfe did. And Cal. saith: because many then were brought to the faith that were of excellent wit & learning, S. Paul forbidderh such to be admitted to the office of a B. so soone as they haue yeelded their name to Christ. For he sheweth how much dāger there is in that matter. For certaine it is, that for the most part, they are puffed vp & ful of ostentation: & so it shal come to passe, that their arrogancy & ambition shal ouerthrow them headlong. That which Paul saith, we find by experience, for the yong schollers are not only feruent to wax bolde, but also are swolne vp with a fond confidence, as though they could scie clean through the clouds. And therefore not without cause they are kept back from the honor of a Bishops office, vntil that in successe of time, the haughtines of their witte be tamed.

And the like may wee well say for this office of doctorship, that none are to be admitted into this office, & adozned with this especiall title of Doctor: but those that vpon experience growen in continuance of time, and approued triall of their exercises requisite by order therunto, are by the iudgment of the best learned in that profession in the Vniuersitie authorised & entituled by that degree, to be a Doctor or professor in diuinity. And bying once these orders of the Vniuersities degrees into cōtempt it wil fall out to be the apparant discouragement of the learned, from the studie & profession of diuinitie; besides the endaungering of the whole & chiefest state of the Vniuersities: and incouragement and giuing licence to euerie fresh wit or rash head or euer he be halfe ripe, (& had more need to learne,) to intrude and erect himselfe to teach, Quicquid in buccam venerit, and to call himself, or to be erected a Doctor, when, God wot, he deserueth not among those y he learned indeed. (or if he shold be wel apposed in the vniuersities,) the name scarce of a scholler. Is not this the way to all licentiousnesse, for who is so bolde as blinde baiard? and to open the gappe to all errours, tumultes, inonations and vnder pretence of learning, and of exclaiming against the vnlearned, to ouerthrow those learned that we haue, &ea, with all the very nurseries and store-houses of all good learning, and to encumber vs with 20. vnlearned, busie new erected Doctors, teachers and preachers, for any one vnlearned that now for lack of preaching, our brethren complayne vpon?

meanes
compulsion

The first meanes is: by compelling the vnlearned Ministers, in whom is any towardnesse to become schollers in diuinitie, with some allowance of lyuing if they be willing to studie, or else to sende them from whence they came to get their liuinges with the sweate of their browes.

How farre
foorth this already is in practise.

This counsell is not to be mislikened, if the compelling (here mentioned) be not violent. The former part already is in practise, for the vnlearneder sort of the Ministers, in whom there is any towardnesse to become schollers in diuinitie, which are compelled to employ theselues in the studie thereof, that they may become the more learned, and haue exercises and visitations of sette purpose to the same ende: and being willing to studie, haue some allowance of lyuing, in the cures where they serue, and doe the best seruice that they can.

As for the other, such as haue not any towardnesse, nor any willingnes to learne, of which sorte (if there be anie) I hope there is but verie fewe, and with there were none at al: except age or infirmities moue some compassion, to releiue them with almes, they are well worthie so to get their liuing with the sweate of their browes, and so doe get it, for any that (I thinke) will giue them any allowance of lyuing, being neither able nor willing, to doe any seruice in their Churches. Except some here and there may haue some liuing already of his owne. And yet, if his liuing be ecclesiasticall: hee is deppriuable, or shall be driuen to finde another, both able and willing, by the eccl. lawes now in force: which if they be not executed accordingly, neuer blame the lawe but conuince the officer to bee blame worthie, which should better looke vnto it.

The last
meanes
prayer.

The last meanes, is this: And especially by considering the greatnes of the haruest, and fewnesse of the labourers, by praying earnestly the Lorde of the haruest in this great necessitie of ours, to thrust foorth labourers into his haruest.

Math. 9.

This is the very best means of all the other, and deserue the first place, except it be reserved to the last, as to the chiefest, when all other meanes faile, then to fall to prayer vnto almighty God, to helpe the matter. This remedie which christ teacheth, Mat. 9. is not now first to be put in practise, but hath bene and is of all the faithfull prooued by experience long since, to be a good and most effectuall meanes, God be praised for it, and giue vs grace, not to strue against the blessing of God. For, this is great vntankfulnesse to all those Laborers whome God hath now this good while, since the shining of this day starre, and revealing of the Gospell, thrust foorth into his Haruest among vs, Our Bethzen beginning now to cal in question not onely our actions but all our Function, and disdayning the Labors, euen of those that died in the burthen of this Labor,, begin so fast to call for other fresh workemen, and order all the worke in a newe fashion, and vrge it with such a hot and contentious zeale, that the olde and best laborers,

Prayer is best meanes borers yet living, are more then halfe discouraged. And, but that they look vp to the Lorde of the Haruest, which thrust them foorth, their heartes shoulde sayle them. And many other toward Laborers, that on the Lordes calling, were but late entred into this Haruest, begin to stande in a mannering, and drawe backe, except a number of these our too so;warde bzethzen. And therefore indede, we had neede on all handes, without ceasing: & moste earnestly to pray to God, to thrust foorth moe laborers into his haruest, and to comfort them that be thrust in by him: least both Laborers & haruest, & all, ware thinner and more backward than it dooth. Praie, Praie. Now upon all these foresaid meanes, our bze thzen make their conclusion, saying.

And in the meane time till God shall blesse vs with a sufficient number of learned Pastors, to take some extraordinary and temporall order for ouer-seeing the Churches, that although they cannot be all sufficientlie enstructed and gouerned: yet so many shall not be altogether destitute of all knowledge and spirituall gouernement, as there are nowe in this moste corrupt state of the Church, in which wee haue hetherto continued.

*The learned Dis-
 Pag. 56.*

These are very hard speeches against the present state of the Church of Englande, and in truth by no meanes iustificable: that it is a moste corrupt state of the Church, and so hath hetherto continued. For if it be now in a most corrupt state, then was it not more corrupt in the time of all the popish superstitions. If wee now, (as our bze thzen in their Preface to this Learned discourse confesse) maintaine the true and holie faith, and haue the Gospell freely preached, as in this learned discourse they also graunt: are we so corrupt as when manifest errors in doctrine and faith were maintained, and the preaching of the Gospell suppressed and persecuted? And yet we debarre them not altogether of the title of the Church, though a Church exceeding much corrupted. And doth the most corruption of the Church, lie in matters (or rather in formes) of discipline? Admitting we haue a discipline that were corrupted: notwithstanding, professing the holy truth in all pointes of faith and doctrine. The Saxon Churches haue in some pointes the like discipline, to that our bze thzen contend for, and yet in some materiall pointes of the Lordes Supper, they hold as grosse, if not farre grosser errors, and corruption, than doe the Papists: And is our state (being in that and all other pointes of doctrine most sincere) more corrupt than theirs? Which I speake not as insulting vpon them, but with pitie and reuerence: but onely to note our bze thzens vn-thankfull not acknowledging, of our exceeding, more sincere, and farre better estate than theirs, and manie others, as the Grecians, Armenians, Indians, Ethiopians, &c. which are yet acknowledged to be the the Churches of Christ, albeit all differ in discipline, and are not free

A Defense of the gouernment established from errors euen in doctrine, which God be praised we are, by our breth. owne confession.

For whose cause our breth. raise
this slander.

But why doe our Brethren thus exclaime on the estate of our Church as a most corrupt state? Forsooth because (as they saie and doe imagine) there are many that are altogether destitute of all knowledge and spirituall gouernment. If they meane Papists, and wicked worldlings, where are not some, and that too many intermingled in the Church of GOD?
And so, there may be many, (we graunt, lamenting it,) among vs but not of vs. And the more (I feare) by reason of these garboyles among our selues. But if they bee the children of God, and the true Church indeede, and haue pieres of vnderstanding, I hope, nay I am sure, there is none, no not one such, as is altogether destitute of all knowledge and spirituall gouernment, set a side naturall Idiotes, which are as infants, and without discretion. Nay, not the most of the worldlie hypocrites, are altogether destitute of all knowledge of God, (and of his word) and of all partes of spirituall gouernment, although they knowe not all pointes, or manie pointes not so exatlie, as other doe, or as their selues should doe. I speake not this to defende anie mannes default and corruption in these thinges: but to shew, that this is a greate deale more aggrauated, than eyther nee-deth, or is true, or than our Brethren haue anie iust cause to accuse so hainoullie. the whole state of the Church of England, to bee a most corrupted state.

The manifest inconueniences
that our breth. runne into by these desires.

But see nowe, howe our malecontented Brethren, finding such a grie-uous fault, of this most corrupt state of the Church, though they might haue all these meanes, that they haue heere deuised to reforme the same, graunted vnto them: yet are they faine in the end to confesse, that this their Learned discourse of Ecclesiasticall gouernment cannot take place, but that they must take some extraordinarie and temporall order, for o-uerseeing of the Churches, in the meane time, vntill GOD shall blesse vs, with a sufficient number of learned pastors.

Our breth.
allowance of tollera-tion for a time.

So that, they cannot for all these meanes, helpes, prouisions, supplyes, desires, or anie other thing that they are able with all their learned heads consulting together, imagine howe their Ecclesiasticall regiment shoulde be set vp. And yet, wee must first downe out of hande and alwaye with that Ecclesiasticall regiment that we haue, ere euer not onelie they shall come in place, but or euer wee haue or can yet deuise, how wee shall deale in the meane time, till GOD shall blesse vs with a sufficient number of learned pastors, which when this till, and this sufficient number will be filled vp, to our Brethrens contentation: is not here limited by them, nor we are able to coniecture.

But coulde not our Brethren haue forsaene this before, which here now

now, (after all their debating and deuising,) they be gonne to see, and are diuinen to confesse? And how then must all Pastors that bee not learned preachers, be presentlie turned out and no longer retayned? W: if they may lawfullie for a time (which withall when it shall stint, is vncertaine) continue still and be retained: how then are these thinges either true, or tollerable in them? Shall wee tolerate such notozious and most corrupt wickednesse as they crie out vpon, till God shall blesse vs with a sufficient number of learned pastors? And till GOD shall thus blesse vs, what extraordinarie and temporall order of ouerseers of the Churches will God blesse: if hee haue flatlie forbidden all other, than that onelie order which our Brethren pretend, that God so straightlie hath commanded? W: what extraordinarie or temporall order can, or dare anie, or all the Church auouch, or presume to take vpon them, to appoint or tolerate anie time?

Whether
our breth.
can dispense for a time with thinges contrarie to Gods commandment.

If the ouerseers that our Brethren bidge, and the orders of Ecclesiasticall gouernment, which they set downe, bee of GOD commanded, for ordinarie and perpetuall to all ages and Churches: either they woulde haue vs wilfullie to transgresse Gods commaundment, without anie speciall warrant, on presumption of their dispensation for a time, or else, they must needs graunt (and that is indeede the verie truth, which they dare not for shame openlie confesse, although of fine force they are constrained to yeelde to it in the ende, and in a byous manner to acknowledge it) that the Ecclesiasticall gouernment & order for ouerseeing the Churches, which they pretend: is not of anie necessitie by GOD commanded, nor anie perpetuall order to all ages and Churches, by Christ and his Apostles prescribed. Which if it be not, then our Churches state is not so corrupt as they exclaime.

Nay, let them looke then vnto it, how trulie they auouch it so to bee, and make such a contentious rupture in the Church for it. If it be, howe can they here giue anie extraordinarie and temporall order, warrant or pla- karde, for anie meane time, to the contrarie? So that both wayes, our Brethren apparantlie goe about herein, both to abuse themselves and vs.

But now, thinking that by this Interim, wrought by all these for- sayd meanes, they should effect many and mightie matters: our Brethren waring bolde, proceede to aunswere euen to anie mannes thoughtes, that shoulde doubt so much as anie difficultie in bzinging about these thinges.

If anie man (saie they) thinke this is overhard to bee brought to passe, The lear- ned Dis. let him consider that there was neuer woorke of more difficultie, than to build vp the Church of God, so that the necessitie & comoditie of the work shuld cause vs to staie nothing at the difficultie therof, for with our Pag. 56. faithfaithfull endeauour, wee shall not want the mightie assistance of God, who will blesse our godlie labours, with greater successe than wee can looke for.

Bridges

What our brethren
woulde haue vs before-hand
to imagine.

Whie wee dare not hazzard on this imagination.

How hard many of these things are, we haue heard already, and easily may coniecture. Yea, how dangerous and vnecessarie some of them be, and how some of them are already in experience. But now to our better encouragement, to giue the onset on all these meanes; wee must imagine, that they are the building vp of the Church of God, than the which nothing is more necessarie or commodious: and therefore nothing should cause vs to staie at the difficultie thereof. Merilie Fortis imaginatio can do much, as we see in our Brethren that imagine these presupposals, and thereon dare aduenture to enterprize neuer so difficult attempts, to atchieue this their strong imagination. But godlie and staied men must not run on such headstrong fantasies, but vpon assured groundes. Now, when we should come to the ground-wooke of this building, and finde that, which our Brethren imagine, hath no better foundation on Gods word, for the building vp of such a frame, as they, and not the word of God prescribeth: & with all, that this their modill which they haue complotted, is the manifest scattering and pulling downe of that which in the Church of God is already builded: and for the chiefeest part, is not so necessarie, and in some pointes most dangerous, besides the difficultie to bring the same to passe: no meruaile though so many staie, and dare not hazard to build on this platforme, and in this manner as our Brethren call vpon vs. For as Saint Paul saith Gal. 2. 18. If I build againe the things which I haue pulled downe, I make my self a transgressor: so If I pul down the things that I haue builded (if they be wel builded vp) I make my selfe also another transgressor. And sith we haue already builded on the onlie foundation Iesus Christ, and God hath already blessed our building: if now any other will build thereon, and turquise our building: except he can bring better proofes that we build amisse, and that God allowes not, nor likes our building: and yet we, that not onelie we may more easily, and also with more beautie and profite, build after another order that he wil teach vs, but that we must and are bound to build on that fashon: he presumeth too farre, and offereth vs wrong, and maye doe more hurt and hinderance to the building of the Church of GOD, than euer (for all his zeale) hee shall doe good, or be able to further the same, except to put it further off, than already it is.

But (saie our Brethren) with our faithfull endeauour wee shall not want the mightie assistance of God, who will blesse our godlie labours, with greater successe than we can looke for.

Our incouragement in Gods blessing against all these temptations

Merlie true, in all faithfull endeauours, grounded on a good matter, and proceeding by a good order, GOD will blesse our godlie labours, and his name be blessed for it, so he hath done, notwithstanding all all the stops both of our foraine enemies, and of our owne brethren do offer. mesticall impediments, we haue not wanted the mightie assistance of God, blessing our godlie labors, and that with greater successe, than they acknowledge or wish, or we haue deserved, or in these troubles wee could haue looked for. So that in this behalf we may wel recomfort our selues with that saying of the 124. Psalm: If the Lord had not bene on our side (maie Israel now saie) if the Lord had not bene on our side, when men rose vp against vs, they had swallowed vs vp quicke, when their wrath was kindled against vs. And in the 127. following: Except the Lord build their house, the labour is in vaine that build it. And since God hath thus blessed our handie workes, even beyond all that wee looked for, (for although wee might well looke for no lesse, of the professed aduersaries of the Gospell, yet who would haue looked for such vnthankfulnesse to God, and such hinderance of the worke of God, among our selues at our Brethrens hands, the professors with vs of Christs Gospell?) Shall we now also looke for new deuises, and with them contemne and alter all that the Lord hath alreadie so mightilie blessed? and looke for him also to blesse the labours of our handes, in the contrarie to that we haue begun to labour, and wherein we haue so prosperously proceeded, and which God hath alreadie blessed, with such mightie assistance and successe? But now our Brethren supposing these things might be well compassed, most confidently they auowe and saie:

If God therefore will graunt that these and such like meanes may take place, by the high authoritie of our dreade Soueraigne, the Queenes Maiestie, and continue this comfortable peace, which wee inioie, vnder her most gracious gouernment, we dare icopard our lines, that in lesse than halfe the time, that is alreadie properously passed, of her Maiesties moste honourable and glorious raigne, the necessitie of learned Pastors shall be so well supplied, as we shall haue no great cause to complaine for lack of them, if we may vse like diligence to continue them: if not, wee will spend the rest of our life in mourning, & expectation of the heauie vengeance of GOD, which must needes fall vpon vs for this manifest contempt of his expresse commandement, and neglect of increasing the glorious kingdome of our sauour Christ. In the meane time we may boldly saie with the Apostle, A&. 20. We testifie vnto you this daie, that wee are cleane from the bloud of you all, for we haue not failed to shew you the whole counsell of God concerning the regiment of his Church.

For some of these and such like meanes, it hath pleased God alreadie to graunt, that they may and doe take place, and would take moze place, were it not for their impotune hindering (as I sayd befoze) not so much of the open aduersaries of the Gospell, as of our owne Brethren that fauour and professe it, and yet preposterously doe stop the course thereof. As for doe not to graunt them. And therefore when we see the will and graunt of God already, it were fitter we applied our wills to his, than to wish his (contrarie to his ordinance) to become applicable unto our wills. And where our Brethren would haue God graunt these their petitions to take place, by the high authoritie of our dreade Soueraigne the Queenes Maiestie, sith we manifestlie see that by her Maiesties high authoritie, GOD hath graunted such good successe to his Gospell, and repaired his Church, by such lawfull means of discipline, as God hath both allowed and blessed: which withall, is by her Maiesties high authoritie established and confirmed amongst vs: what a tentation is this to God, not to bee content, but to craue that he would graunt other new meanes? And what obedience is this to her Maiesties high authoritie? If her Maiestie herein haue any au-thoritie at all, why do not we obey it? If her Maiesties authoritie here be high, why doe we abase and bring it lowe? If shee bee our dread Soue-raigne: why dreade we not thus to ouerthwart al her lawes and ordinances, and without all dreade to contemne them, and to cast forth such contumelious and slanderous speeches, on all the state of the Church, to be most corrupt? If her Maiestie be the Soueraigne, that is, the Supream gouernor under Christ, of this portion of the Church: How doth not this defamation more blemish her Maiesties government, than al these faire speeches can suffer to salue it? And how call they her Maiestie Soueraigne, and not acknowledge her soueraigntie or supremacie? And if we inioy this comfortable peace vnder her most gracious gouernment: why do not we continue it, and be thankfull to God and to her Maiestie for it? Why disturbe wee it, and make it vncomfortable? To conclude, if it be a most gracious go-uernment, how is the state of the Church being gouerned vnder her Maiestie, most corrupted? Can most gracious and most corrupt agree together? What fellowship hath righteousness, (saith Saint Paule, 2. Cor. 6. 14.) with vnrightheousnesse? and what communion hath light with darknesse? & what concord hath Christ with Belial? Doth her Maiestie no government at all ouer the Church, but onelie ouer the Realme and ciuile pollicie?

Are these tearmes then giuen her as a mere ciuile Prince? or is her Maiestie acknowledged indeede, the supream gouernour in all Ecclesiasticall causes, in the Church of England? If she be: how doth shee looke vnto her government in the Church of England, the state of the Church standing most corrupt? These things hang together like Germanes lippes. Who saith not that they speak cleane contradictions in this stammering? While they would thus plaie on both handes, and giue onelie these fayre titles to her Maiestie for fashion sake, and to auoid suspition, or to winne fauour: but if in verie dede they meant as they saie they would neuer thus impugne the established government, orders, lawes, and proceedings of her Maiestie.

Our breth.
contradiction of her Maie-
sties government.

They

They confesse that vnder her most gracious gouernment the time hath alreadie prosperously passed: and yet they inferre vnder hand, that it hath passed so vnprosperously, that in lesse than halfe the time, they dare icopard their liues, if they might haue their deuises brought to passe, that the necessitie of learned Preachers shall bee so well supplied, as wee shall haue no great cause to complaine for lacke of them. And yet withall they saie, her Maiesties raigne is most honourable and glorious. Which if it be: then haue they no cause to complaine. But they complaine of these things with great outcries, and saie they haue great cause to complaine, as though her Maiesties raigne were so dishonourable and ignominious, that it nothing tended the honour and glorie of God, which (they saie) they onelie seeke in this their Ecclesiasticall regiment.

So that in commending her Maiesties most honourable and glorious raigne, what meane they but of such an externall honour and glorie of the world, as little or nought respecteth the honour and glorie of the Lorde. This is not well done of our Brethren, thus to slander her Maiesties gouernment, and the whole state of the Church of England, vnder these faire and coulourable speeches: least our Breth. might seme in anie shew, to come nere to those dissembling hypocrites, whome Dauid so grienously complaineth on, Psal. 54 saying: If mine enimie had defamed me, I could haue borne it, and if mine aduersarie had exalted himself against me, I would haue hid den me from him. But it was thou O man, euen my companion, my guide, and my familiar, which diddest eate sweete meate together with me, yea, we walked together in the house of God as companions. And shall it be sayde of those, that not onelie liue in one Realme, and are or should be gouerned by one lawe, vnder one most gracious Soueraigne: yea, her Maiestie, and wee and all, vnder one Iesus Christ, in profession of our religion, and of one Church of God, that we deale thus one against another, and that as Dauid there saich verse. 21. The wordes of his mouth were softer than butter, and yet warre in his heart: his wordes were more gentle than oyle, and yet they were swordes? Now as these things beforme not the children of God: so is not this commendable in our Brethren, that (to set the better face of zeale vpon these so: sayde speeches, thus tempered with no lesse gall than honie, they offer thus freshlie to icopard their liues, that this which they promise and imagine, shall be done in lesse than halfe the time, that is alreadie passed. Well may our Brethren blemish the time that is alreadie passed, as not verie prosperously passed, though so: a shewe they saie so: but to determine, De futuro contingenti, so: that which may happe to come to passe hereafter, and to prescribe it a time: (saue that they presume of her Maiesties clemencie not to take the aduantage of the so:saieure) they might peradventure hazarde too farre they: best ioyntes, if they: happe were not better in this bargaynes euent, than eyther they: learning mise and exceptions.

oz their wisdome in the bargens making. But what good lucke so ener would betide them, to haue their desires graunted, oz their hope and promise come to passe: yet their words sauer so suspitionlie, that for all this they would not holde themselues fullie satisfied. For when they saie, The necessitie of learned Pastors shall be so well supplied, as we shall haue no no great cause to complaine for lacke of them: they seeme in these words that they would still haue some cause, though it were not greate, to complaine euen for lacke of them, when they had them. And as for other matters they would still pretend as great cause or greater to complaine, as much as they did before. And so after all these things were granted to the, we might be little oz neuer a whit the more eased of their complaining. For the nature of some, is neuer to be contented, euen when they haue the thing they would, yet still Plus ultra, itch and ease cannot please. And this our Bre seeme to insinuate before hand by indenture, saying: If we may vse like diligence continue the. Under which doubtful exception, we shal ener hang in a continuall suspense, of as great complaining and contending as before.

What our
breth wil do if these thin-ges cannot be granted.

But now, if our Breth cannot haue all these meanes that they haue here deuised, graunted vnto them, what then wil they doe? If not, we wil spend the rest of our life in mourning. See here, what a strange qualme is sodainlie come ouer the stomacke of our Brethren. Right now, so full & pregnant in diuising prouisions, diuisions, supplies, erecting, correcting, placing, displacing, & many other means: which don, they fall to chierful encouraging to giue the onset, imagining facilitie, and expecting to overcome all difficultie, promising good successe, and Gods blessing and theirs to bee with them, setting a tune, yea, offering to ieopard their lines on the barge: in the meane season, vsing all allurements, extolling the Queenes Maiestie for her high authoritie, her dreade Soueraigntie, the inioying by her a comfortable peace, her most gracious gouernmēt, her most honourable and glorious raigne, with the time that is alreadie prosperousslie passed. Whose heart, would not all these things reioyce and inflame? and now on a sodaine, oz ener the sentence come to his full breathing periode, if they cannot haue their wils in all these things: this sentence is cut off, Totnam is turned French, and all this faire weather is cleane overcast, with such a blacke clowde and terrible threates of stormes; that these our Brethren will not now pout for anger, like a fullaine sheew, but they will become mourners: yea, they bowe here, that they will spend the rest of their life in mourning, & take no comfort in all these blessings of God, no in anie her Maiesties neuer so high authoritie, no in her most gracious government, no in her most honourable and glorious raigne, no in anie of the time that is alreadie prosperousslie passed: but euen as though some cruell tyrant, some Heathen oz Popish persecuter did oppresse the Church

Church and them : as though Herode had killed all the children in Beth-leem and the coasts round about, and Ieremies Propheſie were yet to bee fulfilled, A voice was heard in Rama, mourning, and weeping, and great lamentation . Rachel weeping for her children and would not be comforted, becauſe they were not : euen ſo our Brethren promiſe, not onelie to mourne for the time paſſed (though they confeſſe it paſſed proſperouſly :) or for the preſent time, which they infamouſlie call a ſtate of the Church moſt corrupt : but as though it were in a deſperate ſtate, and paſt al hope, if all theſe their deuiled meanes take not place : as though they would neuer hereafter take comfort anie more. ſo long as they liued, they haue ſolempnlie pronounce, that they wil ſpend the reſt of their life in mourning.

Whie, phie, Brethren, euen for verie ſhame of the world, beſides the offence of God, that euer ſuch ſpeeches ſhould haue paſſed your penne, (for I hope you neuer ſpeake theſe with your mouths, nor let theſe ſinke at leaſt into your heartes) both ſuch waywardneſſe become ſuch learned diſcourſers? And I beſeech you Brethren, euen in the conſolations of Ieſu Chriſt, (if ye ſpeake from the heart and in good ſadneſſe, and not rather by ſome rhetorick amplification, more to moue your readers, than your ſelues are moued) that ye wold be better aduiſed, & eate this word, that you wold repent & reuoke this too too paſſionate and haſtie promiſe, which ſauioureth more of Ionas or Eſdras impatiencie in their mourning, (to thinke no worſe thereof) than of ſuch ſtaied men as you wold ſeeme to be. If you cannot herein haue your deſires; poſſeſſe your ſoules with patience, & comfort your ſelues in Chriſt, as all good Chriſtians, and all true ſubiects, & all wiſe men ought to do. But what is the cauſe, that our Bre. thus in their haſt, do promiſe to ſpend the reſt of this liues in mourning, if they want theſe things? Doe the feare anie daunger? Yea, ſay they : An expectation of the heauie vengeance of God, which muſt needs fall vpon vs, for this manifeſt cōtempt of his expreſſe commaundement, and neglect of increaſing the glorious kingdome of our ſauiour Chriſt.

How vnſeemly theſe paſſions are for ſo learned diſcourſes.

This were (we confeſſe) an horrible crime, and it is a fearefull thing to fall into the handes of the liuing God, if his wrath bee kindeled, and goe from him, we hauing heaped wrath vnto our ſelues againſt the daie of wrath. And as Saint Paule ſaith, Heb, 10. 26. 27. If we ſinne willinglie after that we haue receiued the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more ſacrifice for finnes, but a fearefull expectation of iudgement and violent fire, which ſhall deuour the aduerſaries. But, as whē he ſpoke before, cha. 6. of the like dreadfull expectation: he added this comfort, verſe 9. But beſoued, we haue perſuaded our ſoules better things of you, and ſuch as accompanie ſaluation, though we thus ſpeake : euen ſo, both we are perſuaded better of our Breth. than that they wil ſpend the reſt of their liues in mourning, and expectation of the heauie vengeance of God. & I hope they are perſuaded better of vs alſo.

Our breth. threare of Gods wrath.

ch. cace.

Our confession & comfort.

For although we humbly acknowledge that by our manifold finnes, if God should enter into iudgement with vs, neither we, nor they, nor any flesh could sustaine it: yet by unfained repentance and assured faith, flying vnto the throne of grace, our onely mediator and saviour Jesus Christ, wee firmly hope (and hope shall not confound vs) that God the Father for Christs sake, will diuert this heauie vengeance, both from our brethren and from vs.

How we are all too negligent.

But they threaten, that it must needs fall vpon vs, for this manifest contempt of his expresse commandement, & neglect of the increasing of the glorious kingdome of our saviour Christ. God forbid that wilfullie we should doe either of these things, and God be mercifull to vs all, we must needs confesse (and voluntarilie we do it,) with heartie sorrowfulnesse and deprecation, that there is in vs a neglect in some respects. of increasing the glorious kingdome of our saviour Christ, in that neither we, nor they nor any the best of vs all, doo our dutie with so much diligence and indeauour as we should doe. God forgive vs that is past, and amend as for that is to come, to be more able and diligent than we bee. But that this neglect is in respect of this, that knowing these meanes by our Brethren here set downe, and all their platforme in this their Learned Discourse of Ecclesiasticall gouernment, to be the increasing of the glorious kingdome of our saviour Christ, and wilfully and wittingly contemne it, or neglect it: I hope none of vs doth so; and if we could see any substantiall groundes of our Brethren to moue vs thereto, we praise God, (and hope God would heare our prayers,) that wee might forsake all worldly liuings, yea, life and all, rather than we should not ioyne with the. And brotherly charitie moueth me to thinke so of them likewise, that they doe not strue against their consciences, or haue no conscience in that they should, but that they make conscience of that which they should not, & rather mistake, than of purpose they would wittingly misleade themselves or others.

How our breth. & wee should thinke of these thin-ges and one of another.Our breth.
great default
herein.

Whobeyt herein they are in the greater fault, that take on them to controul and teach, the teachers and all, and doe misseach vs, and tell vs Gods word teacheth that which it doth not teach, and terrifie vs with the expectation of the heauie vengeance of God, for this manifest contempt of his expresse commandement: & yet for these deuises and Learned Discourse of Ecclesiasticall gouernment, and discipline, which they so much pretend and vze: they haue not hitherto, nor here doe nor (I beleue euer can) shew and proue in expresse wordes, any expresse commandement of our saviour Christ, or any necessarie consequence to infer it, which if we might once see, and then should make a manifest contempt, or any contempt at all thereof, then should we haue right good cause to tremble and quake, to mourne, and expect the heauie vengeance of God, except God in the insti-

nite treasure of his mercies, surmounting all his workes, & al our sinnes, & conscience. did giue vs his comfort, and forgie vs our sinnes, through our Lord & onely sauiour Iesus Christ. But vntill this expresse commandement, or anie other necessarilie inferred, for this Ecclesiasticall gouernment, that our bzeth. in this Learned Discourse prescribe, be shewed and made manifest: I hope that in the testimonie of a good conscience, being iustified by faith, wee may haue peace with God, by our Lord Iesus Christ, by whom we haue access by faith into this grace (or fauour) wherein we stand, and glorie in the hope of the glory of the sonnes of God. Rom, 5. And as this is the anker of our hope, so (good Bzeth.) once againe in the feare of God, I exhort you to take heed, how ye pretend Christs expresse commandement so peremptorie, and cannot shew it. & to consider with what boldnesse ye may take vpon you that sentence of S. Paule, saying:

In the meane time we may boldlie saie with the Apostle, Act. 20. We testifie vnto you this day, that we are cleare fro the bloud of you al, for we haue not failed to shew you the whole counsell of God, concerning the regiment of his Church. And dare ye indeede, this boldlie vsurpe vpon you these wordes of the Apostle, and adde withall vnto them, as a distinct part of the sentence, & that in the same seuerall Character, as the verie expresse wordes of the Apostle, which were neither his wordes nor yet his meaning, for anie thing that can be necessarilie gathered on those wordes of the Apostle, these wordes of your owne more superfluous addition, concerning the regiment of the Church. But see how affection many times may carry wise & learned men awaie. But if this platfome be either counsell or commandement, either expressed, or of necessitie implied: Shew it (as Saint Paule saith, that he shewed all the counsell of God) and straight we yeeld. Or else giue vs leaue in the name and peace of God, and in the freedome of the Gospell, with a safe conscience to dissent from it.

The Argument of the 7. booke.

THE 7. Booke concerneth the ministration of the Sacraments, & first whether they may be ministred by a Minister that is no Preacher, and without a Sermon at the ministration of them. Whether this be alwaies in Baptisme any necessarie part contained in the institution of it. Whether the Apostles or other Preachers were alwaies their selues the baptizers of such as they conuerted. How neere our Breth. assertions heerein drawn to the positions of the Anabaptists. Whether the Lords supper may not be truly administred though by no preacher, or if by a preacher, yet not preaching at the ministration thereof. Whether Christ preached at the ministration of it. Whether preaching were alwaies necessary in Circumcision and the Pascall lambe. What the word shewing forth the Lords death inferreth, and that all the communicants are such preachers. Whether the Homilies & exhortations in the booke prescribed, set not fully forth the Lords death. What was the practise for this point in the Apostles times, and in the Primitive Church. Whether the worde that is ioyned to the element to make a Sacrament, is to be necessarilie vnderstood of preaching. Whether our formes prescribed in the Sacraments, ioyne the word and the element sufficientlie or no. Whether the Papists though they wanted the true Supper of the Lord, had not true Baptisme for all their corruption of the same. How many kindes of preaching Caluine maketh, and what kinde is necessarie in the Lordes Supper. What words by Caluine, Musculus, Beza, Olleuian Hellopæus, &c. make a true & perfect Consecration. Whether in the reformed Churches of Heluetia, &c, they are preachers onelie that minister the Sacraments. How the seale and writing are to be ioyned alwaies together, and we so haue them. Whether our Breth. prohibite none to preach ^{pertayneib} whom they prohibite not to minister the Sacraments. Whether ^{the ministr.} we inferre womens Baptisme, & whether Baptisme on occasi- ^{the Sacra.} on of necessitie may be ministred in priuate places, and whether there be anie necessitie at all of Baptisme, and of the dangerous positions, contradictions, inconueniences, & absurdities of our Breth. in these matters: especiallie of this their Canon, where there is no minister of the word, there ought to bee no minister of the Sacraments. What is principall, what necessarie in the Sacraments, of the affinitie, coniunction, & separation of preaching and administring the Sacraments.

Hetherto (saie our Brethren) we haue somewhat at large set forth, the ^{The lear} principall parte of a Pastors office, which is to preach the worde of ^{ned disc.} God, and to instruct the people committed to his charge in the same. Heere followeth now in the second part of his duti, which consisteth in ^{pag. 38.} right administration of the Sacraments of God. For seeing it hath pleased ^{& 39.} God to adde such outward signes to be helps of our infirmitie, as seales for confirmation of his promises, vttered by his word, Rom. 4.11. Hee ^{Rom. 4.11.} hath appointed Ministers of the same, to deliuer them vnto his people. Matth. 28.19. Luke. 22.19. For no man may take vpon him anie office in the Church, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron, Heb. 3.4. See. ^{Mat. 28. 19.} ^{Luc. 22 19. 1} ^{Heb. 3.4.} ing therefore that God hath giuen some to be Pastors in the Church, Ephes. 4.11. And it is the dutie of Pastors to feede the flocke of God committed to their charge, with all manner of spiritual pasture of their soules appointed by God. 1. Cor. 4.1. And that the Sacramentes are a part of this spiritual foode, it is manifest that it belongeth to the dutie of Pastors, to administer the holie Sacraments: and that the Sacraments appertaine to the doctrine and worde of God, it is euident that whom God hath instituted to be the Minister of the word, him also he hath made to bee the minister of the Sacraments: and as the Sacraments are compared by the holie Ghost vnto seales: and the word or promise of GOD vnto writings: so it appeareth to him to deliuer the soule, which deliuereth the writings. For as the soule hath alwaies relation vnto the writings: so haue the Sacramentes vnto the worde of GOD. By this it appeareth, that as it is the dutie of euerie pastor to administer the Sacraments of Christ: so this office appertaineth to none, but to those which are Ministers of the word.

So all the residue here set downe dependeth on this conclusion to all which we gladly yeld and confirme the same: so this being euident, that whome GOD hath instituted to be Minister of the word, him also he hath made to be Minister of the Sacraments: it followeth euidentlie on god and necessarie consequence, that the Doctors so well as the Pastors, being of God instituted to be Ministers of the worde: that them also hath he made to be Ministers of the Sacraments. Which Sacraments (as our Brethren rightlie saie) appertaine to the doctrine & word of God, and are a part of this spirituall foode. This spirituall foode then appertaining to the doctrine and word of God, belonging properlie to the Doctors: & it is the dutie of Pastors to feed the flock of God committed to their charge, with all manner spirituall pasture of their soules appointed by God: How then are not the Doctors euen by Gods appointment, pastors also? according as Saint Paule saith euen in this place, (Ephē 4. 11.) before discussed.

The Doct.
are Pastors.

But not as our Brethren heere clip the sentence, saying thus, Seeing therefore God hath giuen some to be Pastors in his Church: for though the Apostle spake before distinctlie, that he gaue some to be Apostles, some to be Prophets, other to be Euangelists: yet when he comes to the mentioning of Pastors, he saith, Other to be pastors & doctors. knitting them ioynly both together, as appertaining both of them alike and together, vnto the ordinarie Minister of the word. Which though our brethren wil not confesse in plaine tearmes: yet see heere, when they come to the discussing of the office, will they, or will they, they are driuen to yeld thereto, that the Doctor and Pastors office doe concurre, and that not onelie the Pastor is a Doctor or Teacher: but the Doctor or Teacher is a Pastor.

It pertaineth to him to deliuer the seale which deliuereth the writing: but the Doct. deliuer the writing: er- go.

And yet further to ouerturne their owne deuises, they adde: and as the Sacraments are compared by the holie Ghost vnto seales, and the worde or promise of God vnto writings: so it appertaineth vnto him to deliuer the seale, which deliuereth the writings. But the Doctor deliuereth the writings, so well as both the Pastor: therefore the Doctor must deliuer the seales, so well as the Pastor. For (saie our Brethren) as the seale hath alwaie relation vnto the writings: so haue the Sacraments vnto the word of God. And heereupon they make this conclusion: By this it appeareth that as it is the dutie of euerie Pastor to administer the Sacramentes of Christ: So this office appertaineth to none but to those, which are the Ministers of the word. Although this conclusion concerning the matter be true in part and we glablie graunt it, yet is it not the right and full conclusion following on the premises, except it infer Doctors so well as Pastors, or by the name of Pastors comprehend Doctors. For the Doctor is a Minister nister of the word, and a deliuerer of the writings, so well as the Pastor, & therefore they should haue moze fullie & directlie concluded, if they had said, That as it is the dutie of euerie Pastor and Doctor, to administer the Sacraments of Christ: so this office appertaineth to none but to those which are the Ministers of the word. But now, the ministrati^{on} of the Sacraments requireth withal, not onelie the Ministry of that part of the word, which onelie and barelie teacheth the doctrine & institution of the Sacraments: but also and no lesse, that part of doctrine which exhorteth to repentance and newnesse of life, in the ministrati^{on} of Baptisme: and in the supper of the Lord, exhorting the communicants to a preparing to iudge themselves, to be in loue & charitie, & to the worthie receiuing of the same, and also in deborting and rebuking the wicked and vnworthie approchers thereunto, it appeareth therefore by these premises, that not onelie the pastors may teach the doctrine, besides their exhorting: but also that the doctors or teachers may and must exhort and deport, persuade and dissuade, rebuke, comfort, and applie, so well as the pastors. Which is quite & cleane contrarie to our Brethrens former principles.

Our sauior Christ authorizing his Apostles to baptize al nations, saith: The lear- ned disc
Go yee forth and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, the sonne, and of the holie Ghost, teaching them to obserue all things that I haue commanded you. Likewise to the same effect, Go ye forth into all the world, and preach the Gospell to euerie creature, he that shall beleene and is baptized, shall be saued, &c. Also instituting his holie supper, he said: Doe this in remembrance of me. Which remembrance S. Paule declareth, that it ought to be celebrated by preaching of the Lords death. So often (saith hee) as you shall eate of this bread, and drinke of this cup, you shall shew forth the Lords death vntil he come. By these testimonies it is euident, that the administrati^{on} of the Sacraments ought be committed to none, but vnto such as are Preachers of the word, that are able to teach them that they baptize, that are able to preach the mystery of Christs death to them whom they do deliuer the ward signe thereof.

Alle with and indeauour (so farre as conuenientlie may bee brought to passe) that all were Preachers which maye administer the Sacramentes, and in some respect they are Preachers. While by the authoritie of the office they doe publikelie pronounce in the administrati^{on} of the Sacramentes, that godlie forme of doctrine annexed, which plainlie setteth out all the institution, nature, vse, endes and frutes of those holie mysteries, with godlie and pitie exhortations, debortations, and applications, forged ther vnto. Besides diuerse notable Homilies and famous sermons, by which they may (as they see occasion) edifie the congregation at the partecipating of the Sacraments.

But if so bee that our Brethren will needes heere vnderstande by preaching, preaching, the free exposition of the worde, and teaching the doctrine of the Sacraments, with such exhortation to repentance, and peticular application to the audience, or to the communicants, as to the learned Preacher himselfe shall be thought most conuenient: then must either the Doctor, (being a Minister of the word, and so of the Sacraments) be such a Preacher also, which our Brethren denie, or else it must needs fall out (the Doctor being a Minister of the word, and so of the Sacraments, by our Brethrens last confession) that he may administer the Sacraments, which in the fore- sayd sense, is not onelie not a Preacher, but which cannot be a Preacher, by their owne positions, so long as hee continueth in the distinct office of a Doctor or teacher, so that their selues are indeede further off in this matter, than we are.

No distinction in the baptizer of teaching &
preaching.

As for these sentences of our sauour Christ, and of Saint Paul, that here (to confirme their sayings) they alleadge: I meruaile not a little, of their vnadvised handling of them. For, to begin with these two former in Matthew and Marke concerning Baptisme: if our Brethren vge these words so pzeiselie, that they should inforce alwayes preaching, at the verie instant of baptizing: they should extort more out of the wordes, than either they expresse or inferre. Our sauour Christ indeede, biddeth them goe and teach all nations: and telleth them also what they shall teach. And Marke calleth this teaching, preaching. So that here was yet no distinction of the teacher from the preacher. Their teaching was preaching, and their preaching was teaching. Though, as they had here in a special gift: so had they also a speciall office of teaching or preaching to all nations, but that their teaching or preaching (were it all one or distinct) was alwaies ioyned together with their baptizing, and both done at one time, and so commanded to be ioyntlie done: how will our Brethren proue it on these sentences? The text rather giues, that their preaching should goe before in a seuerall action, to those that were of vnderstanding; and so to continue preaching or teaching, til the vnbeleuing people did beleue: & then after preaching to adde the other action of baptizing, as a scale to confirme the in the former. And not that these wordes, Goe ye forth and teach all Nations, baptising them, &c. should be done, the one while the other is a doing. For, although our Brethren translate these words thus to the aduantage, Hee that shall beleue and is baptised, &c. as though hee were baptized, euen at the present instant, when he beleueth, which is, at the preaching: yet is not this indeede so well translated, but rather, He that shall beleue, and shall be baptised; The one action following the other, yea, many times, in seuerall both times & places, without anie pzeiudice either to the validitie of these actions, or to the pzecept of our sauour Christ to do them. Neither followeth it, y by these words we must vnderstand, both these actions to be alwaies done by one & the self same persō. S. Paul couerted many by his preaching, which which became beleeuers, as appeareth Actes 18. 8. But Crispus the prince of the Synagogue beleued in the Lorde withall his houthoulde, and many of the Corinthians heering it beleued and were baptized. And the Lorde comforting Paule sayde, hee had much people in the City. So hee continued there a yeare and sixe Moneths, and taught the Worde of God among them. And yet Saint Paule writing afterwarde vnto them, sayth, 1. Corinth. 1. 14. &c. I thanke God that I baptized none of you, but Crispus and Gaius, leaste any shoulde say, that I baptized into mine owne name. I baptized also the house of Stephanas, furthermore knowe I not, whether I baptized any other, for Christe sent me not to baptize, but to preache the Gospel.

Paul a great while at Corinth, where many were baptized, & yet not by him.

Whereby it is mosste apparant, that hee all that while being there and then the onely preacher, and so manye beeing conuerted and baptized, and so fewe baptized by him, and none might baptize but a Minister of the worde: there were other Ministers of the worde beeing not Preachers which did baptise them. And this (among other his notes on these wordes of Paule, Christ sent me not to baptize, but, &c.) dooth Caluine plainly confesse, saying: neither therefore doth Paule make this comparison, to detract anie thing from it, (he speaketh of the vertue of Baptism) Sed quia paucorum esset docere, pluribus autem baptizare datum foret: Deinde cum multi simul doceri possent, baptismus autem non nisi singulis posset conferri. &c. But when it apperained to fewe men to teache, (or) when as fewe men had the gift of teaching, and it was giuen vnto many to baptize: Moreover, when as many coulde be taught altogether, but baptisme coulde not bee conferred but to euery one in order: Paule that excelled in the faculty of teaching, pursued the worke that was more necessary vnto him: to others he left that, which they were more commodiously to perfourme. Yea, if the Readers shall waigh all the circumstaunces more neerely: they shall see, there is vnder it a priuy frumpe, with the which they are pleasantly nipped, which of another mans labour (vnder pretence of a ceremony) doe hunt after a small glory. The Labors of Paul in building that Church, were incredible. After him came these delicate masters, which by the sprinkling of the Water, drewe Disciples vnto their sect, Paule therefore yeelding them to the Title of the honor, testifieth that he is content with the burthen.

Caluines plaine confession that many vnder Paule being ministers of the worde, baptized that were not preachers.

Whereby it is euident, that although such euil Ministers abused this order, to seeke their owne glozy, yet, that this order was vsed euen then among the Godly and faithfull ministers, that some were preachers & did not baptise except seldoine, and fewe, on especiall occasions: and some did baptise that were no preachers, & yet were well allowed so to doe. Beside many other, who though they were preachers, & also did often times baptise, yet ioyned they not these two alwayes together in one action, and of-baptized, and (saith the text, ver. 41. They that gladly received his words were baptized, and the same day there were added to the Church, about 3000. soules. Is it likely, that Peter did baptise every one of these, and all of them him selfe that day: or rather that the other Apostles and Disciples though they all at the same time preached not, did help S. Peter to baptise them. Neither is it likely, that they were baptized at the present action of the sermon, nor in that place where the sermon was, as it is thought in mount Sion, but that they went vnto some other place in or nere the City, more convenient for baptizing such a multitude. And although Philip were him selfe (Actes 8.) both the preacher, and the baptizer, yet can we not conceiue, howe he alone shoulde baptize such a mighty number of Samaritans, at the same instant, that hee preached to them: but that first by preaching and myracles following, he did conuert them, and then as hee had leysure afterwarde, did baptize them. And when Peter Actes 10. had

Preached to Cornelius, and to all his household, and to all that were assembled with him, when he saw howe the holy Ghoste fell on them that heard the worde: he sayd, Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which haue received the holy Ghoste as well as we? So he commaunded them to be baptised in the name of the Lords. Vpon which wordes Caluine saith: It was not necessarie that Baptisme shoulde be administred by the hande of Peter, euen as Paule also, 1. Cor. 1. 14. testifieth, that he baptized fewe at Corinth, for other ministers might take vpon them those parts.

Howe doe not these examples euen of the primitive Church, cleane ouerturne our brethrens principles, that every Minister of the Worde and sacramentes that baptizeth, must not onely him selfe be a preacher: but that he must also preach, at the action of his baptizing, or else, he breaketh our Sauiour Christes institution? although, this withall by the way, is to be noted, that Baptisme (as Caluine and other doe well obserue against the Anabaptistes,) was not heere first instituted, though it be heere alleaged: nor, who onely shoulde baptize: nor, who shoulde be baptized: as the Anabaptistes doe imagine, and hereupon doe vrges principally these two places: And, saue that wee hope better of our Brethren the compilers of this Learned Discourse, that they be not of this erroneous opinion, Other wise, their precise vrging of these wordes, mighte strengthen the Anabaptistes to doe the like, and breede suspicion on themselves: especially, in applying these wordes in this sort, vnto our state of the Church now. That by these Testimonies is it euident, that the administration of the Sacramentes ought to be committed to none, but vnto such, as are preachers of the Worde, that are able to teache them that they baptize. Howe are our Ministers, (were they neuer so Learned preachers,) able so to doe: sithe all those whome wee ordinarily baptize, are late boyme Infantes. Are any, yea, the best learned of our Brethren themselves, (not considering what they doe, but what they are able to do) able to teache these Infantes: Howe are they able to teache them, that are not able to learne of them: Except they woulde not haue Baptisme administred vnto Infantes, vntil they be able to learn, that that is taught them in the Sacramentes. Which is the playne assertion of the Anabaptistes.

A dangerous & impossible position of our brethren.

I trust our Brethren bee not of this opinion, for then farewell all our brotherhoode, if they goe about vnder colours of Ecclesiasticall government, to shoue in Anabaptisme among vs. And yet (I may say to you) this hangeth together, conferred with that we heard before, Page 9. about the Ciuill Magistrate and Christian princes. Where they sayde, the Church of God was perfect in all her regiment, before there was any Christian Prince: yea, the Church of God may stande, and doth stande at this day, in mooste blessed Estate, where the Ciuill Magistrates are not the greatest fauourers. These were perillous speeches, and the very speeches of the Anabaptistes against Christian Magistrates. And againe, Pag. 36. our brethren contending for preachers, vsed these wordes: If there bee no way of saluation but by fayth: and none can beleue but suche as heere the worde of God preached: Which are agayne the very assertions of the Anabaptistes.

These speeches fauour to strongly of the Anabaptistes arguments.

I speake not this as accusing our Brethren, nor yet, will I excuse their compiler of this Learned Discourse of Ecclesiasticall government, who soeuer hee were, or were it (as it pretendes) the desire of them all. Because, if they bee not of the Anabaptistes opinion, yet these speeches fauour to strongly of them.

Howbeit, I had rather ascribe them, onely vnto such inconsiderate earnestnesse, as (to defende their positions,) care not from whome soeuer they borrowe any thing, that may serue their turne: than, that I thinke they holde, or will maintaine (when they shall better aduise them) these grosse and dangerous errors besides this danger, that these propositions of our brethren, (Baptism ought to be administred of none but a Preacher, & that this office pertayns to none els, & that there must be a preaching at the ministration of it, & other like speeches,) may cause such a scruple to arise, as might call in question (euen as the Anabaptistes doe) whether the mooste and best parte in the Realme, yea, and perhaps the mooste and best of our Brethren themselves, be as yet truly baptized, yea, or no. But I trust our Brethren will not, nor dare say so, that it is no true Baptisme, if it bee not administred by a Preacher that preacheth at the action of the Baptisme. Neither do our brethren so say directly, but onely, the administration of the Sacramentes ought to be committed, but to such as are preachers of the worde, that are able to teach them that they baptise. Albeit, that to be able is one thing, and to be driuen necessarilpe to doe the action that they are able to doe, is another, yet (as I sayde before) we must take heede of these speeches, sithe, they bee not able, nor all the worlde is able (respecting the time of that action) to teache them that are not yet able to learne. Neither must they be put backe, for this inhability. Because they haue another and better Charter for them, than al the ministers ability of teaching, although that were able and capable of learning.

But if they meane not so, (as I charitably woulde consider their words, to any gentler sense, to saue them from this suspicion:) then this ability to teache, in respect of the infantest that are baptised, is not necessarie in the baptiser, in that manner of teaching, that is to say, publique preaching, to bee at that instant put in practise. Except onely in respect of the congregation which as they are already taught & grounded in that matter, so though it be conuenient, that at the action of baptising any infant, the Doctrine of that action, and the exhortations thereunto pertainning, should be set forth: so is it not necessary, especiallpe hauing so plaine godly and learned a form thereof prescribed, and vsed accordingly, and homelyes also (as further occasion may serue) provided, and the people already not ignorant of the action: that it shoulde be alwayes administrated by a Preacher, which both shoulde be able, and after his ability shoulde preache a sermon, on that matter at the action dooing: or else, the children are not baptised as they ought to be, or the people not sufficiently instructed.

The ministration of the supper
may be truly administered though not by a preacher.

Nowe, as we see this, both for our, and for the primitive vse, of the administration of baptisme, which I hope may suffice those that are not contentious: so, to come to that our Brethren adioyne hereto, of the other sacrament of the Lordes supper. Which indeede requireth an earnest & graue admonition and exhortation, besides a playne and cleare declaration, of the holy mysteries in this sacrament, to bee ioyned with the administration of it, for the instruction and edification of the receiners and participants of the same: which thing, that in euery place where and whensoever, it might be done: and that without any sophistication of false doctrine or any suche clogge: or variety of ceremonies, as might breede disturbance or offence: and that thereby the Lords death might be frutesfully shewed forth vntill his comming: there is alreadye (as our brethren knowe, & are not able to finde fault fault with any thing therein) a godly and learned forme of administering the communion prescribed and established. besides Godly and learned Homilies in that behalfe provided, to bee publickly and reuerently reade, in eueryeueuer so simple and rurall a Congregation, to expound the matter and edify the people when ther is no other preaching, at the receiuing of the sacrament. And yet we wish (as well well as our bꝛethꝛen doe) if it were Gods will, that euery place were so furnished, that so ofte n as this Sacrament is administred, there were a Sermon preached befoꝛe the receiuing of it: but that there ought of necessity, suche a Preacher to the bee onelis Minister of this Sacrament, and then and there to Preach thereon, oꝛ else it is not at all, oꝛ not rightly administred: that is the point we stand vpon.

Our Bꝛethꝛen doe first vꝛge the institution, and alleage out of Luke, 22. 19. our sauiour Christes owne wordes.

Also instituting his holy Supper, hee sayde: Doe this in remembrance of mee. Here is indeede the verbe Institution of Christe, and a streight commandement, Doe this, to witte, that that hee there did. And also this commandement stretcheth to the principall ende of the dooing. Doe this in remembrance of mee. So that, if this which Christe heere did institute, be not done, oꝛ be not done in remembrance of him: it is a manifest bꝛeache of Christes commandement. But can not this bee done that Christe did, & commanded to be done, and be also done in his remembrance: but that the Minister which is the Doer, must needes preach a sermon at the dooing of it yea, if we shoulde goe thus exactly to worke, can our Bꝛethꝛen pꝛoue that Christe himselfe the cheefe of all Preachers, and instructor of this holy Sacrament, either at the dooing of the action, oꝛ immediatly befoꝛe the doing of it, preached vnto the participants any sermon concerning this matter? It appeareth rather the contrary, both by the conference of the Textes, and by the best, (if not all the) Commentaries that we read, that hee made no Sermon thereon, at oꝛ presently befoꝛe the Instituting and celebrating of it.

As soꝛ that large and moste heauenly sermon, which is contained in the 13. 14. 15. 16. and 17. Chapters of the Gospell by Saint Iohn, and the other speeches mentioned in the other Euangelistes, it is evident ynough in the Text that they were spoken after this mysticall Supper, and after the grace oꝛ Vydune was sayde. Although some thinke otherwise of that, which Iohn noteth in the former part of the 13 Chapter: howe after the Paschall supper was done, (and that also was done without any preaching, albeit not without a shewing soꝛth, what that Paschall Lambe did signify,) that then Christe arose and washed his Disciples feete. Which done, and sitting downe agayne, hee beganne to shewe them the meaning of his dooing. Nothing pertayning to the Mystery of this Sacrament, as we haue seene already, by our Bꝛethꝛ. collection on the same. Pag. 28. Christe nowe on this washing, taking occasion to mention who among them was uncleane: entred into the deciphering of Iudas treason, which was not yet any part of his newe Sacramentall Supper that hee instituted. Soꝛ hee gaue not that Breade, neyther at that time, noꝛ in such order, noꝛ to such ende, noꝛ by such Soppes; as the Papistes vsed at their masse, making at liker to a Iudas's sop, fit for such as may wel ther in be called treachers, that woulde presume to sacrifice Christe againe. Whereas Christe in his mysticall supper, gaue the breade by it self, and the Wine by it selfe. So that this might wel be, that Iudas hauing his sop and possessed with the diuell, departing immediately, was gone befoze this holy supper began, as also it may appear by Mathew and Marke, that this shold be done befoze he instituted this sacrament. Howbeit, Luke placeth it other wise, which if (as he sayth) it were done after: then, is it yet moze euident he had no sermon at all, befoze he instituted this sacrament.

But, he all this befoze, (as I haue said) yet is heere nothing appertayning to the exposition, exhortation or participation of this mystery. So then, if our brethren will so precisely vrge the wordes of Christe, doe this in remembrance of me: We may safely gather, that if the same thing be done that Christe did, that is to say, in such an holy and reuerend manner, as Christe's example and the holines of these mysteries teach vs, those that bee his lawfull ministers of his worde and sacraments, doe befoze the assembly of the faithfull people take the breade, and when they haue giuen thanks, breake it, and giue it vnto the faithfull, disposed to receiue it: saying, take and eate: this is the body of our Lord Iesus Christ, which was giuen for you, do this in remembrance of him: or other such wordes to this effect, as we vse in the administration of the Lordes supper: saying, the body of our Lord Iesus Christe which was giuen for thee, preserue thy body and soule into euerlasting life: and take and eate this in remembrance that Christe died for thee, and feede on him in thy hearte by faith with thankesgiuing: And likewise doe and say, in the like manner (as Christ did, and sayde) with the Cup: to the which also accorde the wordes in our Communion booke: and do all this to the ende and purpose that Christe ordeyned the same: shall wee dare to say, that if mozeouer a sermon be not preached hereupon, that nowe this sacrament is not administered as it ought to be? haue we not that which both Christe did, and that he did bid vs doe, and in his remembrance also, as he did bid vs?

administration of the Lordes supper.

So (say our Brethren) for this remembrance, Saint Paule declareth, that it ought to be celebrated by preaching of the Lordes death. yea both he so: and where hath he these wordes? so often (saith he) as you shall eat of this breade, and drinke this Cup, you shall shewe forth the Lordes death vntill he come. And is here this worde, preaching of the Lordes death? If it be: how chance our Brethren, in citing the very wordes of the Writ it selfe, dare not so translate it? So, they did better than so, keeping in the text, the proper signification of the word, you shall shew forth, or ye do shew forth, or shewe yee forth the Lordes death &c. True it is, there is a moze excellency comprised in this compound, than if he had simply sayde, shewe yee: and therefore our Brethren doe well trantranslate it, you shall shewe forth. And in a sort, this may be called preaching. And Musculus note thereon is very good, wherein also hee useth this note preaching, in an improper sense, saying: Neither must this be overpasse that hee simply sayth not aspiciamus, that is, you doe declare, but aspiciamus, that is, you doe chiefly or mostly of all declare. For aspiciamus in this composition, hath a force of a signification to be bent thereto. The Apostle deliuered vnto them, not any light memory of the Lordes death, in three our foure wordes by the way and sleightly: but in greate earnest, and publique shewing forth, to be perfourmed and to be preached out, as of a benefite incomparable & to be astonished at.

Supper.

Musculus. in 1. Cor. 11.

So that here is a kind of preaching in an improper vnderstanding comprehended, as Caluine also calleth it, saying. Nowe Paule adioyneth, what manner of memory should be celebrated: to wit, with giuing of thanks. Not that the whole memory consisteth, in the confession of the mouth. For this is the cheefest thing, that the vertue of the death of Christe, shoulde be sealed vp in our consciences. Howbeit, this knowledge ought to kindle vs vnto the confession of prayse: that we should preach before men; that which wee thinke within before God. The supper therefore is, (that I may so speake) a certaine memoriall, which ought perpetually to endure in the Church, vntill the last comming of Christe: instituted vnto this end, that Christe might admonish vs of the benefit of his death, and that we might recognize the same before men. Whereupon also it hath the name of the Euchariste. Therefore, that thou mayest orderly celebrate the supper, thou shalt remember, that of thee is required the profession of thy faith. Heereupon it appeareth, howe impudently they mocke God, that boaste they haue in their masse any kinde of Supper. For what is the Masse (for I speak not of the papists, but of the Pseudo-Nichodemites,) he meaneth those that openly come to passe for feare of persecution, and thinke it is enough that they secretely come also to the Communion and to the gospel, as Nichodemus came to Christ by night for feare of the Iewes) that it is stuffed with detestable superstitions: they faine by the externall gesture, that they allowe them. What kinde a preaching of the death of Christe is this? Doe they not rather forswear the same? So that, this preaching which here Caluine speaketh of, is not that which is proper to a preacher, and whereof Christ saide befoze to his Disciples (as our Brethren therein vset the worde rightly,) Marke 16. 13. Go ye forth into the whole world, & preach the Gospel. But it is such an improper kind of preaching, as belongeth in generall to all men.

Caluine in 1. Cor. 11.

Howe we should preach Christe at the Communion.

And therefore it is far better, simply to vse Pauls word, who saith not, neither was it his meaning, yee shall preach the Lordes death: but yee shall shewe forth the Lordes death, till his comming. Who are these that hee sayth should shewe it forth? Doth hee speake here vnto Preachers? or not rather to all the Corinthians men and Women, that shoulde bee communicantes of these Mysteries. So often as you, who are these you? You that shall eate of this Breade, and drinke of this Cuppe. And what shall these doe? You shall shewe foorth the Lordes death vntill his comming. If now, hee meant Preaching by this shewing forth: then must all the people men and Women bee Preachers, that bee no Ministers of the Worde and Sacramentes. So that hereby we may moste playnely see, howe our Bzethzen, to thrust in a necessity of preaching, to bee alwayes hab at the administation of this Sacrament, spare not to wrest and abuse saynt Pauls wordes to a necessary imposing of that, which by no direct sense, they can bee bratone vnto Bullinger himselfe, and as it were in a worde, telleth vs in his marginall note thereon, what this shewing forth meaneth: Annunciare mortem Domini, est laudare & gratias agere domino. To shewe foorth the Lordes death, is to prayse and giue thanks vnto the Lord. Whereupon it is called, Eucharistia a Thankesgiuing.

Musculus in
1. Cor. 11.

Musculus (mee thinketh) very well Paraphrastically setteth out, the full meaning of these wordes. This Institution of the Lordes Supper being receyued of the Lorde him-selfe, haue I deliuered vnto you. Whereupon yee may perceyue, that yee eate not a Supper priuate of euery one of you, but a common and a mysticall Supper, instituted vnto the memory of our common redeemer, and this can yee not bee ignorant of. For, so often as yee eate this breade, and drinke of this Cuppe, you bee- ing thus of mee trayned vp, doe shewe foorth and preache the death of the Lorde, whercof yee are partakers, not some onelie seperately, but all in common. Whereupon yee mought inough haue beene admonished, with what faith and with what concorde communicating, yee ought to eate this Supper in the memory of his death. This I take to bee the right sense: although the vulgare translation haue these wordes in the future tence, after this manner. For so often as ye shall eate this breade, and shall drinke of this cuppe, ye shall shew foorth the Lords death, vntil he come. Erasmus translateth it euen as wee read and doe expound it. There are that reade the worde et sic semper in the Imperative mood. Doe yee shew forth. But this little word, et that is, for, being causall (or importing a cause) fauoureth not that sense. They, doe iudge that the Apostle in these wordes expounded, (and withall commaunded,) howe the Corinthians ought to celebrate the remembraunce of the Lorde, that is to witte, so, that as often as they shoulde eate this Breade and drinke of this Cuppe, they shoulde shewe foorth his death. As though he desired also this thing to haue bin in them, because that in this mysticall & memorial supper, they did not set foorth the Lordes death. Euen as wee see the sacrificers to celebrate their Masses, that they make altogether no shewing of the Lordes death. For those thinges that separately (or by themselves) they say, say, cannot be accounted for this shewing foorth. For they say the both ^{supper.} being tourned away from the people, and in a tongue vnknewen to the Church, and vnder such a silence, that they can not be perceaued, no not of those that knowe the latine tongue.

This is a manifest breach of Christes institution, and of the Apostles interpretation. If the Lordes supper were so administred in any place with vs: we did not keepe Christes institution, nor did it in his remembrance, ^{The right & godly manner of our administration of the sacrament.} nor shewed foorth his death, as these Corinthians and these Papistes did not. But with vs (God be prayesd for it) it is neuer administred by anie so simple a minister, but though he be not able himself to preach, nor there be any other preacher present: yet the verie forme which the Cōmunion booke prescribeth vnto him, is so plainly and pithily set downe, to expresse all the institution, the vse, the fruites, and the endes thereof; with the dutie of the worthy receauers, with the danger to the vnworthie; so dreadfully terrifying these, and so comfortably animating the other; and in all pointes so liuely shewing foorth the death and passion of our Sauour Iesus Christ: that no man can iustly say, but that as Christ biddeth, Do this in remembrance of me, we doe the same thing in remembrance of him: and as S. Paule expoundeth this remembrance, to be the shewing forth of the Lordes death, so the Lordes death is shewed foorth, both by the action of the minister, and with all by the action of the faithfull people. And so well shewed foorth, that if the onely forme of our Communion booke be of the minister duly obserued, and of the participantes religiously considered: they shall (no doubt) though there be no other sermon preached, both truly and worthily participate the holy communicating of the Lordes body and his blood. ^{Our homilies and exhortations at the ministracion of the L. supper.} And yet commonly at the receauing of these blessed mysteries, if there be no sermon preached: there are other both godly and learned homilies appointed to be reade, which are sermons also, and serue especially for that purpose, if the people be negligent in communicating, or criminous in life, or vnskillful in the vnderstanding of the necessary points belonging to these mysteries: to encourage, to perswade, and to instructe them. Neither yet haue we these, as so content herewith, but that wee thinke it also very expedient (if it may be had) that at this action, (beside the forme prescribed) a godly learned preacher were also the shewer foorth of the Lordes death, and of the other mysteries conteyned in this sacrament. But this so strict necessitie of our Brethren, we see is evidently here confuted, and namely that they say: by these testimonies it is euident, that the administration of the sacramentes, ought to be committed to none, but vnto such as are preachers of the worde; that are able to teach them that they baptize, that are able to preach the mysteries of Christes death to them, to whome they doe deliuer the outward signe thereof.

supper.

But by the way, what meane they by these wordes, able to teach, speaking of Baptisme: and able to preach, speaking of the Lordes supper? As the former habilitie to teach, an habilitie of the Doctors? Who (they say) cannot exhort, nor apply, &c. which are especiall pointes requisite in a preacher. If it be: then, here is ministring of the sacrament without preaching. Except they will say, the Doctors can not minister the sacramentes. But then againe must they reuoke these wordes on the other side of the lease, pag. 59. It is euident, that whom God hath instituted to be minister of the worde, him also hee hath made to be minister of the sacramentes. These euidencies agree not well together. Especially this other for the preacher, expounding this shewing forth the Lordes death, for preaching. For by this construction of our Brethren, (as we haue already seene) all the people should be Preachers. Where before they saide, and that more truely, pag. 58. no man may take vpon him any office in the Church, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron. Hebr. 3. 4. If they say, they meane not here preaching in his proper sense, and as it is a function peculiar to the minister of the worde and sacramentes: why then doe they bring it in? Or for what preaching all this while doe they pleade, and alleage these testimonies? For such as all the people may doe, and must doe as well as they? But because in all these speeches, they bring it still to this, that he should be able: what meane they hereby? One that can preach, if neede so require, but neuerthelesse he alwayes doth not: For it followeth not, a posse ad esse. If they meane so: then may the sacrament be administred, as with a Sermon; so without a Sermon. Neither is the preaching a sermon, any part of the sacramentes substance, nor any accident thereunto of mere necessitie, though of the more conueniencie: but the remembrance & shewing forth the Lords death, is one of the chiefest, and the most substantiall parte of this sacrament: therefore the remembrance and shewing forth of the Lordes death, and the preaching of a sermon, are not all one. Yea, to come to the abuses that Saint Paule reprehendeth in the Corinthians, to whom he wrote these wordes, by our Brethren cited. For, as we haue heard out of Musculus, that in these wordes he spake, as though hee desired these thinges in them, because they did not shewe forth the Lordes death, in this mysticall and memoriall supper.

The preaching of a sermon no necessary part of the sacrament.

The abuses of the Lords supper, that S. Paule reprobated in the Corinth.

Nowe, although it followe not: they had no preaching (understanding preaching in his proper sense) at the administration of the Lordes supper, therefore they had no remembrance or shewing forth of the Lordes death: because, non sequitur à specie ad genus negativè: yet this followeth necessarily, à genere ad species: they had no remembrance nor shewing forth of the Lordes death, at the administration of the Lordes supper: therefore they had no preaching thereat. And yet, had they preaching ching often at other comminges together, whereof Saint Paule treateth ^{supper.} afterwarde, chap. 12. and 14. But Saint Paule repriming their abuses, and here reckoning them vppre particularly, that they had dissensions, and were not in charitie when they came together, to this action: ver. 18. that they took their own suppers before: ver. 21. that one came hungry, another came drunken: ver. 21. that they shewed not forth the Lordes death: ver. 26. that they examined not themselves: ver. 28. that they discerned not the Lordes body: ver. 29. that vpon the examination of themselves, they iudged not themselves: ver. 31. that they caried not one for another: ver. 33. to conclude, and that which summarily he put first of all, ver. 20. that when they came together into one place, they made such a super of it, as whereof the Apostle sayth, this is not to eate the Lords supper: S. Paule now reckoning vp all these faultes among them, at the administration of this sacrament: and this being (as our Breth. say) so necessarie a matter: is there any probabilitie, but that hee also particularly would haue reprimed them for this, that they had no sermon preached among them at this action: Which in all these corruptions had bene very needefull, and might haue refrayned them from these abuses, if their preachers had not also bene corrupted, as it likely that they were, which suffered among them such foule abuses. But if preaching had bene so necessary at that instant, no doubt he would haue touched the neglect of that also, especially mentioning the shewing forth of the Lordes death, to be principally required at their eating and drinking in the Lordes supper. But the faultes of their preachers, and of their preaching, hee mentioneth still in other places, and not in this treatise of the Sacrament, nor in anie place burdens them herewith: and therefore it is not like, that he thought preaching to be alwayes so necessarie at the celebration of these mysteries.

But not to looke on their abuses, but on the order and vse of the Apostles themselves, and of all the faithfull at Ierusalem, & that euen presently after they had receaued the holy Ghost, Act. 2. 42. And they continued (sayth Luke) in the Apostles doctrine, and communion (or fellowship) and breaking of bread, and prayer: of which breaking of bread, sayth the Geneva note, which was the ministration of the Lordes supper. Caluine giuing a reason heereof sayeth: Why I had rather that the breaking of bread in this place, should bee interpreted for the Lordes supper: this is the reason. Because, Luke mentioneth those thinges, wherein the publike state of the Church is conteyned. Yea rather, hee expresth here foure notes, whereby the true and naturall face of the Church may be iudged. Doe wee therefore seeke the face of the Church of Christ? The image therof is here liuely pictured vnto vs. And indeed he beginneth with doctrine, which is as it were the soule of the Church.

Supper.

1. doctrine.

2. the communion or brotherly loue.

3. the sacrament.

4. prayer.

Neither nameth he euery doctrine, but the Apostles doctrine, that is, that which the sonne of God deliuered by their handes. Wherefoeuer therefore, the pure voice of the Gospell soundeth throughly, where me abide in the profession of thereof, where they exercise themselues in the ordinary hearing of it: there vndoubtedly is the Church. Now as doctrine is the first note: so the text placeth their communion (or fellowship) next in order. Which (sayth the Geneva note) standeth in brotherly loue and liberalitie. In communicating this member (sayth Caluine) and the last (meaning prayer) flowe from the first, as fruites or effectes. For doctrine is the bonde of brotherly communicating, and also openeth vnto vs a gate to God, that he may of vs be called vpon. But the supper approacheth to the doctrine, in steede of confirmation. Wherefore Luke reckoneth not vp foure, rashly; when as hee will describe vnto vs a state of the Church orderly instituted. And it behooueth vs to put our endeavour vnto this order, if we desire to be truly accounted the Church before God & his Angels, not to boast only before men of a voyde name thereof.

Marloratus in Act. 2.

Now if we must not onely keepe these foure, but also haue so great a consideration to the order of the, insomuch that Marloratus addeth to these wordes of Caluine: For the Iustitaries of workes doe inuert this order, and gather thus of the later: good workes are to bee doone, and then righteousnesse will followe, O blindenesse worthy of great iudgement. For how can workes be good without faith goeing before? Without which, whatsoeuer is done, is sinne. Rom. 14. 4. 23. If then such a straight respect is to be had, of the orderly placing these foure notes: and this communicating of fellowship consisting in almes, brotherly loue, and workes of mercie, come betwene the hearing and belouing of the doctrine, and the breaking of the bread, that is, the communicating of the Lords supper: it argueth, that although preaching the doctrine haue gone before: yet the sacramentes are not so immediately ioyned, especially to the preaching of the doctrine, but that other godly exercises might goe betwene them. Not that any of these notes was altogether destitute of any of the other: the supper of the Lorde had euermore doctrine ioyned with it, but not alwayes preaching of the doctrine. And so it had both vnion in fellowship, and prayers: but yet, might all these bee also publikely exercised, though at that instant of the doing of them, the supper of the Lorde were not administred.

Act. 20. 7. & 11.

Now this being the manner in the Apostles dayes, that although they had many times sermons at the administration of the supper: as Act. 20. ver. 7. & 11. at that solemne confluence, where S. Paule preached vntill midnight: and yet (as these were seuerall actions) see, howe euen by the prouidence of God, (albeit, no doubt, to confirme the doctrine preached, and and to be a warning to the negligent hearers) when they had minded presently vpon the sermon, to haue proceeded to the supper of the Lord: what an occasion senered the continuation of these two actions, by the young mans fall out of a windowe, from the thirde losse, that was taken vp dead. Whereupon Paule being the Preacher, descended downe, & laide himselfe vpon him, & embraced him saying: trouble not your selues, for his life is in him. So when Paul was come vp againe, and had brokē bread and eaten; he communed a long while till the dawning of the day, and so departed. Now as they had these sermons sometimes preached at the celebrating of the Lordes supper, (howbeit heere this interruption deuied these actions some space of time, and yet this is that onely place that byingeth them nearest together) so if they had not a sermon preached thereat, notwithstanding they no more discontinued the administration of this Sacrament, than they did the publike exercises of their prayers, or than they did abstayne from baptizing, as wee haue already at large proceeded.

And euen so, that this custome did thus continue in the primitive Church: The practise of the primitive Church, not onely their αγνη, that is, their loue feastes, which they made at this supper, doe declare: whereof diuerse authoꝝ, especially Tertullian and Iustinus Martyr doe make mention: but also the whole order thereof is by Iustinus fully described, both of this sacrament administred with a Sermon, and without it. In the Apologie that he made for the Christians, Iustinus Martyr in defens. pro Christi. ad Antoninum Pium. to the Emperour Antoninus Pius, he hath these wordes: wee bring him that is thus washed (meaning baptized) and instructed, vnto those whom we call Brethren, where the assemblies are made, that we might praye as well for our selues, as for those that are newly illumined. That they may be founde by true doctrine and good workes, to be worthie observers and keepers of the commaundementes, and that wee may obtaine eternall saluation. After the prayer we salute one another with a mutual kisse. After which, the bread, & the cup alayed with water is brought vnto the chiefest brother, as Gelenius translates it, but in Iustine himselfe προσφίτου ἀγνιστου τῷ ἀλλοτρίῳ ἀφ' ὧν And here is our ἀγνιστος ouer those Brethren, which brethren are not onely the faithfull people, but also the ministers as is before by Beza confessed. Which being of him receiued hee offreth vp prayse and thanks giuing vnto the father of all, by the name of the sonne and of the holy Ghost, and so for a certaine while he doeth celebrate the Euchariste. After the prayers and the Euchariste, all the whole assemblie singeth together, Amen. And the worde in the Hebrue tongue signifieth the same that doth, Sobcit, (or let it be done). The thanks giuing of the Prelate, and the well wishing of all the people, being accomplished: those whom we call the Deacons giue a parte of the bread and of the cuppe alayed, vnto euery one of them that are present, ouer ouer whome the thanks giuing was made, and they suffer them also to carrie it to those that were absent. And this foode is among vs called the Eucharist: to the which none is admitted, but he that beleueth the doctrine to be true, being washed with the washing for the remission of finnes, and liuing according as Christ hath taught. For we receaue not these things as a common bread and a common cuppe: but euen as by the worde of God being made fleshe, Iesus Christ our Sauour had flesh and bloud for our saluation: so also by the woorde of prayer and the thanks giuing we haue learned, the food (being of him sanctified, which being changed, nourisheth our flesh and) bloud to be the flesh & bloud of the same Iesus Christ that was incarnate. For the Apostles in their writings that are called the Gospels, haue deliuered foorth, that Iesus thus commaunded them: hauing taken bread, and thanks being giuen, he sayde: doe this in the memorie of me. This is my body. Likewise, hauing taken the cup, and hauing giuen thanks, he said: This is my bloud, and did communicate it only vnto them.

The supper
of the Lord
ministred with a sermon.

In these woordes wee plainly see, all the manner of the primitive Church, in the dayes of Iustine the Martyr, about the hundred years after Christes ascention. Concerning the administration of the Lordes supper, without any sermon preached thereat. But it followeth euen anon after, of the administration also of the same, with a sermon or an Exhortation made at the participation thereof, saying: On the Sunday are made assemblies, of those that are of the Citie, and of those that are of the Countrie, where the writings of the Apostles and Prophets are read before: the reader then ceasing, he that is placed ouer them maketh an exhortation, prouoking them to the imitation of the thinges that are honest. After this we all arise and offer vp prayers, which being finished, there is brought (as I sayde) bread, wine and water. Then he that is placed ouer the, so much as he is able, offreth vp prayers & thanksgiuings, but the people singeth Amen. Thereupon those things that are consecrated, are distributed vnto euery one, and sent vnto the absent by the Deacons. The rich if it please them, contribute euery one according to his will. The collections are layde vp with him that is placed ouer them: he succoureth the fatherlesse and widdowes, and those that want by reason of sicknesse or other necessitie, those also that are prisoners and travelling strangers, and in summe, he is made the prouider of all the needie. But these assemblies we make vpon the Sunday, &c.

Thus doe we see at large the order of the primitive Church, for the celebration of the Lordes supper, both without, and also with a sermon or an Exhortation at the same. If our Brethren reiect their orders, because of some additions that they vse, or that the woordes of Iustine might seeme suspicious, to sauer of the Popish error of transubstantiation:

tiation: not onely the Magdeburgenses doe cleare the wordes of Iustine from that error: but Iustine cleareth him selfe, both from that, and from the error of consubstantiation or carnall presence in the Sacrament. For the former, say the Magdeburgenses, (who not withstanding maintayne the latter :) The deuise of transubstantiation was also ynknowne vnto the Church of this age. For although Iustine saye: Which being changed nourisheth our flesh, and bloud: notwithstanding he onely looketh vnto, and driueth it to that that hee may discerne (or seuer) this bread and this cuppe, vnto the which commeth this worde of Christe, from other vsuall meates and drinckes, with which our bodies are nourished. And as for consubstantiation, this his sentence maketh lesse: referring al the consecration, to the spirituall and thankfull remembrance of the death of Christ, as he also doth, disputing with Tripho the Jew, saying: this also ye know, that the solemne oblation of the two goates in the time of the fast, was not suffered to be done elsewhere the at Ierusalem. As neither the oblation of the meale (or floure) which was wont after the custome to be offered, for the that were censed from the leprosie, signifying figuratiuely the bread of the Eucharist: which for the memory of his passion cleansing the soules of men from all sinne, our L. Iesus Christ hath deliuered to the that come after: to the intent that in the meane time, wee should giue thanks vnto God, both for the world created for man, with other thinges that are conteyned therein, and also for the redemption wherewith he deliuered vs from sins, the principalities and powers being vniuersally vanquished, according to the diuine counsell.

Thus doth Iustine acquit himselfe sufficiently of those errors. As for the water mingled with the wine, and the sending these sacramentall signes vnto the absent, whereof after ward came great corruption and superstitions: we say (as Aretius doth) thereon. Concerning the reason of the mingling wine and water, it seemeth vnto me probable, because that making the supper of the Lord in a common banquet, they also dranke more largely, not sipping, as at this day it is the manner. And therefore, that the wine by it selfe being strong, should the lesse hinder them; water was put vnto it. Which we see also at this day to be done in common banquetes, that the noble wines are mingled. The place 1. Cor. 11. makes mee thus to thinke; where manifestly hee teacheth, that the abuse of the Lordes house beganne euen then to take holde, insomuch that manie were drunke in that loue feast. Thus sayeth Aretius for the originall of the water mingled with the wine. And as for the sending to the absent, hee sayeth: Fourthly, a portion of the supper was also sent to them that were absent, the which was doone without superstition, a token of friendshippe, and of vnion in doctrine and in their whole profession, euen as wee haue rehearsed before out of Eusebius, that tian order. that it was done at Rome, neither is here any mention made of any me-rite, or of any passeport exhibited to those that were about to die.

To conclude (sayth Aretius on this practise of the primitive Church next after the Apostles) hereunto came mutuall exhortations, to cōcord and constancie in faith and profession, that this might be a certain stipulation and obligation, that they should be constant in Christianitie, whatsoever fortune at the length should happē vnto them. These things in our action may almost all of them be declared. First in the publike assembly, which is a shewe of a publike banquet. Then the like oblation is of vs obserued, the wordes of the institution are recited, and to God the father is pronounced prayse and glorie. The mingling of wine and water, we haue not: for it is no part of the institution, neyther haue our wines neede of mingling, as the orientall wines haue, neyther doe wee drinke freely, as then they did. All that are present if they list doe communicate, and both the kindes are deliuered vnto all. It is not sent vnto those that are absent, because superstition hath corrupted that custome: they sent it then to those that were whole, & vnto strangers, that came not into the assembly: at this day onely to those that are readie to dye, and that for a certaine lucre and aduantage; yea, adde this vnto it, with a vaine perswasion of a kinde of necessarie passeport. A collection is made for the poore, and euery one giueth as much as hee will, saue that our folkes will giue too too little. The action is not mute (or dōmbe) but the hystory of the passion is recited. Priuate voices (or the speeches of priuate persons) come not hereunto, for because of moderate or comly order. They approch (he speaketh of the order in his countrie at Bernes) and it is receaued of them standing, for the Paschall Lambe was eaten of them that stood: howbeit neither makes it any matter, whether the communicantes stande or sitte. (nor yet if they kneele, as is the order of our Church.) This briefly (sayeth Aretius) is our action not vnlike Iustines.

Howe intollerable an abuse then is it of the sacramentes of the Lord, to committe the administration of them to those men, that are not able to expounde the mysterie of them.

This conclusion standes all on that worde able, which wee haue sufficiently (I hope) answered before, saue that here in this conclusion. it is more more ambiguously referred to expounding, than in the premises. For by of expounding.

the abilitie to expounde the mysterie of the sacramentes, may be ment, eyther the preaching (which notwithstanding is to be wished, that eue- Abilitie to rie Minister were able so to expounde the mysterie of them, if it pleas- expound the sed God so to graunt it although alwayes they so did not:) or else, their a- mysterys of bilitie of discrete setting forth those expositions of these sacraments, that the sacram.
are prescribed in the publike forme of their ministracion: or other godly expositions of other learned mē, authorized to be read at the same times, the ministers themselves being, though not able with any commendable gift of publike eloquence, to treat at large vpon them, and so expounde the mysterie of them: yet able well inough to shewe vnto the people, or to any that aske them, plainly and briefly the summe and principall content of the mysterie of them. In which sorte (I trust) the simplest minister of them all, is able to expounde the mysterie of them: or else no Bishop or ordinarie would permitte him, to serue any neuer so small a cure, or any other would allowe him any stipende at all thereunto, if he be con-uicted of such inhabilitie. So that this intollerable abuse, eyther is not in use at all, or at least, in any Minister not allowed, by any lawe or constitution nowe in force, but that such vnable Ministers may be remooued, and other more able placed, although they cannot expound the mysterie of the same by publike preaching. But nowe let our Brethren procede to their further arguments and proues on this matter.

And seeing the elements of the world, of which the outward part of The lear- the sacraments is taken, be dead & beggerly of themselves, except they ned disc.
be animated and enriched with the promise and word of God, which is pag. 61.
the life of the sacraments: what can it be better then sacrilege, to separate the ministracion of preaching of the word from the sacraments?

If the elements of the world, be separated frō the promise & word of Bridges.
God, & opposed against it: these termes, dead & beggerly, might better fitte the. And so S. Paul called the ceremonies & sacraments of the old law, elemēts of the world, & not after Christ, Coll. 2. 8. and so Caluine expounds those words saying: But what calleth he the elementes of the worlde? No dout but ceremonies. For straight after in place of exāple he bringeth in one kind, to wit, Circumcision. And also Gal. 4. 9. S. Paule calleth the ceremonies of the Iewes, weake & beggerly elemēts. The which he doth (sayth Caluin) because he cōsidereth them without Christ, yea rather against Christ. For to the fathers, they were not only healthful exercises & helps of godlines, but also effectuell instrumēts of grace. But their whole force was in Christ, and in the institution of God. But the false Apostles neglecting the promises, would oppose them against Christ, as though Christ alone sufficed not. No maruell therefore if Paul repute the trifles & things of no value. Now, if the outward signe or element in the sacrament,

ment, be thus used among vs, that is to say, be destitute of the word, of the institution, of the promise, of the remembrance of Christ: yea, of Christ himselfe, & be opposed against Christ: then are these speeches of worldly, dead and beggerly elements well alleaged, and truly applyed against our sacraments.

Aug. tractat.
in Ioh. 80.

For, true it is, that Saint Augustine, tractatu in Ioh. 80. sayth: You are now cleane for the worde that I spake vnto you. why sayth he not, Ye are cleane for the baptisme with the which yee are washed. But sayth: for the word which I haue spoken vnto you? But that also in the water, the worde cleanseth. Take away the worde, and what is water, but water? The worde commeth to the element, and it is made a sacrament; yea, as it were, euen a visible word. For verely, he sayd this also, when he washed the Disciples feete: He that is washed, needeth not, saue that he wash his feete, but is cleane through out. From whence commeth this so great a vertue to the water, that it toucheth the bodie, and washeth the heart; except, that the word doe it; not because it is spoken, but because it is beleued? For in the worde it selfe also, the sounde passing is one thing, and the vertue remayning is another thing. This is the worde of faith the which we preach (sayth the Apostle) because, if thou shalt confesse in thy mouth that Iesw is the Lorde, & shalt beleue in thy heart, that God raysed him vp from the dead, thou shalt be safe. For with the heart it is beleued vnto righteousnesse, but with the mouth confession is made vnto saluation. Whereupon wee reade in the Actes of the Apostles, clensing their heartes by faith. And the blessed Peter in his Epistle sayeth: So hath baptisme also made you safe, not the putting off the filth of the flesh, but the interrogation of a good conscience. This is the word of faith that we preach. With the which (out of doubt) baptisme is also consecrated, that it may be able for to cleanse. For Christ being the vine with vs, with the father beeing the husbandman: loued his Church and gaue himselfe for it. Reade the Apostle, and see what he adioyneth: that he might sanctifie it, (sayth hee) clensing the same with the washing of water in the worde. This word of faith anayleth in the Church of God so much, that by the same it clenseth the beleuer, the offerer, the blesser, the dipper, yea the infant, being so little a one, although he be not yet able, with the heart to beleue to righteousnesses, and with the mouthe to confesse to saluation. This is doone altogether by the worde whereof the Lorde sayth: Yee are nowe cleansed for the worde that I haue spoken vnto you.

Rom. 10.

Act. 19.

1. Pet. 3.

The word
preaching
at the sacrament comprehendeth the action of all the people.

I thought it not amisse to set downe at large the whole sentence, not onely for the notablenesse thereof, touching other matters: but for feare of caulling least, our Wretched might say, I left out the word preached, here twice named. But that we should plainly see, he speaketh here of preaching it, in such sense, as although it comprehendeth the proper action of the preacher, yet withall we see it stretcheth to the public confession of all Christians. And the wordes that here most especially he speaketh of, abused.

that the Disciples were censed for (or through) the wordes that Christe spake vnto them: although this sentence of Christe, 1o. 15. 3. be a part of that notable sermon, that he had after his sacramentall supper: yet these wordes that he maketh relation vnto, supposing they were spoken befoze the supper) were no preaching, nor any part of preaching, but spoken by Christe vnto Peter, when he came to him among the residue, to wash his feete, as appeareth in the storie hereof, Ioh. 13. 5. &c. As-

The wordes that Christ spake in that action were, not preaching.

ter that he poured water into a bassyn, and beganne to washe the Disciples feete, and to wipe them with the towell wherewith he was gyrt: then came hee to Simon Peter, who sayde to him, Lorde dost thou wash my feete? Iesus answered and sayde vnto him, what I doe, thou knowest not nowe, but thou shalt knowe it hereafter. Peter sayde vnto him, thou shalt neuer wash my feete. Iesus answered him, if I wash thee not, thou shalt haue no part with me. Simon Peter sayde vnto him, Lorde not my feete onely, but also the hande and the head. Iesus sayde vnto him, he that is washed, needeth not saue to washe his feete, but is cleane euerie whitte. And yett are cleane, but not all. Shall we nowe saye heere, that Christ made a Sermon? Indeepe, if our Bzethzen means the preaching of the worde in this sense, that it is preaching, though onely it be thus briefly spoken by the Minister, to the ende the people may better vnderstande and beleue the worde: in that sense I holde well, that in the Lordes supper the worde of God concerning the death of the L. should alwayes be so preached. As Oletianus also sayth on these wordes, Rom. 10. 8. This is the worde of faith, the which we preach.

Oletianus in Rom. 10. 8.

Note a difference between the true word of God, which is preached to this end, that faith & cōuersion may be in the hart: & the magical word, which is pronounced vpon the thinges, that it might worke something * on the thinges that are set (or grafted,) or else, that a power should be ascribed to the syllables. Example, the gospell of Iohn is the worde that we preach. In the beginning was the word (sayeth Iohn,) he teacheth to trust in Christ the true God, he teacheth that all thinges are made by him. The end is, that I should beleue, not that I should driue away tempests. The whole Masse is magicall, although they recite the Gospell, and mutter it vpon the hoast: because it is not the worde of faith, that is preached. If it be not preached, that it may be vnderstoode, or that vertue be ascribed to the syllables, the which resideth in God alone, so that, it is due to him alone: and this is Magicall. So, they that saye when the woordes are pronounced ouer the breade, then it is the bodie: it is Magicall. Christe pronounced not the woordes ouer the breade, but preached his death at the table to his Disciples, with the wordes and with the tokens, and that they might vnderstande, to what ende those tokens were instituted. In baptisme the Papistes, vse muche Magike.

rightly
sed.

Out of the 7. of Mark they say, Ephata, that is, be opened, as Christ (said) vnto the deafe man. And by the vertue of wordes, they will include the holy Ghost into the water. Al these things are not the word of faith that we preach. Paul knoweth no other word of faith, thā preaching not murmured. Here lighteth the absolution, Auff in Boden, euen frō the very bo thome (or frō the messengers) made vpon the head, by the vertue of the words, Act. 10. to him giue all the Prophets witness. &c. Peter mutteth not wordes vpon the heads of euery one of thē, but preacheth of Christ the promise of the Gospell, confirmed by the testimonie of al the Prophets: and the holy Ghost fell vpon the hearers. Thus sayth Oleuian.

So that, preaching being vnderstood in this generall sense, as not only it may signifie such a solemn sermon as Peter there made, Act. 10. but also as may comprehend the wordes of our Saviour Christ at the table, when he instituted his mysticall supper: If the wordes want his preaching in this manner in our administration of the sacraments, then indeed our bps: then might haue some cause to say, that we maintain the elements of the world, & dead & beggerly elemēts: yea, that although we haue the word, it were but a magicall murmuring of it. But becommeth it our W^{ch} to bestowe these speeches vpon the outward signes of the sacraments, when they are animated and enriched with the wordes of God, in such order as Christ instituted thē, and the Apostles practised thē? Is this to separate either the word, or preaching of the wordes from the sacraments?

The life of

But our W^{ch} only vnderstande by preaching, such a further exposition & exhortation vpon this matter, as the learned Minister that at his discretion, amplifie & set forth the same with all. And can our W^{ch} proue that this manner of preaching the word, is either any such substantial part of the sacraments, or any such inseparable accident therunto, that except it also be annexed, the life that animateth the elements, & the treasure that enricheth them, which is the promise & word of God, is separated from them? Is not in baptisme the word of God it selfe, being not magically murmured, but clearly & with vnderstanding spoken, & concealed with vnderstanding & beleeuing of the hearer (if he haue capacitie to heare and vnderstand and beleue, yea, though he haue not, (as infantes haue not) this life & riches of the elemēt, vnderstanding the word as it is toynd wth the spirit, that animateth and enricheth the word, wherby the word be- cometh effectual, to animate & enrich the element, without ascribing ver- tue to the bare word? Is it not thē of sufficient vertue to baptize & cleanse the infant, whē besides the element of water, these wordes, In the name of the father, of the sonne, & of the holy Ghost, that Christ hath comāded those to vse, which are his ministers appointed therunto, belesse p^r promise there declared of washing away our sinnes, of newnes of life, and that we shalbe saued: which promise, where Gods spirite worketh by his wordes, cessary articles of our Christian faith: Shall wee say that euen then when such a one should come to be baptized, hee must haue also a sermon made vnto him, at the celebrating of this sacrament, or else the element of water is but a worldly, a dead, a beggerly element, and the word neuer so plainely pronounced, is but a magicall murmuring?

And what if there be yet besides al this, a godly and learned forme also, most plainely expresting all the pointes conteyned in that myserie, and that all the couenant betwixt God and vs, be so fully exprested, that the best preacher in the worlde cannot in effect say more, and all this so clereset out, that all of vnderstanding may vnderstande it: Shall it yet be saide, How clearethat the element is here dead, and beggerly, and separated from his life ly the word and spirituall riches? And all this haue we, besides godly & learned ho- is set fourth milies, and many other sermons set out for that purpose, & yet all this will in our form not serue our Wth. without a sermon preached at that instant. of baptisme.

And for the supper of the L. haue not wee likewise most pitthe & godly exhortations, befoze we appoach vnto it. with prayers and thankesgiuing, and publike confessions, & the whole institution also layd forth befoze vs, when we come thereto? And the wordes of Christ not vsed with a magi-call murmuring, no; any such vertue ascribed to the wordes, but all to Christ the instituter, and to the vertue of his death and passion, whom, and whose passion we receiue, and take the elements with the word in remebrance of him, & of his body giuen for vs, & of his blood shed for vs, & shew forth his death by this action, feeding by faith in our hearts, on his flesh and blood, as effectually & truly, in spirituall manner, as our bodies feede on those bodily elements: and that hereunto these elements are consecrated as holy & lively signes & pledges, to confirme our faith, relying at the promise of the same our Sauour, that by eating his flesh & drinking his blood we shal haue life euermore. And all this is clearely set out eue as it is conteyned in the scripture, & gathered together in so excellent disposed a forme, as all the worlde cannot amende, no; is inferiour to any of our Wth. formes. Yea, (all thinges considered) our forme is farre more conuenient for vs than is any of theirs, to enflame & confirm our faithes in our Sauour Christ, & in the merites of his passion, to make vs repentant of our sins, to comfort vs in the forgiveness of them, to knit vs in loue and charitie all to God, in a communion with Christ our head, & in the communion of saintes one to another, to prouoke vs to leade a new life, & to offer the sacram.

And can now our W^{eth}. say, (if they wil say the truth) that here wants the promise and worde of God, and that it is separated and not set forth that heere is but a dead, & beggerly element: that here is but a part, and that but the outwarde part of the sacrament, and so no sacrament, as the bodie of a man without the soule, which animateth and giueth life to the body, is not a man but a dead corpse? And dare our W^{eth}.zen (beyonds all this) be thus bolde to demand, what can it be better than sacrilege? For if it be no better than sacrilege, then is it no sacrament at all. We dare not burden the Papists so farre, so; their baptizing, notwithstanding all their incantations, superstitious toys, and materiall additions to the element of water, besides their dangerous errours about baptism that the baptism which their Popish and Idolatrous sacrificers ministred; no, what heretike soeuer he were, so long as he and they observe the forme and matter of baptism, by our Saviour Christ prescribed; we dare not say, they are not baptized at all, and take vpon vs to baptize them againe, nor I thinke our W^{eth}. dare attempt it or auouch it. And can they auow these speeches then of our baptizing now, that keepeth the mere and simple institution of Christ, without any of those corruptions? Howe farre more modestly writeth Caluine in his 265. Epistle Rogans quidam, &c. There are certaine that inquire, if it were lawefull for the Apostles at the houre of prayer, to ascende into the temple: and moreouer for Paule to performe the solempne rite of sanctification: why may not we also intermingler prayers with the Papistes? We must first holde this, that the prayers which were in vse among the Iewes, were pure, & formed to the lawes prescription. Neither yet (if the Papistes did conceaue a pure forme of praying) would I make any religion to enter with the into the temple. But when became not them to ioyne theselues, vnto their assembly that had embraced Christ: I answered, a godly & holy action is not corrupted by the vice of the men. As I am wont to say, that If all the Angels were present at the Masse, they are not able with their holynes to cleanse the filthinesse therof. Nor yet againe, are al the deuils able with their presence to bring to passe, that the holy supper when it is celebrated according to the institution of Christ, should not reteyne the puritie thereof. Since therfore we haue the very institution of Christ both in his supper and in our baptism, so clearly set forth as we haue seene, shall the ministers insufficiency to preach the things y^e he (after so good a forme prescribed both to him & vs) declareth, be such a pollution, that these holy sacramentes should be defiled thereby thereby, and be counted or called beggerly elementes? Is it lawfull for <sup>the of preaching at baptisme.</sup> Caluine to say of the Iewes ceremonies, that though without or against <sup>Caluinus in Gal. 4. 9.</sup> Christ they were weake and beggerly elements: yet hauing the promise adioyned and referred to Christe, they were to the fathers not onely healthfull exercises & helpes of godlines, but also effectuall instruments of grace? And are ours being done according to Christs institution, & with Christ, & for Christ, of lesse force now than theirs then? For as for theirs, <sup>How the Papistes committed sacri-

lege in the
L. supper.</sup> neither circumcision nor the Pascale Lambe, had alwaies a sermo preached at the ministration of the. And shall we then say, that if ours want a sermon at the ministration of them, ours are lesse effectual than were theirs sacraments? Indee we dare burden the Papistes with the terme of sacrilege (by Gelasius their owne Popes mouth) for subtracting the L. cup: and burthn the again so far as all these termes amount vnto, for their so transforming of the L. supper: that they made no supper of the L. at all thereof, nor any sacrament but a mere sacrilege, & an Idolatrous sacrifice of their owne making. Both wresting the word into an absurd & monstrous sense yea, into a sense cleane contrary to any sacramentall sense, taking cleane away the element. And so (as we haue heard out of Augustine) they ouerthrew the nature of a sacrament. For (as he sayth adde the worde to the element, & it is made a sacrament: so take the element frō the word, & it is made no sacrament. But can our W^{orship} say as much of vs, that as the Papistes take the element frō the word, when they bring in transubstantiation: so, we take the worde from the element, when we euer haue the word & the element ioyned together, though in their sense, it be not alwaies preached? And yet it is alwayes so at large expounded, & I see not what a learned preacher can say more, concerning the matter & substance of the sacrament, or any thing necessary for the worthy receivers, saue either to their further exhortation, vpon some speciall occasion, or to their further resolution, if any doubt arise about the true vnderstanding of it.

How sermons are very profitable at the sacrament.

And to these purposes, sermons we graunt are very profitable, or some homilies read to the same purpose. But to say (as our W^{orship} do) that except the sacraments be administred, by one that is able to preach, & at the same time do preach a sermon, besides all these things aforesaid, or else the element is but worldly, dead & beggerly, & is separated from the word, & no better than sacrilege: these are very presumptuous, dangerous and erroneous speeches, & indee not tollerable, being such as necessarily im-pyle, that the most part of vs, and peraduenture of themselves also, are not as yet any whit more baptized, than in the Popish time we celebrated the Lords supper, that is to say in plaine English, not at all. Which howe nere it would be aue to any true baptisme, let the reader and their selues consider. Our W^{orship}ens argument is this:

To separate the elements in the ministration of the sacramentes, from tie of pre-ching at baptisme.

the promise and worde of God, which is the life and riches to animate and enrich the sacrament, is but to giue vs worldly, dead, and beggerly elements, and is nothing else but sacrilege:

But, to separate the ministratiō of preaching of the word from the sacraments, is to separate the element in the ministratiō of the sacraments from the promise & word of God, which is the life & riches to animate and enrich the sacrament: therefore, it is but to giue dead & beggerly elements and nothing else but sacrilege, to separate the preaching of the word from the sacraments. The minor of this argument, as we haue seene (vnderstanding preaching as they vnderstand it) is apparant false, for although it be true in the supper of the L. where the participants haue discretion, vnderstanding preaching, so y^e the worde and promise of God be taught and set forth in anis such sort, as the congregation may be edified in the vnderstanding and beleuing of these mysteries: neuertheless we can not graunt therto so absolutely for baptisme. Which it may be fully receaued (so) the truth and substance thereof by the infants that want discretion to vnderstand the mystery of it in what language soeuer it be spoken. So that either our B^{re}th^r must both deny theselues to be as yet baptized, and yelde to the anabaptistes in repelling infantes: or deny this argument. Albeit restraining the argumēt to the other sacrament: we gladly yelde and subscribe to that part of the argument, as hauing alwayes both the word, and ministratiō of preaching of the worde, when soeuer the sacramentes are with vs administred. And so farre forth, we conserue and allowe of that order, which Caluine himselfe p^rscribeth in his institutions, concerning the Lords supper. cap. 18. sect. 34. saying: Hetherto we haue haue reasoned howe it serueth to our faith towarde God. But when the Lorde in this sacrament reuoketh into our memorie so great a bountie of his goodnesse as we haue declared, and stirreth vs vp to acknowledge the same: he warneth vs with all, that we should not be vnthankfull to his liberalitie so plentifully powred forth, but that rather we should with prayes wherewith it is meete, preach the same, and celebrate it with thanksgiuing. Therefore when he deliuered the institution of this sacrament to his Apostles, he taught them that they should do it in memory of him, which Paule interpreteth, to shewe forth the Lorde death, (here againe is that interpretation, whereof our B^{re}th. spake before) but that publikely, and all of them together with one voice openly to confesse, that all our trust of life and saluation is placed in the death of the Lorde, that we should glorifie him with our confession, & should exhort others by our example to giue him glorie. Here againe appeareth, whether the scope of the sacrament aymeth, to wite, that it might exercise vs in the memorie of the death of Christ. For, that we be bidden to shewe forth the death of the Lord, vntill his comming to iudge: is no other stit cap. 18.

sect. 34.

other thing, but that we should preach with the confession of the mouth, that which in the sacrament our faith acknowledgeth, that is to wit, the death of Christe to be our life. This is the seconde vse of the sacrament which appertayneth to externall confession.

There is in one sense (as we haue also shewed before, & that out of Caluin) a generall preaching at the ministracion of this Sacrament. And this preaching, our brethren can not deny, but we haue. Now for the other kinds also of preaching more peculiar to the Minister, Caluine proceedes.

Thirdlie, and that in the steede of an exhortation vnto vs the Lord (him selfe) would bee, Than the which (exhortation) none could more vehemently animate and enflambe vs, both vnto purity and holinesse of life, and also to charity, peace and consent. For the Lorde doth so communicate there his body vnto vs, it is altogether one with vs, and wee with him. &c. There againe he maketh another kinde of preaching, which he saith is the Lorde him selfe, in steede of a most effectuall exhortation, to witte, the communicating of his body vnto vs. And this preaching againe (God be prayesed) we haue in the Ministracion of this sacrament.

Nowe hereupon he commeth to the thirde kinde of preaching at this sacrament, & saith: Sect. 36. From hence is best of al confirmed, that which otherwher I said: that the right administracion of the sacrament is contained in the word. For what profite soeuer commeth into vs out of the supper, requireth the word. Whether we are to bee confirmed in fayth, or to be exercised in Confession, or to bee stirred vp to our duty: there is need of preaching. Nothing therefore can be done more preposterous in the Lordes Supper, then if it be turned into a mute (or dumb) action, the which thing was done vnder the tyranny of the Pope. For they wold haue all the force of the consecration, to hang vppon the (sacerdotall) Priestes intention: as though this appertayned nothing to the people, to whome this mystery ought moste of all to haue bene layde open. And heereupon was this error bred, that they marked not those promises, where-with the consecration is made, not to bee directed to the elementes them-selues, but vnto those that doe receiue them truly. Christ speaketh not vnto the breade, that it should be made his body: but he biddeth his Disciples, eate: and to them hee promiseth the communicating of his body and his bloude. Neither doth Paule teache another order, then that together with the breade and the Cuppe, (the promises should bee offered to the faithfull. Thus certainly it is. Here it becometh not vs to imagine any magicall incantation, that it might bee enough to haue murmured vp the wordes, as though they were heard of the elementes: but wee should vnderstande those wordes to bee a liuely preaching, that edifieth the hearers that pierceth into their minds that is imprinted and sitteth in their heartes, that may bring forth an efficacie efficacie, in the fulfilling of that that it promisseth. By these reasons it is euident, that the reseruing (or laying vp) of the sacrament, which some vrge to be extraordinarily distributed to the sicke, is vnprofitable. For eyther they shall receiue it, without reciting of the institution of Christ, or els the Minister shall ioine together with the signe, the true explication of the mystery. In silence is an abuse and vice. If the promises bee rehearsed, and the mystery declared, so that those that are to receiue shall receiue it with fruit, there is, no doubt, but that this is a true consecration. Thus saith Caluine of this third kind of preaching. Now if this be as hee saith, a true consecration, where the wordes are not muttered to the element, but spoken to the Communicants, & the mystery laid forth before them, and the promises recited: and that wee must vnderstande those wordes of Christe, to be such a liuely edifying and effectual kinde of preaching: all which are so clearly set forth whensoever this sacrament is of any Minister with vs celebrated: can our brethren say, that here wanteth the ministracion of preaching the word, so much as is necessary and sufficient, to make a true consecration of the sacrament?

True it is, that when Caluin comes to the full conclusion of this treatise, he reckoneth a fourth kind of preaching, sect. 70. Concluding thus.

So farre as pertaineth to the holy supper, it mought thus moste decently be administred, if that most often, and at the leaste euery weeke it were set forth vnto the Church. But the beginning should be made with publike prayers, after which a sermon should be had: than the Minister (the bread & wine being set forth on the table) shoulde reherce the institution of the supper. Then should he declare the promises which are left vnto vs in the same. And withal he should excommunicate all those that by the Lodes forbidding are put backe. Afterwarde prayer should be made that with what benignity the Lorde hath giuen vnto vs this holy nourishment, he woulde also instruct and frame vs, with faith & thankfulness of mind to receiue the same. And sith that we be not of our selues he wold of his mercy make vs worthy of such a banquet. But here either the psalmes should be song, or somewhat read, and the faithfull shoulde communicate of this holy foode in such order as is seemely, the ministers breaking the breade and deliuering it vnto the people. The Lodes supper being done, an exhortation shoulde be had for sincere faith, &c.

Thus both Caluin writeth of al the order that he wold haue obserued, in the administration of the Lords supper. Wherein, he prescribeth it not to any Church, but onely saith it mought be thus administred moste decently. And although hee mention that a sermon should be had, before it, and an exhortation after it (seeming to make some difference betwene them) yet whether such a sermon or exhortation may be had, as if a preacher want, may be of the Minister red vnto the people, of anothers making: that hee he both not expresse. For yet, whether the preacher or reader of the same, must alwayes be the partie that ministreth the sacrament, so, here is also nothing set down, but that we already haue in vse (his wordes being thus vnderstood) except the excommunicating of all those, that by the Lordes forbidding are put back. Neither doe wee thinke it necessary, that either excommunication should be then vsed, or that all those should be excommunicated, that by the Lordes forbidding are put back, from this supper. For so, every one that is not in charity with his neighbors, shold forthwith be excommunicate. But sith Calvin, so modestly in these things, onely telleth, what he thinketh mought be a most comely manner of the administration, preiudicating no other reformed churches: let Geneva (with good leaue of vs,) follow this order. And let vs in Gods name, follow our Communion Booke, which (we thinke) both containeth the most and chiefe of all these things, and in a farre more decent order for our state. Yea, the booke of the orders of Geneva maketh the Deacons also ministers of the cup and why not aswell of the Bread and of all both partes as well as of one? and yet they wil not permit them to be preachers. Musc. in his comon places, De cana domini: vpon this title, by whome the Supper of the L. shold be administred (with the like modesty that Calvin) saith on this wise. I know that this is the custome in some churches, that the ministers of the word exercise the place of the prophets & doctors: & in the mean time, they leaue the administration of the sacraments, to the parish preests & curates of the people (as they tearm them) with the deacons. Notwithstanding, that custome ought not to preiudicate other churches in which the dispensers of the sacraments, are the same that are the dispensers of the word, so that, they execute both the parts of the ministry. Otherwise, it shold be conuenient, that according to the saying of the apostles, act. 6. they shoulde apply themselves to prayers & administering doctrine, leauing the ministry of the tables. Seeing that many may be had that can dispense the sacraments, than those which can rightly cut sound doctrine in the church. By which testimony of Musc. & by the very order prescribed euen in Geneva. It plainly appeareth, & not only in these reformed Churches, many are admitted to minister the Sacrament, that are not able to preach: but that also, this was the vse of the primitive Church in the apostles times. Which overthroweth al that our brethren haue heron alleged. Neither helpeth it to say, that yet still this taketh not away, but that there shold be preaching vsed at the administration of the sacrament, though the minister of the sacrament be no preacher. For our brethren said, the administration of the sacramentes ought to be committed to none, but vnto such as are preachers of the worde. &c. pag. 60. But for this that they say here also, It is no better then sacriledge to sepearate the ministratio of preaching of the worde from the sacramentes, so hard a speche following:

Musc.

Musculus proceeding with the minister of this Sacrament though hee be no preacher of the worde, yet he requireth in him such a competency, as hath a triple respect, both to the person that he sustaineth, and of the matter that he administred, and of the people to whome he communicateth.

After he hath shewed for the first part howe he shoulde be no lewd person, but sober and vertuous: comming to the second respect in him, he saith: Furthermore, hee ministrerth it competently, if hee haue a consideration of those thinges which hee dispenseth, and doe worthily frame him selfe vnto them. Hee dispenseth the communicating of the bodye and bloude of Christe. The breade which wee breake (saith the Apostle) Is it not the communicating of the body of the Lorde? And the Cup of the blessing ouer which wee blesse, is it not the communicating of the bloude of the Lorde? 1. Cor. 10. Thus therefore shall hee competently administer this sacrament, that it may be a communicating, not that it shoulde be a holy priuate thing. He dispenseth the remembrance of the Lorde, or (as Augustine in a certaine place speaketh) the sacrament of memory. This shall he do competently, if he shall adioin vnto the mysticall communicating, the shewing forth of the L. death, according to the worde of the Apostle, who sayth: so often as ye eate this bread and drink of the Cup, yee shewe foorth the Lordes death till he come, For so did hee ordaine this custome in the Church of the Corinthians. It is not fit that it should be a dumb communicating. Either let some thing be read before the people, or bee sung, concerning the historye of the death of the Lorde, as it is begun to be done, in very many churches in our age. Hee dispenseth the Euchariste: the Euchariste, is a giuing of thankes and a sacrifice of prayse. Let him therefore haue a care, that this holy communion may be closed vp with publike giuing of thanks. He dispenseth the loue feast, that is, the banquet of brotherly loue. It is meete therefore that a cleare exercise of Christian loue and mutuall communicating shoulde bee adhibited. Vnto the which hee ought not onely with exhortations in the act it selfe to enstruet and accustome them, but also with constitutions of a certaine order. These are the principall thinges, of which the dispenser of the Lordes table, ought cheefely to haue a care and consideration, whereby hee may apply him-selfe competently vnto this sacrament.

VWhat kind

The third respect is of the people communicating, which the more simple & ruder they are, so much the simpler must the minister speake of the mystery of the Lordes supper, that he may apply him-selfe to their capacity. But he must by all meanes take heede of those two vices, that entrap the people, to witte, superstition and contempt. Superstition, least the people worship and adore that for the thing it selfe, that is the signe thereof:

thereof: contempt, least they sticke onely in the breade and Wine, not discerning the body and bloude of the Lorde, and therefore contemne it, vnderstanding nothing beyond the iugdement of the eyes, because by sight and taste they perceiue it to bee bread and Wine. Such a point did Augustine giue warning of, in his booke of Catechizing the rude, in the ninth chapter, where he saith thus: Concerning the sacrament that they shall receiue, it sufficeth for those that are more prudent, to heare what that thing signifieth: but with the duller sort, it must with more wordes and similitudes be treated vpon, least they contemne that which they see. These things wrot he. To conclude hee must take heede that hee swerue not either to the Corinthians, or to the papists, in this cause of the Lordes Supper. And to the entent that the people not onely with the hande and mouth, but with faith and heart may receiue that which is giuen, let him declare all thinges that are to bee spoken, in the vulgare and vsuall tongue, not onely the exhortations, but also the wordes of the Lordes institution, the Prayers also and the thankesgiuing, whereby the people may vnderstand all, and in their heart assent thereto, according to the Apostles admonition, 1. Cor. 14.

Thus wee see how although the Minister be no preacher, but beeing a discrete and vertuous man in all these foresaide respectes, and obserue these exhortations, which are both plentifully set out in Homilies, and in the Communion Booke it selfe, and the other thinges here noted, in such order as the communicantes may vnderstande and beleue the same: although there bee no other sermon preached, yet is the Sacrament truly and effectually administred. Peether can these thinges with the reasons that he setteth downe, bee vnderstood, for the onelie action of a Preacher: confessing and allowing, that manie Ministers not Preachers, may minister this Sacrament, and yet in euery one that ministreth the same all these thinges are requisite. For what is plainer than this argument, out of Musculus sayings: Musculus thinketh and prooueth, that it is not necessarie, that euery one which administreth the Sacraments should be a Preacher, and preach at the ministration of them:

But Musculus thinketh, and prooueth it necessarie, that all thinges ought to bee done by the minister, at the Ministration of them, which here he reckoneth vp. The effect of Musculus argument.

Therefore Musculus thinketh and prooueth that all these thinges might bee done of one that is no preacher and without a sermon then preached of these matters. If our Brethren wil denie the maior, (for the minor, I thinke they wil not) I referre them to Musculus and his reasons, out of Actes 6. and to the reformed Churches that hee meaneth. It sufficeth for vs to prooue both by him and by Caluine, that, as wee haue alwayes some kindes and that effectually, of preaching the Lordes death at the the Ministration of the Lordes supper: so, though wee haue not alwayes y kinde of preaching, which our Bz. bzge vnnecessarily, as meere necessary, and we graunt also to be conuenient, and wish it could in euery place bee had: yet wanting this maner of Preaching, & hauing all the other: we may boldly and safely auowe, that it is a consecration, as Cal. calleth it a right administration of the Sacrament, as we vse it. But say our Bzethzen:

Howe can this be rightly alleaged against vs, that haue both the seale and the writing ioyned together: but rather make for vs against our Bzethzen: For, if this confirmation of writings by the seale added thereto, to, and this auailablenesse of the seale ioyned to the writing, be of the spi-rite of God: With wee haue both of them in the Sacramentes, jointly together, and vse the seale neuer without that worde or writing, that Gods pen-men by the inspiration of his holy spirite did set downe in authentical recorde of writing: Howe can our Bzethzen maintaine their sayings, that we sacrilegiously seperate and pull the writing from the seale, or the seale from the writing, and glue a dead, beggerly, and worldly Element or bare seale, that is not auaylable, but against Christes institution, and against Gods spirite? Surely, in this and such like slaunders, our Bzethzen do not a little sinne, euen against the spirite of God in them, and against their owne spirites and knowledges: that knowe well ynough, and can not bee ignorant, but that we ioyne alwaies the writing to the seale, whensoeuer we deliuer the seale: and that in as ample manner, as the writing is left written vnto vs. Neither do we deliuer onely the writing with the seale, and read the whole writing at the deliuey: but read it in such plain & clear manner, that euery one which receiveth the same, may well perceiue the content of the writing, the validity of the seale, and all the mystery, purport and effect of the whole deede. Only this, no large voluntary Discourse, is at euery time of the deliuey made thereupon. And is this so necessary also in all deedes written, sealed & deliuered, and withall briefly and plainly declared, in whose name and act, and to what vse & end, it is so passed, that ther must be alwayes besides al this, a large treatize vttered by the deliuerer to the receiuer, or else the deed is not an autenticall deede nor auailahaue it preached): therefore we haue not the writing in this action, but the seale without the writing. Hereupon our bzethzen againe conclude.

Therefore in this behalfe wee haue had great default, so long time to commit the administration of the sacramentes to those men, who not onely

onely haue bene knowne to be vnable, but also haue bene forbidden to preach the worde. forbidden to preach.

We do not excuse the default of any, that haue admitted any such into the Ministerie, that haue bene knowne to be vnable to administer the sacraments. Neither defend we any such vnable Ministers, or would haue them to be allowed or tollerated. Let such (being known) a Gods name, be orderly remooued and provided for. But we stand now vpon the absolute necessity of this ability, that our brethren vrge to be in every Minister, to whom the administration of the sacraments may be committed: that he must needs be withall a Learned Preacher of the Worde. Which though we also like off, so farre as stretcheth to comenience: yet we dare not, nor can admitte this absolute necessity, vnderstanding preaching as is aforesayde. But see here, on whome moste of all, our Brethrens accusation of this so great default will light. They doe wel before hand to enclude them selues in the number, saying: in this behalfe wee haue had great default. for although they meane nothing lesse in this (wee) that here they speake of, than to charge them-selues, with any part of this default, but with a mannerly tearme, reach at others: yet how will they acquite them-selues heereof? for if, we haue had great default in this behalfe, to commit the administration of the sacramentes to those men, that are knowne to bee vnable to preache the worde: vnderstanding preaching in that sense, that our brethren here do. so; free, extemporarie, or premeditated exhortation, admonition, application: &c. How do not they incurre the same default? except they will denye Doctours or Teachers to bee Ministers of the Word, and so (by their owne confession) Ministers also of the Sacraments, and yet, by their former principles, they permit them not to exhort, admonish nor apply, &c. Which things are most necessary vnto preaching, namely, to that preaching, that is vsed at the administration of the Sacramentes. If they say these Doctors notwithstanding, be not vnable: for they can do it, though they may not doe it. What boteth this shift? for if they may not: then in all right, which is as good as in all might, they be vnable to preache and yet not vnable to minister the sacraments. Either therefore, let our Brethren deny that they may minister the sacraments: or deny this to be so great a default, that a sacrament may be administered without this manner of preaching. Or else, whether shall wee bee found more faulty, that suffer Ministers to administer the sacraments, that are vnable to preach at the administration of them, wishing not withstanding they were able, and helping their vnability what wee can, and provide as many able as wee may: or they, which doe vnable many Ministers that are able, and say, they can doe it, but they must not. And so, both committe a greate default heerein, and quite and cleane ouerturne them-selues, and all their owne principalities on this matter. And see againe, by Women. gaine, how this in the nicke commeth in, that they adde of our forbidding to preach. Doth not this also, most of al. euen in this point touch theselues in not permitting Doctors & teachers to exhort & apply? is not this al one as if they forbad them preaching? as for our forbidding, it is not so absolute, nor so peremptory, but, either it is, because they haue not the gift of publike exhortation and application, &c. Which if they had, and would vse the same, as they should accordingly, none of vs would forbid them. And yet may they notwithstanding be Ministers of the Word: else, how should euen our Brethren Doctors be Ministers of it? Or, perhaps, they are forbidden, because of some defect in the parties life, or some other occasion, that might make him offensive for that action, for a time to be staied, and yet that Minister so farre-foorth, on some good consideration, being forbidden to preach, may notwithstanding be not forbidden, to continue the other partes of his function, both to set forth the publike form of prayer, and to reade the Lessons appointed out of the Scripture, and to administer the Sacramentes to the people. And this is as true a saying, as it is olde, Primum sacramenti non tollit vicia ministri. God forbid, that the sacrament which such a Minister doth administer, should be so depend vpon him, or his life or preaching, that when he vpon infirmity, or default, or prohibition, or any other occasion ceaseth to preache: then the sacrament that he ministrereth should be thought not to be effectuell. Which to affirme, is a perillous error, and inferreth many dangers and absurdities. But now, besides this quarrel of not being preachers: our Brethren vvaile this matter of the sacramentes to other points and say.

The force of the sacrament & substance thereof dependeth not vpon the ministers not preaching.

The learned discourse. And that which is more straunge, to be suffered in this clear light of the Gospell, to permit the ministration of baptisme not onely to ignorant men, but also to Women which haue no voyce to speake in the Congregation, 1. Cor. 14. 34. and 1. Tim. 2. 11. and that in priuate places, but in case (they say) of necessity, as though there were such necessity of the outwarde signe, when it can-not bee ministred according to the institution of Christe, which is nothing else but to affirme with the papistes, that sacramentes conferre grace of the work wrought: and that the sacrament of Baptisme, is a sacrament of such necessity, that whosoever is not dipped in Water, must bee eternally condemned. Which hereticall opinion, as we haue hissed out of our profession and preaching, so is it a great shame for vs to maintain by such corrupt vse of Christs holy sacramentes.

Bridges Concerning the permitting the administration of Baptisme (in this light of the Gospell) to Women. (Bes it spoken with the reuerence of our Brethren) it is moste vnttrue. When as it is not onely giuen customably in the open charge of euery visitation, whether any such thing be done by them, as in the time of the popish darknesse was vsed: but also if anye such such thing haue hapned and be found out, the parties that so haue done, are openly punished for the same. And how then is not this more strange, that our Brethren dare say, it is suffered & permitted vnto women: concerning Womens hauing no voyce to speake in the Congregation: I hope our Brethren will not stretch it further, than saint Paule ment it, nor urge it as Sanders and the papists do, which were not onely against the scripture, but against the state.

Womens

gregation.

As for baptizing in priuate places: though ordinarily, the open church and place appointed in the church, (as is the publike font) be the most fit place for such publike actions: yet, where a sufficient cōgregation is present and vpon some extraordinary occasion, if the sacraments be orderly administered, according to the godly forme by the Church prescribed: shall wee say this is not a true sacrament, or not to be permitted, or corruptly administered & receiued? if a Christiā be sick, and by reason of his infirmity may not, or dare not goe abroad, may he not be permitted to receiue by the ministration of the minister the holy Communion in his house, with some of his family or neighbors participants with him? and if this may be done in the Lordes supper, may it not be done as well in baptism, concerning the substance of the same, and also for all pointes of decency: thereto belonging, hauing a sufficient Congregation present, so that the Church be sufficiently certified of the orderly doing thereof? What place shall we call that, where the Eunuche was baptized by Philip? For although it was by the common high way, yet in respect of the publike places ordinarily accustomed for such solempne and sacred actions, it was but a priuate place.

The Eun-

And in what place did saint Peter command Cornelius to be baptized, with all the residue, on whom the holy ghost did come: is it not most like, that it was done in his priuate house? and likewise saint Pauls baptizing the keeper of the prison and his family, Act. 16. It seemeth it was done either in his house, or in the prison. If our Brethren say, that there was some necessity or occasion so to doe: whereas now, there is no such necessity nor occasion, wee hauing this cleare light of the Gospell, and a publike place appointed for publike actions. We praise God for it, and acknowledge it withall thankfulness, that we haue now this cleare light of the gospell. And hauing this, our brethren haue no such cause to grudge and complaine for these other matters as they doe. But had not S. Peter and S. Paul the cleare light of the gospell too, when thy baptized in priuate places: but whatsoener particular necessity of circumstance and occasion haue them, in that cleare light of the Gospell so to baptise those parties, they knew that the difference of the place publike or priuate, infringed not the vertue of the action. For the action is still of one and the same vertue, though vpon an extraordinary occasion, it be done for place, for time and diuerse other manners of circumstances, extraordinarily. In which

pointes, there may be also some ordinary differences, of one Church from another, without preiudicating one another, or any preiudice to the sacraments, or to the receivers of them. As for vs, who haue a comely and very good ordinary forme prescribed vnto the Church of England, we allow not that the sacraments ordinarily (and without necessity or conueniency of some important extraordinary occasion) should be administred but in the ordinary and publike place, and time, and maner by the book appointed, and by the laws of our Church prescribed, and indeede should not otherwise be permitted. And much lesse, that the breach hereof shold openly, (besides the priuate practises in priuate houses) both in the pulpit, and in bookes printed be maintained and defended: which is more strange, than in this cleare light of the gospell an extraordinary circumstance or occasion to be suffered or permitted to be done. And which is yet more strange, that they which do all these things, contrary to all Law & order, would for very shame open their mouths & say, that baptisme is permitted to be administred in priuate places: their selues both in priuate places and in straunge manners many times administring both these sacraments. But our brethren presuppose, that in our suffering of baptisme, to be nowe and then extraordinarily administred, though by a lawfull Minister, and by the order appointed yet beeing doone in a priuate place: that we permit it onely for the necessity of baptisme. Wherein although they threape more kindnes on vs, than neede: when other occasions may be and are alleaged by vs, then onely the necessity of baptisme: for although in the book, the title be this. Of them that are baptised in priuate houses in time of necessity: yet after ward saith the book: & also they shall warn them, that without great cause and necessity, they baptise not children at home in their house. And when great need shal compell the so to doe, that they minister it on this fashion, &c. But go to, let vs say, as they would onely haue vs say: that if it be permitted of vs to be administred in any priuate place, it is only, but in case of necessity what say they hereto?

baptisme.

As though (say they) there were such necessity of the outward signe when it cannot be ministred according to the Institution of Christe.

What do our brethren here mean: that there is no necessity at all of baptism although there be no such necessity: is there no necessity, of consequence of condition, nor of conueniency: as well as absolute, simple, and inevitable necessity? If generally there were no necessity at all of baptizing: then it were free: whether we woulde be baptized or no: But it is not free: Christe did institute baptism vnder flat commandement: therefore, there is a necessity, and an important necessity of it. Did not baptism succed circumcision: as Paul clearly setteth out, Col. 2. 11. & 12. In whom also ye are circumcised (saith he) &c. And was there no necessity at all of circumcision? we grant this necessity was not so absolute, that it reached to them before their time assigned: no, no; yet after, was it so absolute necessity, of baptism that it reached to them while they travelled in the wilderness, God dispensing, (for other manifold necessities) in that long journey, with the necessity of that Sacrament. And yet Gods commaundement remaining in-tire: and they with such a necessity severly bounde, that they shoulde not contemne on their partes, the obedience and execution of it.

And therefore sayeth Zanchius in this very well, in his confession of Christian Religion, concerning Baptisme, Capite decimo quinto, Aphor. 5.
Wee beleue that baptisme is altogether necessary in the Church, as a sacrament instituted of Christ, & which the Church can so little want, that where it is not, (when it may be had, there we may not acknowledge the Church of Christ. Howbeit we thinke it neede-full vnto saluation in this wise: that notwithstanding, if any for the defaulte of the Minister, but not through contempt, depart this life not sprinkled with the water: we beleue not that he is therfore damned, and wrapped in eternall destruction. For the children of the faithfull are therefore saued, because they are in the couenant: but they that be of ripe yeeres, because they beleue in Christe with a true faithe, which verilye cannot suffer the contempt of Christs commandement.

Gellius Snecanus whome we haue before often and at large cited, (that we might see how our brethren answered them-selues) in his method of baptisme, the first part, sayth: The sixt circumstance remaineth, when baptisme should be administred. Here we must note, although the time be free: yet by Gods threate. Gen. 17. (where the neglect of circumcision is esteemed the violating of Gods couenant) it consequently followeth, that fit occasion being offered, baptisme ought forthwith to be admini-stred. Whereunto exhorteth vs the daunger that was imminent on ancients sheltereth, neither these lingerers, neither the Anabaptists, as it shall be noted in his place. Thus writeth Gell. on this necessity. And euē immediatly he proceedeth to the lawfull manner of administring baptizm, which because it commeth next to hand, I will also heere set downe. Let vs come at length. (saith he) vnto the lawfull manner. Here is required that baptisme should be administred intirely with all his partes, according to the circumstances of the Institution, & of the administration. In the administration therfore of baptism, let the summe of the doctrin, concerning the couenant & imputation of faith, cōprehending as wel the children as the parēts, be repeated. To these let ther be added an explication, of the general commandement of baptizing all nations, and of the finall causes of baptisim, instituted according to the summe and order of a method. For the signes of their owne nature signify nothing, but by the institution of God. Therefore it is necessary that all things be referred to the will of God, which is made manifest in the holy scriptures. Afterward, let the examples of circumcision, and of the baptisim of the Israelites. &c. come hereto. Finally, let al this doctrine be concluded with the inuocation of the name of God. Thus writeth hee also of the full manner and forme that hee would haue obserued in the sacrament. And is not the forme that is prescribed vnto vs, in effect the same. Hellopæus, agréinge hereunto, both for the necessity of this sacrament, (so farre forth as we do vrge the same) and for the places, circumstances and order, that here wee stand vpon: For the necessity, in his 5. chapter, concerning the efficacy of baptisim, whether it wash away sinnes, or conferre grace: Among other things after his proofes, pag. 120. he saith: Neither must we thinke Baptisim to be absolutely necessary to saluation. Neuerthelesse, me thinke I heare the papistes, & some other, who notwithstanding will not seeme to bee Papistes, arise against me, affirming that baptisim is so muche necessary, that they teach, except this sacrament bee adioyned, they cannot attain vnto saluation, no not by faith. But we also verily do confesse that by the ordinance of God, the sacramēt of baptisim is a certain thing requisite to saluation. Neither can it be omitted, without sacrilege. Yea, rather, if it be omitted by contempt, this shold be a deadly heinous offence, except vpon earnest repentance following. Howbeit, to say it is so necessarie, that if any be excluded by necessity, whereby he cannot vse it, that he should be in danger of his saluation, we affirme it to be a manifest error. Neither say we, it is the depriuing of the sacrament, but it is the contempt, that is the deadly thing.

Though if it bee done, & be done in such order, that they obserued (both for the matter and the forme) the element of Water, and the wordes that Christ assigneth to be vsed, with other godly prayers at the doing: the Booke (to anoyde all cauities of Anabaptists) only approueth the substance of the baptisim, when it is done: but not such persons to haue done it. Who, (notwithstanding any thing in the booke) are worthily punished for their so doing.

But (sayth Hellopæus) these things (say the defenders of this error,) ought to be vnderstood of the ordinary ministry. But they treat of the case of necessity least that any should depart this life not baptized.

For,

for, they thought by this meanes, to succour the saluation of those that shoulde bee baptised in the daunger of death, least being prevented by death without baptisme, they shoulde make wracke of their saluation, but we haue taught Cap. 5. that this is no daunger, neither that baptisme is of an absolute necessity of saluation, so that contempt be away, Because the couenant of God apprehended by faith, is firme by it selfe and effectuell to saluation, although the seale, (without the fault of him that wanteth it,) come not thereto. So that in all this, he excepteth onely the opinion of absolute necessity, not of all necessity. As for the place of baptizing (whereof our Brethren speake last) besides the other circumstances, yea, for the order also and that with a sermon preached at the ministration of this sacrament: in the conclusion of the selfe same Chapter, Page. 171, he saith: It remaineth that wee discusse the other circumstances, where, and when, and how, baptisme ought to be conferred, we answer, that thing is chiefly to be required, that, as all other thinges, so principally the administration of the baptisme, shold be done decently & in order as for the place, although that it be not necessary: yet it is most conuenient, that it shoulde be publike, as the temple, or any place appointed to the publike Ministry. And as concerning the time, it is meete (if it may so be done) that it shoulde be at an houre appointed, and that suche an houre, wherein the Church is full of people. First, that very many may profite in the enarration of this sacrament. Then, that their faith may bee kindled to embrace the grace of god, when as they see the infants approach vnto the same couenant, that God hath made with their fathers. Besides that it is conuenient, to commend vnto God with the publike prayers the saluation of the Infant. To conclude, God is to bee celebrated with thankesgiuings. But with what manner, baptizme ought to bee conferred, is not obscure to see. This thing must principally bee obserued, that certain ceremonies are necessary, but certaine are free: In the which we ought diligently to looke, what is expedient, and what conuenient for the regard of the times & places. But we haue rehearsed before those toyish additions, salt, oyl, tapers. Howsoeuer it be, the dipping, or sprinkling, the washing, the explication of the sacrament it selfe, are partes necessary. But that all may bee done decently, they may proceede in this order: First, let the Infant that is to bee baptized bee offered vnto the publike assembly, where the whole Church being witness and looker on, offereth vnto God with their Prayers their tender Brother. Secondly, let the minister recite the confession of the faith, that it may be known with what doctrine, hee which is baptized, shall be entrusted hereafter. Thirdly, let the institution and promises of baptisme be shewed, and that in the vulgare tongue, that of the Church it may be vnderstood. Fourthly, let the Infant be baptised, in the name of the father, and of the Sonne,

Sc of the holy ghost. It makes no matter, be he dipped either once or twice or thrise, or sprinkled with water. Although in the old time, he was wholly dipped. Which also the word baptisme (that is, a washing) signifieth. But herein the custom may varie, according to the diuersity of regiōs, & the tendernes or firmnes of the infants body. Fifthly, to conclude, godly prayers being made the infant being comended to God, may be sent home. This is a true manner of administering baptisme. Nowe then, if this be a true manner of administering baptisme: Were being no sermon prescribed, but all this may bee done well ynough, without a sermon: and our booke prscribeth as much as all this comes too, and moze: howe haue not we baptizme truly ministred? I know, that after this, he presently findeth fault, with demanding of the childe, whether it beleeueth, & renounceth Sathan, the Worlde, and the flesh: As our Betyzen also picke a quarrell thereat. But since he confesseth, it was taken from the custom of the auncients, when they demanded these thinges worthily, of those that were of ripe yeares: though hee say, it was ill translated to the demanding it also of the Infants: for, to what purpose shoulde those that be ignorant bee asked, and other folkes answer the demaundes? I like not of Helopæus misliking this custome so long as hee knoweth, or may easily doe, that it is but spoken by stipulation, and to binde the Godfathers &c. the moze solēly to see that the childe, in whose name they answer shoulde afterwarde performe those thinges. So that this is but a comely order, at which (vnderstanding the meaning,) no good man ought to take offence. Yea, (in my opinion,) if this order were altered, we shoulde seme to open a shewde gap vnto the Anabaptists, that none were then baptized but such onely as were of ripe yeares and coulde answer for them selues to these demaundes. But since it is euident that they baptized Infantes, and that they vsed this forme in baptizing of them (as in Augustine is moze apparant) we can not think that this custome was translated onely from the baptizing of them that were of riper yeares, but were they ripe or vnripe, it was the vsual order of baptizing al, in the ancient & primitive Church. And therefore, containing nothing contrary to the Institution of baptizme, but all for it: and being done onely by the way of stipulation, one in the name of another, (which withall moze liuely answereth, to the nature of a couenant) and being of so great antiquity: though we grant it is not necessary to be reteined: no moze is it necessary to be removed. But al this is nothing to the absolute necessity of a sermon, or of the publike place, whereof is now the question. Helopæus making the publike place not of necessity, albeit for the ordinary course, most conuenient: neither for sermon, mentioning any at all: and therefore, (otherwise than for conuenient) it is plain, that he taketh it not to be of such necessity.

And afterward in the next treatise of the Lordes supper, he do notably also handling the consecration. cap. 4. pa. 209. wher he saith: Yet ther remaineth one question. For we say, that the bread & the Wine is sanctified of the Min. so far forth, as he is the legate or interpreter of Gods will, & the word of Gods institution, is as it were a certain meane to bee adhibited vnto this consecratio. Euen so Aug. said wel: let the word come vnto the element, & it is made a sacrament, that is to say, by the comming betweene of the worde, the thing (otherwise by his nature appointed to a cōmon vse) is made a Sacrament. This therefore we wil haue to be vnderstood by the tearm of consecration. Otherwise, euen as Aug. saith of the water of Bapt. take the word from the baptisme, & what is the water, but water: So, if thou takest away the word from the bread & the wine, it shal be nothing but bread and wine. Now therefore, we must search out, what & what maner a word, that word is. For some take this word to strictly: & some more at large than is meet. They (take it) strictly, which ouerpasseing as wel the former as the later words of the institution, haue deliuered that in these 4. words, This is my body, again, this is my blood, the cōsecration is made: as though by a certaine diuine vertue ingrafted in those words, the substance of bread & wine were changed: striking out the other words, to wit, Take ye, eat ye, drink ye of you, as superfluous, so far as to the force of transubstantiation doth pertain (which they doe) to this purpose, that they might not be compelled to confes, that the supper is common vnto all, & moreouer that they might not subscribe vnto this rule that nothing hath a reason of a sacrament, without the vse by God instituted. Howbeit, other do ioyne the thankesgiuing and the prayers, as though they also with the worde of the institution, did make the sacrament, that is, did profite the consecration. And indeede this is true, that all this rite (or ceremony) is furnished with a solemne thankes-giuing and prayers, especially concerning the sending of the sonne, and of the purging of our sinnes made by him. And the very wordes also of the institution, are so to be rehearsed, that both they should begin at thankes-giuing & praier, and also should end in the same, euen as Christ the Lord hauing giuen thanks, sayd, this is my body: and the supper being ended, an himme being sung, he went forth. Moreouer we haue shewed, that the sanctification should be made with thanks-giuing. In the mean time we must know, that the only wordes of the Institution, and those entire, do perfit the consecration. Which being whole recited in the lawfull vse, in which thanks beeing giuen and prayers being recited, all things are done: of the element is made the sacramēt. For of this word said Irenæus: when the Cup mixt, & the bread broken, receiueth the word of God: the Eucharist of the body and blood of our Lord is made. But, that he vnderstandeth the only wordes of the Institution, appeareth by that which he setteth vnder it, that the earthly breade taketh the calling of God. For it is the calling of God, when God calleth the bread his body.

tion.

After the same manner Theodoretus, in Atrepo, (that is, in his Dialogue called immutable) hee teacheth, that our sauiour did honour (or commend) the visible signes, with the appellatiō (or calling) of his body and bloude: not that they had the same (appellation or calling) of nature, but allonely of grace. For so hee sayth, in the quōtā mutabilitate, non tūc addit in eius uerbum, (not chaunging the nature, but adding grace vnto nature).
Nowe, we vnderstande, which, and what manner wordes, are the words of the Consecration, to witte, those same that are (the wordes) of the Institution. But they againe are of two partes. For some of them are the wordes of the Euangelistes, of which sort are these. Our lorde Iesū Christe in the same night that he was betrayed tooke breade, and sayde: likewise he tooke the Cuppe after supper. But some of the wordes are Christes owne words, as are, This is my body that is giuen for you, take yee, eate yee: this is my bloud, &c Drinke yee all of this: doe this in remembraunce of mee. Those wordes (to witte, the Euangelistes) as Ambrose witnesseth, lib. 4. cap. 5. De sacramentis, are not onely recited as historicall: but doe admonish as well the Ministers as the Communicantes, what Christe did, what agayne hee bad both of them to doe. But these wordes serue to the consecration. Now, how soe-uer this alone doe thoroughly accomplish the consecration: notwithstanding, if the other (to witte the Euangelistes wordes before rehearsed) bee eyther omitted, yea or indeede recited hystorically: (albeit the things are in very deede done, which Christe did, & would haue to be doone) the consecration is not made at all, but eyther it is an historicall explication of the Mystery: or rather, it is a play and iest. And thus farre concerning the consecration. ~~Which~~ words of Heliopius, if we shal well consider: we shal see withall moſte apparantly, that howsoeuer the preaching of a sermon may do much good, for the further opening of these mysteries, and mouing of the hearers and participantes: yet is it not any substantiall part of the sacrament, or inseperable accident, absolutely necessary thereunto, and as it is thus of the Lordes supper: so for the materiall and formall partes, which are the Element and Worde of Baptizme.

To the same effect saith Beza in his Conf. cap. 4. Arti. 41. This change dependeth not of the recitall of any words, as the sophisters and deceiuers deliuer forth, but of the ordinance of God, comprehended in his word. The word therefore, that is, the very institution of Christe, as it is of the Euangelistes and Paul expounded, is as it were the very life of the sacramentall signes, because (as in the word is declared vnto vs) the water the Breade & the Wine, are made sacraments, that is, true signes and seales of those things, which in the Worde are promised to vs, and are truely signified by the same.

And againe, We call the signe of baptizme, (saith Beza, cap. 4. artic.
47.) first of all Water: then, the substantiall ceremonies prescribed in the worde. To the which (we thinke it wickednesse) to adde any thing or to take fro it: that is to say, the sprinkling of the water, the stay vnder the water, and the comming foorth out of the water, &c. We call the worde in baptisme, the ordinance of Iesu Christ, ioyned with the promise of eternall life, whereof this is the forme: Baptize yee in the name of the father, of the sonne, and of the holy Ghost; whosoever shall beleeue and be baptized shall be saued. If then in these 2. partes, the whole substance of baptisme consist: how are not they baptized, where these 2. partes are, although no sermon be preached at the action? Albeit I know not how to reconcile Beza his wordes, for this unmateriall part: for ioyning all these three actions together with the element of water: sprinkling of the water: an abode or stay vnder the water: & the comming forth out of the water: and that in none of these ought must be added nor diminished, but that he will thinke it wickednesse. For we rather thinke, be the childe dipped in the water, and that without any abode or stay therein, and much lesse to be helde any while vnder it, which might breede daunger to tender infantes, or be it but onely sprinkled with water cast vpon it: it sufficeth for the action of the materiall part. But howsoever we may consent to the best those wordes of Beza, in that (which though hee make it no absolute necessitie of infantes baptisme, in respect of their saluatio to depende thereon: yet in reasoning for it, he makes some necessitie of it, yea, he goeth so farre. Articl. 49. that baptisme cannot be reiterated: that (me thinke, and let other iudge thereon) he cleane ouerthrowes this our Atheniens principle, that none can minister sacramentes but preachers of the worde. We haue sayd (sayth Beza) that Baptisme is the sacrament of our engrafting into Christ and his Church: neyther dependeth the efficacie of baptisme on the person of the baptizer. But now, whosoever is once truly giuen to Christ, although now and then he tourne out of the way: yet, may he neuer be cast cleane out. And therefore it is inough that he was once receaued. By no meanes assent we vnto them, which rebaptize those that were baptized of Heretiks, or of other impure ministers. Neither yet do we doubt, but that in the Papisticall Church, the baptisme remayneth true, although it be administred of ministers nothing fitte, and be defiled with infinite pollutions. For because it pleased the mercie of God, euen within Popery, to preserue the relikes of his Church, so long, vntill he erected it vp againe; therefore would hee not that Sathan should be able vtterly therein, to ouerthrow baptisme, wher-by all the elected are ioyned together in a societie. If then this baptisme of Heretiks and Papists, were so sorely polluted, where not only no preaching was: besides that, no part of the institution, of the mystery, of the use, of the endes, thereof were so declared, that the congregation vnder-stode it: and yet, all this notwithstanding, it was true baptisme, and they were so fully baptized, that it were a dangerous heresie to go about to rebaptize vs, though they that did baptize vs were Idolatrous Priests, and Antichristes chapleynes: & can it now be said, that the administration of baptisme among vs, whō our W^{reth}. cōfesse to be a true Church of Christ, we hauing nothing for the materiall part, but the only and more element of water that Christ ordeyned, with the which wee sprinkle the infant, if he be not dipped into it, and vsing not onely the wordes of Christes institution, with the promise annexed, besides prayers and thanksgiuing, with a plaine and full declaration of al the institution, the causes, the vse, the endes, the effectes of this mysterie, set forth to the people assembled, that they withall may in their mother tongue, perceauē the whole content of all this action: that if all this be not administred by such a minister, as is withall a preacher, and that he also preach at the administration ther-of, and that also in the publike and ordinary place appointed, and in no priuate place: or else all this is but a worldly, dead, and beggerly element, a seale without the writing, and so nothing auailable, & nothing better than sacrilege? Durst Beza haue sayd so much, of the very Wapists for this sacrament? Yea, although a midwife, or a lay mā (as often times then it hapned) did administer the same? Or would he, or would our W^{reth}. then for that default, rebaptize them? Or count them not baptized at all, that are so extraordinaryly, yea, and disorderly baptized? Is the onely lacke of the persons lawfull vocation, yea, the lacke of sufficiencie in his vocation, a greater pollution, yea, and cleane disanulling of the sacramēt, more than all these corruptions of the Papistes, or than the insufficiencie or vnlawfulness of their calling? And yet theirs must bee true and verie baptisme, ours is not. And why for haue we any like or worse pollution?

No. Haue we any such vsufficient and vnlawfull ministerie? No. What then? Though it be not so vsufficient and vnlawfull as theirs, yet is it vsufficient and vnlawfull. And why? Forsooth, The administration of the sacramentes ought to be committed to none, but vnto suche as are preachers of the woorde. pag. 60. But what meane our W^{reth}. then by this worde ought? An absolute necessitie? Or a conuenient butler? Saint Paule p^{re}scribing the conditions of a Bishop, sayth: a Bishop ought to be vnreproouable, the husbāde of one wife, watching, sober, modeste, harbourous, apt to teach, not giuen to wine, no striker, not giuen to filthie lucre, but gentle, not couetous, one that can rule his owne house, hauing children vnder obedience withall honestie. What doth Saint Paule meane here, in all these and other p^{ro}perties, that he saith a Bishop ought to haue such an absolute necessitie? that if hee want any of these p^{ro}perties, he is by and by no Bishop at all, nor hath any lawfull function? And if he minister the sacramentes, they are no sacramentes? Are all these properties of the substance of his office? If they say, though all be not,

not, yet this is, to be apt or able to teach, & to exhort with holisome doctrine. And so, if he had no aptnes nor abilitie at all, that were very hard. And yet most of the Popish Bishops & Priests were such, & their baptizing still true baptism. And that ours be said, to be no baptism at all, if the minister of (absolute necessity) be not such a learned preacher, as can freely and at large, by his owne discourse, expounde vnto the people, the mysterie of the sacramentes? Haue we not already heard howe Musculus a- uoucheth, that in many reformed Churches, there are many that can minister the supper of the L. & few that can preach the word of the Lord? And that it is not necessary, that the Preacher shuld be the minister of that sacrament? And is it otherwise in this sacramēt of baptism: which both hath the lesse need of the twaine, to haue a sermon preached thereat, & yet withall of the twaine, hath a greater necessitie of receauing thereof, than of the L. supper? But if now, as we haue seene for that sacrament, that it may be ministred orderly inough by those that are no preachers: & yet none can orderly minister the sacraments, but he that is a minister of the woorde: doth not this consequence then followe of necessitie, that some may be ministers of the worde, that are not preachers of the woorde? Which cleane ouerturneth all our Bishops procelle of this necessitie, that they must needs be Preachers.

Baptisme hath more neede to be receaued, & lesse neede of a sermon to the receiuer of it.

But our Bishops challenge vs here for this, that where we will make no necessity of Preachers, to be the ministers of baptism, notwithstanding, of baptism it selfe we make a necessitie. But both wayes they do vs manifest wrong. For, neither we denie all kinde of preaching, nor all kinde of necessitie in the minister for preaching at baptism, or at the Lodes supper, but only this absolute simple and ineuitable necessitie, graunting a necessitie of conueniencie. Neither do we vige this absolute, simple & ineuitable necessitie, of any of both the sacramentes themselves. Haue in generall, that they must needs be had in the Church (as Zanchius said) not onely as necessarie tokens and demonstrances of the true Churches, but also as Gods scales ordeined for the confirmation of our faith, & such parts of his covenant with vs and ours with him, as the whole Church is bound to haue & vse. But whē it comes to the particuler vse & application, we do not so necessarily tie the to this or y person of or in the Church, that if they haue the not, be it not by their owne default, the want of the may endanger their saluation: the vertue wherof dependes not vpon any sacramēt, as is included in it. Neither acknowledge we any necessitie of it, but such only as is agreeable to Christs institution. And therefore, whē we say baptism may be ministred in priuate places for necessity: & our Bishop reply, as though there were such necessity of the outward signe, when it ca not be ministred according to the institution of Christ: &c. This reply is not to the matter in hand, for that necessity that is of the institutio of Christ, is a meere and absolute necessitie, and of the substantiall partes of the sacramentes, either for the matter or forme of them, whosoever shall minister or receaue them, and when, and where soever they shall be receaued. But this prescribeth not any time when, nor any place where, they shalbe necessarily receaued. So nor the parties that shall receaue, nor yet the parties that shall only minister them. Whobeit, our question is now here, not so much for the persons that shall minister them, for we yelde, that none orderly ought so to do, but he that is lawfully called thereunto. Neither permitte we, but forbid all other, and punish them, if any be found so to haue offended: nor yet for the person to be baptized, whatsoeuer necessitie lies on him to haue it: but on the place. For, although it must needs be done in some place, or not done at all, and the most necessarie (respecting conueniencie) is the publike place, to wits, the temple: yet this being none of the partes of the sacrament, nor this or that place, publike or priuate, but an accident pertaining to circumstance: why should exception be made of this, that because it is done in a priuate place, and that for necessitie of conueniencie, that there can be no such necessitie of the outwarde signe, when it can not be ministred according to the institution of Christ? Did Christ mention place in his institution? No rather both he not include all conuenient places without exception, when he saith: goe ye into all the world to baptize, &c. and did they it not both in the open riuers, and in priuate houses? And where, and when, and how was the Lozdes supper instituted, if we should vage the institution on that fashion? Let our Brethren proue that the publike place, and that the preaching of a sermon by a preacher (vnderstanding the worde as they consider it) is a materiall part, & of the substance of the sacrament by Christs institution: and straight will I yelde vnto our Brethren, that no kinde of necessitie in the worlde, may alter it. But god Brethren take god aduice, how ye enter into the maintenance of that point. Which if it be true, then the sacramentes without a sermon preached, are not onely corruptly ministred or receaued, but not ministred nor receaued at all, wanting the substantiall partes that make a sacrament. And so it might be further called in question, whether we or they, be as yet baptized at all, yea or no. But I am most assured that we be, notwithstanding (as Beza sayth) all the pollutions of the Pope. And if those, I meane not his tromperies and trash that he added, but his suppressinges of the declaring the verie institution of Baptisme, besides his manifolde and horrible errors of doctrine concerning Baptisme, that then blinded both the people and the minister, were not yet able to make baptisme vneffectuall: shall we now say or thinke, and beate this scruple into the peoples heades, that all these superstitions and errors being remoued, and hauing Gods pure woordes and promise, loyned to the simple element ordeyned of Christ, & hauing withall the whole nature of the sacrament so fully and clerely set out, that all the people may perceave it; and receave great edification by it; and a lawefull minister doe it; and all the congregation loyne their prayers and thanksgiving to it; and perhaps also some godly and learned homily, or exhortation, or sermon written and set out, by some learned preacher, reads vnto the people at that time: tush tush, what talke ye of all this: If it be not done onely in publike place appointed, that is to witte, the Church or Temple: if it be not ministred only by a preacher: yea, and if he preach not a sermon at the ministration of it: al is corrupt and vnauaileable. All is nothing els but a worldly, a dead, a beggerly element, a seale without a writing. A separation of the ministration of preaching the worde, from the sacramentes, and what can it be better than sacrifice?

Thus do our Bishops shoke al off, & make our sacramentes as ill: yea, worse than the very Papists, yea, to be none at all, and so to be no Church: not where preaching is not, but where it is not loyned to the sacramentes.

As for Beza his wordes from whence our Bishops seeme to haue borrowed theirs: if they had reseyned the same moderation of speech, that Beza doth, we would haue loyned with them. For, we say herein as he doth. Therefore the necessitie of receaving the sacramentes, reacheth not so farre forth, that without exception euery one that hath not obteyned them, is cleane fallen from saluation: but thus farre forth onely, that he which shall haue dispised them, sicke that he declareth himselfe to be an infidell, is guiltie of eternall death, except he shall haue acknowledged it and repented him of it. Well therefore doth Bernard testifie: not the depriuing, but the contépt condemneth. But he cannot be thought to haue contemned the sacramentes, that could not so receave them as they were ordeyned of the Lorde. And God forbid that we should imagine any cases of necessitie, in which we might violate the ordinance of the Lorde. As indeede they doe (as verily vnto me it seemeth) which transerre (or assigne ouer) the ministerie of baptizing vnto women, or to any other priuate persons. And they that without the publike assemblie and times not prescribed of the Church, doe administer the Lords supper. So that here be allothwith a necessitie of baptisme, but not anye such as were against the Lordes ordinance. And he speaketh of them that transerre and assigne ouer the ministerie of baptisme to women or priuate persons, as for the other of place & time he reskayneth to the supper of the Lord, not to baptisme. From the two former for the acknowledge-ment of any such fact to be orderly done (God be prayesd) we are free. For the later, both for the Lordes supper, and for baptisme too; let our Bishops take to it, that are deeper in that matter than are we. But when all is done, this modestie of Beza is commendable, that hee doth not cleane annihilate and make no sacramentall act at all of these doings, as our Bishops doe: but onely saith, they violate the ordinance of the Lorde. For (as we haue shewed) he saith al the Papists pollutions (of the which these were some, and that our Bishops I thinke will graunt) were not able to take away the vertue of baptisme, and make it frustrate & vneffectuall.

And therfore our Bishops. ouer-reached, and abuse vs. in laying the error of the Papistes, mainteyning an absolute necessitie of the sacrament, vnto our charge, and to say the necessitie that wee stande on, is nothing else, but to affirme with the Papistes, that sacraments conferre grace of the worke wrought: and that the sacrament of Baptisme is a sacrament of such necessitie, that whosoever is not dipped in water must bee eternally condemned. Which hereticall opinion, as wee haue hissed out in our profession and preaching; so is it a great shame for vs, to maintaine by such corrupt vsage of Christes holy sacraments. This opinion of the Papistes, as they nowe obstinately maintaine the same, is (I graunt) hereticall. And yet, neither was this (besides al other that they maintained, euen concerning baptisme) able to take away the vertue of it, but that all the Papists had true baptisme, whosoever he or she were & baptized the.

Our Brethr.
contradicti-
on.

But, doe wee maintaine this, or any other of their erroneous or heretical opinions? No. I hope, our Bishops doe include vs, in the number of this (we) as well as themselves, when they say: which hereticall opinion, as we haue hissed out in our profession & preaching. And how then, do we maintaine or affirme that, which is nothing else, but to affirme with the Papists this hereticall opinion? Doe we maintaine & affirme that, which we haue hissed out? Or doe we hisse out that which we maintaine & affirme? How do these things hang together? But they say, we maintaine it by such corrupt vsage of Christes holy sacraments.

What corrupt vsage haue they proued, or are euer able to proue that we maintaine in Christes holy sacraments, either the one or the other, contrary to that, which in our profession & preaching we haue hissed out? For if we maintaine it, we professe it. But, if our Bishops accuse vs so sharply, of so great a shame, as in our profession & preaching to hisse out this hereticall opinion; and yet charge vs that we maintaine it, by suche corrupt vsage of Christes holy sacraments: because onely we affirme, there may be some necessary vsage of these holy sacraments: although (following the ordinary forme in our booke set downe) they be extraordinarily nowe and then vsed in priuate places, in cases of necessitie, professing and preaching, that we vnderstande no absolute necessitie, but conditionall, and of conuenience: howe shall then our Bishops not incurre a greater shame, that hisse not out in their profession and preaching, but affirme and maintaine such necessitie of a preacher, to be the only minister nister of the sacramentes, and of preaching at the ministration of them: that if there be not this preacher and preaching; they make it not onely a corrupt vsage of Christes holy sacraments, but no sacraments at all: shall we say, this is nothing else but to affirme with the Papistes, that the preacher & his preaching conferreth grace of the worke wrought? And that this preaching is of such necessitie, that whosoever heares not a sermon wher he receaues the sacrament, must be eternally condemned, as receauing it vnworthily to his condemnation? And yet he receaueth no sacrament at all. And that this necessitie of a preaching is as necessary to Bapt. as euer the Papistes thought baptisme it selfe to be to the infant: And that the want of this necessitie, both more frustrate & boide all the whole substance and vertue of the sacrament: than all their corrupt abusages, pollutions, and hereticall opinions of Christes holy sacramentes, was euer able to doe. What a greater shame is the maintenaunce of this opinion? Which if it should be mainteyned obstinately, (as I hope our Breth. will not): surely, it were as ill a worke, than the other, & in very sooth, no better than an hereticall opinion. But our Breth. may erre, and so may we. Let vs both learne in modestie to saye with Augustine, as I saide before, Errare possum, hereticus esse nolo. Erre I may, but (God willing) I will not be an heretike. But now for the small conclusion of this matter, say our Brethren.

Our Breth. absurdities in this assertion.

Let vs therefore retaine this principle, that the administratiō of the sacraments, is a part of the Pastors dutie: for although the office of preaching be more excellent, than of ministration of the sacramentes, as S. Paule speaketh comparatiuely. Christ sent me not to Baptise but to preach. 1. Cor. 1. 17. Yet they are of such affinitie, that the accessorie can not be separated from the principall thereof. For where is no preacher of the worde, there ought to be no minister of the sacraments.

The learned Dis. Pag. 62. & 63. 1. Cor. 1. 17.

This principle, that the administratiō of the sacraments is a part of the Pastors dutie: is a true principle, and safely to be mainteyned. But, as that which went before, was not to be mainteined without great shame & daunger: so not onely this necessarie conclusion made hereon, is no lesse shainfull daungerous & erroneous to be mainteined, than the other: where there is no precher of the word: there ought to be no minister of the sacraments. For, if this Canon of our Breth. should be put in execution at this present, throughout all England, & much more throughout all Christendome: Baptisme might be a long while cleane exiled, from the most part of a number of Christian Italmes and Churches, that yet amide all their corrupt vsages, reteyne the vertue of baptisme, as Beza sayth. But to looke to our owne estate, which haue none of those or any other corruptions remayning, but as sincere & sound, concerning the verie administration of the sacramentes, as any of all our Brethren in ante reformed is a plaine caſe, there is no miniſter to adminiſter them. No? What there he is an honeſt, vertuous, ſober, and painefull man in his function: and he is a good ſcholler too, and ſtubious, and can reade (and ſo he doth) verie faire, that all the pariſh may plainely vnderſtande him: and hee catechiſeth our children diligently, and we ſitte by and here it, to our great com-forte and edification: and he can and doth giue vs alſo in priuate (as he ſayth cauſe) very good counſell when we come vnto him, and hee comes to vs when we are ſicke, and maketh very good exhortations, in priuate, and if neede be admoniſheth vs in ſecret, yea and openly alſo, of our faults, and calleth vpon vs often to come to the diuine ſeruiſe, and to heare him reade the homilies, and other good ſermons, and to receaue theſe holy ſacramentes that we would now haue. Tuth, a point for all this. Is he a preacher? No. We hath no gift at all to edifie vs that wayes, as you mean preaching. Why, then we haue a flat rule, that he ought to miniſter no ſacramentes. For, where is no preacher of the word, there ought to be no mi-

Would not this rule make a faire rule, if thinges were ouer-ruled on this faſhion? But how long now ſhall the people be thus debarred? Will we can get preachers for enery ſeueral congregation? But that our Bethſen

then haue examined alreadie, and found, and confessed, that it can not be done presently, and it will not be done in haste, to furnish so many places, no, though we should cleane disburse the nurseries of all our preachers. For every one is to be allowed a Preacher that hath learning enough, & utterance and aubacitie, except he haue the grace of God enough also, to be as S. Paul calleth him, idoneus, one that diuideth aright the word of truth. And y many should not be admitted to be preachers, that in their own opinions, & in many others among our Brethren, are holden for ioly and plausible preachers. And how then should all those places doe, till preachers were provided for them?

Our Brethren told be before of a helpe, pag. 56. when they had willed us to pray to the Lorde of the harvest, to thrust forth labourers into his harvest: yet doubting lest they should not haue the by & by thrust in, they said: and in the meane time, till God blesses with a sufficient number of learned Pastors, to take some extraordinary & temporall order, for overseeing the Churches, that although they cannot be as sufficiently instructed & gouerned, &c. And what now? Is this one of these extraordinary & temporall orders, that shall be taken in the meane time, that there shall be no sacraments, at all administred to the poore people in all those places? That were a handsome extraordinary order, with all my heart. It were pittie such a temporall order in the mean time, till preachers could be gotten to be in euery seuerall congregation, should haue any temporall continuance of so long time. Yet, better is halfe a loafe than no bread. Yea, we may haue the whole loafe wel enough, as vnprovided as we be, & cut aright also, though not with so fine a knife as hath a learned preacher. But this heavenly bread of the Lordes table, he may the easilier breake & deliuer, being broken before hand to his hand. And especially minister the sacrament of baptisme, if he be a minister at all: of which sacrament, there is somewhat more necessitie (though not absolute) than of the L. supper. But for euery congregation to tary till they haue a preacher of their owne, to doe these thinges vnto them, besides the iniurie offered, not so much to the present ministers, as to the people, not only for the present state, but wee can not tell for howe long time to come, so to be debarred: would not this growe to being in Anabaptistrie? Either by keeping backe the infants from baptisme, till they had a preacher to be their Pastor, vnder pretence of no such necessitie, as may endanger their saluation, because they haue not a preacher to baptize them, & so to tary till they can answer for the selues as the Anabaptistes say they ought to do, & admit none other; yea, and perhaps they may so stay from baptism longer, as a thing at all not so necessary: or else, to haue all places furnished with this necessitie of preachers, more then of baptisme, & so to shew in a number of holde vnlearned men, taking vpon the to be preachers: which may be as dangerous a point as the other. And when all this is done, for such an absolute necessitie of preachers, will not this hereticall opinio of the Papists, go nere to creep in after, of opus operatum, while we stande so necessarily on opus operantis, pressing so hard on this new coyned Canon? For, where there is no preacher of the word, there ought to be no minister of the sacramentes.

But our Brethren say, they are of suche affinitie (preaching and the ministratiō of the sacramentes) that the accessorie cannot be separated from the principall thereof.

Preaching
is not the principall thing, but accessory to the sacram.

Which is here the accessorie, which the principall? For they name it not. but thinke, that it is so apparant, that it must go alway without touch of breath, that the preaching is the principall, and the administration of the sacramentes is the accessorie. But by their leaue, we must with all consider this, that although it may be well sayde, when the one of these is compared to the other, the office of preaching is the more excellent, than the office of ministratiō of the sacramentes, yet when it cometh to the ministratiō of the sacramentes, then is the woorde and promise thereof, including the matter promised, which is called sacramenti, the thing of the sacrament, that is, Christe himselfe, and his death set forth, and our uniting vnto him, the principall and most excellent thing in that action: and the preaching or making a sermon more at large thereupon, is but an accessorie thing vnto the sacrament: and so accessorie, that although, if the preaching be there it is so much the better set forth: yet, whether the preaching be there or no, (so be it haue at other times so effectually gone before, that the congregation be not ignorant of the state of these mysteries) if the onely woorde and promise be there, (according to the institution thereof) toynd to the outwarde signe or element: there is a full and perfect sacrament, (as we haue seen in Beza and Hellopæus) both administered by the minister, though he be no preacher: and receaued of the faithfull Christian, if it be the Lords supper, and of the Christians child, if it be the sacrament of baptisme. So that, the comparison is not here betwene these two offices, which office is the more principall of the twayne. For we confesse, that in many considerations, the preaching of the woorde is farre aboue the ministratiō of the sacramentes: and yet in some respectes, the sacrament it selfe is more principall than is the preaching of it. As in Baptisme, to incorporate the infant into the Church of Christe, which infant is not properly as yet faithfull, though he be the seede of the faithfull, and haue (as Beza calleth it) the seede of fayth, but not fayth in him. And in the Lordes supper, to confirme the faithfull in the faith, that they haue long already before conceaued by the woorde, and yet perhappes also not by the woorde preached, as our Brethren vnderstande the preaching of it. But vnderstande it howe they will: here preaching is in these respectes, but accessory to the sacrament, & the sacrament principal to the preaching. And in this consideration, Beza euen in the next wordes to that which is cited out of him last, p. 102. doth say :

Fourthly, whereas the simple preaching of the word doth strike one onely of those our five senses: but the sacramentes besides, do runne into our eyes, and also stirre vp our other senses, and they are so administered with ceremonies of greater moment adhibited: it may easily be vnderstoode howe much the vse of them helpeth our faith, as those that bring vs euen as it were vnto the thing present, as though nowe we felt Christ himselfe after a certaine manner in our handes, and saw him with our eyes, and perceaued him with the whole body. So farre is it therefore that we should despise the sacraments, that contrariwise we should confesse, the vse and profit of them can not be inough commended and praysed according to their dignitie.

Beza in confession. cap. 4. art. 35.

The commendation of the sacram.

And although St. Paule, as our Bishops here say, speake comparatively: Christ sent mee not to baptize, but to preach, 1. Cor. 1. 17. yet this comparison of Saint Paule was not in comparing the dignities of these offices, but onely in comparison of his owne especiall vocation; and of all other places, is quite contrarie to our Bishops, as we haue partly shewed already: but since our Bishops so solemnely nuowe it, let vs once againe heare Caluine on that saying. Notwithstanding (sayth he) here are two thinges to be obserued. Whereof the one is, that the Apostle doth not here denie, but that he had the commaundement of baptizing (for these pertayneth to all the Apostles, Go ye, baptize, and he had done rashly euen in baptizing one, except he had been furnished with the commaundement) but only to shewe what was the chiefest thing in his vocation. But the second is, that the dignitie or fruite of the sacrament is not here abased, as some doe thinke. For neither is the question here of the vertue of baptisme, neither did Paule purpose in this comparison to withdraw any thing therfrom: but whereas it pertayned to few to teach, but it was giue to many to baptize: Moreouer, whereas many could be taught all at once, but baptisme could not be conferred but to euery one of them in order: Paul that excelled in the faculty of teaching, followed the worke that was more necessary vnto him. He left that vnto other, which they could performe more commodiously.

Caluini in 1. Cor. 1. 17.

What can be plainer spoken than this against our Bishops, y they are deceiued, which thinke Paul made here a comparison, between the dignitie of preaching, & the dignity of the ministratio of the sacraments? For Pauls comparison is but in comparing himself & his peculiar vocation with others. Whatbeit he frames his comparison so, that he plainly sheweth, both y some might minister the sacraments that were not preachers: & that the gift of preaching was giuen to fewe, in comparison of the multitude of those,

tion of the sacr. and
preaching.

that being no preachers, yet a lawfull function was giuen to them to minister the sacramentes. Which being graunted: let the other go which way it shall, in the comparison of these offices, which is principall, and which is accessory. For the sacramentes being principall in the foresayde consideration, & preaching being but accessory vnto them: as preaching may be effectuell without them, where they cannot be had: so they become not vneffectuell, although that at the ministratiō of the, among those that by former preaching at other times, are already faithfull, & to their children, though they as yet haue not faith, and though there be no preaching at that action. And whereas in other respects againe, the function of preaching is of such dignitie, that the ministratiō of the sacramentes is but accessorie in comparison thereof: so the ministratiō of the sacramentes may be a function common vnto many, and therefore lawfully of them vsed, although they haue not the gift of preaching, which is a more rare gift and giuen to fewer. And therefore, principall and accessorie which of the fouer be, in their seuerall respects & considerations; and though also they be both of such affinitie, that they may well often times meete, helpe, and confirme on an other: yet (being of so nere affinitie) the banes may lawfully be forbidden, if our Brethren shall so aske them, that like man and wife they may neuer but by the death of them be separate. But, as preaching may well be separated from the administratiō of the sacramentes, so the administratiō of the sacramentes may wel now & the be separated also, both in time and place frō the preaching of the word, without any derogation of the dignities, or dissolutiō of the affinitie, in which these two offices, the preaching of the worde and the administratiō of the sacramentes, are lynked and ioyned together, but not inseparablie. Thus it was both in the two principall sacramentes of the old lawe, circumcision and the Paschall Lambe: and thus, as we see it amongst vs now, so was it even in the purest time of the Gospell among the Apostles, as this very instant that our Brethren their selues here out of Paul alleage, both clerely testifie, to wit. that these 2. offices, as they may excellently be ioyned together: so they may often time be well separated.

But a question by the way, and so an end hereof. Are these two, preaching and ministratiō of the sacramentes seuerall offices? For else, how hang these wordes together? For although the office of preaching be more excellent, than of ministratiō of the sacramentes, as S. Paul speaketh comparatiuely: if then they be different Ecclesiasticall offices; and that so distinct, that Saint Paule speaketh comparatiuely of these two offices; and in that comparison, separateth the one from the other: then, although they be of neuer so nere affinitie, which fouer be principall or which accessory: if this with all be true, that one office requirereth one officer, & that, to put 2. offices to one officer were confusion; and euerie officer may fully discharge his owne office, without the intermedling with any other office: why may there not then bee a minister of the sacramentes, distinct and seuerall from a preacher, and minister the sacramentes to the faithfull people, though he preach not being a seuerall distinct office from preaching, as wel as a preacher distinct from a minister of the sacramentes, and preach the worde to the faithfull people, though he minister not the sacraments ynto them? But I will not so straightly p[re]ss our B[re]thren. These two offices may be well and better in one officer, eu[er] as may the doctor and the Pastor: and yet they may be separated well inough in some. So that hereby, with the resolution aforesaid: I conclude, that this conclusion of our B[re]thren, is not a true, but a most untrue (be it spoken with due reuerence) and a most dangerous conclusion. That where there is no preacher of the worde, there ought to be no minister of the Sacramentes.

The argument of the 8. Booke.

THE 8. Booke consisteth of the Pastors dutie in publike prayers. First whether all publike prayer ought onely to be such, as is all conceaued and vttered by the minister and not to followe any ordinary prescribed forme: with a view of the Jewes publike prayers before Christs comming: The order of the Church in the Apostles times, and in the primitive age, with the times next succeeding, and of the orders of the reformed Churches. Whether the people might not ioine altogether their voyces in some of the publike prayers with the Pastors, to auoide confusion but onely to close with him in their consent, by answering Amen: with another like viewe of the order in the olde and newe Testament, for the peoples voyces without confusion: and of the primitive and auncient Churches order therein. Whether any seuerall prayers may now and then be vsed in publike congregations with a like perusal thereof in the olde and new Testament. Of the abuses that our Brethren complaine vpon, for long prescribed formes of publike prayers, the ministers ill pronouncing, the peoples not attending, the vn sensible reading, the ministers vnfitte place, screenes, Rood-lofts, organe lofts, chauntrey chappels, high pews, opinion of well seruing God. walking & talking in the Church, gathering money for the poore, priuate prayer and reading, neglect of preaching by reason of praying, the establishment of both, comparison of our publike prayers to the Popish seruice, of the seruices giuing place to a sermon, and whether publike prayer may be made without a sermon preached therat, with another view of the vse throughout the scripture and in the primitive Church. Whether we contemne or thrust out preching for praying or no. Whether morning and euening prayer may be song in the churches. Of the order in Cathedrall & collegiate churches, and mens delight to come and heare the seruice there, being ing moued thereto by the Organes and musicke, and their departing at the sermo. Our Brethrens comparison of our publk praers to the Masse, as a gentle beast that byteth not, & of the nature & effects of our publ. prayer. Our Brethr. praier that all formes of prayer might be abolished to bring in preaching. The peoples singing of Psal. al at once. The Pastors duty in ioyning al waies these 3. preaching, ministring the sacramets & praying, the auncient custome of his giuing the blessing at mariages.

FVrthermore it appertaineth to the dutie of the Pastor to make prayers, as Act. 16. 16. not only priuate as all men are bound to doe, but also publ. praers in the name of the whole Church, Act. 6. 4. 1. Tim. 2. 1. being the mouth thereof. For whereas the spirit of God, comandeth all things to be done in decent & comly order, & forbiddeth all confusion & disorder: as it were great confusion and vncomlines, for euery mā to make his seuerall prayers in the publike assemblies: so is it orderly for one to pronounce the prayer in the name of therest, & the rest to pray with him in silence, & to answer Amen. It is also decent that he which is the shepheard, should go before the sheep in prayer, & the sheepe follow him, in lifting vp of their harts in mutuall consent. Moreover, for as much as preaching & administration of the sacraments, ought not to be vsed without publk prayers, as it is the Pastors office to preach & minister the sacraments: so is it his dutie also to go before his flock in publ. praers. But here we haue to obserue 2. things. The first that as it pertaineth to the Pastor to cōceauē publ. prayers: so it is the duty of the whole Church: in the name of the whole Church, to ioine in heart with the Pastor in the same prayers, that they knowing and vnderstanding what he hath prayed, may at the end glue their consent by answering Amen.

Although these quotations of our Breth. Act. 16. 16. Act. 6. 4. 1. Tim. 2. 1. do not proue that this especially appertaineth to the duty of the Pastor, to make the publike praers in the name of the whole Church: yet we gladly cōfesse it. And many other moze proper places, & examples proue it, & our Pastors vse it. So that herein we agree: saue for 3. great and material points here touched together: for the only Pastors cōceiuing of all the prayers, and so reteining all prescribed formes: for prohibiting the people to ioine all their voices together in any prayers, except onely in answering Amen: And for their so vtter forbidding of all seneral prayers in publike assemblies. All which points require a further declaration.

And first for these wordes, of making prayers, being vnderstande (as

prayers.

we commonly vse the phrase) onely for praying , or, potwizing swith our prayers vnto God: as we allowe that sense, so we graunt, it is the Pastors dutie to make prayers, not onely priuate, as all men are bound to doe: but also to make the publike prayers, & that in the name of the whole Church, hee being in some respectes, the mouth thereof. But, if by making prayers, they vnderstande him to be such a maker of them, that he may not pronounce any prayers, which by any other are alreable made to his hands, and he by publike authority prescribed, to make those publike prayers, that is, publikely to pronounce or say them, in the name of the whole Church: but onely such prayers, as he his owne selfe, eyther hath befoze hands made and conued by rote, or such as without any premeditation or committing to memorie, he both in his head conceaue, euen as he uttereth them with his mouth, and so at that instant make them: this we utterly deny. And, not to suspect here wout good cause, that our W^{eth}. vnderstand this terme, of making publike prayers in this sense: not only their wordes here following do plainly expounde their meaning: when they saye, It apperteyneth to the Pastor to conceaue publike prayers: and it is a common phrase among our W^{eth}.en, that such and such a one is an excellent conceauer, meaning that he can make godly prayers: but also, that they can not away with formall reading (as in contempt they call it) and a prescribed forme of prayer.

But, to confute this, and to proue that a prescribed forme of the diuine seruice, for the publike prayers, besides the reading of the scriptures in appointed courses and orders, is a thing lawefull and profitable: first, the Jewes had the same befoze, and in, and after Christes time, not onely as perteyning to the ceremoniall, but to the morall lawe, for the obedience of the first table, perteyning to the worshippe of God. Numb. 6. 22. &c. The Lorde spake to Moses saying, speake vnto Aaron and to his sonnes saying, thus shall ye blesse the children of Israel, and say vnto them, the Lorde blesse thee, and keepe thee, the Lorde make his face to shine vpon thee, and be mercifull vnto thee, the Lorde lift vp his countenance vpon thee, and giue thee peace, &c. And although they had many of their publike prayers, beeing mixt with hymnes & thanksgiuings, not onely sayde but song also: yet were they such, not only as their selues made or conceaue (were they neuer so learned men): but such as either Moses, or Samuell, or Dauid, or Esdras, or some other Prophete, especially appointed thereunto by God, had vnto wen out, and prescribed vnto them. As may appeare 1. Chron. 9. where after he had shewed, ver. 22. &c. how Dauid and Samuell the seer had established the porters and other officers, ver. 23. he saith: And these are the singers, the chiefe fathers in the Leuites, which dwelt in the chambers, and had none other charge. For they had to doe in that businesse day and night. And speaking of Dauid, (who made the most part of the Psalmes) in the 16.

Thus doe our brethren apply these doinges of David vnto our estate. And in the 25. chapter, ver 2. We mencioneth those that were vnder the hands of Asaph, which sang prophesies by the commission of the king. Thus did Asaph then set forth the publike prayers, endited, & prescribed by David. Although he as diuers thinke, conceiued & made many psalms and Prayers, and prescribed, then to others. Likewise 2. chron. 29. verse. 27. And Ezekiah commaunded to offer the burnt offering vpon the Altar, and when the burnt offering began, the song of the Lorde beganne, with the trumpets, and the instruments of David king of Israel and all the congregation worshipped singing a song, &c.

All which orders and formes of publique prayer at the Diuine seruice, though the Iewes after ward corrupted, Esdras after the captiuitie recollected, & set againe in order. Which though they were estones corrupted and intermingled, especially with the Pharisees traditions: yet til, and in the time of Christe, they had at the diuine seruice, the ordinary courses of reading the Lawe and Prophets, as appeareth by so. Luke. 4. vers. 16. 17. &c. Where the booke of the Prophet Esay was deliuered to Christ. And by that saying in the person of Abraham to the rich glutton they haue Moses and the prophets, let the hear them. Luke, 16. 29. Which Paule testifieth in his sermon to the Antiochians, Acts. 13. 27. For the inhabitants of Ierusalem and their rulers because they knewe him not, nor yet the wordes of the prophets which are read euery sabboth day. &c. And that this was the auncient order, James the byshop of Ierusalem, in the determination of that famous assembly holden by the Apostles, Acts. 15. ver. 20. sayth: For Moses of olde time hath in euery city, them that preach him, sicke that hee is reade in the synagogues euery sabboth day. And heere also is the publique reading called a preaching. Which which exercises, they especially abioyned the reading also of the Psalmes, and other solemn publique prayers of the Scripture. For which principal cause, Christ saith of the Temple, Math. 21. 13. It is written, mine house shall bee called the house of prayer. &c. And Acts. 3. Peter and Iohn went vp together into the Temple at the ninth hower of prayer. Which orders were of Christs so little improued, that not onelie as Luke declareth cap. 11. 1. that one of the Disciples sayde vnto him: Maister teach vs to pray, as Iohn also taught his disciples: desiring that they might haue some prescribed form of praier set Lords prescription. Which is a strong warrant vnto vs, that so long as all formes of prayers are according to that platforme of prayer: they may most safely be prescribed. For it serueth not only for priuate, but for pub-

Ephes. 5. 19.

1. Cor. 14. 26

Nowe, although besides this onely forme of prayer prescribed by Christ, we finde no form set out, that the apostles, or the primitive church immediately after them, did vse, or prescribe to be used: because they hauing that full measure of the spirite of God, namely the Apostles, Euangelistes, Prophets, Bishops, Pastors and Elders, yea the moste of all the faithfull people in these dayes: so that they might well make & conceiue their publike prayers before the Congregation, euen as the spirite of God, suggested in their heart, & gaue them utterance in their mouths: yet because, that in the publike assemblies, the Apostles prescribed the writte scriptures to be read, as Col. 4. ver. 16. And when this epistle is read of you, cause that it be read in the church of the Laodiceans also, & that ye likewise read the Epistle written from Laodicea: and as they vsed that, so (no doubt) did they vse to read in their publike assemblies the residue of the Scripture: both of the old and new testament, as in the chap before, ver. 16. Paul charged the:
Let the word of Christe dwell in you plentiously in al wisdom: teaching and admonishing one another in Psalmes, and himnes, and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the lord: and likewise, Eph. 5. 19. Speaking vnto your sel- ues in psalmes, & himnes & spirituall songs, singing & making melody to the lord in your hearts: sith therefore they vsed to speak & to sing these prayers & praises of God in their publike (not only banquets, as some expound it) but also assemblies of their diuine seruice: as appeareth plain by S. Pauls teaching the Corinthians the vse of these psalms & prayers, 1. Cor. 14. 26.
What is to be done then brethren, when ye come together, according as euerie one of you hath a Psalm, or hath doctrine, or hath a song, or hath reuelation, or hath interpretation, let al things be done vnto edifying: It followeth heereupon, that howsoeuer the Corinthians abused this order of their publike praiers and psalmes, euery man to sing or say his owne psalme or prayer in straunge languages, breeding confusion and no edifying: yet that in the godly vse thereof, they vsed some prescribed forme, as of the Scriptures which they read or interpreated, so of the psalmes, hymnes, or prayers that they saide or sung, besides the Lords prayer, and were not the makers & conceiuers of all the publike prayers that they uttered.

Plinius secundus hauing examined certaine of the revolted Christians, that were brought before him, what the maner of the Christians was in their

their assemblies, because they were accused of high crimes, and such numbers murdered: w^hiteth to the empero^r Traiane, that their maner was this, that on a day appointed, they vsed to come together beefore the day light, Carmenque Christo quasi deo dicere secum inuicem, and to say among themselves a verse or a prescript prayer vnto Christ as vnto God, and to bind themselves with a sacrament, (or othe) not vnto any mischieuous deed, but that they should neither commit theft, nor robbery, nor adultery, that they should not break their faith, that being called vpon, they should not deny the pledge committed vnto them: which things beeing done it was their maner to depart. Wherebye it plainly appeareth, that both their custome was, not alwayes to haue a sermon at the receiuing of the sacrament, which it shold seme Pliny aimesth at: & yet that in their publike praiers, they vsed some ordinarie prescribed form among them. Tertullian in the end of his booke De velandis virginib. hath these wordes: How great chastisement shal those virgins deserue, which among the Psalmes, or in any mention of God, continue vncovered? do they not worthily, yea, & that in the prayer, lay gently a welt, a hair or any thred vpon their brain, & imagia they are covered? By which saying, (though in mocking of those women) again it appeareth, that not only the men, but women, and maidēs, & all, did say or sing psalms, & were present at some form & order of publike prayers. Which, though he set not down the form, yet the chiefe points he reckoneth vp, in his apologie against the Gentiles. ca. 39. wher defending the assemblies of the Christians, against the standers of the heathen, he saith: I wil now my self set foorth the businesses of the Christian factiō, that as I haue refuted the ill thinges, (to wit, the thinges that the heathen standered them withall,) I may shewethe good thinges. Wee are a bodie of the conscience of religion, and of the trueth of discipline, and of the couenaut of hope. Wee come together into an assembly or congregation, that praying vnto God, we might by praiers make sute for deeds (or good workes). This violence is acceptable to God. Wee pray also for the Emperours, for their Ministers, and powers, for the state of the Worlde, for the quiet of the affaires, for the prolonging of their ende. Wee are gathered together to the commemoration (or rehearsing) of the diuine scriptures, If that the quality of the present times doe enforce as either to giue fore warning, or to reacknowledge them. Verilie with holy voices (or sayings) wee seede our faith, wee erect our hope, wee fixe our trust. Notwithstanding wee thicken (or close fast) with inculcations (or often repeating) the Discipline of our teachers. There, also, are exhortations, chastisements, and the diuine censure, he meaneth Excommunication.

sher, because we pray from the heart: we are all alwayes praying, for al the Emperours that they may haue a long life, a safe Empire, a sound house, strong armies, a faithfull senate, a godly people, a quiet worlde, and what soeuer are the desires of man, and of Caesar. &c.

Iustin. mart.

um pium.

Whereby we may well perceiue, that they had both in behaviour, and in matter, some certaine vsuall formes of publike prayers. Especially by that hee sayth, they needed no admonitor of them. Which seemeth to cut of this, that all their prayers depended on the pastors conceiuing.
Which also we may well gather, of that we heard before out of Iustine, howe they brought him that was baptized vnto the Bethzen, where the assemblies were. That we might pray (say they) as well for our selues, as for those that are newly illumined, whereby wee might bee founde through true Doctrine and good workes, worthy obseruers and keepers of the commaundements, that wee may obtaine eternall saluation.
Such were the ordinary formes of publike prayers in the most ancient Churches.

Bul. 1. Tim. 2

Bullinger vpon 1. Tim. 2. 1 Concerning the auncient form of publike prayer writeth on this wise. And leaste in this matter I shoulde dissemble any thing, the Ecclesiasticall assemblies before a 1000 yeares agoe, were on this manner. The people flocked together into the holy house to the entent to worship God. But while they were entring into the Church, certaine psalmes in some Churches were sung of those that were already come: in other, they were onely recited vntil the whole assembly was fully come together. And this beginning of the Diuine seruice they called the Introit of entring. Nowe, when the Church was come together, all of the cried with one consent Kyrie-eison, Lord haue mercy. To the which was added of some, the hymne which is called the Angelles, whose beginning, Glory bee to God on high.

The anciet form of pub like prayers before a 1000 ye agoe.

This hymne perteyneth to gratulation or to deprecation. This being ended, some minister of the Church recited the Collect, the same was a kinde of prayer, wherein the desires of the whole Church, and their necessities collected together, were recited vnto God. Then was there red before-hand of the more learned Deacons, some place either of the prophetickall bookes, or of the apostolicall Epistles, chosen out according to the consideration of the time, of the place, or of the people. This being finished, the Bishop assembled into a higher place by steps, to preache the Gospell of Christe. The people in the meane while, with a song conceiued, called vpon the grace of the holy ghoste, which (of those steppes) begunne to be called the Graduall. But heere the Bishop did reade the Gospel before with great authority, and then interpreted the same: at the ende of the holy sermon, he recited the Creede that they called the Apostles,

ties, or else the Nicene, or that which secondly was made. Moreouer hee ^{succeeding} inuited the whole Church vnto mercie, that euery man according to ^{the pri-} their abilities, shoulde put somewhat into the poore-mens boxe. That ^{misine} portion of the holy (sermon) they called the offertory. And Pontius Pau- ^{Church.} linus teacheth, that a table was wont to beset in the Church, for the re-fection of the poore, which also they called the Lordes Table, and placed of the Lorde. In this manner (I say) with these ceremonies and rites, did the auncients exercise their prayers and sounde doctrine. Howbeit, this custome was not by all pointes common to all. For some began the holy assembly not with the psalmes but with the crying together, Cyrie- eleison. They that so did, had not in vse either the Angels hymne, or the collects, or the Graduels verse. To this agayne other sung the Alleluia of the Hebrues: as in another place Ierome sheweth. Among some, the bishop himselfe without all these thinges, both beginneth with the sacred sermon, and publique prayers added thereunto, and dismisseth the assembly. But no Church was compelled to sweare into the rites and ordinances of another, so bee, that the prayers, and the holie sermons were entire, and exercised holily and alwayes the best beeing contented with most few, employde the cheefest partes to doctrine, and to prayers.

Moreouer in the mysticall supper, this rite was obserued well neere ^{The maner} of all Churches. The preest came foorth into the assembly. The mysticall ^{of their mi-} table stooode in the sight of the people, furnished with bread and Wine. ^{nistring the} He standing at this table, blessed the people saying, The lorde bee with you, ^{Lordes sup-} & the people answered, and with thy spirit: Then he stirring vp the people ^{per.} vnto the most high matters and preparing the mindes of euery one of them cried, Lift vp your hearts: the people aunswered, wee haue them (lifted vp) vnto the Lorde. For, Cyprian in his sermon of the Lords prayer, saith: Therefore the priest also making a praface before the prayer, prepareth the mindes of the brethren, saying: Lift vp your hearts, while the people aunswereth, wee haue them (lift vp) vnto the Lorde. That they might be admonished, how they ought to thinke on nothing, but on the Lorde, Thus saith Cyprian. After this the preest moouing them to thanksgiuing, saith, ^{Cyprian,} Let vs giue thanks vnto the Lorde our God. The people answered, it is meet & right (we should so doe), here sayd the preest, It is very meete and iust, right and healthfull, that we should at all times, & euery where, giue thaks vnto thee O L. the Lord, the holy father almighty eternall God through Iesus Christ our Lord For al-moste all these thinges doth Aug. also in his booke De bono Persenerantia, mention, cap. 13, saying: That therefore which is said in the sacraments of the faithfull, that we should haue our heartes lift vp to the Lord: it is ^{Augustine.} the gift of the Lord. Of which gift they are of the Priest admonished, to giue thanks to our God, vnto whome after this speech, this is said, And they aunswere, It is meete and iust, &c. But after these words the priest saide,

succeeding the primitive Church.
Hierome.
How neere our forme cometh to this ancient form.
 sayde, who the day before he suffered took the breade, gaue thanks, brake it, and gaue it to his Disciples, saying, take, eate, this is my body which is giuen for you, and the residue which are read in the Gospell. These things with great religion being accomplished, the Lords prayer was sayd. Which also Ierome testifieth in his 3. book against the Pelagians. But also it is vulgarly receiued, that the apostles did cōsecrate (.i. celebrate the mysticall supper) at the praier only of the L. praier, after the L. praier the people receiued the holy mysteries, & by the communion of the sacraments of the body and bloud of the Lorde, they grewe together into one mysticall bodye, wherof Christ is the head. To conclude, al these things being orderly accomplished after this manner, the assembly was dismissed. Thustwisteth Bullinger, not to confirme, but to confute the Popish Masse thereby. And is not here a plain prescribed form of the diuine seruice, both for the maner of their publike prayers, and of the administration of the holy communion: yea, almost euen the very selfe same forme of order & wordes, that our book prescribeth vnto vs? and although some Churches differed, yet, euery Church kept alwaies some one certain form or other, which euery Minister might not alter, at his pleasure.

The reformed Churches forme & order.
The inconueniences of the pastors onely conceiuing of publike prayers.
 But because after these times, corruptions began to alter these ancient and holy prescribed forms, of publike praier and of the sacraments: Let vs now come euen to our dayes. What Church reformed is there now, where they haue not some forme of publike prayers prescribed & ordinary among them? and yet if there were nothing else, but our Brethrens owne booke set out, called, the book of the form of common prayers, administration of the sacraments, &c, agreeable to Gods word, and the vse of the reformed Churches: It is inough sufficiently to p̄uoue this point, that there ought to be a prescribed & ordinary form of diuine seruice, and publike praier, & not that the pastor shuld be the only maker and conceiuer of the publike prayers, and the people only to approue them and say Amen, to such prayers, as the pastor at that instant maketh or conceiueth. Which conceptions of our brethren, if they were suffered: great inconuenience might grow thereon. For either the people, which perhaps understood not his tearmes and phrases, should rather stand marking and weighing his words (if they did so much as mark them:) and houer in suspence of any assent, til they understood the full drift of them: than haue themselves any deuotion, al the meane time vnto God, so much as in hart & silence to ioin with him, till it come to the parts of closing vp their Amen, vnto that, wherein their harts were not in ful assent before ioyned vnto him. Which when they haue marked attentiuely & understoode, yea, & finally assented (with their Amen neuer so frankly) may rather in the end be called an assent vnto him, then any publike or priuate praier vnto God with him. So that, that which they say here of publike praier, as it pertaineth to the pastor pastor to conceiue publike prayers: so it is the duty of the whole church ^{ples. spee-} in the name of the whole church, to ioyne in heart with the pastor in the ^{cher.} same prayers, that they knowing and vnderstanding what he hath praied may in the end geue their cōsent by answering, Amen: This (I say) ban- geth not together, so; any praier wherein they loyn with him, so; their as- sent comes not iointlie with his prayer, but in the ende, when all is done, then they ioine with him, not in praying, but in liking or consenting to his prayer: and so, it is not their pzaler, no; properly publike prayer.

Besides also the daunger euen in this assenting, and saying may times Amen, they can scarce on a sudden tell to what. And perhaps, nowe and then (God wot) to frivulous petitions. If not in some places vnder holy tearms, glorious speeches, strange phzases, and long circumstances, when any pastor were not in all points sound, (as now and then it hapneth) they might so colour perillous opinions: that the people not perceiuing it, but thinking all is well, might saye Amen to that, whiche if they knewe, they would openly protest that they detest it. And therefore to auoid al those in- conueniences they haue a publike form of publike prayers, by those that are sound and godly persons, drawn forth and collected, perused, approued, and ratified, by the supreme authority of the Prince, and of all the states of the realme and Church of England: prescribed to all the ministers to vse, so; the publike order of the diuine seruice: Which prayers are so playne, so short, so pithy, so sound and effectuell: that the people not onely most easily may vnderstand them: but in continuance, be so well acquain- ted with them, that they may assure themselves, they be good prayers, and such as if they shall heartily powze forth to God, they may safely reckon, that they are acceptable to him, as tending to his glory, and to their bene- fite: And so indeed he may go before them and with them too, in such safe and orderly sort, that when the pastor pronounceth these known, allow- ed and ordinary publike prayers in the name of the rest, and of the whole Church: the rest and the whole Church, may safely both in silence pray with him, and openly also, besides their answering Amen, in the end vnto his prayers.

But this is the second thing that here they wold haue forbidden, to wit, that the people shold not ioin with the pastor in the saying or pronoun- cing of any publique prayer, but onely to pray with him in silence, & in the ende to aunswere Amen, so; say they, as it were a greate confusion & vncomelines for euery man to make his seueral praers in the publike assemblies: so is it orderly, for one to pronounce the prayer, in the name of the rest, & the rest to pray with him in silence and to answere Amen.

That this is wel done, we do not deny: no more thē we do, that a learned pastor, may now and then also make and conceiue some publike praers. But, without pzetudice or derogation to the ordinary vsage of them, that are

The people's speeches.

The people may ioine their voices with the Minister in some public prayers and are not tied only to silence saue in saying Amen.

are all ready made to his handes, and conceaued by others, and prescribed by order vnto him: but that he only shold so say them all alone: this is too precise a prescription, and too vnnecessary a feare of confusion & disorder. For, as it is appointed with vs, they may say many things altogether, with or after the Pastor orderly well enough, without any confusion or disturbance. And where do our brethren finde any perpetuall rule, prohibiting the poople to ioine their voices altogether, so that disorder and confusion be auoyded? We finde indeede the like order that our brethren here prescribe vnto vs, appointed to the Levites. Deut. 27. 14. &c. The Levites shal stand and say vnto all the men of Israel, with a loud voice Cursed be the mā that shal make any carued or molten Image, &c. & so proceedeth with 12. solemn curses, and at the end of euery curse is added this precept, And all the People shall say, AMEN. But was this rule so precise, that the congregation might neuer speake more or other words altogether at once, for feare of confusion and disorder?

Exod. 19. 7.

Did not the people speake orderly inough, Exod. 19. 7. When Moses called for the Elders of them, and proposed vnto them all these thinges which the Lord commaunded him. And the people answered altogether, and said: all that the Lord hath commaunded, we will doe. And in the next Chapter, ver. 18. &c. And all the people sawe the thunders, and the lightnings, and the sounde of the tromper, and the mountaines smoaking: And when the people saw it, they fled and stood a farre off: and said vnto Moses, Talke thou with vs, and we will heare: but let not God talke with vs, leaste wee die: Which words Moses in Deuteronomy repeateth more fully, saying: Deut. 5. 23, &c. When ye heard the voice out of the middest of the darknesse (for the mountaine did burne with fire) the yee came to mee all the cheefe of your tribes and your elders, and yee sayde, behold the Lorde our God hath shewed vs his glory and his greatnesse, and wee haue heard his voyce out of the middest of the fire, we haue seene this day that God doth talke with man, and hee liueth. Nowe therefore why shoulde wee dye? For this great fyre will consume vs, if wee heare the voyce of our Lord God any more, we shal all die. For what flesh was there euer, that heard the voice of the liuing God, speaking out of the middest of the fire, as we haue, & liued? Goe thou neere, and heere all that the Lorde God saith, and declare thou vnto vs, all that the Lorde God saith vnto thee, and wee will heare it and doe it. There was a large speeche of all these Elders of the people And coulde they speake all this without disorder or confusion? What sayde he to this? Then the Lorde (sayth Moses) hearde the voice of your wordes, when yee spake vnto mee, and the Lorde saide vnto me, I haue heard the voice of the words of this people, which they haue spoken vnto thee. They haue well sayde, all that they haue spoken. Wee did not vpbraide them with confusion.

Exod. 20. 18. &c.

Deut. 5. 23. &c.

Likewise, when Iosuah gave his charge vnto all those Israelites, that possessed the other side of Iordan, Iosh. 1. 16, 17: and 18. They answered Iosuah, ple's prayer

 suah, saying: All that thou haste commaunded vs wee will doe, and whether soeuer thou sendest vs wee wil goe. As we obeyed Moses in all things, so shall we obey thee, onely, thy Lorde thy God be with thee, as he was with Moses: whosoever shal rebel against thy commaundement, and will not obey thy wordes in al that thou commaundest him, let him bee put to death. Onely, bee strong and of good courage.

Was heere any disorder and confusion in these the peoples speeches?
 When Iosuah befoze his death, had made his exhortation, and giuen his charge vnto all the tribes of Israell assembled befoze him, Iosuah 24. verse 16. &c. The people answered and sayde, God forbid that wee shoulde forsake the Lorde to serue other Gods, for the Lorde our God he brought vs and our Fasthers, out of the lande of Egypt, from the house of bondage, and hee did those greate miracles in our sight, and preserued vs all the way that we went, and among all the people through whom we came, and the Lord did cast out before vs al the people, euen the Ammorites: which dwelt in the land, therefore wil wee also serue the lorde, for he is our God. &c. Was this also a disordered and confused noyse and yet the speeche of al the people? For, we reade not here of any speaker in their names, no: any necessitie dyueth, so to imagine. If it bee replied, these were not publike praier. What of that? were they not the publike speeches of the Congregation: and coulde these publike speeches of all o: manie, without confusion be orderlie vttered, which perhaps were not befoze pmeditated: and can not much better without any disorder or confusion, some such publike praier, Psalmes, o: short responses, as they are often acquainted withall, o: as their bookes leade them, if they can reade, o: as their Pastor saith before them in b:iefe sentences?

The publike

 gether.

But, for publike praier too: how often is it mentioned in the booke of the Iudges, that the childezen of Israel, when they were oppressed of their enemies, They cried vnto the lorde? Iud. 3. ver. 9. & 15. Iud. 4. verse 3. Iud. 6. verse. 6. & 7. Were these cries, no praier? o: were these prayers, not as well publike as priuate? Did God refuse to heare them, as a confused noyse: o: rather, did he not like these cries as a sweete harmonie, and sent them helpers? But, that their cries were not lamentations onely, but confession of their sinnes and prayers it appeareth. Iud. 10. verse 10. Then the Children of Israell cried vnto the lorde, saying: we haue sinned against thee, euen because we haue forsaken our owne God, and haue serued Baalim. And when God layde befoze them, howe often he had deliuered them, & had them, Goe & cry vnto the God: which yee haue chosen, let them saue you in the time of your tribulation. ver. 14. & 15. The Children of Israel saide vnto the lord, we haue sinned, doe thou vnto vs what soeuer please thee: onely, we pray thee to deliuer vs this day. Which publike praier of them, with the daies following in putting away their Idols, were such orderlie and effectuall prayers, that God raised them vp another helper.

Likewise, Iud. 1. 2. When they had almost destroyed the tribe of Benjamin for their wickednes The people came vnto the house of God, & abode there til euen, before God, & lifting vp their voices & wept with great lamentation, & said, O Lord God of Israel why is this come to passe in Israel, that this day one tribe of Israel should want. Againe, when Samuel had shewed the people their sinne in asking to haue a king, 1. Sam. 12. And the Lorde had sent thunder according to Samuels saying, ver. 19. All the people said vnto Samuell, pray for thy seruants vnto the L. thy God, that we die not, for we haue sinned in asking vs a king, besides all our other sinnes. And how often both David in his Psalms, stir vp all the people, not only to sing, but also to confesse their sins, & to cal vp, & to praise his name, and to declare his workes in the Congregation, and in these actions to ioine all their voices together: and would he not exhort them, if it were a disorder and confusion?

Solomons
prayer,

1. King. 8. 37

When Solomon made his prayer in the temple which hee had new builded, & besought God to heare the prayers that should be made in the same, among other things he saith. 1. kin. 8. 37. &c. When there shall be famine in the land, when there shall be pestilence, when there shall be blasting, mildew, Grasshopper, or Caterpillar, when their enemies shall besiege them in the Cities of the lande, or anie plague, or anie sickness: then, what prayer and supplication soeuer shall bee made of any man, or of al thy people Israel, when euery one shal know the plague of his owne heart, and stretche forth his handes in this house: heare thou him in Heauen. &c. Wherein hee speaketh not onely of the priuate prayer of any man, but of the publike prayer made by all the people. Heare thou then in heauen their prayer and their supplication, and iudge their cause. If they sinne against thee, (for there is no man that sinneth not) and thou be angry with them, and deliuer them vnto the enemies, so that they carry them away prisoners, into the lande of the enemies eyther farre or neere, yet if they turne agayne with their heart in the lande to the which they bee carried away Captiues, and returne and pray vnto thee, in the lande of them that carried them away Captiues, saying, Wee haue sinned, wee haue transgressed, and haue done wickedlie, &c. Then heare thou their prayers, and their supplication in Heauen thy dwelling place, and iudge their cause, and bee mercifull vnto the people that haue sinned against thee, &c. For they bee thy people and thine inheritance, which thou broughtest out of Egypt, from the midst of the yron furnace. Let thine eyes bee open vnto the prayer of thy seruant, and vnto the Prayer of thy people Israel, to hearken vnto them in all that they call for vnto thee, &c. So that hee speaketh not heere of anye one man, praying in the name of the people: but bothe of euerye one whosoever, and iointlie of all the peoples prayers vnto God. Which if they had not vsed so to praye, as hee had thought G O D would haue accounted those publike prayers that all the people iointlie withall their voices made, a disordered and con-

confused noise: hee woulde neuer haue made this solempne prayer ^{pleas voyces} for them. ^{in publike}

What confusion and disorder of voices was this, at the praier of Prayer.
Elias. 1. Reg. 18. verse 39. All the people when they sawe the fire to fall from heauen, and consume the burnt offering, fell on their faces and sayde, the ^{1. Kin. 18. 39.}
Lord is God, the Lord is God. It may be thought, that at the reedifying of the Temple, in this number of voices, there was then some confusion of them.

For when as in the first of Esdras, the thirde chap. verse 1. it is sayde, ^{1. Esdras. 3. 1.} that the people assembled them-selues as one man vnto Ierusalem, It followeth ^{Ec.} verse 10. 2c. And when the builders layde the foundation of the Temple of the Lord, they appointed the Preestes in their apparell with Trumpettes, and the leuites the sonnes of Asaph with Cimballes, to prayse the lorde after the ordinau. c. of Dauid king of Israel. Thus they sang when they gaue prayse and when they gaue thankes vnto the lorde. For hee is good, for his mercie endureth euer towards Israel. Where withall we see, the former point, of the prescribed forme of Prayers. And all the people shouted with a great shoute, when they prayed the Lorde, because the foundation of the house of the lorde was layde. And many also of the Prieistes and leuites, and the cheefe of the Fathers & auncient mⁿ, which had seene the first house, when the foundation of this house was layde before their eyes, wept with a lowde voyce. And many shouted a lowde, for ioy: so that the people coulde not discerne the sounde of the shout for ioy, from the noyse of the weeping of the people. For the peop^e shouted with a lowde cry, and the noyse was heard farre off. Here indeede was some confusion of voices, because some of them shouted, and some wept, and some of them prayed to GOD, and some sang his praises, and some blew the Trumpettes: and yet GOD accepted this confusion, as a molte sweete conceite and harmonye.

In the tenth Chapter, after the Prayer of Esdras in the name of him- ^{Esdras. 10. 1.}
selfe, and of al the people, verse 1. VPhiles Esdras prayed thus, and confessed ^{Ec.} him-selfe weeping, and falling downe before the House of GOD: there assembled vnto him of Israell, a very great congregation of Men and VVomen, and child: en, for the people wept with a great lamentation. Then Shecaniah the sonne of Iehiel, one of the sonnes of Elam, answered and said to Esdras: we haue trespassed against God. &c.

Here one speaketh in the name of all the people: but in the next assem-blye, it followeth after, VWhen Esdras had exhorted the people: al the Con-gregation answered (Verse 12.) and said with a lowde voyce: So wil we do accordinge to thy VVordes vnto vs, but thee People are manye, and it is ^{Psalm. 135.}

ces ioyned this thing. Let our rulers therefore. &c. And in the 8. Chapter of Nehemias, in the new Testament he saith, verse 1. And all the people assembled themselves together, in the streete that was before the Water gate, and they spake vnto Esdras the scribe, that hee should bring the booke of the Lawe of Moses, which the Lorde had commanded to Israel. And Esdras the priest brought the lawe before the congregation both of men and Women, and of all that coule heare and vnderstande it, in the first day of the seuenth month. And hee red therein in the streete that was before the water-gate, from the morning vntill the Midday, before men and women and them that vnderstood it, and the eares of all the people hearkened vnto the booke of the lawe. And Esdras the scribe stood vpon a pulpit of wood, which he had made for the preaching.

Nehemiah.
8. 1. &c.

Here againe is the plaine reading of the Scripture, so that the people may vnderstand it, called Preaching. And Esdras opened the booke before all the people, for he was aboue al the people, and when hee opened it, al the people stood vp, and Esdras prayes the Lord the great God. And all the people answered, Amen, Amen, with lifting vp their bandes, and they bowed themselves, and worshipped the Lord with their faces toward the ground. And here is euen that our bze. speake of, where the minister praiseth God (which is a part of prayer) and the people hearken and aunswere, Amen. But yet immediately it followeth, that this reading was not done all by one, but a great many Leuites are reckoned vp, which caused the people to vnderstande the Lawe, and they reade in the booke of the Lawe of God, distinctly, and gaue the sence, and caused them to vnderstande the reading. And also the notable prayer, that followeth in the next Chapter, was pronounced vppon staires not by one, but by eight or nine of the Leuites pronouncing the same before the people.

Thus wee see at large in all these ages, the manner of the Church of God in their cōgregations and publike Praiers, both for the Leuites parts, and for the peoples, howe they ioined their voices together, not onely in saying Amen: but in their petitions, Confessions, and thanks-giuinges. And this was counted no disorder nor confusion, but bled of all Godlie men, and alwaies acceptable vnto God. And so, as wee may further perceiue by the Apocrypha, and other histories of their publike praiers, thus practised and continued till Chzistles comming: Neither was this doone so much in respect of the ceremoniall, as of the morall Lawe of God among them.

The voices of many without confusion, in the newe Testament.

But to confirme all this, with the practise approued of Chziste in the Newe testament: reade we not, Luke 2. verse. 13. Euen presently after the birth of our Sauour Christ. that when one Angel of the Lorde had declared vnto the Shepherdes, the ioyful tydings of his birth: And straight wayes sayth Luke) There was with the Angell a multitude of heavenly sonnders, praying G O D, and saying: Glorie bee to G O D on high, and in earth peace,

peace, and towards men good will: and was heere also confusion and disorder, in the multitude of the voices of the Angels that saide these things. ces ioyned in the new Testament

And likewise, when Iesus a little before his death, came riding to Ierusalem, Mat. 21. ver. 9. &c. The people that went before, and they also that followed, cryed, saying; Hosanna, the sonne of Dauid, blessed be hee that commeth in the name of the Lord. Hosanna, thou which art in the highest. And when he was come to Ierusalem al the Citie was mooned, saying who is this? and the people saide, this is Iesus the Prophet of Nazareth in Galily. True it is, that there were some, that thought this a disorder and confused noise. For it followeth, ver. 15, &c. But when the cheefe priests and scribes sawe the maruels that he did, and the children crying in the Temple, and saying, Hosanna, the sonne of Dauid, they disdained and saide to him, hearest thou what these say? and Iesus saide vnto them, yea, did yee neuer reade, by the mouth of babes and sucklinges, thou haste made perfect thy praise? Doth Chryste heere forbid them to cry out these publike praiers, as a confusion and disorder?

Mach. 21. 9.

Verse. 14.

And what was the manner of the Apostles praiers, concerning this point? Act. 1. 14. Luke saith: They all continued with one accord, in prayer and supplication, with the Women, and Marie the mother of Iesus, and with his brethren. In daide here is not mentioned, that all their voices were ioined together, but one accord: which rather signifieth the consent of their hearts, then the consent of their voices. But very well doth Caluine note hereon, saying: So farre as respecteth the concorde of their mindes, it is opposed to the dispearsing of them, which the feare had brought. Howbeit withall, generallie we may gather hereupon, how necessarie it is in praying. Which Christ commadeth, euery one to pray for the whole body and in common, as though it were in the person of all: Our father, Giue vs. &c. Mat. 6. 9. Whence cometh this vnitie of the tongs but of one spirite? Wherefore Paul Rom. 15. 6. When hee would deliuer to the Iewes & Gentiles, a rule of praying well, remoueth far off all dissembling. That we might glorify God (sayth hee) with one mouth. And verillie that God may of vs be called vpon a Father, it behoueth vs to be brethren, & to consent brethen-like. But to the to this more plaine, Luke declareth Act. 4. 23, & 24. How that after Peter & Iohn, as soone as they were let go, came to their fellows, & shewed al that the high priests & elders had saide vnto them; when they heard it, they lift vp their voices to God with one accord, & said, O Lord, &c. And though their praiers be not also described, Act. 12. 5. When Peter was kept in prison: yet in that he saith: But earnest prayer was made of the Church to God for him: wee may easil y coniecture, that it was not made onely with their assent, but with all their voices in their so earnest praier for him.

Act. 1. 14.

Caluinus in Act. 1.

Act. 12. 5.

Apocal. 4. 8.
&c.

And although the visions in the Reuelation that Saint Iohn sawe and heard, bee referred to further mysteries: yet the analogy that is proportionable, betweene the signes of thinges, and the thinges themselves, manifestly proueth, that the multitude of voices ioyned together in publique prayers, was not then, either of God or man accounted, a disorder or confusion in the Church. Apocal. 4. verse 8. &c. And the foure Beastes had each one of them sixe wings about him, and they were full of eyes within, and they ceased not day nor night, saying: Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God almighty, which was and which is, and which is to come. And when those beastes gaue glory, and honour, and thanks to him that sat on the throne, and worshipped him that liueth for euer & euer, the 24. elders fel downe before him that satte on the throne, & worshipped him that liueth for euermore, & cast their crowns before the throne, saying: thou art worthy O lord, to receiue glory and honour, and power for thou hast created all thinges, and for thy willes sake, they are and haue beene created.

And in the next Chapter, verse 8. The foure and twenty Elders fel downe before the lambe, hauing euery one Harpes and golden Pisks full of Odors, which are the prayers of Sainces, and sung a newe song, saying: Thou art worthy, &c. And also verse 11. Then I behelde, and I heard the voyce of many Angelles round about the Throne, and about the Beastes and the elders, and there were thousande thousandes, saying with a lowde voyce: Worthie is the lambe that was killed to receiue power, and riches, and wisdom, & strength, and honour, and glory, and prayse: and all the creatures which are in Heauen, and vnder the earth, and in the Sea, and all that are in them, heard I, saying praise and honour, and glory, and power, bee vnto him, that sitteth vpon the Throne, and vnto the lambe for euermore. And the foure Beastes sayde Amen, &c. The Reuelation hath many moe of these visions. All which, though they haue a misticall vnderstanding, yet if those mysteries had beene figured by thinges disordered and confused, it had both beene a discredite to the entendement of them, neither coulde Saint Iohn haue well perceiued and vnderstood them.

Iustini in Oras. ad An-toninum p. 11.

But that this was the practise of the primitive and aunient Church succeeding, it may appeare by Iustine, in the foresaide Apologie. But howe we haue dedicated our selues to God (saith hee) beeing renewed by Christe, wee will now declare, least wee might seeme to dissemble any thing maliciously: So many as being perswaded do beleue these things to be true that we do teach, and do promise to liue after the same manner: before all things they learne with prayers and fastinges, to aske of God forgiuenesse of their fore-passed sinnes, we ioining together with them the prayers, and the fastings. So that all these that were conuerted from idolatry, and were to be baptized, with the Ministers that did baptise them, ioined, as their fastings, so their prayers altogether, and then within a little after, followeth that which wee haue already cited of their publike prayers, when they are brought to the assembly of the faithfull, to ioyne also with them in the Communion. After which publique prayers, when they had saluted one another with a mutual kisse, and that the chiefest of the brethren, was (with his prayers and thanksgiuings) consecrating to God the mysteries of the Lordes supper: after the prayers (sayth he) and the Eucharist (or thanksgiuings) all the company singeth Amen. Here is againe the cheefe Elders prayers & thanksgiuings by him selfe, and all the companies Amen. But as he declareth after ward, before these prayers and thanksgiuings, that this cheefe person maketh alone, which is the consecration of the breade and Wine, to the which the people singeth, Amen: When the Exhortation to prepare them-selues, to come worthily to this Table was finished: After this (sayth he) we arise all of vs together, and offer our prayers: which done, the breade & wine &c. (as is aforesaide) is brought forth. So that, here are some prayers made of all the people together, with the Minister, and some prayers only made by the mouth of the Minister in the name of the whole Church, as our brethren say, and the whole Church ioyning in heart with the People in the same prayers, and praying with him in silence, in the ende they gaue their consent thereto, by answering Amen.

Cyprian Ser. 6, De Orat. Dominica, sayth, We say not, My father which art in heauen: neither, Giue to me this day my bread: neither doth euery one desire that sins shold be only forgieue to him: or desireth for him self alone that he shold not be led into temptation, & shold be deliuered from euil. It is a publike & comon prayer vnto vs. And when we pray, we pray not for one, but for all people, because we being the whole people are one thing. The God of all peace and master of concorde, that taught vnitie, woulde thus haue one to pray for all. Euen as hee him selfe did beare all in one. This Lawe did the three Children keepe, beeing enclosed in the furnace of fire. Agreeing in prayer, and concurring in consent of spirite. Which thing the sayth of the diuine scripture declareth, and when it teacheth howe suche praied, it giueth an example which wee in prayers ought to followe, that wee might bee such as they were. Then sayth (the scripture) they there did sing an hymne, as it were with one mouth, and did blesse the Lorde: They spake as it were with one mouth, and Christ had not yet taught them to praye and therefore to them that prayed, their speech was able to obtaine and effectuall: because the quiet and simple, and spirituall praier was acceptable to the Lord. Thus sayth Cyprian of the prayers wherein all the people ioyned their voyces publicly together: and that the Apostle followed this manner, he citeth Act 1, as is aforesayd.

Cyprianus in serm. 6. de oratione dominica.

The ioint praising and praying to God, of all at once.

So that this praier with one mouth in the name of all, was not so, that one only spake it, & the other only gaue the Amen and consent thereto: but they all spake it with such a concord, as though it had beene spoken with one mouth, which was spoken with the mouth of euerie one of them. Euen as euerie one saith the Lords praier in the name of al, and not one alone saith it for them all. And yet in those publike praiers which the pastor speaketh onelic in all the peoples name, the people noise and then did giue their responses in their courses, as it may appeare by that which Ciprian after ward saith. But when we stand to praier (most dearlie beloved brethren) we ought to watch, and be intentiue to the praiers with al our heart. All worldlie and carnall cogitation must go from vs: Neither must the minde thinke then of anie other thing, than of that onlie which it praieith. Therefore the Preeft also giuing foorth a preface before the praier, prepareth the breth. minds, in saying: Lift vp your hearts, & whe the people answereth, & we haue them (lifted vp) vnto the Lord, they may be admonished, that they ought to thinke on no other thing, but on the Lord. So þ the people said not only, Amen: but had other aunsweres also vnto the Minister, as may appeare further in the Letanies and Liturges of the auncient Churches. And to the we, howe farre the people ioined their voices with the Minister, euen long after, when the Ministers had gotten a great part of the praiers to their owne pronouncing in Chrysostomes time, but yet before the blasphemies, Idolatries, and superstitions of the Masse began, or the praying in a tongue vnknown to the people, or in secrete muttering that al the people, hard not: it is worthy the obseruing to this purpose, that which Chrysost. writeth vpon the last vers of the 8. chap. of the 2. epist. of S. Paul to the Cor. Homil. 18. wherefore, shew ye towards them and before the churches, the proof of your loue, & of the reioysing that we haue of you. Now (saith hee) receiue ye them euen as indeede ye loue vs: Declare ye, howe wee not simply nor rashlie do reioyce in you. This shall ye do, if ye shall shew forth your loue towards them. And afterward he maketh his speech more dreadful saying: In the sight of the churches, for the glory (saith hee) of the churches, for their honor: for if ye shal honor the, ye shal honor the churches that sent them For it shall not be only their honor, but also theirs that sent them & chose them: & before all, it shall be to Gods glorie For when we shall honor them that minister vnto him: the glory stretcheth to him. For the communitie of the churches: but this also shalbe no smal thing for great is the power of a synode, that is, of the churches. The praier of them loosed Peter from his bondes, opened the mouth of Paul, Their suffrage or voice not a little beautifieth those, that shall attrayne to the spirituall principalities. And for this cause, he that shall giue orders, calleth then for the Churches praiers. And they giue their sentences and giue their crie thereto. Which thing, they that are to enter into the Ministrye doe knowe. For it is not lawfull to them, that are not entred entred into the minifterie, to diſcloſe all thinges. But there is that thing, wherein the Prieſte differeth nothing from him that is vnder him. As when the dreadfull myſteries are to be partaked, for we are all holden a like worthie to partake them. Not as it was in the old law, the prieſt did eate a part, & the people a part, & it was not lawfull for the people to be partaker of thoſe thinges, wherof the Prieſt was partaker. Howbeit, now it is not ſo, but one bodie is brought forth vnto all, and one cup. Yea, and in the prayers a man ſhall ſee, that he offereth together with them the full cuppe, both for thoſe that are poſſeſſed with vncleane ſpirites, and alſo for thoſe that are the penitentes. For the prayers are made in common both of the Prieſt and of them. And all of them ſay one prayer, a prayer full of mercie. Againe, when we haue ſhurte out from the Prieſtes circuites, thoſe that can not be partakers of the holy table, another prayer is to be made, and we all lie vpon the grounde alike, and we ariſe all alike. Againe, when the peace is to be communicated, we ſalute one another all alike. And againe, euen in the ſame moſt dreadfull myſteries, the Prieſte prayeth for the people, and the people prayeth for the Prieſt. For when they ſay, and with thy ſpirits: it is nothing elſe than this, thoſe thinges that are of the Eucharifte, that is to wit, of the giuing of thanks, are all of them comon. For neither he giueth thanks alone, but alſo al the people. For, hauing before their voyce, & then, they being gathered together, that this thing might worthily and iuſtly be done, he beginnes the Eucharifte (or thanksgiuing). And what marueileſt thou if the people ſpeake, with the Prieſt? Whereas in deede they ſound out thoſe holy hymnes in common, euen with the verie Cherubines and ſupernall powers. Theſe thinges verily are ſpoken of vs, that all thoſe alſo which are gouerned, might be ſober. to the end we might learne, that we are all one body. Onely hauing among vs ſo much difference, as members haue from mebers. And that we ſhould not caſt al vpon the Prieſts, but that wee alſo euen as for a body that is common, ſhould thus beare the charge of the vniuerſall Church &c.

By theſe wordes it manifeſtly appeareth, that the Paſtor in the admi- niſtration of the diuine ſeruice, ſaybe not all the publike prayers alone, though in the name of the whole Church, and the reſt ioyning in hearte with him in ſilence, to auoid confusion and diſorder, anſwering him onely with Amen; but that they had many reſponſes, and manye whole prayers, that they prayed all together in common euen in the ſame manner as he did, without any diſorder or confusion.

The people ioined with the Miniſters in many publike prayers.

Thus we ſee, both that in the whole tenore of all the ſcripture, and in the praſiſe of the primitive and the auncient Church ſucceeding, they ſtoode not thus preciſely, as, neither ſo; the preſcription of the forme of publike prayers, ſo, neither ſo; the manner of the utterance of them; but that prayers in publ. assemblies.

that often they ioyned all their voyces with the minister, or folloved him, or answered him with many moe wordes than with a bare Amen, which giueth nothing but (as our Brethren confesse) a silent consent vnto him, which is rather an approbation of his prayers for them, than properly any prayers of theirs ioyned with him.

How farre
seuerall
prayers in publike as-semblies
may be vsed of the people.

The thirde thing, that I would haue heere further considered in this matter of publike prayer, is, that our Brethren say: it were a great confusion and vncomelinesse for euery man to make his seuerall prayers in the publike assemblies. Indade if euerie man did make his seuerall prayers, in the publike assemblies, at such times as the publike prayers are openly made by the minister in the name of the whole Church, and did neither openly praye with him, nor in silence giue assent vnto him, so be they could heare him: I confesse, it were great confusion and vncomelinesse. But, if the ministers voyce were so lowe either by nature or infirmitie, that in a great assemblie all coulde not well heare him, and yet, it were confusion and vncomelinesse, to pearch theselues higher than their calling would withall tollerate, that they might heare him better: or perhaps the same defect might be in their owne not so quick hearing: then, if any such persons were bozne withall, to giue themselves to their seuerall prayers, enen while the publike prayers were in saying, so it were done without disturbaunce, or offence to the publike assemblie: there might be no confusion nor vncomelinesse in so doing. But our Brethren vige this point so precisely, that without anie consideration of the persons infirmities, or any mention of the time, they would haue no seuerall prayers at all in the publike assemblies. Which is too straight and too nice a point to stande vpon.

Exod. 14. 15.
Moses
prayers.

Was not that a publike assemblie, when all the children of Israell were by the read sea, and Pharao with his host folloved vpon them, and the Children of Israell cryed vnto the Lorde; and when Moses had comforted them; though we reade not of any one worde that he spake to God: yet, the Lorde sayde vnto him, Exod. 14. 15. Wherefore cryest thou vnto me? Was not this a seuerall prayer in the publike assembly? And how often times doth Moses make seuerall prayers in the publike assemblies? For what is seuerall prayer, but eyther prayer for some seuerall persons, or matters that are not publike: or that the partie which prayeth maketh not ioyntly with the assemblie but by himselfe, without the assemblies ioyning with him, either in the wordes of the prayer, or in the saying of Amen vnto him? And may no such prayers be made in publike assemblies? Was not the place where the Arke was placed, and where the Priestes were attendant on the offrings, and afterwarde the temple, the place of the publike assemblies, and therefore called the house of prayer? And yet, did not God appoint the Leuites, that when any seuerall person

son came to offer, or to pray to God for his seuerall estate, that not only the partie himselfe might make his seuerall prayers, euen as he gaue his seuerall oblations for his seuerall trespasses, or seuerall necessities, or seuerall benefites: and that the Priest also should make seuerall prayers and oblations for him, besides the publike prayers, although it were euen in the publike assemblie?

*1. Sam. 7. 17.
The prayers of Annah.*

Did not Annah make her seuerall prayers, when with her husbande she went vp yearly to the house of the Lorde? And she vowed a vowe, and sayde, O Lorde of Hostes, if thou wilt looke on the trouble of thine handmaide, and remember me, and not forget thy handmayd, but giue vnto thy handmayde a man childe: then I will giue him vnto the Lorde all the dayes of his life, and there shall no razor come vpon his heade, and she continued praying before the Lorde. Eli marked her mouth, for Annah spake in her heart, her lippes did moue onely, therefore Eli thought that shee had beene drunken. And Eli sayde vnto her, howe long wilt thou bee drunken? Put awaie thy drunkenesse from thee? Then Annah answered and sayde, nay, (my Lorde) but I am a woman troubled in spirite: I haue drunken neyther wine nor stronge drinke, but haue powred out my soule before the Lorde. Count not thy handmayde for a wicked woman, for of the abundaunce of my complaynt and my griefe haue I spoken hetherto. Then Eli answered and sayde, Goe in peace, the God of Israel graunt thy petition that thou hast asked of him. 1. Sam. 1. 11. &c. By which it appeareth, that the godly in their afflictions made sometimes their seuerall prayers euen in the publike assemblie of the highe Priests and other Priests and Leuites assistant about him, besides the other people assembled in the Lordes house. And for that notable prayer which at the presenting of her sonne Samuell, she openly made, and is set downe in the Chapter following, though it comprehend also some generall matters: yet was it but her seuerall prayer, in the publike assemblie of the Priests and people.

And are not many of Dauids Psalmes seuerall praers, containing his seuerall daungers, helpes, & thanksgiuings? And yet as hee made some of those seuerall prayers in publ. assemblies, so though he set them forth to be used publikely, in the publike assemblies: yet not so, but that eue in those assemblies, any seuerall person might vse and apply the same, to his seuerall & like occasions. And that notable prayer of Salomon, which though it were openly made, and some parte thereof for the publike state of the Church, and for their publike prayers, yet, was the same both his seuerall prayer: and he prayeth for the acceptation of anye suche also as should make their seuerall prayers in the publike assembly of the Priests and people in the temple.

prayers.

blies: so in the newe Testament likewise, Luke 1. ver. 8. &c. speaking of Zacharie Iohn Baptistes father: And it came to passe (sayth the Euangelist) as he executed the priestes office before God, as his course came in order according to the custome of the Priestesses office, his lotte was to burne incense. When he went into the temple of the Lorde, and the whole multitude of the people were without in prayer, while the incense was burning, then appeared vnto him an Angell of the Lorde, &c. But the Angell sayde vnto him feare not Zacharias, for thy prayer is hearde, and thy wife Elizabeth shall beare thee a sonne, &c. What prayer this was that the assemblie of the people made without, while the Priest was burning of the sacrifice within, the Euangelist noteth not. But I take it, that euery one of them all that while, did make in the publike assemblie his seuerall prayers. But for the praier that Zacharie made, it appeareth euen by the Angels wordes vnto him, that although for the contentes of them, some parte were publike, as by the law he was bound to pray for the people: yet some parte of them was seuerall for himselfe, and for the obteyning of a childe. But for the action and maner, it is most apparant (whatsoeuer other prayers hee made besides, in the hearing of the publike assemblie) the prayer that he made, when he went into that holy sanctuary, or, as other take it, into the temple, where they burnt the incense, to wite, the seconde diuision of the temple where the morning and euening sacrifice was offered, was a seuerall prayer: for the people might not enter there, nor ioyne with him, but taried without in the great base Courte of the Temple, called the porch of Salomon, because there Salomon made his prayer afore-sayde.

Marlorate
Caluine and Bucer on Luke 1.

Marlorate out of Caluine noteth vpon these wordes of the Angell, Thy prayer is hearde: it may seeme that Zacharie did euill, and contrary to the manner of his office, if entring into the sanctuarie in the name of the whole people, he prayed for the obteyning of a childe, as a priuate man. For the Priest hauing put on a publike person, as one forgetfull of him selfe, ought to conceaue prayers for the common health of the Church. If we shall say there is no absurditie therein, because Zacharie hauing accomplished the chiefe part of his praying, did in the seconde place thinke of himselfe privately: it shall not bee an vnfitte solution. And this answereth Caluines other answer, that he might haue so done, at other times. For, I like as well of his former solution, both being not vnfit, and seruing directly to this purpose, and namely, Marlorate confirming the same out of the scripture, and Bucers testimony, saying: For the high Priest, when he entred into the holy of holies, is sayde Leuit. 16. d. 17. to haue prayed for him selfe, and for his owne house, and for the vniuersall assembly of Israell. The wordes of Moses in Leviticus, are these: And there shall be no man in the tabernacle of the congregation, when he goeth in to make an attonement in the holie place, vntill he come out, and haue made made an attonement for himselfe, and for his householde, and for all the congregation of Israel.

And whatsoeuer we shall account of Simeons hymne in the Temple, what shall we say to that which is saide of Anna the Prophetesse? Luke 2. ver. 37. And she was a widdowe about 84. yeares, and went not out of the temple, but serued God with fastings and prayers night and daie. What were those Praiers that she continuallie did there make? Were they publike praiers, or were they seuerall? No, were there no publike assemblies in the temple all that while? If wee desire Christes confirmation of all this: first, what shall we thinke of that parable that he setteth forth, Luke 18. ver. 10. &c. Two men went vp into the Temple to praie, the one a Pharisee, and the other a Publican. The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himselfe: O God I thanke thee, that I am not as other men, extortioners, vnjust, adulterers; or euen as this Publicane. I fast twice in the weeke, I giue tithes of all that euer I possesse. What? and shall we alleage this, to proue seuerall prayer to bee allowed of Christ in publike assemblies? Yea verely, why not? Doth Christ condemne him, because in that place of the publike assembly he made his priuate and seuerall prayer? No. For then he had condemned the publicane too. For it followeth: but the Publicane standing a farre off, and would not so much as lift vp his eyes to heauen, but smote his breast and sayde: O God be mercifull vnto me a sinner. Was not here also another seuerall prayer, and that in the publike assemblie, as much as the other? And yet sayth Christ (setting downe his resolution of them both) I tell you, this man (to wit, the Publicane) departed to his house iustified, rather than the other. And what is Christes reason? For euery man that exalteth himselfe shalbe brought low, and he that humbleth himselfe shalbe exalted. So that although Christ, in the 6. of Matthewe, ver. 5. & 6. doe forbid vs to doe as the Pharisees did: and when thou prayest, be not as the Hypocrites, for they loue to stande and pray in the synagogues, and in the corners of the streetes, because they would be seene of men: verily I say vnto you, they haue their rewarde. But when thou prayest, enter into thy chamber, and when thou hast shut thy doore, pray vnto thy father which is in secrete, and thy father which seeth in secrete, shall rewarde thee openly: yet, doth not Christ here, either condemne publike praiers, or any priuate and seuerall prayers in publike assemblies: but condemneth the pride & vaine glorie, that the Pharisees and such hypocrites had. Other wise, both this parable, yea, and this place doth manifestly confirme and approue such seuerall and priuate prayers, as are not onely made in priuate and seuerall places, but in publike assemblies.

Caluine, in
Mat. 6.

Caluine vpon these wordes of Christe, sayth: we are bidden in manie places, to pray or giue thanks to God in the solemne assembly, & confluence of men, and before all the people, and that both because of testifying our faith or thankfulness, and also to incite other by our example ple to doe the same. Neither doth Christe withdrawe vs from that studie, but onely warneth to haue God before our eyes, so often as wee prepare our selues to prayer. And therefore these woordes, enter into thy chamber, are not to be vrged, as though hee bad to flee from men, and that he denied we should pray rightly, except witnesses were removed: for he speaketh comparatiuely, signifying that wee must rather seeke a secrete place, then couet that the multitude of men shoulde behold vs praying. For God would haue those that are his, by all meanes to flee ostentation. If thou shalt from thy heart shunne this, and that in praying it shall suffice thee onely to please God, thou hast rightly prayed in thy chamber, although thou shalt haue prayed in the greatest assemblie of men.

Musc. in
Mat. 6.

Musculus vpon the same precept of Christ, sayth on this wise: First in that they prayed in the synagogues, it had not by and by the note of hypocrisie. For the Apostles also & the other faithful prayed in their assemblies: & the Temple of Hierusalē was erected principally to this purpose, that it should be the house of prayer. Therefore he sayth not simply: for they pray in the synagoges: but quia they loue to pray in the synagoges. For in secrete they wil not pray. For we must not thinke that they prayed so in the synagogues, as for the most part the godly doe, to wit, simply, silently, without ostentation: but this they regarded that they might pray more manifestly and with a cleare voice & in opener places.

Christ's own

In this maner then both Christe approoue secrete seuerall prayer, although it be made in publike assemblies. Yea, Christ himselfe gaue often example hereof. I speake not of many persons, that in publike assemblies be suffered and allowed, that for many seuerall occasions made their seuerall prayers to him in publike assemblies: but of his owne seuerall prayers not onely in places seuered from all company, but in most publike assemblies, as Matt. 11. 25. At the same time Iesus answered and sayde, I giue thee thanks, O Father, Lord of heauen and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise, and from men of vnderstanding: and hast opened them vnto babes. It is so O Father, because thy good pleasure was such. Likewise when he fedde that great and publike assemblie with fise loaves and two fishes. Matt. 14. 19. when he looked vpp to heauen, and blessed (or gaue thanks) was not this done with some seuerall prayer which is not expressed: When Christe raysted Lazarus in a publike assemblie, Saint Iohn cap. 11. ver. 41. &c. sayth: And Iesus lifed vp his eyes, and sayde, Father, I thanke thee, because thou hast heard me. I knowe that thou hearest me alwayes, but because of the people that stande by, I said it, that they may beleene that thou hast sent me.

Chapter following, what is it else, but that seuerall and most singuler prayer, that Christe maketh vnto his father, in the assemblie of his Disciples, partely for himselfe, though most especially for them and all his elected? Last of all, his seuerall prayer euen on the crosse, not only praying for his enemies: Father forgive them they knowe not what they doe, Luke 23. 34. but also when he cried with a loud voyce saying: Eli, Eli, Lama sabachthani, that is my God, my God, why had thou forsaken me. Mat. 27. 46. and Luke 23. 46. when also he cryed with a loud voice and sayde, Father into thy handes I commende my spirit.

The Apostles
prayers.

And as Stephen did consummate his Martyrdom, imitating his Master Christ with the like seuerall prayer; so the Apostles frequented the Temple, the synagogues, and other places, where the people were assembled to make these their seuerall & publike prayers, and to heare the law read, taking often occasion thereby, to preach the gospell vnto them. And by S. Pauls often protestations of making his prayers, Rom. 1. ver. 9. God is my witnesse whom I serue in spirit in the Gospell of his sonne, that without ceasing I make mention of you, alwayes in my prayers, &c. and to the Phil. cap. 1. 3. I thanke my God hauing you in perfect memorye, alwayes in my prayers for all you, praying with gladnesse. and to the Coloss. cap. 1. ver. 3. We giue thanks to God euen the father of our L. Iesus Christ, alwayes praying for you. and to the Thess. 1. Epist. cap. 1. ver. 2. We giue God thanks alwayes for you, making mention of you in our prayers without ceasing, &c. Now S. Paul frequenting wheresoeuer he came the publike assemblies, of the faithfull: it argueth, that eyther in all places he made some solemn mention of all these seuerall Churches, which hath no likelihoode: or else, that in those publike assemblies of publike prayers, he made some secrete and seuerall prayers in his mind or memorie for them

Eusebius out of Clements sermons, recordeth of Iames the brother of the Lorde, that he gaue himselfe to such continuall prayer in the Temple, that his knees with kneeling grew to be as harde as Camels knees, Eccl. Hist. Lib. 2. cap. 23. which were it true: it plainly argueth, that for all the often and publike assemblies there made, he ceased not (as before we hearde of the holy widow Anna) to continue often his seuerall prayers in the publike assemblies.

All which premises well considered: we can not iustlie call it confusion and vncomelinesse, if seuerall prayers bee now and then made, of some, though not of euery man, in the time and place of the publike assemblies. If our Brethren haue sayde, that they may not be made, at or during the time of uttering the publique prayers, by all those that may well heare them: this saying had bene allowable.

And yet, to make no short and earnest, secrete and seuerall prayers, petitions or wishes of the heart, or thanks giuing to God at all, while parties fall out betwene the making open confessions, the powring forth publike prayers, the reading of the Psalmes, the hearing of the Lessons, the rendering of thanks and prayes, the marking of the sermons, and the celebrating of the sacramentes: that betwene these distinate actions the people may make no seuerall prayers, nor any priuate motions of their heartes secretly to God, all onely because of the publike assemblie then present: were to binde the peoples conscience too strictly, without any prohibition of the Lord: yea, rather hauing all these examples, as a warrant in such cases, to the contrarie, where neither the publike prayers, nor the publike hearing of the word, nor the publike assemblies, nor any mans seuerall or publike edification, is disturbed any wayes or hindred. These three points being thus farre forth, and not other wise, to be graunted vnto our Brethren: let vs now procede to the other matters that they finde fault withall.

The learned
Dis.
Pag. 64.
65. 66.

Wherin (say they) there is great abuse in our Churches. For as though it were not inough to keepe out preaching by long prescribed formes of prayers: these prayers are so pronounced by the Minister, that a great number, and some not of the worst disposed people, thinke it pertayneth not to them, to giue eare or consent of minde vnto them. Wee speake not heere of such insensible readers, whose voyce eyther can not be heard, or else can not be vnderstoode, whereof there be great numbers: nor of the vnfitte place prescribed for the Ministers standing at prayers in the east ende of the house, when the simple people shall stand often times 40. or 50. yeardes off in the west ende: or of the confusion of voyces whilest all speake at once: besides screenes of Rood lofets, Organ lofets, Idoll cages, other wise called Chauntrie chappelles, and high pewes betweene them. Which although they doe manifestly hinder edification, yet may they not be remoued in many places, for defacing the beaultie of the materiall houses, whereas S. Paule so much esteemeth the building of Gods spirituall house, that he commaundeth the glorious gifts of the holy Ghost to cease in the congregation, when they doe not help to edification. But we speake of this that a great multitude thinke they haue well serued God: if they haue beene present at comon prayers, or any part of them, as they were woont to thinke in Poperie, although they be neuer so vainely occupied in the Church, some in walking, some in talking, in gathering of money, not onely for the poore, but for other contributions, &c. And they that thinke they do best, are occupied in their priuate prayers, or in reading of bookes, while their minister pronounceth publike prayers.

Bridges.

Our Brethren doe here sharply challenge the Church of Englands for many great abuses, by reason of our diuine seruice and publ. prayers. scribed Notwithstanding, thanks be to God, first and in generall for all these great abu- forme of ses here reckoned vp, we may safely affirme, that there is, no, not one of prayers.

 them, which can iustly and directly be ascribed to the order in the com- Our Brethr. munion booke, for the forme of publik prayer prescribed: but may wel complains enough be helped and redressed, both the Eccl. state of gouernement, and of diuerse the appointed order of the diuine seruice remaining still in force, and great abuses thing here founde fault with to the contrarie notwithstanding.

They pretende first, that we keepe out preaching by long prescribed Long pre- formes of prayer. For the auowing of prescribing formes of prayer, till scribed our Brethren haue somewhat more to allenge to debarre it, than hetherto forme of they haue brought forth: or till they can infringe those proues that we see prayers.
 it sufficiently warranted by, yea, till they can shew with what good reason and authoritie, their selues being without authoritie, can set out a booke prescribing formes of comon prayer, & yet the whol estate of the church of England can not so do: I trust that may suffice for that point, which we haue already spoken thereon. And as for long prescribed formes of praier, they haue as long prescribed formes, as our booke prescribeth in any part of the comon prayer to be vsed, yea, by many oddes far longer. Vane we any of al our publ. prayers prescribed in our communion booke, that is but a quarter so long as some of the prayers are that they haue prescribed in their book of comon prayer, being some of them about 200. lines a peece. And howe can our Brethren for very shame, and fault with our long prescribed forme of prayer? Neither is this true, that preaching is kept out by long prescribed formes of prayer. All the formes of prayer that are prescribed in any part of our ordinarie diuine seruice, may be soberly and with decent pauses vttered forth, either for the ministers or for the peoples part, in the space of little more than one houre, yea, the lessons, and all the rest of the diuine seruice, within one houre & a halfe, eue where the seruice is longest in saying, though also much and solemne singing doe protract it. And yet are prouisions of purpose made, for contracting some partes therof, at the ministers discretion, for the longer continuance of the sermons, or of the reading of the Homilies: so that, this is but a picked quarell, and yet not true.

They complaine further, that these prayers are so pronounced by the mi- Default in nister, that a great number, & some not the worst disposed people, thinke pronoun- it pertaineth not to the to giue eare or consent of mind vnto the. What ing of the kind of pronouncing this so pronounced, should be, our Brethren pronounce prayers. it not. And therefore, till the abuse be playner pronounced of our Brethren. we can neither denounce what fault it is, nor finde in whom it lies: whether in the pronouncer, or in the hearer, nor howe to helpe it, that wee might renounce it, till we knowe better what they meane, cing and

reading.

If they mean, that the minister so pronounceth the prayers that they can not bee vnderstoode: they make that to be another fault, seuered and excepted from this, saying afterwarde: wee speake not heere of such insensible readers, whose voyce eyther cannot be heard, or else can non be vnderstoode. But then, the fault is in the pronouncer of the prayers, not in the prayers so pronounced. And if the minister do not his diligence so to pronounce them, as he ought to do: yet, must they do their diligence, so to marke them, as well as they may. For, howsoeuer he pronounce them, yet cannot they rightly thinke that the prayers pertaine not to them. Which if they do, though our Bzethzen say, they be some not of the worst disposed (in which words, whō they aime at, is as darkly pronounced as the other:) I am sure, they be not of the best disposed, and indeede too badde disposed, that so thinke. And not onely the ministers that so pronounce, but also those not of the worst disposed that so thinke, the one, for his pronouncing, if hee pronounce not well that which is good: and the other, for his lewde opinion, in thinking those good prayers pertaine not to him, are both faultie, and punishable. And I pray God, none of our Bzethzen their selues, being (I graunt) not of the worst disposed, thinke it pertayneth not to them, to giue care or consent vnto them. For, what can wee thinke that they thinke better of them, that thus write against them, and would haue the cleane taken away: Though here (for fashion sake) they finde such fault, that they are not so pronounced as they should be, which is indeede to allowe them, if they were well pronounced. Whereas their drift is quite contrarie, that they should neither so, nor so, be pronounced at all.

Insensible
readers.

Their next complaint is this: We will not here speake of such insensible readers, whose voyce eyther can not be heard, or else cannot be vnderstood, whereof there be great numbers.

Of this they say, they will not here speake. And why will they not here speake of it? I hope, it be not, because they like it. Or, do they reserue it to another place? Or, do they count it so trifling a thing, that it is not worth the speaking of? Or, doe they count it a fault, and would conceale it, or, not haue it looked vnto and punished? Or, do they speake it rhetozically, they will not speake of it, but they doe: And good reason too, that they or any other, wheresoeuer such vsensible readers are, both lawefully may, & dutiffully should, both speake and complaine of them: If they will speake and complaine, as they ought to do, not by the way of publike defamation: for, that (euē where the matter is true) is sclanderous: but by orderly presentment and humble petition, vnto those that haue authoritie to ouersee, that no such insensible readers be permitted. Neither doth any lawe (now in force) allowe of them. And therefore, I doe the hardlier beloue, that (which is here auouched) there be great numbers of the. But if any such here

here and there be, especially, if it be by sicknesse, or any such accidentall infirmities growing on them, (as frō which, euen the best of our W^{orship} are not free): yea, be it that such an ignorant Pastor were in some odde corner crept in, as could not sensibly read the publike prayers: yet, what letteth this, why there might not be prouision made, vppon orderly complaint and p^{re}sente before the ordinarie, to place other sensible readers, that both can be heard and vnderstoode, and the people deuoutly moued to loyne in prayers with them.

Nor yet (say our W^{orship} they will speake) of the vnfitte place prescribed for the ministers, standing at prayer in the East end of the house, while the simple people shall stande often times, 40. or 50. yeardes off, in the west ende.

The place of the minister

This complaint for the standing of the Minister, in the most fitte and conuenient place of the Church, needs the lesse indoe to be spoken of, by our W^{orship}, since other hauing authoritie thereunto, haue before them both spoken & considered thereupon. And where (vpon view) it hath bene founde, that the Minister stoode not in a fitte place: another fitter place hath by authoritie bene appointed for him. As it is apparant in most places, thus where the Ministers voice may be heard and vnderstood easily inough, of those that list to listen thereunto, except any be thicker of bearing, and those may be a litle nider if they please, or by the licence of the parish, so farre as the decencie of their calling both permitte. And it were fitter of the twaine, that suche did rather remooue themselves to heare better, than that the Minister vnnecessarily for euery ones priuate occasion, (which may other wise be holpen) should remoue from his place appointed.

Whence this, our W^{orship} say, they will not speake, of the confusion of voyces, while all speake at once:

All speaking at once.

This also they speake of before, more than needed. as we haue hearde, and therefore (I graunt) it might now the better, haue not againe bene spoken of at all. But speake thereof, (and tell vs they will not speake of it) as oft as they will: as wee allowe of no confusion, so if all the congregation speake at once, and doe it orderly: for my parte, I dare not call it a confusion. But call it what they please, so long as God liketh of it, (as we haue seene) me thinkes no good man should mislike it. And while may not all speake at once: as well as all sing at once without confusion? And if they all speake at once: howe doe they speake (speaking in their mother tongue) and not vnderstande what they speake? And if they all vnderstand: where is become our insensible reading? So that, if is not heard nor vnderstood, when they speake it, with, or after the Minister, all at once? If this deserueth to be called confusion: it is a good confusion, and no hindrance but furtherance to edification.

chappels.

Screenes, of Roodloftes,
Organlofts,
Idoll cages,
high pewes.

Besides (say our B^{re}thren) that they will not speake of Scrines of Rood-loftes, Organe loftes, Idoll cages, otherwise called Chauntry Chappels, and high pewes betweene the: which although they do manifestly hinder ædification, yet may they not be remooued in many places, for defacing the beautie of the materiall houses.

Though, they will not speake of these things, yet haue we both spoken of them, and those that haue authority thereunto, haue caused these things to be surueyed: and where any such things, as do manifestly hinder edification, haue bene founde: I doubt not, but they haue bene remooued. At the least, I am sure, if any yet continue, and can be proued to be such manifest hindrances to ædification: they may at all times be altered or remooued. Yea, lawes and orders are set out for that purpose. This therefore is not well sayde of our B^{re}thren, that none of these things may be remooued in manye places, for defacing the beautie of the materiall houses. For, although these wordes implie their graunt, that in some places, these things are remooued: yet if those many places, wherein (they say) they may not be remooued, should be well examined: I think, there should not be founde very many: but contrarie, very fewe; yea (I beleue,) no, not one place in all Englande, where for this reason, of the beautie of the materiall house, these things stande, being founde suche manifest hindrances to ædification, but that they are eyther so remooued or altered, that they be neither manifest, nor not manifest hindrances to ædification.

Idoll cages.

But what meane they here, by the standing of Chauntrie Chappelles, which they call Idoll cages? Except they would not onely deface, but also pull downe the material parts of the Churches, if not the whole Churches by the same reason? For, they may as well bestowe that terme, on all the Churches: which in the Popish Idolatrous times, & some of the perhaps be soe in the time of the Pagans, were fraught with Idols, which now (God be praised) are cleane remooued. And yet the Churches or chapels stand, & may well serue to good vses, without any hindrance at all to ædification.

Pewes.

But our B^{re}thren goe further. Pewes and all if they be high pewes, must be remooued. If they say not all, but only those that are betweene them, to wit, betweene the ministers voice and the peoples hearing: we graunt, that if they take away the hearing of the ministers voice, they may be amended. But where shall we finde in a Church suche pewes as are compassed in so high, and specially comming betweene the standing of the Minister and of the people, that they take away his voyce from their hearing?

Roodloftes.

And much lesse do the Rood-loftes, if anie vpon anie considerations be left standing; as for the most part, they be remooued already, hauing only a decent & small partition, betweene the quere & the body of the Church, whereby, whereby, the Ecclesiasticall persons, (as it was in the auncient Church before the time of the Popish superstitions) were severed from the rest of the people, and yet with such a partition as letteth not the peoples either hearing or seeing. For the Rood lost it selfe, when it stood by whole, was so high, that it commonly hindred, neither the sight nor the voice of the minister.

And least of all the Chappels, were they chauntry chappels, or other which were not betweene the people & the ministers: but in those places, & out parts of the walls, and as it were buttresses of the Churches, & therefore lesse hindrances to the peoples edification, the Idolatrie and superstition of them, being (as, thanks be to God it is) cleane removed.

And all other manifest hindrances to edification, were they never so much a beautie to the materiall house of the Temple, they have bene defaced, yea and removed, in respect of the building and the beautifying of Gods spirituall house. And therefore, this is not charitably, nor truly spoken of our Brethren in this matter: that such things as manifestlie hinder edification, may not be removed in many places, for defacing the beautie of the materiall houses. And yet I hope, that where the building and beautie of the spirituall houses, is still preferred: they would not have the beautie of the building of the materiall houses, being the houses of prayer, to be unnecessarily defaced, and much lesse pulled down and remooved.

But, if this be now to be observed of us, that our Brethren say here, St. Paule commaunded the glorious giftes of the holy ghost to cease in the congregation, whe they do not help to edification: then by their leave, some of these our Brethrens prescriptions, for the discipline & regiment Eccl. may cease inel. enough, which although they had been in practise even in the Apostles times, yet, since they have no commandment of necessity & perpetuall, & are not of the materiall substance of edifying or building of the Church, and having so long time utterly ceased, and the Church having now this good while ben begun prosperously to be repaired & beautified without them, and that the bringing in of them would hazard to overthrowe the readifying of the same, as we see by experience; what an unnecessary disturbance and hindrance the attempt thereof hath bred. Why may not they also cease, as well as those other giftes might? And yet the spirituall building and beautie of the spirituall house of God, continue and prosper as (God be praised) it hath done, and doth, and much better might, although this point of Discipline and Eccl. regiment cease, or at least, be not so contentiously called upon.

But because our Brethren say they will not speake of these things: we have the lesse neede to stande longer in answering of them. Let us come therefore to that which they will speake upon.

But wee speake (say they) of this, that a great multitude thinke they haue well serued God: if they haue beene present at common prayers, or any part of them, as they were wont to thinke in poperie, although they be neuer so vainly occupied in the Church, some in walking some in talking, in gathering of money, not only for the poore, but for other contributions, &c. Bridges. To be vainly occupied in the Church, some in walking, some in talking, is (we graunt) a fault. Neither is it by any lawe or order allowed, that the people should so behaue themselves in the time of the common prayers. If any breake the lawes and orders in that behalfe, they are to sustaine the punishment of the lawe, and officers are appointed, to looke vnto them and present them. But how then shall those of our Brethren be holden excused, that to auoyde walking and talking in the time of common prayers, will not come at all to heare them, confirming by their contemptuous absence, the Popish recusantes, besides the great offence vnto their Brethren.

Walking & talking in the Church.
Contributions and collections for the poore. Contributions and collections for the poore, and for other Ecclesiasticall orders, be such thinges as were wont in the primitive Church, at the time of their Ecclesiasticall assemblies, as may appeare, Act. 2. ver. 42. Act. 4. ver. 35. Act. 6. ver. 2. Act. 11. ver. 29. & 1. Cor. 16. ver. 2. whereupon sayth Caluine, vpon one of the Sabbaths &c. that is, vpon that day wherein they made the holy assemblies, &c. Moreouer, the holy assebley where the communion of the Saints is celebrated might adde a spurre vnto the. Vpon the first day of the weeke (sayth the Geneva note) which the scripture calleth the Lordes day, others, Sunday, they accustomed not onely in the Church, but at home also, according to euery mans zeale, to lay vp some peece of money, towards the reliefe of the poore Bretheren. And of the like matter Paule writeth, 1. Cor. 9. &c. Which order S. Paule sayth, that he vsed, in the Churches of Galatia, Macedonia, Achaia, and other places. To the which accozbeth the order of celebrating the communion, that we heare before out of Iustine: that so soone as euer the communion is ministred, the collection is made for the poore, and then followe other prayers and thanksgiuings: so that, these collections and contributions for the poore, &c. may be still done in the Church well inough, if they be made betwene whiles, at such times, as the publike prayer is sayed, although many good exhortations, and sentences exlting the people thereunto, may not amisse be read, euen in the very time of making the collection, so they may giue themselves to their seuerall prayers all that while.

And if any for their gathering of money for the poore or other contributions tributions, disturbe the edification of the people, in the common prayer, and celebration of the diuine seruice: they may be well reprimanded and put backe. or complained vpon and punished.

These disturbances being thus remooued, if now a great multitude haue beene present at common prayers, or at so great part thereof as they could conueniently come vnto: I see not why, our W^{orship}. should make this their most especiall point to speake on, and to finde fault withall, that they should thinke they haue well serued God. But to thinke this, (say they) is, as they were wont to thinke in Poperie. Our W^{orship}. thinke too hardly (I dare not say, rashly & uncharitably) of their W^{orship}.en, to thinke that they thinke so, as did the Papistes in the blindnesse of Popery. For, the Papistes stood altogether on their intention, and of their opus operatum, the worke wrought; though they could not tell what they did, or sayd; and yet, they thought all to be done so well and sufficiently; that they did thinke it meritorious before God.

Whereas, no Protestant doth, or can so thinke. And all that is set forth in the diuine seruice & common prayer, is to the cleane contrarie. Which being good, and the true seruice of God: why may not our W^{orship}. so respect themselves, when they haue orderly ioynded themselves, in deuout calling vpon God at common prayer, and reuerent hearing of his word, that they may well and safely thinke, (without any thinking of the merite of their worke wrought, but as becometh humble Christians, though of themselves all unworthy to appoach before God, saue that they wholly relye on his acceptation, in and for Iesus Christes sake) that they haue well and truly serued God, and though they deserue it not, yet that God will both accept it, and rewarde it.

As concerning private prayers, on which our W^{orship}.en beere againe doe speake: we haue spoken also before sufficiently, till that be answered.

And as for reading of bookes, if it be the reading of the same prayers that the Minister publicly pronounceth: the same answers serueth: or, if it be the same Chapters that he readeth, or, to turne their bookes when the Minister citeth any text, or storie out of the scriptures, in his sermon, homilie, or exhortation. Which is a point that our W^{orship}.en do allow, and call vpon the people to doe, and therefore, I see not why, our W^{orship}. should so strictly, at the time of the publike prayers and diuine seruice, prohibite all private praying or private reading, and that without exception of any such person, as perchance be deafe or hard of hearing, and for order sake would come to the Church, that no such person may privately praye nor reade, doing the same without prohibition or offence to others.

Thus as preaching is neglected, vpon colour of publike prayers: so

prayers.

publike prayers by priuate exercises, are made altogether vnprofitable to a great number. For who knoweth the right vse of publike prayer, but they that are taught by the worde of God? Let vs therefore establish publike preaching, and publike prayers will followe of necessitie. But if wee continue to vpholde formall prayers, that preaching be neglected, it will come to passe, that neither shall bee regarded.

Bridges.

Neglect of preaching vnder color of praying.

Publike prayers made vnprofitable.

We allowe not that preaching should be neglected vpon colour of publike prayers. For both may in their orders be continued. But sithe we haue not the one so ordinarie, because it can not so ordinarily bee had: shall we therefore haue no ordinarie of the other, which wee may easilier haue, and in no case wee may discontinue? Did not the Iewes continue the ordinarie courses and times of their publike praier, and readings of the lawe, of the Psalmes, of the Prophetes: though they had not the like ordinarie courses and times of preaching, and of interpreting the same among them? Neither are publike prayers, though there bee no sermon, (so they be vsed as is aforesayde) made altogether vnprofitable to them. But they are so, (say they) to a great number. I graunt, to a great number, what may not be made vnprofitable, both prayers priuate and publike, sacramentes preaching and all? Notwith, they are not directly and of themselves made vnprofitable vnto them, but by the parties owne default and abuses of them.

Gods word ioyned with publike prayer.

I confesse, none knoweth the right vse of publike prayer, but they that are taught by the worde of God. And may we not so say likewise, of priuate prayer? Tell them this, that suffer not the worde of GOD to be taught among them, but to haue the people in the diuine seruice to heare and to pray they wotte not what. We are (thanks be to God) as careful that Gods word should be sincerely and plainly taught, as that publike prayer should be made. And therefore we ioyne these together, both where preaching is, & where preaching is not, that yet the word of God should be taught withall, whensoever we assemble to make our publ. prayers, that we may not onely speake to God, but may heare God also speaking in his worde to vs, and teaching vs.

The establishing of publike preaching.

Whereupon our Brethren coming to wish vs well, exhort vs saying: let vs therefore establish publike preaching, and publike prayers will followe of necessitie. This seemeth to be a charitable motion of our Brethren, but see how slenderly it is grounded vpon charitie. For, where they exhort vs to establish publike preaching, as though already it were not established among vs, but suppressed, or altogether neglected: what can they say of vs, (if preaching be established among vs) more vcharitable and more slanderous: Haue not their selues before confessed that wee haue had rest and peace this 25. or 26. yeares with the free the free preaching of the Gospell. Pag. 38. And in their p̄face that the true & holy faith concerning the substance of religion is of vs publike-ly maintained. And that in our profession and preaching we haue hissed out the hereticall opinion of the papistes, that the sacramentes conferre grace of the worke wrought, &c. pag. 62. And, if they would not confesse these things, would not all the woꝛlde cry out shame on them, in a matter so apparāt, that the very publike aduersaries of vs crie out against vs for nothing moze, than that publike preaching is among vs established? in-deede, not so publike that euery publicane, noꝛ, euery pharisee neither, may be established a publike preacher, but good reason hee should be tried and authorized thereunto, before he take vpon him publike preaching. And so perhaps may a number be suppressed, or rather by their factiousnes & busiosity repressethēselues, & are their own causers that they be not permitted. But yet is publike preaching so far forth established that not only all that are lawfully called & thought fit, (thogh they haue but the meaner gift of preaching) are allowed: but also the meanest of all, if hee be otherwise answerable to his calling, is assigned publike-ly to read both the worde of God, and the preaching of it. For what are else, the homelies and other sermons, though wꝛitten by other, and publike-ly read by him authorized thereunto, but a publike preaching also of Gods worde? and when publike preaching is at these wayes established, yea euen where a learned preacher is not, noꝛ can bee alwayes present: canne our Brethren rightly affirme, that publike preaching is not established?

Who are admitted to bee publike preachers.

But, say they, Let vs establish publike preaching and publike prayer will follow of necessity. And (God be prayesed) so they followe. And that also argueth, that we haue established publike preaching. For, if the prayer followe on the preaching and teaching, as the Disciples desired Christe to teache them howe to pray, Luke 11. verse 1. And we haue true and Godly publike prayer, which followeth of necessity on true and godly publike preaching: It is a good argument from the effectes to the causes, that the word of God is truly and Godly taught and preached publike-ly amongst vs, and that the publike preaching of it is established. So that, while they cannot deny, but that hee haue established among vs the effectes, which are by their owne saying publike prayers: Will they, or will they, they must needs yeelde, that wee haue established already the thing, that they exhort vs to establish. With publike preaching must of necessity go before, if publike prayers doe of necessity follow.

The establishing of publike prayers.

But (say they) if we continue to vpholde formall prayers, that preaching bee neglected, it will come to passe, that neither shall be regarded. Peere our Brethren turne all againe to formall prayers, and what are these formall prayers? are they not publike prayers, wherof they spake before?

Prayers.

before: or else, howe speake they to the purpose: and may they not be formall and publike too: what, woulde they haue them vnformall and deformed: doe they meane, they be but pro forma tantum? If they doe so, they offer not onely great iniury vnto those publike praier, but also vnto many good men, that with hartie deuotion, in true faith & humility, doe publikelie powre them forth with their Minister vnto God. And what if some abuse them, vsing them only for an outwarde formalitie, without inward affection? Doe not they as ill, that thus openly contemne them: albeit their selues set out (and y^e in much like form) other formall prayers too: yea, some of them, the very same formal praier that our publike formal praier are: except here and there, (in very deepe, pro forma tantum) a word or phrase, or sentence a litle transformed. And should their publike formall prayers too, only because they are formal, be thus formally flouted and reiected: must we receiue and vphold their formall praier, & may we not continue to vphold ours?

Our Breth^r. own formal prayers.

And here by the way, if we continue to vpholde them, then wee haue them. Which confirmeth that I said before, that then haue wee much more also, and doe vpholde and establish the publike preaching, which their selues say, is the antecedent and cause of them.

Publike prayers to be vpholde although preaching were neglected.

Yea, but if we continue to vphold them (say they) that preaching be neglected: and should we not vphold the, because preaching may be, or is neglected: I thinke we haue cause rather to vpholde them, and to fasten better hold on them, that preaching may not be neglected but vpholden. For, if publ. prayer follow publike preaching: yea, now & then go before preaching. We hope also it wil often ioin with it, and will alwaies helpe to vphold & establish it. And that so long as Aaron and Hur doe continue to vphold, or to holde vp Moses handes: the true Israelites y^e fight with Gods word, shal preuaile and vphold themselves, against Amalek & all the enemies of Gods church. What: haue our brethren forgotten this, that they granted vnto before, pag. 55. to be the best means to vphold and encrease preaching? Especially, considering the greatnes of the haruest and fewnes of the laborers, by praying earnestly the Lord of the haruest, in this gret necessity of ours, to thrust forth laborers into his haruest. And is not publike praier as effectuell hereunto, where 2. or 3. yea, the whole congregation is gathered together in the name of Christe, to beg this among other things, of our heauenly father, by their publike and formal praier, as well as priuate? But (say our brethren) preaching is neglected.

Publike Prayer the meanes to further publike preaching.

Not by publike & formal prayers (say wee) but by some other meanes.

But, if we continue (say they) to vpholde it, that preaching bee neglected: it will come to passe that neither shalbe regarded.

Indeepe, if we should continue or vphold it to that purpose: then it might so come to passe, that neither of them shold be regarded. And may we not say say as much on the other side, that if we should continue to vpholde preaching, that publike & formal praier be neglected: the it might also come to passe that neither praier nor preaching shall bee regarded? And our Brethren are moze earnest heere, to haue the publike and formall praiers neglected: than are wee to haue preaching neglected. So that their selues go nerer then wee doe, to haue neither of them both regarded. As for vs, wee hope that either of these, both the publike preaching and the publike praiers, which they in scoone call formall prayers, may be stil cotinued, vpholden, regarded, & established, without any neglect or prei-dice, yea rather, with mutuall help and establishment the one of the other.

And I like better of that our brethren said before, that as we are taught by the worde of God the right vse of publike prayer: so by publike praier when wee are taught it, the establishment of the worde of God, which is taught, is the better continued & vpholden. And if praier discontinue & bee neglected: the neglect of preaching will followe of like necessitie. As when Moses heauy hands fell down, the Amalekites preuailed against the Israelites. And therefore, we may rather conclude, that if we continue to vp-hold publike & formal praier, that publike preaching shall moze formally proceede, and be the lesse neglected, & both praier & preaching be moze and better regarded. But our brethren wil confute our forme of publike praier, by this instance.

Our Breth-
r would haue our publike
prayers neglected vnder pretence of publike
preaching.

For what did thrust out preaching from the Romish Church, but long prescript formes of reading, of singing, of praying? so that their ordinarie was ynough, and too much, to occupy the whole day, though there were no sermon. VWhereas contrariwise, there would be no ordinarie publike praier without preaching.

*The learned Dis-
Pag. 66.
and 67.*

This instance non facit ad idem, it serueth to prooue a cleane contrarie matter. Haue our Brethren in such contempt and despight our or-dinarie and prescript forme of publike praier, that they can alleadge against it no fitter example, than the long prescript formes of reading, of singing, of praying, in the Romish Church? True it is indeede, they did thrust out preaching, beeing such an euill reading, singing, and praying, as besides the length thereof, their forme was so fraught & popsoned with false doctrin, errors, lies, Idolatries, superstitions, blasphemies, &c. that for very shame they durst not shew their faces, but were masked in a language unknowne to the vulgare people, although euen that also (the stuffe being no better) might be some benefite, with the moze danger. For as their trecheries might be the harder espied, so, the lesse be learned. Which corruptiō & ignorance so trāsforned their reading their singing, & their praying: that as they had been far better not read, nor song, so deserued they not the name, of any true priuate or publike prayer at all, but were farre worse, then the Pharisees balne lippe labour.

The corrup-
tions of the popish pub-
prayers.

Prayers.

So that, these readings, singings, and prayings, being cleane contrary to the worde of God: no meruell, though they thrust out preaching. For what fellowship is there of light with darkenesse? 2. Cor 6. 14. And shall now those formall prayers, (that were indeede no true forme of prayers at all, but had a forme and name of that they were not) bee brought for an instance against our formall publike prayers, that in all pointes are agreeable to the proportion of faith, to the rule of life, to the acceptable will of God, and to the greates edifying of all the Congregation, and cleane voyde of all false doctrine, errors lies, Idolatries, blasphemies and superstitions, either of the papists or of any others? Is this a charitable or a true exemplification?

The short time of our publike
prayers.

If our Brethren say, they doe not resemble our Publike prayers to theirs, for any of these pointes, but onely for the long prescript formes of reading, of singing, and of praying. So that their ordinary was ynough and too much, to occupy the whole day. And is the onely length then the onely cause, wherefore the prescript formes of reading, of singing, & of praying in the Romish Church, should be compared vnto ours, or ours to theirs? but this length as they haue oftentimes before complained on it: so, haue we sufficiently answered, that, as ours are most free from all their other dangerous corruptions: so are they nothing like in length to theirs, as all the world may soone see, by conference of them. If their ordinarie was ynough and too much to occupy the whole day? Who saeth not, that neither the reading of the Lessons, and other exhortations and sentences nowe prescribed, nor the saying or singing of the hymnes or Psalms, nor the praying and making any supplications or thanksgiuings, in our ordinarie publike prayers, wil hold vs passing two or three houres of the whole day at the most, accounting both the morning and the evening prayer.

Our Breth-
own prescribed formes of confessions and prayers longer then ours.

But so often as they complaine vpon the long prescript formes of reading, of singing and of praying, and therein compare our Churches to the Romish Church: May wee remember our Brethren, of their owne long prescript formes of reading, of singing, and of praying? are not the confessions that they reade in their prescribed forme of prayer, a greater deale longer then ours are? Their first confession to be reade being aboute thirteene-score lines, besides their Chapters. Our Ordinarie hauing but two, where as they say in their booke of Common prayer. Page 22. vpon the dayes appointed for the preaching of the worde, when a conuenient number of the Congregation are come together, that they may make fruit of their presence, till the assemblie bee full: one appointed by the Elderishippe, shall reade some chapters of the Canonickall bookes of Scripture, singing Psalmes betwene at his discretion. And this reading to bee in order as the bookes and chapters followe: that from time to time time, the holie Scriptures may be read through. In these two, they prescribe so indefinite a number of chapters to be read, and of psalmes to be sung, that we may easily coniecture they doe, or may doe at their liking, occupy more time, than all our prescribed reading or singing neede to doe.

And as for their Prayers (as wee haue shewed already, and they are easily to see) some one or two of them being as much as 20. of ours, besides the prayers that they leave vnto the minist. voluntary, as the spirit of God (they say) shall moue his heart, framing the same, according to the time and matter, which hee hath intreated of, Pag. 46, so that, hee may be as long or longer in his not prescribed prayers, as in the other that are prescribed to him. Besides also, that euen almost halfe, if not the more part of the Sermon it selfe, is transformed into conceiuings of vnformall prayers. Doe not all these long prescript formes of prayer, and long prayers without forme and not prescript, thrust out also a greate part of the preaching?

Ya brethren, euen reckoning (they say) makes long friends. Looke on your owne dealings in this matter, and see if they may not for the length of reading, of singing and of praying, bee aswell compared to the long prayers of the Romish Church, as ours may.

But, they thinke that whatsoever length of time of their prayers doe occupy, all is well if they haue a Sermon. And for this also they accuse the popish prayers, that they were ynough and too much, to occupy the whole day, though there were no sermon: where contrariwise (say they) there would be no ordinary publike prayer, without preaching. If the Papistes prayers were ynough and too much, to occupy the whole day without a sermon: and ours with a sermon and all (being no longer than a short sermon) are little ynough to occupy two or three howres of the whole day: I aske no better acquittance of ours, from resemblance of the long prayers of the Romish Church, than this our brethrens owne testimony. And if ther were no sermon nor yet homely read in the place thereof, the time was all the shorter.

Yea, but (say our brethren) it should not for all that, be so short. For if it were vsed as it should be: ther would be no ordinary publike praier, without preaching.

What do ye say, my learned brethren? should there be no ordinarie publike prayer without preaching? No, ye say not so: but ther wold be none. And what meane ye by these speeches, there woulde bee none? Do ye not mean, ther should be none? I trow ye mean not, as ye saide before of the Sacraments, pag. 63. that where there is no preacher of the Word, there ought to be no minister of the sacramentes: and so, where there is no preacher of the Worde, there ought to bee no Minister of the ordinary

The length of our publike prayers no hindrance to a sermon or homilie.

Whether ordinary publike prayer may be made without preaching, and

and publike prayer, and if ther be, it is vnaavailable, a worldly, a dead, a beggerly praier, and what else but sacriledge? Do ye meane so? but yee temper here this speech somewhat moze artificially for prayer, that although plainly enough it might so seeme to any, that should read o; here the same: yet, (if yee were pressed with it) when it commeth to scanning, yee say not so, but only, that there would be no ordinary publike prayer without preaching.

The Will of God herein

And by whose will would there be none? by your owne will? or by the will of God? and by what will of God? For, if yee meane by his will, such an absolute wil, that he wold so haue it of necessity, & to be none other wise: then indeed, it is a wicked thing and contrary to his good pleasure, to haue any ordinary publike praier, to be made at any time without preaching. But if ye meane of Gods will, approuing the same onely, as but moze conuenient, where it may be orderly had: we will also holde with you therein, and likewise would it were so. And, if ye vnderstand by preaching, any edifying manner of teaching and setting forth the word of God, in some whiles betweene the ordinary publike prayers: we woulde the same also as well as you, yea, praised be God we haue it so already.

The vnder-standing of the worde
preaching.

But if ye speak of that kind of preaching, that is such free, extemporal & voluntary exhortation, and exposition of the word of God, as God shall moue the heart, & open the mouth of the learned preacher, to declare: & that ye urge, this kind of preaching, to be as necessary vnto ordinary publike prayer, as ye did before to the administration of the sacraments: we shold then shortly be in a proper pickle; except yee coulde with all deuise better meanes, than heretofore yee haue done, that euerye congregation where ordinary publike prayer is to made, may likewise be presently furnished with such preachers. Otherwise, wee should not onelie for the meane time, lay aside the Sacramentes: but cease from all publike prayers also.

If yee say, ye speake not of all publike prayer, but of ordinary publike prayer: I pray you, of what coulde ye haue spoken it moze inconueniently: if the extraordinary publike prayer cometh but now and then, vpon extraordinary occasions. And therefore (mee thinkes) that preaching were of the twaine moze requisite, in extraordinary publike prayers than in ordinarie. And yet, that also were very harde, so absolute to binde extraordinary publike prayers, that they might not bee made without preaching. But so to binde the ordinary publike prayers, or else to cease them: that is yet a great deale harder, and moze inconuenient than the other.

The ordinary course of the sacram.
& publike prayer, not to be omitted for want of preaching.

I speake not this, but that we wish preaching, where and when and howe it it may conueniently be had, as much as any of our Brethren do. But, if it may not so ordinarily bee had, wee must not therefore intermit the the ordinary course of the Sacraments, and much lesse the ordinary course of Publike Praier, but rather vse it so much oftener.

And where do our bethzen finde any such commaundement of Christ, prescribed, that Publique prayer, (be it ordinary, or extraordinary,) can not be made without a sermon preached? It were yet more requisite of the twaine, that no Sermon were ordinarily preached, without some ordinary publike prayer. Howbeit, we read of diuers Sermons both preached by Christe him-selfe, and by his Apostles, when neither he nor any other then present, made any ordinary or extraordinary publike prayers. And also of ordinary and extraordinary publike prayers made, without any sermon preached at the making of them.

Our sauour Christ preached often times without any publike praier at his preaching, that either we finde witten, or may coniecture. As, at that sermon contained, Mat. 5. 6. & 7. Chapters. Yea, although in the same Sermon he taught the vse of Prayer. Likewise Math. 13. and so the moste part of all his ordinary sermons, except that which he made, Iohn 17. and as for the Apostles, the first Sermon indeede that Peter preached, Act. 1. had a Prayer following, because of the particuler occasion of electing an apostle. But of the next sermon that Peter prescribed, where so manie were conuerted, Actes 2. We reade of no Publique Prayer at all made thereat. Onely this after ward we read, ver. 24. that (as we haue seene before) it is said: they continued in the Apost. doctrine, & fellowship, & breaking of breade, and praiers. But this argueth not, that they euer continued in a ioint exercise of all these thinges, but continued in dooing sometimes the one, and sometimes the other.

And this appeareth better, especiallie for Publike praier, in the next story. For after that Peter and Iohn, Act. 3. 1. were gone vp together to the temple at the ninth howre of prayer, and likelie ynough, euen to pray ther also: for, y they preached there at the same time, it fel out extraordinarily. But when they had bin cast in prison for that their preaching: then (saith Luke) as soon as they were let go, they came to their fellows & shewed al that the high preests had said vnto them. And when they heard it, they lift vp their voices to God with one accord, & said: O Lord, thou art the God which hast made heauen and earth. &c. ver. 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, & 30. Here was a Publike Praier of all the assemblie, & so effectual, that saith Luke. verse 31. And when as they had praied, the place was shaken where they were assembled together, & they were al filled with the holie ghost, and they spake the word of God boldlie. But this bold speaking importeth not Preaching at y instance & place, ther was no sermon by any of the, that we finde at that time preached. But these words referred to their bolder preaching after ward to the people. Also Actes 8. 14. Now when the apostles which were at Ierusalem, heard say that Samaria had receined the word of God they they sent vnto them Peter and Iohn, who when they were come, praied for them, that they might receiue the holie Ghost. Here againe was publike prayer, and no sermon that wee reade of at that time, either by them, or by any other preached.

when he had thus spoken, he kneeled downe and praied with them all. But in 21. he entred into the Temple, (which is the house of publike praier) and there was purified after the Iewes manner, and so, it is moste likely, he vsed as well their publike, as his owne priuate praiers, and yet hee preached there at all no sermon: as for the Chapters following, they mention onely his preaching, without anie publike Praiers that he made.

*Ordinarie
and extra-ordinarie
praying and
preaching.*

Whereby it manifestly appeareth, that this our Brethrens rule, ther would be no ordinarie publike praier without preaching: (If we should precisely follow the Apostles practise therein) is no truer, than was their other rule before, Pag 63. Where is no preacher of the word, there ought to be no Minister of the sacraments.

Neither doth this worde ordinarie, escape all these examples. And yet if extraordinarie publike praier may bee without Preaching, much more may the ordinarie be sometimes without it, though sometime, with it. Yet at al times, if it may conueniently be had, we grant it wold be better with it, than without it. But when preaching it selfe may be aswell extraordinarie as ordinarie, so well as publike praier may bee: though, it were to bee wished, that the publike praier and the publike preaching did concurre more often: yet, if at anie time they do not concurre, as wee must not make voide and vnauaylable the publike preaching ordinarie or extraordinarie, if on occasion it be without the publike prayer, as wee haue scene the cleare examples: so may we not account the publike prayer ordinarie or extraordinarie, to bee frustrate and vneffectuall, if (on occasion) it bee without preaching, as these playne examples also do lay it forth. Nowe upon this wrong instant of the Popish abuses, our Brethren say:

*The learned Dis.
Pag. 67.*

Which terrible example of the practise of Sathan in the man of sinne, sinne, should make vs afrayed to giue anie like occasion of such inconuenience heereafter to come.

The application of the practise of Sathan in the man of sinne, and in the Romish Churches abusing the ordinary prescript formes of publike reading, singing and praying, being alleaged no farther forth than thus, to be a terrible example to make vs afrayed, to giue anye like occasion of such inconuenience heereafter to come: is not to be misliked. For so, it may be applyed to our byethzen, and to all other, as well as to vs. In which sense S. Paule 1. Cor. 10. having reckoned by many terrible examples of the Israelites wickednesse, in their lusting after euill thinges, in their Idolatry, in their fornication, in their tempring of Christe, in their murmuring, and of the plagues and destructions that came vpon them in the 11. verse he saith, Now, all these thinges came vnto them for examples, and were written to admonish vs, vpon whome the endes of the worlde are come: wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest hee fall. So that this, take heed, is a faire thing (as they say) Felix quem faciunt aliena pericula cautum, Happie is he whome other mens harmes can make beware. But S. Paule meant not, that al we vpon whom the endes of the worlde are come, do commit the like offences, and that our doings should be compared by the way of resemblance, vnto theirs.

As for our ordinary prescript formes of publike prayer, they be so cleane contrary to theirs, that the professed Papists of all other thinges in vs, can least abide them, as daring rather aduenture, to giue the hearing of our preaching the gospel; than to cometo the Church, and but so much as to heare our ordinary prescript formes of publike prayer, bethey long or neuer so short. And therefore wee neede bee the lesse afrayed, that they should euer giue the like occasion, of suche inconuenience heereafter to come, as did the practise of Sathan in the man of sinne, by thrusting out preaching from the Romish Church, with long prescript formes of reading, of singing, and of praying. Although Sathan by the man of sin had thrust out preaching before (as I rather thinke) and then brought in his so long & so naughty prescript formes of reading, of singing, and of praying to occupy the whole day, and the whole people withall. in ignorance, superstition and Idolatry.

Howbeit, we are not too sure to take warning, nor any thing is so good but it may be abused. And so (we graunt) may our ordinary prescript formes of publike prayers. It is good therefore to beware, that our Prayers degenerate not so farre. Which (of his great mercy) God forbid they should. And we trust in God, they shall not. And we pray to him, they may not. And thanks be to him, as yet they haue not hether to done, nor at this present doe. And by his grace, wee shal not need to feare, that they

But our brethren, to terrifie vs with this terrible example, (as those that are already growne into the danger of the Romish Church abuses,) do apply their example, saying.

heades, that the Seruice maie not giue place to a Sermon: no though the time bee not sufficient for both? And are there not manye, that had muche rather heere a chaunted Mattens and Euensonge, than a godlye and learned Sermon? yea, they frequent the one, & refuse the other.

Bridges These things (me thinkes) are spoken a little too captiously (if they will pardon my too playnnesse on the other side, in this tearme) that the seruice

Sermon. For the time and occasion of daunger may bee suche, that there may be more neede of publike prayer to those that are already grounded in faith, which at other times before they hearde out of the worde, than of hearing a Sermon at that instant. But, if there be no such necessitie; to employ the time wholly in Prayer, as the Apostles did, when Herod had caught Peter, and put him in prison, A.C. 12. ver. 5. and when the Israelites in their afflictions, did so often cry vpon God to send them helpers. I do not think that this opinion is growne into a great many mens heades,

The Protestants standdered as cosermoning

in respect of publ. prayer (meaning the Protestants) that the Seruice may not giue place to a sermon, though the time be not sufficient for both. For although they do well, zealously to loue the diuine seruice, deuoutly to make their publike prayers vnto God, & religiously to heare his holy word, which also at the same time is publicly read vnto them: yet, if they may haue withall, a godly learned sermon, there are no god Protestants, but they would wish with all their hartes, if the streightnesse of the time (as our brethren here say) be not sufficient for both, that some part of the seruice should bee lefte off, and giue place to the preaching and hearing of the godlye Sermon.

Prouisoers
both for
preaching &
pub. prayer. And there are such prouisoers in the booke of common prayer already prouided for that purpose: yea, though there were no other Sermon but an Homilie. But our brethren not content with this, that the diuine seruice should be cut the shorter, to the ende, that the Sermon might be the longer would haue the diuine seruice to giue place to the sermon, that is to say, the one comming in the place of the other, the diuine Seruice should bee thrust cleane out of place, that all the place and all the time might be taken by of the sermon. If they meane not so, then will our prouisoers sufficiently serue the turne, and the Sermon shall haue place and time inough and welcome whensoever it commeth, yea the seruice also will giue some place

place and yet not be turned out of place. For, howsoever it may fall out at some odd times, in which also the whole service giues the whole place, and resignes vp all the time: yet ordinarily there is time and place so sufficient for both, that the one neede not shoulde out the other.

And a sober Preacher will modestly tarry his due time, and let the publike prayer and diuine service proceede on a Gods name, till it come to his conuenient opportunity to preach. As S. Paule and Barnabas accustomed to do. Which appeareth Act. 13. ver. 14. 15, &c. When they departed from Perga, they came to Antiochia, a citie of Pisidia, and went into the synagogue on the Saboth day, and sat downe. And after the lecture of the Lawe and the Prophetes, the Rulers of the synagogue sent vnto them, saying: Ye men & brethren if ye haue any word of exhortation for the people, say on. Then Paule stood vp, and beckened with his hande, and said: Men of Israel, and yee that feare the lord, hearken, &c. By which it appeareth, not onely that they had an ordinary forme of the diuine service, and publike prayer: and a reading of the lawe and the Prophetes, although ordinarilye they had no sermon: and yet were ready to heare one, whensoever any such fatherly men came among them, which appeared vnto them to haue the gifte of God to expounde his word vnto them, and to giue them some comfortable exhortation thereupon: yet as they stinted not this ordinary exercise of the diuine service, though no such extraordinary Preachers came vnto them; so when they admitted them, and desired them, as glad of them: yet they made not their diuine service to giue place to them, & ceased their ordinary publike prayers, or the lectures of the Law and the Prophetes. But after these things done, then they offered them license to preach, and requested them to giue them exhortations. And euen as they vsed this moderation & order in the hearing of the diuine service, & of the Sermons: so S. Paule tarieth while their publike prayers, and their Lessons out of the law and the Prophetes, were ended, and then he satisfieth their request, and so entreteth into his sermon. And if all our brethren Preachers would marke and follow this example, all good men would like better of their modesty. And perhaps the rashnesse & indiscretion of some, to cut of all the diuine service and ordinary forme of publike prayers, and so to bring the same into contempt, to haue themselves heard in the Pulpit, might breede such an opinion in many mens heades. Although this opinion also mighte be growne into a great many mens heades, on other occasions, that the service may not giue place, to a sermō: no though the time be not sufficient for both. But is their infirmity (be it a wrong or right opinion) a sufficient reason, to take the publike prayers and the diuine service cleane away, or that there should be no forme therof at all: or, being rightly vsed, & with a moderate time, & y^e time also sometime abridged: to giue the more place vnto the sermon: may that be truly said to thrust out preaching.

As for chaunting of the Mattens and Euen-song, if to chanted bee that which in latine is Cantare, in English our proper worde is to sing: and the Psalmes and Hymnes and other ioyfull or dolefull ditties, (as our brethren their selues do vse) may be sung: and Mattens and Euen-song, are but the vsuall tearmes, of the matutine (or morning) & euening, ordinary & publik diuine seruice: the is it not vnlawfull to heare eue a chanted Mattens and Euen-song: so that the chaunting or singing of them, take not away the edifying by them. Especially, when no other kynde of matter is sung or chaunted: but such as our brethren cannot deny (if their owne senses be not enchaunted) but may be chaunted well inough. As for the Lessons, they are read: the confessions, the collects, or brieue publike prayers, in the Mattens and Euen-song, they are said.

A flaunder
of protestants

But our brethren demaunde, Are there not many, that had much rather heere a chaunted mattins and Euen-song, then a godly and learned Sermon?

Merily in my opinion, to aunswere vpright, I thinke there are not many, nor anie (meaning godly zealous protestants,) learned or vnlearned that so had rather. I graunt, of other sorts there may bee many, that so had rather. But doth this followe hereupon, that although there bee many which had rather heere the one than the other: that therefore wee should take the one or the other cleane away: may they not rather, (sithe both of them in their degrees, are lawfull and good) heere both the one & the other too: or if they can not come to heere the one, should they therfore refuse the other also, & so heere neither.

But this is that which they charge them for. yea, (say our brethren) they frequent the one, and refuse the other.

If any so frequent the hearing of the diuine seruice, that hee refuse to heere a godly and learned sermon, when he may come to the hearing of it, he is greatly to blame. But then, let our brethren looke to it on the other side, how they their selues will escape blamelesse, which when they may heere both the ordinary diuine seruice of publike prayer, & a godly learned Sermon too, will vnder pretence of hearing the sermon, refuse to heere the ordinary diuine seruice of the publike prayer. Nowe, for prooue hercof, that many among vs are faultie, in frequenting the diuine seruice, and refusing the sermon, they say:

Let Cathedrall Churches. &c. bee an example, where you shall see a great number, that tarry while the Seruice is sung: but depart as soone as the sermon beginneth.

To proue these instances alleaged, Cathedrall Churches muste bee the example. For what place they meane, by this &c. wee may rather coniecture, than they dare vtter. And it may bee that some doe so. And yet, if their so dooing bee so ordinarie, that they be noted there-noted thereof: they are called into question for the same. But howsoever it may be in some, it is not so (I am sure) in all Cathedral Churches but rather the cleane contrary. When they come to the Cathedral church not so much to heare the Service, as the Sermon. For they heard the Service before in their Parish Churches. Which done, they come to the Cathedral church, (e that almost after the Service done there also,) unto the Sermon, which at the least, every soday, is there preached. And this (I take) to be the order, in the most part of Cathedral and Collegiate, or such other principal Ch. or chappels, throughout the Realme. Where ye shal not see many at the Service song: but towards the ending of the service, or so soon as the sermo beginneth in dooks they draw thither: yea there is order take, if they would not, if they should. And therefore, this is quite contrary. But our bryeth, (to help the ir foorth) procede to the Organes.

While the Organes pipe, some are drawne with the sweetnesse of musike to come vp: but while the preacher cryeth out, continue beneath: and in laughter or brawling, be lower than he often times.

If the piping of the Organes drawe them with the sweetnesse of the musick to come vp to heare the diuine service: then is there yet some good ble thereof, except it be better to dyme them from it, than to draw them to it. If they continue beneath while the Preacher cryeth out, then in the most cathedral Churches, as likewise generally in Parish Churches, the Preacher (for the most part) comming do tyme unto them: they may heare him, not the worse, but the better: and hee may cry, not the lower, but the lower, the most part of the Sermons, being preached in the bodye of the Church among the people. And if in some fewer places he preach in the Quire: then shall ye not lightly haue many beneath in the bodye of the Church, especiallie of such, as come to the Church to heare diuine Service.

One Church indeede there is, that I haue seene, and which (I take) our bryethen especially meane. where many resorte, partly but for a thorough passage, and partly to walke vp and downe almost all day long, spending the tyme beneath in talking, or bargaining, or other worldly matters: but these do so, as much at the diuine service, as at any Sermon in the Quire above. But commonly there, the sermon is preached in the Church-yard: and that, with a great assembly of other Parishes, where they had no Sermon: yea, though they had a Sermon many of them in their owne, or in other Parishes besides. And al that while that the Sermon is in that church-yarde, none is permitted to walke or to abide in the Cathedral Church. And if the Sermons that are in the Church, were so provided also (I speak but my opinion and vnder correction) that they were made in the bodye of the Church, and the walkers vp and downe, by some good particuler order were prohibited: there is no good person, that frequenteth the diuine service

And good preachers that are conformable and obedient to the Ecclesiasticall government, & lawes established of the Church of England, and that say their selues the prescribed forme of publike prayers, and diuine seruice, haue oftentimes called on the reforming of it. Which, if it were done, yet may all this Ecclesiasticall government, superiority of Bishops, office of Pastors, administration of sacraments, and prescribed forme of diuine seruice, continue, notwithstanding as intier and forcible, as it doth. And yet, the body beneath of the Cathedrall Church, is so separated from the Quire above: that the actions and assemblies in the Quire, neither at the seruice, nor sermons, nor Lectures is disturbed, by any passengers beneath: saue that their vnecessary and idle walking all that while, is offensive, & (I hope) it wilbe remedied.

But in generall, for all Cathedrall Churches, Collegiat, Parochiall, or any other, if any in laughter or brawling belowder: or vse any voluntary misdoemeanor whatsoever in the Church, especially to the disturbance of the diuine seruice or of the sermon: as they were better away thn there, so there are lawes & penalties already provided, for the chastisement of such disordered persons. If they be not executed, the fault is in the officers. And we thinke our brethren their selues, would become better officers, & fitter to be made, Church-wardens, Syde-men, or Sextens, to look to the execution of the Lawes, that in this behalfe are already made, than that they can, or do set downe any better new lawes to mend this matter, in this their Learned discourse of Ecclesiasticall government. But now, vpon these abuses, where any such are, (thinking vtterly to deface our publike forme of diuine seruice,) they heere disclose the effect of their meaning, in their former examples from the popish seruice, saying,

Bridges.

Our brethren too passionate comparing our diuine seruice to the Masse.

So, that which was woont to be saide of the Masse, Missa non morder, the Masse was a gentle beast, and did bite no man, and therefore was so well beloued of many, may rightly bee verified of our ordinary seruice. For, therefore a great number can so well away with it, because it doth not sharply reprove them of their sinnes, nor disclose the secrets of their heartes, but that they may continue still in all kynd of voluptuousnesse, and all other kinds of wickednesse.

Our Brethren beginne now more apparently, to open their stomacks against the booke of common prayer, and the ordinary celebration of the diuine seruice, that so expressely compare it, to the Popish Masse, whiche so expressely is contrary to it. All the world may see, this proceedeth more of the ouerflowing of choler from the gaulle, than from the deliberation of iudgement in the bzaine. If they say, they compare it not vnto the Masse, for any such Idolatry, superstition, or any error contained therein, wherewith the Masse was sarced. If they do not, and yet will compare it there-unto,

unto, as resembling the same: it appeareth not for any gentill they beare bying it, but for that they can fynde no such corruption in it, nor can lay the least suspicion of any such idolatrie, superstition, or error to the charge of it. But this notwithstanding, they will compare it thus, So, that which was wont to be said of the Masse, Missa non mordet, the Masse was a gentle beast, and did byte no man, and therefore was so well beloued of many: may rightly be verified of our ordinary seruice. What (I pray you my brethren) may rightly be verified of our ordinary seruice, which was wont to be said of the Masse? What? that it was a gentle beast, & did byte no man? Now surely, this is somewhat too beauly a tearme, and too vngentle and bying a resemblance to bestow upon the true Seruice of God. Prours it false, & then spare it not. If it be true, for shame let not men, and wise men, and learned men, and men that pretend loue of Gods truth, affoord so beauly a tearme on Gods seruice. And how then may this be rightly verified? yea, and how may this be verified that our brethren here say of the Masse, the Masse was a gentle beast, and did bite no man? Do they speake this in the Masses commendation? or, doe they thinke this a sufficient prooff hereof, that they say here, it was wont to be said, Missa non mordet the masse did byte no man? No did: yea, & that with a most perillous, and venomous tooth, which many felte, that were bitten and stinged with it.

How gentle a beast the masse was, & how it did byte no man.

But, put case it did not, or could not, or it would not, would God that had bene the worst fault in it, that it was a gentle beast, and did byte no man. Is that of it selfe so great faulte, to bee gentle, and to byte no man? What, do our brethren like of or delight in bying? indeede it might so be thought by these sayings, but especially by all the tenors of this, and of all their discourses, both in writing, & in the pulpit, for they byte often, and that soe, not so much their aduersaries, as their brethren: yea, both the Eccl. & ciuill Magist. nor spare to byte any. yea, they fall to bying one another: as though it were good, bying, & a necessary thing. Not remembering that St. Paule warned the Galath hereof, Gal. 5. 15. If ye bite & deuoure one another - take ye heed lest ye be consumed one of another.

But our Brethren speake not here of bying one another, but of the masses not bying of a man. And would they haue the masse if it did not byte men, to fall a bying of them? If they had spoken of no barking, it had bene somewhat to the purpose. For the masse did byte, and yet not barked, and therefore indeede, it was a perillous, & a shrowd bying beast, and not a gentle beast, that byte no man.

The Masse did byte and not bark.

True it is, there may come no small, if not more danger euen by that, that byeth not, but seemeth gentle when it is abused to palliate greater vices. As the Syrenes swete song: as the flatterers false toong: as the Harlots smyling bewty and embracements, as the Hypocrites shewe clothing, Apoc. 17. 4. & 6. and therefore, she was a curst and shrewde queane, and not very gentle, but could both byte mens flesh, and drinke mens blood. And the beast on which she sate signifying the State of Rome, which chiefly beareth up the Popish Idolatry as it was also a scarlet coloured beast, full of names of blasphemy: and had seven heades and ten hornes: so this beast likewise, could both byte and fight too.

I graunt, the Papists allured and deceaued many, with their lolly enticements, that they decked their Masse withall, besides their other baites attendant on her, of hospitalite, bowtie, almes, &c: and at this day, as in times passe, the monkes and friers, so the Iesuities now, do more hurt by their counterfet shew of holinesse, learning, humility, faire speeces, and all their pollicies, to allure the people to them, as the Angell of darkenes transfiguring himselfe like an Angell of light, than if he should shew himselfe like a Diuel in a horrible figure. And therefore the day of the L. should not come till that generall defection should firste come, & till the man of sinne should be disclosed, even the sonne of perdition, which is an aduersary, & exalteeth himselfe aboue all that is called God, or that is worshipped, so that he doth sit as God in the temple of God, shewing himselfe that he is God. 2. And I saw the beast (saith S. Iohn Apo. 19. 19.) & the Kings of the earth, & their warriors gathered together, to make battell against him that sat on the Horse, & against his souldiers.

Apoc. 23.

The Masse therefore was not a gentle beast, no more than are his cruell and tigerlike Masse-mongers, that for the maintenaunce of the Masse as the mother of all their Idolatry, make these vnnumerous massacres and manslaughters. The Masse was called an vnbloudy sacrifice, but manye mens blood was and still is sacrificed to maintaine it. They therefore that saide the Masse was a gentle beast, and did byte no man: if they were no fauorites of the Masse, did not perhaps meane it simply and in al respects, but as Christ sayd, Luc. 11. 21. 22. When a strong man armed keepeth his pal- laice, the things that he possessed are in peace. But when a stronger than he cometh vpon him, and ouercommeth him: he taketh from him all his armour, wherein he trusted, and deuiderh his spoiles. The Dragon was quiet inough, and the beast also, to them that worshipped him, and had the marke of the beasts image: but Apoc. 13. ver. 7. it was giuen him to make warre with the Saintes, ^{not and} and to overcome them. and ver. 13. And it was permitted to him (that is to an ^{sharpenesse} other false beast, representing these false Popes, these Monkens, these Friers, these Jesuites) to give a spirit to the image of the beast, so that the image of the beast should speake, and should cause, that as many as would not worship the image of the beast, should be killed. So that, these beastes, were but gentle in a counterfet sort. For, to them that withstood them, they were beastes indeed: or rather fiendes and furies of Hell.

Gentle not of nature, but of Hypocrisie.

That they were gentle therefore, it was not of their nature, but of their hypocrisie. For seeing that gentlenesse is good, and that men like it better than austerity, the Diuel that was a murderer from the beginning took upon him the shape of the lowly poore woman, and golden skinned subtil serpent, to speake faire, and with wisdom, and not to sting, or bite, or byte our firste and innocent parents, when his purpose was to destroy the and all their progenie.

Sathans practise.

The like practise hath he often vsed since, by his diuelish Ministers and instruments: and so did he by the Masse. Which is of some called well the Horse of Troy, that had so many fierse and bloody Capteines euen within it: and the Helene that was the cause of all the Cities, and so many peoples destruction: or as we may more rightly call her, the very Iesabel of the Romish Achab, that painted her face, and trimmed her heade, vsing her whooredomes & witchcraftes, with the murdering of so many saintes and Prophets of God. and yet forsooth she did bite no man, and can our brethren now rightly say, that this may rightly be verified of our ordinarye seruice, that was wont to be saide of the Masse, Missa non mordet, it was a gentle beast, and did bite no man, being a cruell beast, and did bite so many men, though it so falsly deceaued them, with whome our brethren say, it was so well beloued, that being bewitched in loue with it, they felt not the sting and biting of it?

The Masse like to the goodly Troiane Horse, to Helen, & Iesabel.

As for our ordinary forme of publike seruice and prayers, vnto the Lord: that it is mylde and gentle, proceeding from the unfained and true gentlenesse and mildenesse that is in our Lord and Sauour Iesus Christ, and the sweete comfort of his holy Gospell. If therefore it be well, or better of many or any of vs beloued, it is all the better, nor any blemish to vs that loue it, or to it that deserueth to be loued. Neither may this rightly be vphayned as a fault, that it byteth no man, if it helpe and heale al men that are bitten, which come for comfort thereunto. For in our ordinarye seruice, consisting most part of publike prayers, made by the Minister & the congregation to the Lord our God, though we humbly acknowledge (as those that are bitten and stung with sinne, and lay open before the Lord) our wounds and guilt, which are greuous vnto vs, and euer against vs: yet alwaies we so flee to the throne of grace, that (reposing our truste in the nes and sharpnesse of our diu. Service. riche mercies, and sweet promises of our heavenly father, in his sonne our Sauour Christ, through the pledge and earnest of his spirite.) We cast the anchor of hope, on the rock of faith, which shall neuer confound vs, but worke a strong and assured consolation and help vnto vs. And in this respect here is no byting.

What kind of byting it hath. And yet in respect of other necessary parts, in our ordinary seruice of the Lord, there is a byting too, in a sort, but a good byting, if it may be so called. As Christ likened the Gospell vnto the mustardseede, that hath a kinde of byting (as we terme it) but such a byting, as drawes no blood. And as the mercifull Samaritane poured in the sharp wine, into the blow- dy woundes of the man that was fallen into the theeues handes, though it were smart and byting, the better to cleanse them, euen so well as the sweet oyle to comfort and close them. Of which nipping (rather than by- ting) tartnesse, and muche more than any beastlye byting with the teethe, though there may be some fitter resemblance, and more profitable vse: yet both this byting, in what sort soener it be, more properly belong to the re- spect of the Law, than directly it doeth to the office and consideration of the Gospell. And as we like not of the false brethren, called antichristians, the aduer- saries of the Lawe, as repugnant to the Gospell. So our ordinary seruice is not without this part also of the Law. For both among the Psalmes, (whereof a portion euery day is read) diuerse dreadfull threates, and im- precations to impenitent sinners, are pronounced: beside the terrible exa- ples and warnings of Gods iudgements, conteyned in the Lessons, both of the olde and new Testament: besides sundrye other admonitions, and reprehensions of vices, so well as exhortations vnto repentance, & new- nesse of life: with prohibitions of the vnworthye to participate and receaue the holy Communion: with Comminations, and denouncing the curses, a- gainst the trespassers of the Law. All whiche things, are apparantly con- teyned in the prescribed forme of our ordinary seruice of the Lord. Now though the bestiall Masse had none of those true comforts, nor any of these seuerer iudgements of God, sincerely set forth; yet, we (God be prayesed for it) haue them in our ordinary seruice of God. This therefore is a ve- ry vncharitable and vntrue resemblance, of the Masse, and our ordinary seruice: being in all these thinges (as wee haue plainelye seene) the one so plaine contrary to the other.

How the law is ioined to the gos- pell. Upon this most wrongfull resemblance, our brethren conclude. For, therefore a great nuber can so wel away with it, because it doth not sharply reprove them of their sins, nor disclose the secrets of their harts but that they may continue still in all kynde of voluptuousnesse, & al o- ther kynde of wickednesse.

The lear- ned disc. To away well with a good thing, it is well done, and the greater nuber that is do, the greater cause we haue to praise God for it. Contrariwise, to take away, or to keepe themselves away, or not to away well with a good thing: it is an ill thing, and the greater number that do so, augmenteth the euill and the griefe of it. If any away the better with our ordinary service because it doth not sharply reprove them of their sinnes: what sharpnes herein, our eager minded brethren can best away withall. or, how they expound sharpnesse, I am neither so sharpe set to examine, nor so sharpe wit- ted for to finde: Let themselves declare it. But this I am sure, and it is open to all, that our ordinary service doth reprove mens sinnes, in such sort of sharpnesse, as the Scripture doth: when it layeth before them, even the very words themselves of the Scripture: besides the admonitions ther in contayned, that are plentifully and directly gathered out of the scripture. And in this wise, as Gods word doth, it doth disclose the secretes of their hearts, and lay them open both to God and to their own consciences. If any contemne it or marke it not, or are not moued by it, or continue still in their wickednesse: the fault is their owne, & not to be imputed to our ordinary service of God, but to their ordinary service of the Diuell. And so, the wicked (meaning the reprobate) will continue still in their voluptuousnes, and all other kinde of wickednesse, notwithstanding al the preaching in the world.

Our diuine service re- proueth mens sinnes

But how may our brethren rightly verifie this, that a great number can so well away with our ordinary service, &c. that they may continue still in all kinde of voluptuousnesse, and all other kind of wickednesse? As though our booke of common prayer, and ordinary service of the lord did teach them and foster them vp in all mischief. The heathen raysed such soule slaunders on the diuine service of the christians in the primitive Church, and will our own Brethren now breake forth into such railing of our (their brethrens) diuine service? What could the papists (our professed aduersaries) haue said worse? yea, the most obstinate recusant of them all: how mightily do our brethren confirme them in their disloyalty. But neither Papists on the one side, nor these our malcontented brethren on the other side, are able (or euer by Gods grace shalbe) to proue any one spark of any kinde of voluptuousnes, or any inkling of any other kinde of wickednes, to be maintained, either because, or by meanes, meaning directly (for indirectly what may they not also accuse) of our ordinary service, & prescribed forme of publike prayer. But that on the cleane contrary, it is an better enemy, & tendeth to the abolishment of al voluptuousnes & wickednes, if it be duly used as it should. Now when our brethren haue thus bitterly beset our ordinary service of the L. they return to y^e commendation of preaching.

Our brethrens fowle slaunder of our diuine service.

Whereas by preaching, their conscience is gawled, their wickednes & hypocrisie discovered, their damnation threatned, they are called to repentance, & forsaking of their pleasant sins, & to holines & innocency of life

Our ordina-

hath all the

that our brethren attribute to preaching.

Our ordinary seruice
may better be called a preaching,
than opposed against
preaching.

And may not all this and moze too, be likewise said to be effected of god, even by the ministry of our ordinary seruice of the Lord, if it be set forth as it ought to be, and men would heare it as they ought to doo? May it not gaul a sinners conscience, that hath so gauled alreadye the recusant aduersaries, that they cannot in any wise abide to heare it, any moze: yea, much worse than all the preaching in the world, as most contrary of al other things, to all their popish, blinde, erroneous, superstitious and idolatrous seruice? And whosoever shall marke the same with reuerence & attention (as in dutie he is bound to do) shall finde our ordinary seruice of the Lorde, not onely full of sound doctrine for faith, godly p̄cepts for life and exceeding swete consolation of the spirit: but he shall well feele (hath he any feeling of his sin) that his conscience also shall be gawled (to vse our brethrens tearme) to consider how godly and religious a forme of Diuine seruice it is, and how vnreligiously it is neglected. And withall, it layeth open vnto the markers of it, their sinnes before them, and toucheth them with remorse thereof. So that both thereby (as our brethren here speake of preaching) we may likewise saye, their wickednesse and hypocrisy is discovered, their damnation threatned, and they are called to repentaunce, and forsaking of their pleasant sinnes, and to holinesse and innocency of life: so, our ordinary seruice of the Lord, besides our public prayers, which also are very effectual to moue vs heereunto, is so little to be opposed vnto preaching: that it may better bee called a fruitfull kynde of preaching.
